ABDUCTION.

What constitutes the Crime.

Girl under sixteen: see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 55.

The prisoner induced an unmarried girl under sixteen years old to leave her father's house, and meet him by appointment, without her father's consent. The prisoner and the girl cohabited three days and nights, and then parted by consent, and the girl returned home. The jury found the prisoner guilty, and that he took the girl away with him in order to gratify his passions, and then to allow her to return home, but not with the view of keeping her from her home permanently:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence for the jury to warrant the conviction. R. v. Timmins, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 45; Bell's C.C. 276.

Of a woman on account of her fortune: see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 53.

A girl between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one years, entitled to a present interest in landed property, was sent to school by her surviving parent, her mother, who had married again. On returning from school for her Christmas holidays, the girl wished to remain at her mother's and step-father's, but her mother insisted on the girl abiding by an agreement she had made previously, that when she came back at Christmas she should reside at her grandmother's, who lived in the same town with the mother. The mother in consequence refused to allow the girl to stay with her. The girl on this, instead of going to her grandmother's, went to the house of H R B, an uncle, and remained with him thence until the 19th of the following January, visiting her mother daily. The latter, when she discovered where her daughter was residing, desired her to come back to her house; but the girl did not go back. On the 19th of January above mentioned, F B, another uncle of the girl, allured her and took her away with intent to marry her, aided by H R B, and in fact F B actually married her. F B was indicted for fraudulently alluring, taking away, and detaining the girl out of the possession of her mother with intent to marry her, and H R B was indicted for aiding F B in committing the felony. It was alleged on the part of the prosecution, but denied by the prisoners, that on these facts there was sufficient evidence that F B fraudulently allured and took and detained the girl, and that F B took her out of the possession of her mother:—Held (the Court intimating that there was no difference of opinion on any question of law), by the majority of the Judges, that the circumstances proved were not in point of fact sufficient to establish that the accused had committed the crime charged in the indictment. R. v. Burrell, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 54; 1 L. & C. 354.

ABORTION.

Supplying Drugs to procure.

(a) Indictment for Murder.

The prisoner, at the request of a pregnant woman, who wished to procure abortion, obtained for her a poisonous drug. He knew the purpose for which she wanted it, but though he gave it to her for that purpose, he was unwilling that she should use it, and he did not administer it to her, or cause her to take it. She, however, took it for the purpose assigned, and died in consequence:—Held, that the prisoner was not liable to be convicted on an indictment charging him with the murder of the woman. R. v. Fretwell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 145; 1 L. & C. 161.

To justify a conviction of a person charged by an indictment under the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 59. for supplying a noxious thing knowing that the same was intended to be used with intent to procure a miscarriage, the drug supplied must be of a noxious character. It is not sufficient that, though harmless in itself, it might, if taken under a belief that it would procure miscarriage, by acting on the imagination produce that result. R. v. Isaacs, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 52; 1 L. & C. 220.

(c) Where the Woman does not intend to use the Drug.

If a person procure or supply any poison or other noxious thing with intent to procure the miscarriage of any woman, it is not necessary to constitute an offence under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 59. that the woman herself should intend to use the drug, or that any other person than the one who procured it should intend that it should be used for the purpose of causing a miscarriage. R. v. Hillman, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 60; 1 L. & C. 343.

ACCOUNT.

(A) WHEN AN ACCOUNT WILL BE DECREED IN EQUITY.
(B) TAKEN IN EQUITY—SETTLED ACCOUNTS.

(A) WHEN AN ACCOUNT WILL BE DECREED IN EQUITY.

A purchase being set aside, subject to the usual accounts of purchase-money and rents and profits, the Lords Justices considered that, on the balance of authority, the purchaser must be ordered to account for such sums as, but for his wilful default, he might have received, though the bill neither charged wilful default nor prayed relief in respect of the same. Adams v. Sworder, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 318; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 44.

There is no rule that an author may not file a bill for an account against his publisher; but in simple cases, which can be dealt with by a Court of law, this Court will not assume jurisdiction, or interfere with an action to recover a balance of account. Barry v. Stevens, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 785; 31 Beav. 258.

Where, therefore, an author filed his bill to restrain an action brought by his publishers to recover the balance of account, including the cost of printing and paper, a demurrer for want of equity was allowed. Ibid.

Demurrer to a bill, alleging that the defendants had received moneys on behalf of the plaintiff, of which he could obtain no account without discovery, allowed with costs. Hemings v. Pugh, 4 Giff. 456.

Where the relation between a principal and agent partakes of a fiduciary character, this Court has jurisdiction, and will direct an account, though the receipts and payments are all on one side. Ibid.

Demurrer to a bill seeking a discovery, and an account of goods sold by the defendant, on the price of which the plaintiff was entitled to a commission, overruled with costs. Shepard v. Brown, 4 Giff. 208.

As a general rule a bill for an account lies in equity by a principal against his agent, the fiduciary character of the relation between the parties being sufficient to support the bill. Makepeace v. Rogers, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 396.

A bill by a landowner and principal against his receiver and agent, alleged the receipt by the latter of rents, purchase-moneys of real estates, and dividends on stock and shares, and charged possession of documents belonging to the principal. An account and delivery of the documents were prayed. Demurrer to the bill overruled, both by the Vice Chancellor Stuart, and, on appeal, by the Lords Justices, with costs. Ibid.

Per the Lords Justices—The prayer for the delivery of documents would of itself have been sufficient to sustain the bill. Ibid.

Phillips v. Phillips (9 Hare, 471; s. c. 2 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 141) explained. Ibid.

The plaintiffs, in 1855, engaged the defendant as their traveller to obtain orders and collect moneys at a salary, the plaintiffs paying all travelling expenses. After each journey the defendant rendered an account and paid over the balance appearing to be due from him. The travelling expenses were charged in the accounts as so many days' travelling expenses, without giving any particulars. No objection was made to the accounts, and they were entered in the plaintiffs' books. This went on till April, 1861, when the defendant gave the plaintiffs six months' notice of his intention to leave their service. The plaintiffs, in July, 1861, gave him notice to keep a detailed account of his travelling expenses; but, notwithstanding this, his subsequent accounts were prepared on the same footing as the former ones, and were dealt with in the same way down to October, 1861, when he left the plaintiffs' service. The defendant having sent in a claim for salary, the plaintiffs served him with a counter claim, which, however, did not raise any questions as to his accounts:—Held, that a bill by the plaintiffs against the defendant for an account could not be maintained. Hunter v. Belcher, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 195.

Per the Lord Justice Turner—Where accounts have been rendered, the balances appearing due upon them paid, and the accounts entered in the books of the persons to whom they have been delivered, and a subsequent account has been rendered by those persons raising no question as to the accounts which have been delivered, those accounts must be treated as settled. Ibid.

Per the Lord Justice Turner—From the course of dealing between the parties, an agreement that the travelling expenses should be charged in a gross sum, without giving particulars, was to be implied, which agreement the plaintiffs could not determine by their notice of July, 1861. Ibid.

An agreement was entered into between K and P that K should take out a patent for purifying paraffine and assign it to P; that P thereupon should work it for fourteen years, if it could be so long worked at a profit, should not purify paraffine by any other process, and would pay to K a royalty upon all purified paraffine sold. That P should keep accurate accounts of all paraffine purified according to the patent, render them half-yearly and verify them, and that the provisions of this agreement and all other provisions usual and proper in such deeds should be incorporated in the deed of assignment of the patent, such deed to be prepared by counsel to be agreed on by the solicitors of the parties. The patent was taken out, and P commenced working under it, but shortly afterwards abandoned the use of the process, alleging that it could not be worked at a profit, and refused to pay any royalty. K thereupon brought an action at law for royalties, and recovered judgment. Pending this action, P gave notice to determine the agreement, because the invention could not be worked at a profit. K, after obtaining judgment, filed his bill, asking for an account of subsequent royalties, an injunction to restrain the defendant from purifying paraffine under any other process, and for a reference to chambers to settle a proper deed of assignment; or if the Court should hold the agreement to have been determined, then for relief against the defendant as an infringer of the patent:—Held, by the Lord Justice Turner, that in a case of this nature it was in the discretion of the Court, whether it would direct an account or leave the parties to their remedy at law, and that, in the present case, the account being only a part of an agreement which the Court could not wholly enforce, the plaintiff ought to be left to his remedy at law; and that, for the same reason, the execution of the assignment ought not to be decreed. Kernot v. Potter, 3 De Gex, F. & J. 447.

The defendants, a mercantile firm, employed the plaintiff as their traveller and agent, under an agreement that he should receive a commission of 7*l.* 10*s.* per cent., and an allowance of 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent. on all orders received from his friends, first introduced by him. Disputes having arisen between the parties, the plaintiff filed his bill, praying for an account of this commission and allowance; but not even alleging any mutuality or complexity of accounts:—Held (reversing a decision of one of the Vice Chancellors), that as the case presented was merely one of contract on the part of the defendants to pay a certain commission, the proper remedy of the plaintiff was by an action at law, and that the bill must be dismissed, with costs. Smith v. Leveaux, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 167; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 1.

(B) TAKEN IN EQUITY—SETTLED ACCOUNTS.

H & Co. were in the receipt of the rents of leasehold property as agents of P. In 1834 P died intestate. In 1838 H & Co. rendered to his daughter an account to which some objections were taken by her, which were answered, and no replies made to the answers. In 1845 the daughter took out administration to P, and, in 1852, filed a bill against H & Co. for an account:—Held, that the account must be treated as a settled account, and that the bill could not be sustained. Parkinson v. Hanbury, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 450.

Property being put up for sale by a first mortgagee, was bought by a second incumbrancer, to whom the equity of redemption had been conveyed on trust for sale, on default in payment of his debt. This sale having been set aside at the suit of the representative of the mortgagor,—Held, that the possession of the purchaser was to be referred to the character of trustee, and that the account of the rents received by him was not, of course, to be on the footing of wilful default. Ibid.

The usual accounts of personal estate not specifically bequeathed had been directed in an administration suit. Ultimately the costs of all parties, as between solicitor and client, were paid out of a specific legacy, in the absence of the specific legatee. In a subsequent suit instituted by the specific legatee for her legacy, liberty was given to her to surcharge and falsify the accounts, and the plaintiff's costs were directed to be allowed, as between party and party. Walrond v. Walrond, 29 Beav. 586.

ACCOUNT STATED.

An I O U, not given in acknowledgment of a debt due, nor as the result of an account stated between the parties, is not evidence under a count on an account stated. Lemere v. Elliott, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 350; 6 Hurls. & N. 656.

It was verbally agreed that the plaintiff should sell and the defendant buy the plaintiff's business, lease, stock-in-trade and fixtures, the plaintiff to introduce the defendant to his customers, and instruct him in his business, the defendant giving his I O U for 25*l.* to the plaintiff on account. The plaintiff, in pursuance of this agreement, did afterwards introduce the defendant to his customers and instruct him in his business, but the defendant refused to complete the purchase:—Held, in an action to recover the 25*l.* for which the I O U was given, the declaration being a count on an account stated, and plea, the general issue, that on these facts the plaintiff was rightly nonsuited. Ibid.

The plaintiff, who owed money to the defendants, gave them an equitable mortgage upon certain land which he had purchased, and which he had partially paid for. He entered into other contracts to do work for the defendants, and W was employed by both parties to value the work done. At a meeting of the plaintiff, the defendants and W, it was agreed that the plaintiff owed the defendants 111*l.*, while the defendants owed him 67*l.* The value of the plaintiff's interest in the land being 70*l.*, the defendants agreed to take such interest at that sum, and in the result it was agreed that the balance due to the plaintiff would be 22*l.* There was no memorandum in writing as to the purchase of the plaintiff's interest, nor as to the payment of the balance of 22*l.*; but the defendants sold the land:—Held, that the arrangement between the parties amounted to the statement of an account, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the balance of 22*l.* in an action upon an account stated. Laycock v. Pickles, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 43; 4 Best & S. 497.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

[Of Deeds by Married Women—See FINES AND RECOVERIES ACT. And see LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF.]

ACQUIESCENCE.

A B and C D occupied adjoining houses, and C D, intending to erect a glass-room as a photographic studio on a portion of his premises, called on A B and informed him of his intention, pointing out the situation, &c., but this was done after dark on a spring evening. He also said he had a plan of the erections and a contract for their performance. A B made no objection, being, as he alleged, under the impression that the new buildings were to be in a different situation, but never made further inquiries, nor asked to see the plan. C D commenced his preparations eleven days afterwards, and about a week later commenced the actual building. About a week after this A B discovered his mistake as to the position of the new buildings, and four days later wrote to C D to desist, and threatened proceedings in the Court of Chancery if compliance were refused. Eight days afterwards, and when the buildings were nearly complete, A B filed a bill against C D:—Held, on appeal, by the Lords Justices (dissenting from Wood, V.C.), that there was no such acquiescence as would deprive A B of his right to relief. Johnson v. Wyatt, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 394; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 18.

Semble—A stronger case of acquiescence is requisite to debar a plaintiff from relief at the hearing of a cause than to disentitle him to an interlocutory injunction. Ibid.

O, a builder, contracted to build a house within a given time, under certain conditions, one of which was, that if the building did not progress as the architect might consider necessary, he, the architect, might purchase such materials and employ such workmanship as he might consider necessary, and deduct the costs of the same from any moneys due to the contractor on account of the works. After a portion of the work had been done and paid for, the architect refused to certify for further payments, on the ground of delay and the want of supply of proper materials. The builder's workmen not being paid, they became clamorous, and accompanied O to the architect's office, and O then, after remonstrating, signed an agreement giving up the contract, in consideration of 50*l.* then paid to him, and stipulating that the works should be paid for according to the valuation of an arbitrator named in the agreement. The arbitrator proceeded with the valuation, and was attended by O; but after the valuation was made, awarding O a less sum than he alleged to be proper, O filed his bill to set aside the agreement, as having been obtained by undue pressure. One of the Vice Chancellors made a decree in the plaintiff's favour; but, upon appeal, this decision was reversed, on the ground that O had confirmed the agreement by acting upon it, and was therefore not entitled to relief. Ormes v. Beadel, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 1.

If a voidable contract is voluntarily acted upon by a party to it, with a knowledge of all the facts, he cannot avoid it when the result has turned out to his disadvantage. Ibid.

Acquiescence without full and sufficient knowledge and understanding of the circumstances of the case, in respect of which such acquiescence is alleged to be a bar, cannot be of any avail. Prideaux v. Lonsdale, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 317; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 433.

(A) WHEN MAINTAINABLE.

[See LANDS CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION ACT.]

(a) For Injuries the Subject of Foreign Penal Laws.

If by the laws of a foreign State there be a civil remedy for a wrong done there, the fact, that by those laws criminal proceedings must precede the civil remedy there, constitutes no bar or defence to an action in this country. Scott v. Seymour, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 457; 1 Hurls. & C. 219.

To an action for assault and false imprisonment the defendant pleaded, except as to the imprisonment, that the trespasses were committed out of the jurisdiction of the Court, to wit, at Naples, that the plaintiff and the defendant resided there, and while there, proceedings were taken by the plaintiff in the Court of the circuit of the Chiaja in Naples, according to the articles of the penal procedure laws of that country; and that according to the laws of that country the defendant was not liable to be sued by the plaintiff in any civil action, or other proceedings, to recover damages for the alleged trespasses, nor liable to any other proceedings in respect of the trespasses, except those taken and instituted under the laws aforesaid, and which were still pending and undetermined in the said Court at Naples. The defendant also pleaded, secondly, except as to the imprisonment, a similar plea of proceedings in the Court of the circuit of the Chiaja, and that according to the laws of the country the defendant was not liable to be sued by the plaintiff, and that he could not recover any damages in a civil action or other proceeding for the trespasses until the defendant had been condemned and found guilty of those trespasses or some part thereof, and which said proceedings were still pending and undetermined; and, thirdly, to the imprisonment, alleging that by the laws of the country the defendant was liable to certain penal proceedings for the imprisonment if not authorized by the law of the country; and that by the law of that country no civil action or other proceedings could be maintained to recover damages until after the defendant had been condemned and found guilty in such penal proceedings, and that no such proceedings had been instituted:—Held, on demurrer, that neither plea afforded any answer to the action; for that it was consistent with the first plea that by the proceedings there mentioned a compensation in damages was recoverable, and that the pendency of such civil proceedings would not afford any bar to the action in this country; and that the other pleas did not afford any answer, because they admitted that a civil remedy did exist, and the necessity for taking previous criminal proceedings was a matter of procedure only. Ibid.

The defendant, a merchant resident in Norway, and not a British subject, drew in Norway his bill of exchange at four months on E in this country, and after indorsing it to the order of D, sent it by post to D in London, who indorsed it to the plaintiff in London:—Held, that there was not a cause of action which arose in this country nor a breach of a contract made within it, and that therefore the plaintiff could not sue the defendant in this country on the bill under sections 18. and 19. of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76. Sichel v. Borch, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 179; 2 Hurls. & C. 954.

(c) For Assault committed in Foreign Country.

It is no bar to an action in this country for an assault and false imprisonment committed by one Englishman upon another at Naples that, by the law of Naples, no proceeding to recover damages for the trespasses could be maintained by the plaintiff, until after the defendant had been found guilty and condemned by the criminal tribunal at Naples, before which he had been arraigned, in respect thereof; nor is it any bar to such action for the assault that, by the law of Naples, damages in respect of it could only be recovered in one particular form of proceeding, which had been commenced and was still pending. Scott v. Seymour (Ex. Ch.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 61; 1 Hurls. & C. 219.

Quære—Whether, if by the Neapolitan law no damages were recoverable at all for such trespasses, that law could be pleaded as a defence to the action here?—Per Wightman, J., that it could not. Ibid.

To an action on a foreign judgment, it is no answer that the defendant became a party to it merely to prevent his property being seized, and that the judgment is erroneous in fact and in law on the merits, whether the plea alleges that the error does or does not appear on the face of the judgment; nor can the defendant plead that the enforcement of the judgment in England is contrary to natural justice, on the ground that the defendants had discovered fresh evidence shewing that the judgment is erroneous in fact and law on the merits, or that evidence was improperly admitted. De Cosse Brissac v. Rathbone, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 238; 6 Hurls. & N. 301.

Commissioners under the "Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847," are liable to an action, in their corporate capacity, at the suit of a person who has suffered damage from a highway, within the limits of the defendants' special act, being allowed by them to remain in a dangerous condition. Hartnall v. the Ryde Commissioners, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 39; 4 Best & S. 361.

Section 52. of the "Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847," imposes on the commissioners elected under the act the duty of fencing footpaths, if needed for the protection of passengers, and leaves them no discretion:—Held, that such commissioners are therefore liable, in their corporate capacity, to an action at the suit of a person injured by their negligent omission to fence a footpath; and the commissioners are liable in such a case, without it being shewn affirmatively that they have funds, or the means of raising funds, wherewith to pay damages. Ohrby v. the Ryde Commissioners, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 296; 5 Best & S. 743.

By an act of parliament drainage commissioners were to make and maintain a sluice for the discharge of the drainage waters, and owing to the negligence of the persons employed by the commissioners for the purpose, being apparently competent, the sluice burst, and damage was caused to the neighbouring land:—Held, by Cockburn, C.J. and Mellor, J., that the commissioners were not liable to an action in their corporate capacity, inasmuch as they were persons intrusted with a public duty and discharged it gratuitously, and took themselves no part in the actual performance of it, and had been guilty of no personal negligence, and had no funds at their disposal out of which the damages could be paid. By Blackburn, J., that, there being an absolute duty cast upon the commissioners of maintaining the sluice, they were liable for the damage caused by the negligent performance of that duty. Coe v. Wise, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 281; 5 Best & S. 440.

The deed of settlement of a joint-stock company declared its business to be "to build or purchase, and own or hire, iron steam-vessels, and to use or let upon hire the same for the purpose of transport of coals or other merchandise from any port or ports of the United Kingdom or elsewhere, to any other port or ports of the United Kingdom or elsewhere"; and the powers of the directors were defined to be, amongst other things, "the building or purchasing or hiring of such steam-vessels as they should see fit," "the selling and letting to hire and chartering of the vessels," "the general conduct and management of the business of the company," and "the controlling, managing and regulating in all other respects, except as by those presents otherwise provided, of all matters relating to the company and the affairs thereof." The directors, thinking it expedient to sell all the company's vessels, employed the plaintiffs, shipbrokers, to procure a purchaser. The plaintiffs accordingly negotiated with C for a sale upon the terms fixed by the directors. The negotiation, however, went off, upon an objection urged by C's solicitor that the directors had no power to sell the whole of the vessels, except in the event of the winding up of the company with the consent of the shareholders, which had not been obtained:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain an action against the directors upon an implied warranty that they had authority to sell, which, in point of fact, they had not. Wilson v. Miers, 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 348.

Quære—as to measure of damages in such a case, if the action had been maintainable? Ibid.

The trustees of a turnpike-road converted an open ditch, which used to carry off the water from the road, into a covered drain, placing catchpits with gratings thereon to enable the water to enter the drain. Owing to the insufficiency of such gratings and catchpits, the water, in very wet seasons, instead of running down the ditch as it formerly did before the alterations by the trustees, overflowed the road, and made its way into the adjoining land, and injured the colliery of the plaintiff:—Held, that the trustees were liable for such injury, if they were guilty of negligence in respect of such gratings and catchpits. Whitehouse v. Fellowes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 305; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 765.

Held, also, that a fresh damage to the plaintiff's colliery occasioned by the trustees continuing such insufficient gratings and catchpits was a distinct cause of action; and that, therefore, an action brought in respect of it within three months from the time of such fresh damage, although after more than three months from the first damage, was not defeated by the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 147, which limits the action against such trustees to "three months after the fact committed." Ibid.

(h) Against Process-Server for not indorsing Day of Service on Writ.

There is no absolute duty on the part of a process-server, arising from the mere delivery of a writ of summons for service, to indorse on the writ the day of service, as required by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 15. To render the server liable to an action for omitting to make such indorsement, there must have been some request expressed or implied to him to make the indorsement. Curlewis v. Broad, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 473; 1 Hurls. & C. 322.

The declaration alleged that the defendant was a process-server, and that the plaintiff issued a writ of summons against W, and retained and employed the defendant, as such process-server, to serve the writ according to the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, for reward, and delivered the writ and copy to him for that purpose; and the defendant, as such process-server, accepted such retainer and employment, and received the writ for the purpose aforesaid; and thereupon the defendant, as such process-server, in consideration of the premises, promised the plaintiff, that in case he should serve the writ, he would perform his duty in that behalf. Averment of service and of conditions precedent to entitle the plaintiff to have the defendant to do and perform his duty. Breach, that the defendant did not do or perform his duty in this, that he did not, nor would within three days after service of the writ, indorse thereon the day of the month and week of such service, as required by the act, and as he ought to have done, by reason whereof the plaintiff was prevented from signing final judgment, and the proceedings in the action became futile and unavailing. Plea, that the defendant, before and at the time of the alleged employment, was not retained, or employed, or instructed in any way to indorse on such writ of summons the time of service thereof, as required by the 15th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852; and that he never was at any time retained or employed by the plaintiff, or any other person for him, to do more than serve the writ, and was not at any time requested or directed to make such indorsement:—Held, on demurrer, that the plea answered the declaration. Ibid.

(i) By a Physician for his Fees.

"The Medical Act" (21 & 22 Vict. c. 90.) gives a physician who is registered under the act a legal right to recover fees without a special agreement for remuneration. Gibbon v. Budd, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 182; 2 Hurls. & C. 92.

No action lies against a surveyor of highways, appointed under the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, for damage resulting from an accident caused by his neglect to repair the highway. So held in the Exchequer Chamber, affirming the judgment of the Court of Exchequer (31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 250; 7 Hurls. & N. 760). Young v. Davis, 2 Hurls. & C. 197.

An action may be maintained by a person as the holder of a negotiable instrument, notwithstanding he has no real interest in it, and never was the actual holder. If it has been indorsed and delivered to some person professing to act as his agent, although without his knowledge, and he subsequently adopts the acts of the assumed agent, that is sufficient title, although such adoption is after action brought in his name without his knowledge. Ancona v. Marks, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 163; 7 Hurls. & N. 686.

W, the holder of three negotiable instruments to which the defendant was a party, indorsed them to the plaintiff and delivered them to G & T, a firm of attorneys, with instructions to sue the defendant on them in the name of the plaintiff, which G & T, assuming to act for the plaintiff, accordingly did. The plaintiff knew nothing of these proceedings until after action brought, when he adopted and ratified them. The defendant pleaded to the action that the plaintiff was not the lawful holder of the instruments at the commencement of the suit:—Held, that the action was well brought in the plaintiff's name. Ibid.

(m) For using Trade Mark.

Declaration, that the plaintiff had agreed with the defendant to manufacture for him bricks, according to the defendant's directions; that the defendant directed the plaintiff to mark them in a way which, to the defendant's knowledge, amounted to a piracy of R's trade mark; that the plaintiff, being ignorant of R's rights, marked the bricks as directed, and delivered them to the defendant; that R thereupon filed a bill in Chancery, for an injunction and account, against the plaintiff, which he compromised on the payment of costs:—Held, that this disclosed a good cause of action, as equity would grant an injunction against a person who innocently uses another's trade mark. Dixon v. Fawcus, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 137; 3 E. & E. 537.

Semble—That, the natural consequence of the defendant's acts being to involve the plaintiff in a Chancery suit, an action would lie, even if the plaintiff's ignorance would have entitled him to succeed in the suit. Ibid.

(n) For keeping Diseased Sheep.

Sheep of the defendant having a contagious disease were found in the plaintiff's field with his sheep, and the disease was communicated to them. The defendant occupied land near the plaintiff's, but there was no evidence as to how the defendant's sheep got into the plaintiff's field. Four days afterwards, the defendant on being told that his sheep were diseased said, "I could not help it; I had the sheep at tack at P's; they caught it from Mr. B's sheep":—Held, that these facts did not shew any right of action, for there was no evidence of any knowledge by the defendant at the time the disease was communicated that his sheep were diseased. Cooke v. Waring, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 262; 2 Hurls. & C. 332.

(o) By Reversioner of Chattel.

The owner of a chattel let to hire can sue for a permanent injury to his reversionary interest therein. Mears v. the London and South-Western Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 220; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 850.

The proprietors of a canal by deed granted to the plaintiff the sole and exclusive right of putting or using pleasure-boats for hire on the canal:—Held, that this did not confer such an interest in the plaintiff as to give him a right of action against another person for using pleasure-boats for hire on the canal. Hill v. Tupper, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 217; 2 Hurls. & C. 121.

(B) NOTICE OF ACTION.

The notice of action signed by B, the plaintiff, under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. s. 138, was: "It is my intention at the end of one calendar month from the date hereof to commence an action against you" (the high bailiff) "in the Court of Queen's Bench, to recover compensation in damages for a trespass and excessive levy committed by you and your officers on the 3rd of December, 1863, by selling and disposing of certain goods upon the premises, No. 80, Derbyshire Street, &c., to satisfy debt and expenses under an order recovered against me in the S county court:"—Held, sufficient. Burton v. Le Gros, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 91.

In pursuance of a resolution at a parish vestry that it would be advantageous if a weighing-machine were erected to check the weight of materials purchased for the highways, the surveyors appointed under the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, caused a machine to be placed in the highway:—Held, that although the statute gave no express power to erect weighing-machines, the surveyors were acting in pursuance of the act, so as to entitle them, under section 109, to notice of an action brought for injuries sustained in driving over a heap of earth excavated for the weighing-machine. Hardwick v. Moss, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 205; 7 Hurls. & N. 136.

The defendant, who kept a draper's shop, gave a marked florin to his cashier. The plaintiff, one of the defendant's shopmen, was found by the defendant in the course of the day with that florin in his possession, the defendant having asked him to shew the money in his pockets. The defendant immediately gave the plaintiff into custody on the charge of stealing the florin. The plaintiff explained the possession of it by saying that he had previously received it in change from the cashier. The plaintiff brought an action for false imprisonment against the defendant without giving him any previous notice of action. The defendant pleaded not guilty by statute. By the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 103, "any person found committing any offence," &c. punishable under the act (which includes larceny and embezzlement), may be immediately apprehended without warrant by any person; and by section 113, before the commencement of any action for anything done pursuant to the act, one month's notice in writing of the action and of the cause of action is to be given to the defendant. The Judge who tried the cause told the jury that the want of notice of action was, on the evidence, no defence. The defendant's counsel thereupon excepted, that the Judge ought to have directed the jury that the question for them was, whether the defendant honestly believed that the plaintiff had wrongfully taken the florin, and that in giving the plaintiff into custody he, the defendant, was exercising a legal power; and that if they so found, the defendant was entitled to the verdict, for want of notice of action:—Held, on a bill of exceptions, that when the question is whether a defendant is entitled to notice of action in respect of a thing done pursuant to a statute, the true rule is, whether the defendant honestly believed in the existence of such a state of facts as would, if it had existed, have afforded a justification for the arrest under the statute; and that applying that rule to the present statute the exception was insufficient, as the defendant's counsel asked the Judge to leave to the jury a question which could not have decided the point whether the defendant was entitled to notice of action, since the defendant could not have been entitled to notice unless he believed not only that the plaintiff had stolen the florin, but also that he had been found committing the offence, and the defendant's counsel did not ask the Judge to leave to the jury whether the defendant believed that the plaintiff had been found committing the theft. Roberts v. Orchard (Ex. Ch.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 65; 2 Hurls. & C. 769.

ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATE IN CHANCERY.

(A) What Debts may be claimed.

A testator's estate, consisting partly of a West India plantation, was administered under the Court, and a large balance was due to a deceased consignee, which was ordered to be paid by his successor. This failing, held, as against the testator's creditors, that the representatives of the deceased consignee were entitled to be paid out of the general assets of the testator. Lyne v. Thompson, 30 Beav. 543.

(B) Creditor following Assets.

Under a decree for the administration of the estate of G, the plaintiff brought in his claim as a creditor, and a portion of his claim was disallowed; subsequently, after the distribution of the assets, the plaintiff paid other moneys on account of G's estate, and then filed a bill against the residuary legatees for an account of what was due to him in respect as well of the disallowed portion of his original claim as of the moneys subsequently paid:—Held, affirming the decision of one of the Vice Chancellors, that the plaintiff was entitled to have an account taken of what, if anything, was due to him. Thomas v. Griffith, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 465.

In 1822 H demised a dwelling-house in Dublin to D for 9,000 years, at a rent of 53*l*. In 1828 D demised the house to B for 8,000 years, at the same rent. In 1846 D died. By his will, dated in 1829, B gave all his personal estate to a trustee for the benefit of B's daughter until twenty-one, and to assign the trust fund and accumulations to his daughter when she attained twenty-four or married under that age, with the trustee's consent. In 1848 the daughter, being under twenty-four, married, with the trustee's consent; and previous to the marriage a settlement was executed, vesting 12,500*l*. stock in trustees, upon trust for the husband for life, then for the wife for life, and afterwards for the children of the marriage; and a further sum of 6,457*l*. stock was vested in the same trustees, upon trust for the wife's separate use during the coverture, and afterwards for herself absolutely, or as she should appoint. In 1856 a claim was made by H upon D's representative for rent, and in respect of a breach of covenant to repair in the lease of 1822. D's representative filed a bill against the husband and wife and their trustees to enforce, as against B's assets included in the settlement, the claim for rent, and in respect of the breach of covenant to repair in the lease of 1828; but one of the Vice Chancellors dismissed the bill, with costs; and, upon appeal, this decision was affirmed. Dilkes v. Broadmead, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 268.

(C) Contingent Liabilities.

In an administration suit, instituted before Lord St. Leonards' Act passed, a fund was set apart as an indemnity to the executors in respect of any possible breaches of covenant by their testator in regard to his leasehold property. After the passing of the act the party entitled to the residuary estate petitioned for payment out of court of the indemnity fund under the act. The Court being of opinion that the act was not retrospective, that petition was dismissed. It being subsequently held that the act was retrospective, a petition of re-hearing was presented with the same object as the original petition:—Held, that the decree of the Court in an administration suit, where an executor acts bona fide, is a complete indemnity to him, and it is not necessary to set apart an indemnity fund, and an order was made according to the prayer. Dodson v. Sammell, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 799; 1 Dr. & S. 575.

The case of an assignment of a leasehold to a residuary legatee is not within the meaning of the 27th section of Lord St. Leonards' Act. Ibid.

That section is retrospective in its operation. Ibid.

(D) Marshalling Assets.

A testator directed payment of his debts, &c., and gave all the residue of his real and personal estate to his wife and another person, appointing them executrix and executor, upon trust to pay the income to his wife for life, for her own use and the bringing up and educating his children; and after her decease he made certain specific gifts, one being to his daughter Fanny Charlotte of his messuage and premises situate No. 4, Turnham Green Terrace, held of the Prebend Manor. And there was also a general residuary gift to the wife. The wife borrowed 600*l.* in aid of the personalty and residuary realty, and therewith paid debts and died:—Held, that in marshalling the assets, the whole income received by the wife during her life, as well as the corpus of the first residuary gift to her, was liable for costs, before resorting to the specific gifts. Hibon v. Hibon, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 374.

In 1775, A B became owner in fee of estates W and L. The W estate was subject to mortgages amounting to 5,344*l.*, and the L estate to a mortgage amounting to 2,200*l.*, all of which were created by A B's ancestor. In 1787, A B mortgaged the L estate for 8,000*l.*, reserving the equity of redemption to himself, and personally covenanting to pay the money. Out of this sum he paid off the three mortgages on the W estate. A B died in 1806:—Held, as between the representatives of A B, that the mortgage was primarily payable out of A B's personal estate. Bagot v. Bagot, 34 Beav. 134.

A testator devised his personalty and an estate K and other real estates, upon trust for payment of debts, and subject thereto, to certain devisees, and afterwards purchased the H estate, as to which he died intestate. The testator deposited the deeds of the H estate to secure 1,000*l.*, and was subsequently found lunatic. Under an order in lunacy a mortgage was made of the H & K estates, to raise a sum of money to pay off the 1,000*l.*, and other debts of the lunatic; and a proviso was inserted that, as between the lunatic's heirs and devisees, the H estate should be considered as the primary security for the mortgage debt. The lunatic having died,—Held, that, on the true construction of the proviso, it did not have the effect of exonerating the devised estates at the expense of the H estate, and the devised estates were ordered to be first applied in payment of the mortgage debt. Freeman v. Ellis, 1 Hem. & M. 758.

Quære—Whether a proviso having such an effect would have been within the jurisdiction of the Lords Justices. Ibid.

(E) Payment of Debts.

Payment to a creditor who has proved his debt ought not to be suspended for the purpose of adjusting the equities between the parties jointly liable to him—per the Lord Justice Turner. Micklethwait v. Winstanley, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 281.

The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38. s. 3. is not restricted in its operation to the protection of heirs, executors and administrators against claims by unregistered judgment creditors, but absolutely deprives unregistered judgment debts of all priority in the administration of assets; and the act applies equally to judgments of County Courts as to other judgments. In re Turner; Walter v. Turner, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 232.

Mode of distributing a deficient estate where there were life annuities and gross sums charged thereon. Heath v. Nugent, 29 Beav. 226.

(F) Payment of Legacies.

Where, at the death of a mortgagor of leaseholds, the value of the mortgaged property exceeded the mortgage debt, and the mortgagee took no steps to realize his security for fourteen years after the death of the mortgagor, and in the mean time the mortgaged property became very much deteriorated in value, it was held, by one of the Vice Chancellors, and affirmed on appeal, that the mortgagee was not entitled to recover the deficiency arising on his mortgage security from those legatees of the mortgagor who had been paid. Ridgway v. Newstead, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 889; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 474.

The right of a creditor to make legatees refund may be lost by laches, acquiescence, or such conduct as would make it highly inequitable for the Court to allow him to assert such right. Ibid.

The administrator of an intestate's estate paid to seven out of eight of the next-of-kin 1,250*l.* on account of each share, and made only small payments on account of the remaining share. In distributing the residue of the estate, after a lapse of thirty years, the persons claiming the last-mentioned share insisted that for the purposes of distribution a sum of 1,250*l.* ought to be treated as having been set apart on account of their share, and interest at 4*l.* per cent. to be allowed thereon, and that the small payments ought to be treated as having been made on account of the interest on that 1,250*l.*:—Held, that this would be conferring a benefit in the nature of compound interest on the claimants of the unpaid share, and that the only mode of equalization which the rules of the Court allowed was to charge each recipient with the amount paid to him, together with simple interest at 4*l.* per cent. from the date of payment. Lambe v. Orton, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 81.

Where a testatrix directed her executors to continue the business of a public-house, and to employ W as manager at a salary, and at the expiration of the lease, goodwill, &c. &c. to be sold, the Court refused to accelerate the sale at the instance of the residuary legatee, a sale not being required for payment of debts. Saunders v. Rotherham, 3 Giff. 557.

A fund set apart in 1857 to answer liabilities of an intestate's estate in respect of leasehold covenants, was distributed in 1865 amongst the next-of-kin, it appearing that all the leases had either been sold or surrendered, and the statute 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35. s. 27. having passed in the mean time. Reilly v. Reilly, 34 Beav. 406.

(G) Practice.

[See Costs, in Equity.]

If several suits are instituted for the administration of a testator's estate, they may be amalgamated in one decree, and the conduct of the cause will be given to a residuary legatee or other person having an interest in the residue, in preference to a creditor. Penny v. Francis; Woodhatch v. Francis, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 185.

Upon motion, after a decree in administration suit, to restrain a creditor from prosecuting an action to recover a disputed debt,—Held, that payment of the creditor's costs of the motion and action must be made dependent on his establishing his debt in the suit. King v. King, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 195; 34 Beav. 10.

A manager was appointed to carry on an intestate's business, though there was no existing administration to his estate. Steer v. Steer, 2 Dr. & S. 311.

A large balance was found due from the legal personal representatives, but it appeared that the amount had been received under orders in another suit by the then solicitor, who retained it to satisfy large claims against his clients. The cause coming on for further consideration, and on a petition of the plaintiff, the solicitor was ordered to pay the money into Court. Bibby v. Thompson (No. 2), 32 Beav. 647.

Where an estate has been completely administered, the Court will, in general, order the funds to be paid out to the trustees, and will not interfere with their discretion, where they are agreed. Butler v. Withers, 1 Jo. & H. 332.

Liberty given in one suit to prove in another for an amount appearing due in the former, does not confer an absolute right of proof in the latter suit. It is the right and duty of the branch of the Court to which the latter suit is attached to see that the claim made is a valid subsisting claim. Micklethwait v. Winstanley, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 281.

ADMIRALTY.

ADVANCEMENT.

When a father purchases in the name of his child, his declarations of intention contemporaneous with the transaction itself are alone admissible to prove a trust. Williams v. Williams, 32 Beav. 370.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove that lands were purchased by a father in the name of his child, not as an advancement, but as a trustee. Ibid.

Purchases and mortgages were taken by a father in the name of his son. The father received the rents and interest and paid them into a bank, but he allowed his son to draw for the sums he required. The son died first:—Held, that the presumption of an advancement was not rebutted. Ibid.

A testator on the marriage of his daughter gave the husband 1,000*l.* jocularly in exchange for his snuff-box. By his will, the testator gave each of his daughters 1,000*l.*, but provided that, in case any daughter should have received from him any sum "by way of marriage portion or advancement," it should be deducted from the legacy:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the 1,000*l.* given to the husband of the daughter was not to be deducted. M'Clure v. Evans, 29 Beav. 422.

Where a father advanced money on mortgage of real estate, and, contrary to his solicitor's advice and without his son's knowledge, took the conveyance in his son's name, and subsequently told him it was a gift, but reserving the interest for the father's life; and added, "There are your deeds," which the son ultimately took and retained,—on a bill by the father against the son, the Court declared that the transaction was not an advancement, but made the father pay the costs of the suit. Dumper v. Dumper, 3 Giff. 583.

To rebut the presumption of advancement there must be evidence of facts contemporaneous with the act in question. Ibid.

W purchased copyholds for lives, and upon the dropping of a life, caused J, an illegitimate child of his daughter (the reputed father being still living) to be admitted in remainder after two of his (W's) children, and paid the admission fees. J always lived with W, and was sent to school by him, and received no assistance from his reputed father until after W's death:—Held, that J held the copyholds as a trustee only, since no presumption of an intention to advance him was raised by the above circumstances. Tucker v. Burrow, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 478; 2 Hem. & M. 515.

Semble—A purchase will not be presumed to be an advancement, on the mere ground that the person purchasing has placed himself "in loco parentis" towards the person in whose names the purchase is made. Ibid.

In order that a purchase in the name of another may be an advancement, there must be a present intention, on the part of the person making the purchase, to confer at the time of the purchase a beneficial interest on the person in whose name the purchase is made. And it is not sufficient that the purchase should be made with some view to the ultimate benefit of the latter person. Forrest v. Forrest, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 428.

Upon the question whether shares purchased by one brother in the name of another brother, to whom the former was alleged at the time of the purchase to have stood in loco parentis, were an advancement, the allegation by the latter brother of a subsequent gift of the shares to him by the former was treated as inconsistent with and as rebutting the presumption of the original purchase having been made by way of advancement. Ibid.

A married lady, living apart from her husband, purchased out of the savings of her separate estate stock in the names of her son and daughter. The lady died, appointing the daughter the executrix of her will. The son became lunatic. The daughter petitioned for a transfer of the stock to her as executrix. The Lords Justices ordered the transfer without requiring a bill to be filed. In re De Visme, and In re the Trustee Act, 1850, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 332.

Semble— The doctrine that a purchase in the name of a child will, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be presumed to be an advancement, does not apply where the purchase is made by a mother. Ibid.

T M contracted to purchase freeholds in the name of himself and wife, and died before the whole of the purchase-money was paid or a conveyance executed. His wife survived him:—Held, that the contract was in the nature of an advancement to the wife; and that inasmuch as the vendors were entitled to specific performance of the contract against T M's estate, and to be paid the remainder of the purchase-money out of his assets, the doctrine of advancement applied equally to the unpaid purchase-money, and that upon payment thereof the vendors would become trustees of the property for the widow. Drew v.

(C) FORFEITURE OF LICENCE.

(A) LICENCE, GRANT OF.

(a) Discretion of Justices.

Although, under the 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, Justices have a discretion as to whether they will grant licences to persons keeping or about to keep inns, alehouses and victualling-houses, to sell exciseable liquors, that discretion must be exercised in a reasonable manner; and therefore Justices cannot by a general resolution determine not to renew the licences of all such persons who shall not consent to take out an Excise licence for the sale of spirits in addition to the licence for the sale of beer. R. v. Sylvester, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 93; 2 Best & S. 322.

(b) By Borough Justices.

Borough Justices have no jurisdiction to grant licences for inns and alehouses under the 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, except in such boroughs as have separate Courts of Quarter Sessions. Candlish v. Simpson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 178; 1 Best & S. 357.

(c) When Excise Licence necessary.

(1) Sale of Beer under 1½d. a Quart.

The 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 13. makes an Excise licence necessary for the sale of beer of any description; and, therefore, the sale of beer at and under 1½*d.* a quart requires such a licence, notwithstanding the provisions of the 42 Geo. 3. c. 38. s. 18. and the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 12, in respect of beer at that price. Read v. Storey, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 110; 6 Hurls. & N. 423.

(2) On or off the Premises.

A person licensed to sell beer by retail, "to be drunk or consumed off the premises," supplied a pint of beer to a traveller, who sat upon a bench placed and fastened against the wall of the house, returning the mug in which he was served:—Held, that the beershop keeper was properly convicted of the offence of selling beer to be drunk on the premises, within the 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 88. s. 17. Cross v. Watts, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 73; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 239.

(d) Certificate of Character.

The appellant having obtained a certificate of character from six of his neighbours, presented it to the officer of Excise for the purpose of obtaining a licence for the sale of beer. It was proved that the defendant had for some years previously cohabited with a woman without having gone through the ceremony of marriage; but no act of indecency of any kind was proved against him:—Held, that the Justices were not, on this evidence, bound to convict the appellant on an information under the 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 2, charging him with unlawfully making use of the certificate, knowing the same to be false. Leader v. Yell, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 231; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 584.

(B) OFFENCES.

(a) Sale of Beer without a Licence.

Section 12. of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 22. repeals section 29. of the 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 64, and takes away any right, privilege, permission or exemption from prohibition that may have previously existed to sell beer by retail at fairs without a licence. Huxham v. Wheeler, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 153; 3 Hurls. & C. 75.

(b) Refusing to admit the Police.

An alehouse keeper licensed, under the 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85, to sell beer to be drunk in his house, and on the premises thereunto belonging, is liable to a penalty, under section 7. of the same act, if he refuse to admit a police officer to an outhouse in the yard belonging to the house, though only used as a cellar. R. v. Tott, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 177.

For a second offence of refusing to admit the police, a beerhouse keeper is liable only to the punishment of disqualification from selling beer for two years, and not to a fine as well as disqualification. Ibid.

(c) Sunday Trading.

The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, which regulates the hours for closing beer-houses, &c. during Sunday morning, is not repealed by the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 79. and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 118, which apply only to Sunday afternoon. Whiteley v. Heaton commented upon. Harris v. Jenns, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 183; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 152.

The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49. applies to persons other than licensed victuallers or persons licensed to sell beer, &c., and to fermented and distilled liquors other than exciseable liquors. Ibid.

Three persons having walked, on a Sunday, a distance of four miles from the town of B. for amusement or exercise, called at an inn, in which they were admitted and served with liquor between the hours of three and five of the afternoon. They afterwards returned to the town of B, two by an omnibus, and the third on foot:—Held, in accordance with the case of Atkinson v. Sellers, that they were travellers within the meaning of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 118. s. 2; and that, therefore, the innkeeper ought not to be convicted for opening his house to them for the sale of liquor contrary to that act. Taylor v. Humphreys, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 242; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 429.

It is an offence to open a public-house for the sale of beer before half-past twelve in the afternoon on Sunday to any person not being a traveller. The statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49. is not repealed. R. v.

Senior, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 125; 1 L. & C. 401.

The word "travellers" in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, which prohibits the sale of refreshment on Sunday by persons licensed to sell beer or other fermented liquors "except to travellers," includes any persons who go abroad for purposes of business or pleasure, and who need refreshment. Taylor v. Humphries, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 1; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 539.

As the exception is contained within the section of the act which creates the offence, the onus of shewing that the persons supplied with refreshment are not within it is on the informer. Ibid.

A person who has taken a ticket at a railway station and is about to start by a train from that station is a "traveller" within the exception in the 42nd section of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47; and the keeper of a refreshment-room at the station is not liable to be convicted, under that section, for opening his house for the sale of beer, fermented liquor, &c., before one P.M. on Sunday, by reason of having supplied fermented liquor to such person. Fisher v. Howard, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 42.

(C) Forfeiture of Licence.

The Justices are not warranted in adjudicating a forfeiture of the licence without legal proof of a former conviction; a mere reference to the records of the petty sessions, where former convictions were entered, will not suffice. Cross v. Watts, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 73; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 239.

ALIEN.

An alien, who had served on board a man-of-war for four years in time of war, held to be a natural-born subject under the 13 Geo. 2. c. 3. In re Giraud, 32 Beav. 385.

AMBASSADOR.

[See Legacy Duty.]

AMENDMENT.

[See Divorce—Practice, at Law; Appearance—Will; Proof of.]

(A) At Nisi Prius.

(a) Of Parties.

(1) In general.

Where a foreign bank sued in a corporate name by which it was known, and the defendant pleaded that it was not a body corporate, the Court allowed the writ, declaration, and subsequent proceedings to be amended by inserting the name of a director of the bank as nominal plaintiff, it appearing that by the law of the country the bank was entitled to sue in his name. La Banca Nazionale sede di Torino v. Hamburger, 2 Hurls. & C. 330.

(2) In Ejectment.

In an action of ejectment by the mortgagee of a devisee against the heir-at-law, it appeared at the trial that the devisee was in fact only entitled under the will to an equitable estate, the legal estate being in trustees. Thereupon, on the application of the plaintiff, the Judge who presided at the trial inserted the names of the trustees as plaintiffs in the writ; those persons being present in court, and consenting to that course. The real question in dispute was the competency of the testator to make a will:—Held, that this was an amendment which the Judge had power to make; for if that power were not conferred as to ejectment by section 35, it was so by section 222. Blake v. Done, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Excb. 100; 7 Hurls. & N. 465.

(b) Adding Wife as a Defendant.

A Judge at the trial has no power, under section 222. of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, to amend the proceedings by adding the wife as a defendant, in an action where the husband has been sued alone for a debt incurred by the wife dum sola. Garrard v. Giubilei, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 131; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 616.

Where the plaintiff sues the defendant for goods sold and delivered, and it turns out at the trial that the goods were supplied to the defendant's wife before marriage, the Judge has no power, under the 222nd section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, or otherwise, to add the name of the wife as a defendant. Garrard v. Giubilei (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 270; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 832.

In an action for breach of contract to ship a cargo of coal, the declaration described the coal as of the description called "through and through, to be hand-picked." It appeared from the evidence at the trial that the question in controversy was whether the contract was to ship hand-picked coal or not, and that the description in the declaration was contradictory in its terms, as hand-picked coal meant coal which had been passed over a screen, whilst "through and through coal" meant unscreened coal. The learned Judge amended the declaration by striking out the words "through and through," so as to raise the question whether the contract was for "hand-picked coal" or not:—Held, that the amendment was rightly made, and also that the defendant was not entitled to the costs of such amendment, as it appeared that he had not been misled by the declaration as to the matter in dispute. St. Losky v. Green, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 19; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 370.

(B) In Cases of Variance.

The plaintiff bought of defendant "the household furniture, fixtures, utensils in trade," &c. of a public-house, "as per inventory, taken by W W," for 262*l.*, upon a representation by the defendant that the receipts of the house were 80*l.* per month, which representation turned out to be false. In an action for this misrepresentation, the declaration alleged the agreement to be for the purchase of the goodwill, furniture, fixtures, &c.:—Held, that the declaration substantially stated the true nature of the agreement, and that, at all events, the Court would, if necessary, amend it. Cator v. Wood, 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 286.

(C) By the Court.

The Court has power, under the 222nd section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, to amend the record, where leave to move to enter a verdict is reserved, notwithstanding the Judge at the trial expressly refuses to allow an amendment or to reserve leave to amend. Cator v. Wood, 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 286.

ANCHORS AND CABLES.

The proving and sale of chain cables and anchors regulated by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 27.

ANCIENT LIGHTS.

[See Easement.]

ANIMALS, CRUELTY TO.

[See Negligence.]

A cock is an "animal" within the meaning of sections 2. and 29. of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, and a person who takes an active part in a cockfight after one or both is disabled, is liable to be convicted under section 2. for causing and procuring a cock to be cruelly ill-treated, abused and tortured. Bridge v. Parsons, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 95.

It is no offence under section 3. of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92. to assist at a cockfight unless in a place kept or used for the purpose. Morley v. Greenhalgh, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 93; 3 Best & S. 374.

ANNUITY.

(A) Memorial.
(B) Validity of.
(C) Arrears of.
(D) Security for.
(E) Determination of.
(F) Refund of Excess subscribed.

(A) Memorial.

It is sufficient, under the 53 Geo. 3. c. 141, to describe the instrument in the memorial of an annuity as a "grant of annuity." Howkins v. Bennet, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 193.

The consideration for the annuity was stated in the memorial to be 4,000*l.*, and this sum was actually paid to the grantor; but, in pursuance of a previous arrangement, 400*l.* was immediately returned by him to the grantee's solicitor for procuration money and expenses:—Held, that this was no defence to an action on the covenant, even if it were ground for setting aside the securities on motion under the 6th section of the 53 Geo. 3. c. 141. Ibid.

The annuity deed was attested by two witnesses, but in the memorial the names of four were inserted; the clerk who prepared the memorial having, in consequence of the way in which the names of two of the grantors were written in the deed, by mistake added their names as witnesses,—Held, that this, so transparent a blunder that no one could be misled by it, did not affect the validity of the memorial. Ibid.

Gibbs v. Hooper distinguished; and the latter ground of the decision in that case questioned. Ibid.

The payment of the annual sums, exceeding 5*l.* per cent. per annum on the sum advanced, was secured upon land, and the principal by a policy on the life of one of the grantors, with a covenant for payment of the annual premium:—Held, that, as the principal was in some risk, the transaction was not void on the ground of usury. Ibid.

(B) Validity of.

In the year 1828, F C, in consideration of 1,998*l.*, granted an annuity of 139*l.* 17*s.* a year for the first five years, with a reversionary annuity of 199*l.* 16*s.* a year for ninety-nine years, if five persons or any of them should so long live: and his brother T C, for a merely nominal consideration, charged the annuity on a moiety of certain real estates of which he was owner, and covenanted that he was seised free from incumbrances. No memorial of the deed was enrolled under the 53 Geo. 3. c. 141. The estates produced about 400*l.* a year, and T C's moiety was already mortgaged to secure 1,000*l.*, with interest at 5*l.* per cent., so that the annual value of the moiety over and above the interest was about 150*l.* per annum. W M, one of the mortgagees, acted as the solicitor of all parties in the preparation of the annuity deed:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, and on appeal by the Lord Justice Knight Bruce (the Lord Justice Turner not expressing any opinion upon the points in controversy): First, that T C, although he had not actually joined in the grant of the annuity itself, was a grantor within the equitable construction of the 53 Geo. 3. c. 141. s. 10, which dispenses in certain cases with enrolment of a memorial. Secondly, that although for the purposes of that clause, the annuity granted must be taken to be of the larger amount, yet that W M must be regarded as having wilfully suppressed the prior incumbrance, and that the grantee could not therefore be affected with constructive notice thereof through W M; and, consequently, that the annual value of the lands, excluding interest on incumbrances of which the grantee had notice, was greater than the annuity, and that the clause dispensing with enrolment of a memorial applied. Thompson v. Cartwright, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) 234; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 10; 33 Beav. 178.

A was entitled under a will to an annuity of 50*l.*, charged upon real estate. She applied to B, a solicitor, to procure a loan of money to meet her present needs. The loan could not be procured from a third person, but B, who was previously unknown to A, agreed to purchase a portion of her annuity. B was the only solicitor in the transaction, and on the execution of the deed handed to A his bill of costs, the charges in which were reasonable, and which A. forthwith paid out of the consideration money. Eleven years afterwards, A filed a bill to set aside the transaction, but one of the Vice Chancellors dismissed the bill with costs; and on appeal, the Lords Justices held that the payment of the costs was not a return of part of the consideration money within the meaning of the Annuity Act, and considering that the case was not one coming strictly within the rules applicable to dealings between solicitor and client, and there being no evidence of unfair advantage taken of A by B, they affirmed the decision of the Vice Chancellor. Edwards v. Williams, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 763.

A B, resident in Brussels, was indebted to C D, resident in London. In August, 1838, C D went over to A B and settled accounts, and advanced him a further sum of money, and it was agreed that A B should give a post obit security for part, and his notes for the remainder of the debt. This was not completed, but in January, 1839, C D went over again, when it was arranged that A B should grant an annuity in lieu of the post obit security, and a bill at ten days was given by A B for the amount, which was delivered up upon the execution by A B of the annuity deed in February at Brussels:—Held, that this was one transaction, that the annuity was granted for money or money's worth, and that the deed, not being enrolled, was void under the Annuity Act:—Held, also, that the contract was English and not Belgian. Burgess v. Richardson, 29 Beav. 487.

(C) ARREARS OF.

A testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees (of whom his wife was one), upon trust for conversion, and to invest in government or real securities, and that his trustees should stand possessed of the trust premises to pay his wife an annuity of 100*l.*, clear of all deductions whatsoever, and directed the trustees to appropriate and set apart a fund for securing such annuity, and after the death of his wife directed the trustees to pay and divide or transfer the money thereinbefore appropriated and directed to be set apart among his (the testator's) children. Part of the testator's property consisted of 2,500*l.* 4*l.* per cent. stock, which, at his death and for some time after, produced 100*l.* a year; this fund was set apart by the trustees for securing payment of the widow's annuity, but owing to successive reductions of the interest of the stock by parliament, there was, at the widow's death, a considerable arrear to make up the deficiency between the 100*l.* a year and the reduced income of the fund which had for many years been received by the widow:—Held, that on the construction of the will the widow would have been entitled to have the deficiency made good out of the corpus, but that she having forborne to assert her claim for so long a period during her lifetime, and having been aware of the dealings of several of her children in respect of their shares with persons who were acting on the belief that they were shares in a certain definite amount of stock, without giving any intimation of her intention to claim such arrears out of the corpus, the representatives of the widow could not, as against the parties who so dealt for value with the knowledge of the widow, assert the claim to which she would otherwise have been entitled to have the arrears of the annuity made good out of the corpus. Upton v. Vanner, 1 Dr. & Sm. 594.

A testator directed his trustees out of the income of his residuary real and personal estate to pay an annuity of 200*l.*, and after the decease of the annuitant to permit the fund out of which the annuity should arise to fall into his general residuary personal estate, and the will contained gifts over of the residuary real and personal estate. The income of the testator's estate being insufficient for payment of the annuity,—Held, that the deficiency ought to be made good out of the corpus. Perkins v. Cooke, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 823; 2 Jo. & H. 393.

A testator gave leaseholds to trustees upon trust to receive the rents and profits and to pay the annual sum of 60*l.* to H for life, and after the death of H to raise by sale or mortgage the sum of 400*l.* for the children of H, and after the death of H and the raising and payment of the 400*l.*, to assign the said leaseholds, or such part thereof as should remain undisposed of, unto T absolutely. The income proving insufficient to satisfy the annuity, it was held that it was chargeable upon the corpus. Phillips v. Gutteridge, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 1.

Annuitants under a will are not entitled to interest on the arrears of their annuities. Booth v. Coulton, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 378.

A tenant for life, having a power to give a life interest to his wife, by his marriage settlement appointed certain hereditaments to trustees, during his wife's life, upon trust, if she survived him, to pay her an annuity of 500*l.* out of the rents and profits, during her life, for her jointure, in lieu of dower. He afterwards acquired the fee; and the hereditaments, subject to the jointure, being considered an insufficient security, the husband and wife joined in conveying the same, with other hereditaments, to trustees, discharged from the annuity, upon trust within three months to raise, by mortgage, sufficient money to purchase an annuity of 500*l.* for the life of the wife, if she survived him, or, if the money should not be raised by mortgage within three months, upon trust to sell the hereditaments, and invest a sufficient part thereof in 3*l.* per cent. consols, or (if insufficient) to invest the whole of the moneys in the parliamentary stocks or public funds, or in Government or real securities, and after the decease of the tenant for life, to pay the income to the wife during her life in satisfaction of the annuity, and to stand possessed of the surplus in trust for the husband. The power to raise money by mortgage was not exercised, and the trust premises were sold and invested in consols, but the whole income was insufficient to pay the annuity. Upon a bill filed by the wife after the death of the husband,—Held, by the Lord Chancellor, affirming the decision of the Master of the Rolls, that she was not entitled to have the deficiency of the income made good out of the corpus of the fund. Mortimer v. Picton, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 337.

(D) SECURITY FOR.

A testator directed his executors to pay an annuity to his wife for life, and also that it should be secured to her out of his leasehold messuages, &c. The residue of his property he gave to his children:

—Held, that not only the rents, but the estate itself was a security for the annuity; and the estate having been sold, and the fund being small and insufficient to meet the arrears and future payments of the annuity, the executors were ordered to pay the whole to the annuitant. Howarth v. Rothwell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 449; 30 Beav. 516.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees, and directed them to get in and sell his residuary personal estate which should not consist of leaseholds or moneys invested on security, and to appropriate a sufficient portion for payment of an annuity, which on the marriage of his daughter he had agreed to pay. He then gave his trustees a discretionary authority as to the sale of his real and leasehold estate. The residuary estate was exhausted, but the real and leasehold estates were sufficient to answer the annuity, which had been regularly paid. In a creditors' suit by the annuitant asking for administration of the real and personal estate, and that provision might be made for payment of the annuity,—Held, that the plaintiffs ought to have accepted an offer made to secure the annuity; that they were entitled to a charge on the testator's estates; that as the annuity had been paid, no ground existed for interfering with the authority of the trustees, but that a fund must be set apart to answer the annuity in the event of a sale of any part of the estates, with liberty to apply if the annuity fell into arrear, and that the plaintiffs must pay the costs up to and including the hearing. Burrell v. Delevante, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 365; 30 Beav. 550.

Upon the grant of an annuity during the grantor's life, the grantee undertook that when the annuity "came to be paid off," and "as soon as the annuity was redeemed," he would assign the policy on the grantor's life to the grantee. The policy was effected by and paid for by the grantee:—Held, on the death of the grantor without having redeemed the annuity, that the representative of the grantor was not entitled to the produce of the policy, or even to the surplus beyond the redemption money. Bashford v. Cann, 33 Beav. 109.

(E) Determination of.

Marriage will not determine an annuity given to a feme sole for life until she shall be bankrupt or insolvent, or shall assign or dispose of it, or do any act whereby the annuity, or any part thereof, shall be vested, or become liable to be vested, in any other person. Bonfield v. Hassell, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 475; 32 Beav. 217.

(F) Refund of Excess subscribed.

A proposal was made to establish, by the subscription of individuals (if approved of and aided by the East India Company), a fund for the purpose of creating, at the end of a certain number of years' service, a retiring pension to be held by members of the East India Company's civil service in Bengal. The directors did approve of the proposal, and undertook to pay in every year a sum equal to that subscribed by the subscribing members. They suggested rules which were adopted, and in the course of the correspondence between the directors and the subscribers, it was settled, by order of the directors and consent of the subscribers, that a subscriber should pay a certain per-centage on his salary during the whole time of his service, and that if, when he wished to retire, he had not paid half (the other half being contributed by the company) of the amount of the principal of the retiring pension (which was fixed at 10,000 rupees, or 1,000*l.*) he must fully make up his half; but nothing was expressly declared as to what should be done with the excess, if his payments had exceeded the amount of the half:—Held, affirming the judgments of the Courts below (see 29 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 125), that the subscriber was not entitled to have such excess refunded. Boldero v. the East India Co. 10 H.L. Cas. 405.

APPEAL.

[Under Queen's Remembrancer's Act, see Revenue. And see Inclosure Acts—Inferior Court—Justice of the Peace—Practice, at Law—Sessions.]

APPORTIONMENT.

(A) Rents.
(B) Dividends.

(A) Rents.

A testator directed that, for twenty-one years next after his death, his trustees should receive and accumulate the rents and profits of his real estate, and apply them towards payment of his debts and legacies, and, subject to that term, he gave the beneficial interest in the income of his estate to the plaintiff for life:—Held, under the Apportionment Act, that the rent which fell due after the expiration of the twenty-one years must be apportioned between those beneficially interested in the accumulations, and the tenant for life who was entitled on the expiration of the term. St. Aubyn v. St. Aubyn, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 917; 1 Dr. & Sm. 611.

A portion of the income was derived from royalties payable under mining sets or leases, when the ore should be obtained:—Held, that, this rent not becoming due at fixed periods, it did not come within the Apportionment Act. Ibid.

Held, also, that although the above direction carried the period of accumulation to the half-yearly day of payment beyond twenty-one years, this did not bring the case within the operation of the Thellusson Act. Ibid.

[See Bridges v. Potts, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 338, post, title Lease.]

(B) Dividends.

Land forming part of the estate of an intestate was sold under the compulsory powers of an act of parliament, and one-third of the purchase-money was invested in consols and set apart to meet his widow's dower:—Held, that the representative of the widow was entitled, under the 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. s. 15, to a proportion of the dividends up to the day of her death. Harrop v. Wilson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 235; 34 Beav. 166.

Lady M, being entitled, under the will of her late husband, to a life interest in certain shares in the Alliance Insurance Company (the dividends on which were under the deed of settlement to be declared half-yearly, and made payable in the months of April and October in each year), and also to a life interest in certain shares in railway and gas companies, died in November 1860. Subsequently a dividend was declared on the shares in the Alliance Company for the half-year ending on the 25th of March, 1861, and on the shares in the railway and gas companies for the half-year ending the 31st of December, 1860. The executrix of Lady M now claimed an apportioned part of these dividends:—Held, that the dividends on the shares in the Alliance Company were apportionable under the Apportionment Act, because the profits were by the deed of settlement of the company divisible at fixed periods. In re Maxwell's Trusts, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 333; 1 Hem. & M. 610.

The apportionment must be made with reference to the last previous time when the dividends were made payable, and not to that when they were earned. Ibid.

The dividends on shares in companies incorporated by acts of parliament containing clauses similar to section 91. of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, or in which the last-mentioned act is incorporated, are not within the Apportionment Act. Ibid.

A testator bequeathed certain railway debentures to trustees to pay the interest to his children for life, and afterwards the capital to go to his grandchildren. The testator died in February, and the next half-year's payment of dividend upon the debentures was received in the following July:—Held, that debentures being in the nature of mortgages upon which the interest accrued de die in diem, the portion of the half-year's dividend due up to the testator's death was to be considered as capital and not income, as between the tenants for life and remaindermen. In re Rogers's Trust, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 153; 1 Dr. & Sm. 338.

The Apportionment Act, 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 22. s. 2, applies to a determinable interest in dividends, created by a will made after the passing of the act, in exercise of a power contained in a deed dated before the act. Wardroper v. Cutfield, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 605. Plummer v. Whiteley (Johns. 585; s. c. 29 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 245) approved. Fletcher v. Moore (26 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 530) explained and qualified. Ibid.

APPRENTICE.

[See POOR; Settlement.]

(A) BILL TO ENFORCE EXECUTION OF INDENTURE.

Bill by an apprentice praying that the defendant (his master) might be ordered to execute the indenture of apprenticeship, and to take him into his employ and teach him his trade, dismissed without costs, it appearing that the plaintiff's conduct was objectionable on account of his idleness and other unsatisfactory particulars. Brown v. Banks, 3 Giff. 190.

(B) JURISDICTION OF COURT OF CHANCERY TO CANCEL INDENTURE.

A bill was filed by the trustees and guardians of an infant, whose mother in her lifetime had paid 200 guineas as a premium to apprentice her son to an engineer, alleging that the master had improperly suspended him from work and excluded him from the factory, and asking the Court to cancel the indenture of apprenticeship, and to direct a return of the premium:—Held, that this Court had no jurisdiction, and that relief could only be obtained by an action at law for breach of the contract; and, as the defendant omitted to demur, the bill was dismissed, without costs. Webb v. England, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 222; 29 Beav. 44.

(C) ABSENTING FROM SERVICE—JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES.

By an indenture of apprenticeship, J C, an infant, with the consent of his father, put himself apprentice for seven years to T S, of W, lock-maker, his executors and administrators, such executors or administrators carrying on the same trade or business, and in the town of W, for seven years; and T S, in consideration of the services of his said apprentice, agreed to teach and instruct him, or cause him to be taught and instructed, in the art of a lock-maker during the said term, and to pay the apprentice certain weekly wages:—Held, that the apprentice was bound to serve the executrix of T S, his widow, who carried on her husband's business at W, and that the executrix was bound to teach him. Cooper v. Simmons, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 138; 7 Hurls. & N. 707.

On the hearing of a summons, taken out by the executrix, against the apprentice, charging him with absenting himself from her service without lawful excuse, the attorney who appeared for the apprentice stated that he had advised that the apprenticeship was at an end on the death of the husband, and that the appellant, acting on the bona fide belief that the opinion of the attorney was correct, absented himself from the service:—Held, that the Justices were nevertheless justified in convicting the apprentice for absenting himself without lawful excuse. Ibid.

(D) IMPLIED CONTRACT FOR MAINTENANCE.

The plaintiffs and the defendant verbally agreed that the defendant's son should be bound apprentice to the plaintiffs for four years, the son to go on trial for a month, a premium of 100*l.* to be paid by instalments. The son went on trial, and remained upwards of a year, when the defendant removed him. No deed of apprenticeship was executed, or any part of the premium paid:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not recover from the defendant for the maintenance of the son. Harrison v. James, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 248; 7 Hurls. & N. 804.

(E) RIGHT OF MASTER TO DAMAGES FOR ABSENCE OF APPRENTICE.

An action was brought by the master against the father of an apprentice on an indenture of apprenticeship to serve the master for a period of five years from the 1st of May, 1860, and it was alleged as a breach of covenant that the apprentice unlawfully absented himself from his master's service. It was proved that the defendant took his son away from the plaintiff on the 18th of January, 1862, and the writ in the action issued on the 10th of February, 1862: — Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages for the absence of his apprentice from the 18th of January to the 10th of February, and was not entitled to prospective damages for the whole term of the apprenticeship. Lewis v. Peacey, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 496; 1 Hurls. & C. 518.

(A) SUBMISSION TO ARBITRATION.

A marine policy of assurance was made in a mutual assurance association (managed by a committee of members), subject to the following rule: "All average claims and claims of abandonment shall be adjusted and settled conformably to the custom of Lloyd's or the Royal Exchange by a professional average-stater, but should the committee or the assured be dissatisfied with such adjustment, they may refer the same to two professional average-staters, or to two other competent persons, with power to such two persons to appoint an umpire, and the award of such three persons shall be final, and all other causes of dispute of whatever nature shall be referred in like manner, but the committee and assured, by mutual consent, may refer all such adjustments or disputes to one person only, whose award shall also be final, and no action at law shall be brought until the arbitrators have given their decision ":—Held, that this was a valid agreement within the rule in Scott v. Avery, and that the reference to arbitration or offer to refer was a condition precedent to a claim on the policy for a total loss, and that an action could not be maintained on the mere refusal to pay the claim. Tredwen v. Holman, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 398; 1 Hurls. & C. 72.

In an action on the policy, the declaration, after setting out the policy and rule and alleging the total loss, averred that the plaintiff had always been willing that the loss and amounts payable in respect thereof should be adjusted and settled according to the rule, and had performed all conditions precedent to entitle the plaintiff to a performance of the agreement and rule and to maintain the action, and had requested the defendant and the members of the association to settle and adjust, or to allow to be settled and adjusted the amount payable in respect of the loss and in accordance with the terms of the policy and of the rule. Breach, that the defendant and the said members had wholly refused so to do, and that the amount insured had not been paid, nor been settled or adjusted in accordance with the policy and rule:—Held, that the declaration was good as either containing an averment that the defendant had refused to refer the dispute, or that a reference had been had and an award made in favour of the plaintiff; and on the other hand, that a plea alleging that the claim had not been adjusted and settled according to the rule, and that there was a dispute in respect thereof within the meaning of the rule, and that it had not been arbitrated upon, nor had the arbitrators or arbitrator given a decision thereupon, was an answer to the declaration. Ibid.

Articles of partnership comprised an agreement to submit all disputes to arbitration, and until such arbitration should have taken place neither party was to be at liberty to sue the other with reference to the affairs of the partnership:—Held, that although an arbitration clause is legal, there may not be a negative clause superadded to withdraw the decision of the question from the tribunals of the country. Lee v. Page, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 857.

Where a mining lease contained a clause for referring to arbitration all questions to arise between lessor and lessee "relative to or concerning the indenture, or any covenant, clause, matter or thing therein contained," upon the request in writing of either party, and after bill filed by lessors to compel lessees to work the mine in a particular manner, notices to refer had been served by the lessees upon motion under the 11th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, to stay proceedings, the Court held that the case was one which came within the 11th section, but that the section gave the Court a discretion; and the Court, in its discretion, refused to stay proceedings, on the ground that the notices to refer related to other matters besides those the subject of the suit, and that questions arose in the suit which did not come within the clause in the lease. Wheatley v. the Westminster Brymbo Coal and Coke Co. (Lim.), 2 Dr. & S. 347.

An agreement between A and B contained the following clauses,—"In every case of any difference between the parties hereto, or their representatives, whether touching the true intent or construction of this agreement or of anything therein expressed, or touching anything to be done or omitted in pursuance of this agreement, or as to any of the incidents or consequences thereof, or otherwise relating to the premises, the matter in question shall be referred to arbitration." "Every such reference shall be made to two persons, one to be named by each party." "If either party for fourteen days after being requested by the other party to name an arbitrator fail so to do, then both arbitrators may be named by the party making such request." Differences having arisen, A appointed an arbitrator, but B declined to do so on request, whereupon A appointed a second arbitrator; and the two proceeded to hear and dispose of the matter. The appointment of the arbitrators purported to be made by A and one C (who was said to be an incumbrancer on A's presumed interest under the agreement) severally, and the notice was also given by A and C:—Held, that the appointments were not vitiated by the introduction of the name of C. Haddan v. Roupell, 9 Com. B. Rep. 683.

Held, also, that it was not necessary in the appointment of the arbitrators to particularize the matters to be arbitrated upon. Ibid.

Held, also, that the request to B to appoint an arbitrator was not rendered invalid by its requiring him to notify the appointment to the solicitors, who had been acting for A throughout, instead of to A himself. Ibid.

(b) Agreement signed by an Agent.

Upon a submission to arbitration between two individuals (not being partners in trade) and a third party, where the agreement of reference is signed by one of them thus, "A, for self and B,"—on making the submission a rule of Court, it must be shewn by affidavit that A had the authority of B to sign for him. In re Aldington, 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 375.

An order of reference of a cause made by a Judge at chambers by consent of both parties "on the usual terms," includes such power to the arbitrator to amend, as a Judge would have at Nisi Prius. If, therefore, after such consent, the formal order drawn up by the Judge's clerk accidentally omits such power, the Judge may insert it therein at the request of either party, notwithstanding the reference has been proceeded with. Thompsett v. Bowyer, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 1; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 284.

If an arbitrator refuse to allow a party to a reference to put in evidence certain documents which by law he is entitled to have read on his behalf, the party aggrieved may, pending the reference, apply for leave to revoke the submission. If, however, it be shewn that the arbitrator has acted wrongly in law, the Court will not necessarily make the rule absolute; but, on the contrary, will discharge it, provided it be satisfied that the arbitrator, on hearing the decision of the Court, will comply with its directions, and receive the evidence. Hart v. Duke, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 55.

The Court will not allow an amendment so as to introduce a new cause of action, where a cause has been referred by consent under an order which does not reserve power to the arbitrator to amend. Nor will they permit the plaintiff to revoke the submission, there being no suggestion of any breach of faith on the part of the defendants. Smuthwaite v. Richardson, 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 463.

(d) Making the Submission a Rule of Court.

Where matters in difference had been referred to an arbitrator by Judge's order, and the arbitrator, after twice enlarging the time, had made his award, the order of reference may be made a rule of Court without an affidavit verifying the dates of such enlargement. Roberts v. Evans, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 73; 6 Best & S. 1.

Where two persons agree by deed to refer all matters in dispute which shall arise between them to two arbitrators, one to be chosen by each for that purpose; and on such disputes arising, in pursuance of such agreement the arbitrators are appointed by parol, the submission to arbitration is a parol submission, and therefore cannot be made a rule of Court under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125. s. 17. Ex parte Glaysher, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 41; 3 Hurls. & C. 442.

A lease contained a proviso that in case any disputes and differences should arise between the parties, they should be referred to two arbitrators, one to be chosen by each party, and that if either of them should neglect to name an arbitrator on his part within seven days after notice of the appointment of an arbitrator by the other, the arbitrator so appointed should act for both; and it was further agreed that "the submission of the said parties to the award of the said arbitrators or arbitrator might at the instance of either party be made a rule of Court." Disputes having arisen, the lessor appointed an arbitrator in writing, and gave notice in writing to the lessee that he had done so; the latter did not appoint an arbitrator on his part, whereupon, after due notice, the arbitrator appointed by the lessor proceeded ex parte, and made an award:—Held, upon the construction of the 17th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, that upon filing the appointment with an affidavit by the lessor verifying his signature thereto, the submission might be made a rule of Court. Newton v. Hetherington, 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 342.

Held, also, that by the combined effect of the 17th and 26th sections, an affidavit by the attesting witness to the lease was not necessary. Ibid.

(B) COMPULSORY REFERENCE.

In the case of a compulsory reference, under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, section 3, the parties are bound by the opinion of the arbitrator upon questions both of law and fact, as in the case of any voluntary reference. Baguley v. Markwick, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 342; s. c. nom. Baggalay v. Borthwick, 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 61.

Semble—A party has not a right to demand a case to be stated for the opinion of the Court, but that whilst the reference is pending before the arbitrator he may apply to a Judge, under section 4, for an interim order to state a case. Ibid.

A Judge at Nisi Prius has no power, under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, to make a compulsory order of reference of a cause before him for trial in the ordinary way, the power conferred by section 3. being confined to applications before trial, and section 6. to trials of questions of fact by the Judge without a jury. Robson v. Lees, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 235; 6 Hurls. & N. 258.

To an action for damages for not delivering up premises at the expiration, in as good repair and condition as at the commencement, of a tenancy, and for breach of a covenant in a lease to deliver up in good repair,—the defendant paid 10*l.* into Court, which the plaintiff denied to be enough to satisfy his claim. A Judge at chambers, on the application of the plaintiff, having made an order referring the action to the Master, under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125. s. 3, the Court held, that it was a matter for the discretion of the Judge; that he had exercised a wise discretion, and refused to rescind his order. Angell v. Felgate, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 41; 7 Hurls. & N. 396.

(C) ARBITRATOR.

[Appointment of—see Haddan v. Roupell, ante, (A) (a).

(a) Power and Duty.

The Court of Chancery referred to arbitration certain matters in dispute between parties to the suit of H v. H, and also between the same parties as to the estate of H, the testator in the cause; those disputes related to certain collieries, their management and the dealings with them for many years. One of the parties had a son, who was well acquainted with the mining accounts, and had assisted his father in the business, and this party applied to the arbitrator to allow his son to be present; but that officer refused to permit him to be present, on the ground of his behaviour in the matter. A shorthand writer, whose presence the same party wished to take notes at the meetings, was also excluded. After the award, a motion was made to set it aside:—Held, that, without going into the question whether the award did or did not do substantial justice between the parties, it must be set aside, the exclusion by the arbitrator of the son and the shorthand writer having been made without adequate ground, and the acquiescence of the party complaining, in the proceedings under the reference after their exclusion, not being such as to deprive him of his right to have the award set aside. In re Haigh's Estate; Haigh v. Haigh, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 420; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 157.

Observations on the duties of arbitrators, and on their power to delegate authority. Ibid.

An arbitrator, in taking accounts, allowed two bills of costs sent to him by one side after the last meeting, without communicating them to the other side, and he, being authorized under the reference to appoint an accountant, "not objected to by any of the parties," appointed one without communicating with the parties. The award was set aside. In re Tidswell, 33 Beav. 213.

An arbitrator awarded that a sum, which he found due from one party, should "be forthwith paid and accounted for by him, and brought into trust accounts":—Held, that this was too uncertain, and fatal to the award. Ibid.

Observations as to remitting an award back to the same arbitrator, under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125. s. 8. Ibid.

Bill by a contractor, alleging unfair conduct on the part of the architect, whose decision was by the terms of the contract made final, and who ousted the contractor and finished the buildings. The Court, on proof of such unfair conduct, decreed payment of the balance due to the plaintiff on the contract, and relieved the contractor from penalties, declared the architect's decision not binding, and ordered both the defendants (the architect and the contracting party) to pay the costs of the suit. Pawley v. Turnbull, 3 Giff. 70.

It is not absolutely necessary that the evidence before an arbitrator should be taken on oath; the parties may waive it. Wakefield v. the Llanelly Railway and Dock Co., 34 Beav. 245.

At the trial of an action on covenants in a lease (which had many years to run) for non-repair, and for waste by alteration of the premises, raising many issues, an order of reference was made, which directed "that the jury do find a verdict for the plaintiff for the claim in the declaration, subject to a reference to a valuer, who is to decide whether there is any damage to the plaintiff by reason of the premises not being in a sufficient state of repair, under the terms of the lease, in which case the valuer is to award the amount of damage to the reversion. It is also ordered that the valuer is to say what compensation (if any) the plaintiff is entitled to in consequence of the alterations which have taken place in the premises, and that the valuer should be attended by two witnesses only on each side, to explain the past and present state of the premises." The appointed valuer found as follows: "I hereby certify that beyond the sum of 17*l.* paid into Court, there is no damage to the plaintiff by reason of the premises not being in a sufficient state of repair under the terms of the lease; nor is the plaintiff entitled to any compensation in consequence of the alterations which have taken place in the premises":—Held, that the arbitrator had no power over the verdict, but that his duty was limited to deciding on the two specified matters of damage, viz., by reason of non-repair, and by reason of the alterations; that the certificate was good and valid, though it did not dispose of the issues raised, and that it authorized an entry of a verdict for the plaintiff, with nominal damages. Sowdon v. Mills, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 175.

It is competent to arbitrators, under the Friendly Societies Act, to decline to hear counsel. In re Macqueen, 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 793.

Semble—That all arbitrators have the like discretion. Ibid.

It is a matter entirely in the discretion of an arbitrator whether he will or will not postpone the reference, in order to give one of the parties an opportunity of bringing a material witness from abroad. And the Court will not interfere unless the circumstances under which he refuses to do so are such as to amount to misconduct. Ginder v. Curtis, 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 723.

(b) Excess of Authority.

The plaintiff had effected three policies on goods, one for 6,000*l.* with the A company, another for 2,500*l.* with the B company, and a third for 2,500*l.* with the C company. A fire having happened, the plaintiff's claims against these three companies were referred to arbitration. The agreement of reference recited that the plaintiff had claimed to have made good, by the several companies parties thereto, or some of them, the loss thereby sustained to the chattels and things insured, so far as the said loss was covered by the policies, or any of them; and that four schedules, severally marked A, B, C, and C*a*, contained the particulars of all the chattels and things alleged by the plaintiff to have been covered by the said policies, or some or one of them, and to have been destroyed or injured by fire. It further recited, that "it had been agreed between the said parties thereto that the claim of the plaintiff, so far as respected the chattels and things particularized in schedule A should be satisfied by means of the payment to him of a sum of 2,771*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.*, such sum being the agreed value at the time of the occurrence of the fire of the last-mentioned chattels and things, as the plaintiff did thereby admit." It further recited, that difficulties had arisen respecting the settlement of the said claim of the plaintiff, so far as the same had not been agreed to be satisfied as aforesaid, and respecting the adjustment of the respective liabilities of the said companies, as between or among themselves, to the total loss covered by the said policies. It then proceeded to refer it to the arbitrators "to award and determine what was the total sum of money which ought to be paid to the plaintiff under or by virtue of the said policies, or any of them, in respect of loss or damage occasioned by the said fire to or in the said chattels or things particularized as aforesaid in schedules B, C, and C*a*, and what were the several proportions in which such total sum, and also the said sum of 2,771*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.* agreed to be paid as aforesaid, ought to be borne and paid among or between the several companies." The arbitrators by their award found that 8,288*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.* was the total sum of money which ought to be paid to the plaintiff under or by virtue of the said three policies, in respect of loss or damage occasioned by the fire to the chattels and things particularized in schedules B, C, and C*a*; and they directed that this sum of 8,288*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.* and the 2,771*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.*, so agreed to be paid to the plaintiff in satisfaction of his claim in respect of the loss or damage occasioned by the fire to the chattels and things particularized in schedule A, making together 11,060*l.*, should be borne and paid by the three companies in certain proportions. They then found that the loss or damage sustained exceeded the sums insured, and that the whole salvage and proceeds of the salvage of and from the said fire belonged absolutely to the plaintiff:—Held, that, in awarding that the plaintiff was entitled to the salvage, which it appeared from the record arose solely from the goods particularized in schedule A, the arbitrators had exceeded their jurisdiction. Skipper v. Grant, 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 237.

By bond of submission dated the 19th of March, 1859, it was referred to an arbitrator to determine of and concerning all matters of accounts then pending between A and B. The arbitrator, by his award, reciting the submission, awarded "of and concerning the premises," that, "up to the 31st of October, 1857, the accounts between A and B, in reference to the W C farm, were adjusted, and that the balance then due from A to B amounted to 4,314*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*; and that no partnership existed between A and B in respect of the said farm;" and he further awarded that "A do pay to B the sum of 781*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.*, the amount due from him in respect of the farm aforesaid; and that the said A do pay to the said B the sum of 1,137*l.* 17*s.* due from him to B in respect of shares in the C company; and that, on payment of such last-mentioned sum, the said B do deliver to the said A 118 shares in the said company, held by him as collateral security for the said sum." In an action brought by the executors of B to enforce payment of the two sums so awarded,—Held, that the award was not uncertain, and that the arbitrator had not exceeded the authority given to him by the submission in awarding that no partnership existed between A and B, or that the shares held by B as collateral security for the 1,137*l.* 17*s.* should be delivered up to A on payment of that sum. Harrison v. Lay, 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 528.

If an arbitrator, who has suffered his time to expire, determine to proceed in the reference, notwithstanding an objection taken on that ground by a party to the reference, and the party protests that any award which the arbitrator may make will be therefore void, his continuing to attend and contest the case before the arbitrator under such protest does not give the arbitrator authority to make an award. Ringland v. Lowndes (Ex. Ch.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 337; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 514.

If a party to a reference objects that the arbitrators are entering upon the consideration of a matter not referred to them, and protests against it, and the arbitrators nevertheless go into the question and receive evidence on it, and the party, still under protest, continues to attend before the arbitrators and cross-examines the witnesses on the point objected to, he does not thereby waive his objection, nor is he estopped from saying that the arbitrators have exceeded their authority by awarding on the matter. Davies v. Price (Ex. Ch.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 8.

(D) AWARD.

(a) Form and Validity.

A railway company gave to the plaintiff, who was owner and occupier of a leasehold hotel, the usual notice to treat, and it was referred to arbitration to ascertain the value of the premises, and the damages sustained by the execution of the works, and the compensation to be paid by the company in respect thereof. The arbitrator awarded 2,700*l.* as the compensation to be paid for all the leaseholder's interest, of whatever nature, in the leasehold. Upon a bill by the leaseholder for a specific performance,—Held, that the award was bad, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Wakefield v. the Llanelly Rail. and Dock Co., 3 De Gex, J. & S. 11; 34 Beav. 245.

By a Judge's order, after issue joined, an action was referred to a lay arbitrator, who by his award ordered "that there should be a verdict for the plaintiff for 7*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.*":—Held, that although there was no power to enter a verdict, the award was good and an action maintainable upon it, for the award must be read as an expression of the arbitrator's opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to the sum mentioned, and not as an award that a verdict should be entered for that sum. Everest v. Ritchie, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 350; 7 Hurls. & N. 698.

An action for use and occupation having been referred to the Master, under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125. s. 3, the Master certified that there was nothing due from the defendant to the plaintiffs, and on the same day wrote a letter to the defendant's attorney, which he shewed to the plaintiff's attorney, and in which "in order to carry out the friendly spirit of arrangement which appeared to exist between the parties," he gave his opinion on several questions raised upon an agreement between the defendant and some third parties "as founded upon the evidence given in the cause referred," and in order "to assist the parties, and to prevent the necessity for future litigation":—Held, on motion to set aside the certificate on the ground that it appeared from the arbitrator's letter that he was mistaken in the law, that, whether he were mistaken or not, the letter formed no part of the award, and could not be looked at by the Court. Hogge v. Burgess explained. Holgate v. Killick, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 7; 7 Hurls. & N. 418.

Where an award is valid in form, and is made on all the matters referred and on no more, and is intended by the arbitrators to express their decision, an objection that the arbitrators had made their award without exercising their own judgment, but according to the opinion of a third person by whose decision they had beforehand agreed to be bound, cannot be taken on a plea of nul tiel agard to an action on the award, but ought to be raised on a motion to set the award aside. Whitmore v. Smith (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 107; 7 Hurls. & N. 509.

A dispute arose between the plaintiff and the defendants, as to whether a certain carriage archway had been constructed in conformity with an agreement entered into between them. An action having been brought, by an order of Nisi Prius the cause was referred to an arbitrator, who was empowered to direct, if he found for the plaintiff, what should be done to make the carriage archway in conformity with the agreement. The arbitrator found for the plaintiff, without awarding any damages, and directed certain alterations to be made in the archway. The plaintiff signed judgment for the amount of the damages claimed in the declaration:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled only to nominal damages. Brown v. the Somerset and Dorset Rail. Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 152.

In an application to set aside an award, it appeared that the dispute arose respecting the condition of a cargo of rape-seed, which had been shipped and forwarded to one of the parties upon the terms contained in a sold-note, which provided that any dispute arising out of the contract should "be settled by arbitration in London in the usual way." Two arbitrators were chosen, one for each side, and they being unable to agree, appointed an umpire according to the terms of the reference. The umpire made his award after looking at samples furnished to him by the arbitrator representing the party in whose favour he decided, without any communication with the other party, after communicating directly with some of the witnesses, and without giving the party against whom he decided any opportunity of being heard. In so doing, he stated (in an affidavit filed by him) that he had followed the usual and ordinary practice in such cases. Evidence was also given by a number of merchants engaged in the oil and seed trade that it was the usual and ordinary practice in arbitrations in the oil and seed trade, and also in mercantile arbitrations generally, for an umpire, in case he sees fit, to inspect samples produced on behalf of one of the parties, without any communication with the other, to communicate directly with witnesses without notice to the parties, and to make his award without giving the parties or their arbitrators an opportunity of being heard:—Held, that such an usage, as tending to allow parties to be decided against without being heard, was contrary to the principles of equity and justice, and that the award could not therefore be supported. In re Brook, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 246; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 403.

An award was made on the 9th of June, 1859, under a submission to arbitration, which, however, contained no agreement to make it a rule of Court. The plaintiff objected to the award; but he did not make it a rule of Court, or take any measures to have it set aside prior to an action which was brought against him on the award in December, 1859. He pleaded nul tiel agard to the action; but his plea having been overruled by the Exchequer Chamber, and judgment entered against him, he then filed a bill to have the award cancelled and for an injunction against execution on the judgment:—Held (affirming the decision of the Vice Chancellor Wood but dissentiente the Lord Justice Turner), that the plaintiff had by his conduct lost his equity, if ever existing, against the action and against the award. Smith v. Whitmore, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 713; 1 Hem. & M. 576; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 297.

A having brought an action against B, and B a cross-action against A, the same and all matters in difference were by a Judge's order, by consent, referred. B died pending the reference, and before administration could be taken out the arbitrator, notwithstanding a protest, proceeded ex parte, and made an award directing payment of a sum of money and costs to A. A had filed a creditors' bill for the administration of B's estate, founded upon the alleged debt under the award:—Held, on demurrer, that a bill would not lie by B's executor praying that the bill in the creditors' suit might be dismissed and the award set aside. Harding v. Wickham, 2 Jo. & H. 677.

The Court of Chancery has no jurisdiction to set aside an award made under a reference of an action at law, whether the same be or be not under the statute, 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 15. Ibid.

It is in the discretion of the Master or other arbitrator, to whom an action in respect of a claim for work has been referred, to inspect the premises on which the work was done; and his refusal to inspect is no ground for setting aside his award. Mundy v. Black, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 193; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 557.

After an arbitrator had made his award, one of the parties discovered that the award had been drawn up by the person who had acted as attorney and advocate for the other party, and that this person had also advised the arbitrator privately in the matter of the award. This was admitted by the arbitrator, but he positively denied that he had done more than consult the attorney, who was his own ordinary professional adviser, as to the form of the award, or that his decision was in any way influenced thereby. Under these circumstances, the affidavits in exculpation of the arbitrator being very strong, the Court refused to set aside the award. Under- wood v. the Bedford and Cambridge Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 10; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 442.

An arbitrator to whom an action for a claim above 20*l.* had been referred as a matter of account, awarded to the plaintiff a sum less than 20*l.*, and certified that the action was fit to be brought in a superior Court, but gave no other certificate. The Master having taxed the costs on the lower scale, the arbitrator, on being applied to, on behalf of the plaintiff, stated in effect that he intended by his certificate to give the plaintiff his costs. The Court gave the plaintiff leave at his (the plaintiff's) expense to refer the matter back to the arbitrator. Caswell v. Groucutt, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 361.

An agreement of reference in an appeal against a poor-rate, contained a clause enabling the arbitrators, at the request of either party, to state a case, to be settled by the umpire, for the opinion of the Court. The arbitrators having disagreed, the umpire made his umpirage, and subsequently, at the request of the appellants, set out the principles upon which he had acted, with a view of enabling the appellants to have the question discussed in Court. Upon a rule calling upon the defendants to shew cause why the umpirage should not be sent back to the umpire, in order that he might state the facts more fully, this Court refused to interfere, as the appellants had had the opportunity of getting a case stated, and, instead of doing so, had taken their chance of getting the umpirage made in their favour. In re the London Dock Company v. the Trustees of the Parish of Shadwell, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 30.

References to the Master under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, stand upon the same footing with regard to applications to set aside or send them back for reconsideration as ordinary references. The Court, therefore, will not send an award back to the Master in order that he may state a case, when at the hearing he declined to state one. Holloway v. Francis, 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 559.

(c) Taking up Award: Moiety of Fee.

Where two parties employ an arbitrator, and one pays the arbitrator's fees to enable him to take up the award (there being no event of the award to entitle either party to costs), the party so paying is entitled to recover from the other a moiety of the sum paid as money paid to his use. Marsack v. Webber, 6 Hurls. & N. 1.

(d) Enlarging Time for making.

By a submission to arbitration, which might be made a rule of Court, the time for making the award was limited to a day named, or such further day, not exceeding two calendar months from the date of the submission, as the arbitrator might appoint. The arbitration was closed before the day named; and the arbitrator, also before the day named, enlarged the time for making the award, but to a day later than the two months. The arbitrator made his award within the enlarged time, but after the two months:—Held, that the Court or a Judge had power afterwards to enlarge the time for making the award under the 39th section of the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 42. Ward v. the Secretary of State for War, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 53.

Where there was cause to believe that an arbitrator had failed to enlarge the time for making his award within the time provided by the order of reference, and he had refused to give any information as to whether the enlargement had been duly made or not, this Court, upon the application of one of the parties who wished to make the order of reference a rule of Court, ordered the arbitrator to attend before the Master to be examined upon the matter, in order that the order of reference might be made a rule of Court. Roberts v. Evans, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 7.

(e) Making Award a Rule of Court.

Where a decree sanctions a reference to arbitration, and reserves liberty to either party to apply to make the award an order of Court, the application for that purpose should be made upon motion, and not ex parte. Lipscomb v. Palmer, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 169.

By the agreement of reference between P and S, costs were in the discretion of the arbitrator. The award directed that 149*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*, being the costs of the award, should be paid by the parties in the following proportions: that 25*l.* should be paid by P to certain attorneys forthwith, and 124*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*, the residue, should be paid by S in like manner, and if P paid any part of the 124*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*, that S should repay it to him:—Held, on an application by P for a rule calling on S to pay the several sums, that as the arbitrator had fixed in the award the amount payable to himself, the matter was too doubtful to grant a rule. Threlfall v. Panshawe doubted. Parkinson v. Smith, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 178.

If an award finds that the plaintiff is entitled to recover a certain sum from the defendant, the Court will grant a rule ordering the defendant to pay the amount, although the award contains no direction to the defendant to pay the amount, and though, consequently, no attachment could issue. Bowen v. Bowen, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 193.

If a person ordered to pay money under an award satisfies the Court that he has a bona fide claim for a cross-demand larger than the sum awarded, which he might reasonably hope to support by way of set-off to an action on the award, the Court will not grant a rule ordering him to pay the sum awarded,—Semble, otherwise if the set-off be one cognizable only in equity. Swayne v. White, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 260.

It is no answer to a rule to pay money pursuant to an award, that the party in whose favour the award is made has, since the award, been committed to take his trial for perjury committed during the arbitration. Woollen v. Bradford, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 129.

The Court will not make absolute a rule nisi on a defendant to pay money pursuant to an award unless there has been personal service, or unless it be shewn that personal service cannot be effected because the party is keeping out of the way to avoid service. An acceptance by the attorney of the defendant of the service of the rule nisi, and a consent by him to the rule being made absolute, are not for this purpose equivalent to personal service. Evans v. Prosser, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 256.

The Court refused a rule for payment of money under an award, where it appeared that the costs (unascertained) of certain proceedings in Chancery were payable to the other party under the same award. Lambe v. Jones, 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 478.

(E) Costs.

(a) To abide the Event.

Where an action for alleged breaches of covenant in a farming lease, in which the plaintiff claimed 100*l.* damages, was, after pleas but before issue joined, by a Judge's order and by consent, referred to arbitration, "the costs of the reference to abide the event," and the arbitrators found in favour of the defendant on all the alleged breaches, with the exception of one, on which they awarded 16*s.* damages to the plaintiff, —Held, that the event of the reference was in favour of the defendant, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to his costs. Kelcey v. Stupples, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 6; 1 Hurls. & C. 576.

An action of slander, after issue joined and before trial, was by agreement referred to arbitration, "the costs of the cause to abide the event of the award." The arbitrator found one issue for the plaintiff, with 20*s.* damages:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the cause. Frean v. Sargent, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 281; 2 Hurls. & C. 293.

An action of trespass was referred, by consent, at Nisi Prius, and by an order of Nisi Prius, drawn up in the usual form, the verdict was, by consent, entered for the plaintiffs, with damages 40*s.*, costs 40*s.*; and, by the like consent, it was also ordered that the costs of the reference and award should be paid by the defendants. The award having been made, the Master taxed the costs of the action as between party and party on the ordinary scale; and then proceeded to tax the costs of the reference and award on the same scale, but the plaintiffs objecting that the proceedings on the reference were virtually under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and that the costs ought to be taxed on the scale usually allowed in proceedings under that statute, the Master adjourned the taxation to enable the plaintiffs to apply to the Court:—Held, that the costs the defendants had stipulated to pay, and which they were bound to pay under the order of Nisi Prius, were ordinary costs as between party and party, and ought to be taxed on such and on no other scale. Eccles v. the Mayor, Aldermen and Burgesses of Blackburn, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 358.

And per Martin, B. and Bramwell, B., that the Court ought not to be called on to give directions to the Master how to tax, but that the Master should announce the principle on which he taxes, and then the Court may be called on to review his taxation. Ibid.

ARMY PRIZE.

The law relative to the payment of money belonging to deceased officers and soldiers of Her Majesty's land forces amended by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 36.

ARREST.

[Of Garnishee, see Attachment of Debts.]

(A) By Police-Officer not having the Warrant in his Possession.

A police-officer arrested W G under a warrant for disobedience to a bastardy order, but at the time of doing so, the warrant was actually at the police-station, and not in the possession of the officer, although it had been so previously:—Held, that the arrest was illegal, as the officer ought to have had the warrant ready to be produced at the time of the arrest, if required by W G. Galliard v. Laxton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 123; 2 Best & S. 363.

After the arrest of W G the appellant assaulted the officer. Two informations were laid against the appellant, the one charging him with the rescue of W G, and the other with an assault upon the police-officer. At the hearing before the magistrates the former information was abandoned:—Held, that this did not in any way prevent the officer from proceeding upon the latter information. Ibid.

(B) On Ca. Sa. for more than is due.

An action will lie against a judgment creditor for maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause indorsing a writ of ca. sa., issued on such judgment, with directions to levy a larger sum than due, and causing the debtor to be arrested thereunder; and it is not necessary to allege that the proceedings have terminated in the plaintiff's favour, or that the illegality of the arrest should have been ascertained before the action by the debtor's obtaining an order of a Court or Judge for his discharge from custody, as such illegality must depend altogether on the amount for which it was made being greater than the sum due, which is a fact to be only conclusively decided by a jury. Gilding v. Eyre, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 174; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 592.

(C) Under Absconding Debtors' Arrest Act.

Where a debtor is arrested on a warrant granted under the Absconding Debtors' Arrest Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 52), and the last of the seven days after the date of such warrant is Good Friday, and the offices of the Court are therefore closed until the following Wednesday, the creditor has such Wednesday to issue the writ of capias required by section 1. of the said act. Hughes v. Griffith, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 47; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 324.

Quære—Whether a writ of capias issued after the time required by the Absconding Debtors' Arrest Act, and upon the same materials as those on which the warrant had been obtained under that act, can be supported as an independent writ, if the intention of the debtor to leave the country continues. Ibid.

The proceeding by warrant, under the Absconding Debtors' Arrest Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 52), is only auxiliary to that by capias, under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and the validity of the capias is independent of the proceedings under the warrant. Williams v. Gibbon, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 33; 4 Best & S. 617.

Where, therefore, a defendant has been arrested under a warrant, and is discharged at the end of the seven days, he may be arrested again on a capias issued under a Judge's order made on a sufficient affidavit, although it was sworn before the lapse of the seven days. Ibid.

Masters v. Johnson overruled. Ibid.

(D) PRIVILEGE FROM.

[See In re Jewitt, post, ATTORNEY AND SOLICITOR (C).]

An insolvent debtor is privileged from arrest when attending or returning from the Court in which his petition is heard, although on the day he was arrested the consideration of the final order was adjourned sine die. Chauvin v. Alexandre, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 79; 2 Best & S. 47.

The deputy coroner for a county, while on his way to hold an inquest, is privileged from arrest on civil process. Ex parte the Deputy Coroner for the County of Middlesex, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 77; 6 Hurls. & N. 501.

If arrested under such circumstances, the Court will order his discharge; no rule need be drawn up. Ibid.

(E) DISCHARGE FROM.

W was adjudicated bankrupt in April, 1857. He did not then surrender, but went abroad for some years, coming back to England from time to time under a feigned name, and communicating with some of his assignees. In March, 1863, while in England, he was arrested on a claim of debt for 50,000*l.* on a capias to hold to bail, issued pursuant to a Judge's order made on the ground that the defendant was about to leave the country. The defendant surrendered in the bankruptcy in July, 1863. The plaintiff had in 1858 applied to the Commissioner of Bankrupts to admit the alleged debt as a claim, but the Commissioner had refused on the ground that the debt was for money lent by a banking company, which was not a legal company because it had not paid up a sufficient portion of the subscribed capital. The defendant swore that he did not intend to leave the country at the time of his arrest nor since, but purposed to remain in England to assist his assignees. He also stated that his health was suffering seriously from the confinement. The defendant had not passed his last examination:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to be discharged from custody. Steward v. Waugh, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 86.

(F) EVIDENCE IN JUSTIFICATION OF THE ARREST.

The defendant was arrested by a bailiff of a county court, under a warrant of that Court good on its face. He assaulted the bailiff in resisting the arrest. On an indictment against him for a common assault on the bailiff, it was held, that it was not necessary to prove the proceedings in the county court, but that proof of the warrant alone was sufficient to shew that the officer was justified in arresting the defendant, and to sustain a conviction of the defendant for the assault. R. v. Davis, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 159; 1 L. & C. 64.

On the trial of a prisoner for wounding a constable who had arrested him on suspicion of felony, the following question, in order to assist in shewing that there were reasonable grounds for the arrest, was put to the constable on the part of the prosecution, "What do you know had been the prisoner's previous character?" The answer was, "I know the prisoner to be a very bad character":—It was held by the Court that this question ought not to have been put in the examination in chief, although it was open to the prisoner to have cross-examined the constable as to the grounds of his suspicion. R. v. Turberfield, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 20; 1 L. & C. 495.

If a girl of ten years of age consent to indecent liberties being taken with her the person who takes them cannot be convicted of an assault. R. v. Johnson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 192; 1 L. & C. 632.

(B) CONVICTION FOR.

The first count of an indictment was for unlawfully and maliciously inflicting grievous bodily harm on the prosecutor; the second for assaulting and unlawfully wounding and ill-treating the prosecutor, and thereby occasioning him bodily harm. The verdict was, guilty of common assault:—Held, that this verdict sustained the conviction on the second count. R. v. Oliver, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 12; Bell's C.C. 287.

The defendant was indicted, in one count, for assault, and unlawfully and maliciously inflicting grievous bodily harm; and, in another count, for a common assault. The jury returned, as their verdict, that they found the defendant guilty of an aggravated assault, but without premeditation, and that it was done under the influence of passion:—Held, that the Judge who tried the case was justified, on this finding, in directing a verdict of guilty to be entered on the first count. R. v. Sparrow, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 43; Bell's C.C. 298.

(C) JUSTICE'S CERTIFICATE OF DISMISSAL OF CHARGE.

The plaintiff, having laid an information for an assault under 9 Geo. 4. c. 31, took out a summons, which was served on the defendant, but afterwards, and before the day for hearing, the plaintiff, by his agent, gave notice to the defendant that the summons was withdrawn, and that he need not attend, and the plaintiff also gave notice to the magistrates' clerk that he would not attend. The defendant, however, attended in obedience to the summons, and claimed to have the information dismissed and a certificate of dismissal granted, although the plaintiff was absent. The magistrates having accordingly dismissed the complaint, and granted a certificate shewing these facts,—Held, that such dismissal was "a hearing" of the case within section 27, and that, therefore, the certificate was a bar to an action for the assault. Bradshaw v. Vaughton, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 93; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 103.

Where on a complaint for a common assault by the party aggrieved, the Justices, under the 9 Geo. 4. c. 31. s. 27, dismiss the complaint as not proved, their certificate of dismissal is, under section 28, a bar to an indictment for unlawfully wounding, and for assault causing actual bodily harm, arising out of the same circumstances. R. v. Elrington, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 14; 1 Best & S. 688.

(D) Pleading in Actions for.

If A wrongfully, after request to give it up, detain a chattel from B the owner entitled to possession, B in law has the possession, and A's wrongful detention against B's request is no possession, but is the same violation of the right of property as the taking the chattel out of the actual possession of B, and B (or his servants acting under his command) is justified in using force sufficient to defend his right and re-take the chattel. Blades v. Higgs, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 347; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 713.

Declaration for assault and battery. Plea, that the plaintiff had wrongfully in his possession dead rabbits belonging to E, and being about to carry them away, the defendants, as servants of E, and by his command, requested the plaintiff to refrain, which he refused to do, and thereupon defendants, as servants of E and by his command, gently laid their hands on the plaintiff and took the rabbits from him, using no more force than was necessary:—Held, a good plea, although it did not allege how the plaintiff took the property of E, and became the holder thereof. Ibid.

(E) Mis-trial and Venire de novo.

On an indictment for an assault, occasioning actual bodily harm, the jury brought in a verdict, guilty of a common assault. The chairman, mistaking the law, told the jury that they could not find such a verdict on that indictment. The jury then found the prisoner guilty simply. The verdict was entered as a verdict of guilty of the aggravated assault, and a sentence of imprisonment with hard labour was passed:—Held, that the first verdict was not tantamount to a verdict of acquittal; that the chairman ought to have taken the first verdict; that the second verdict could not stand; that there had been a mis-trial, and that there must be a venire de novo. R. v. Yeadon, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 70; 1 L. & C. 81.

ASSIGNMENT.

[See Debtor and Creditor.

Notice of an equitable assignment having been given to the trustees before the fund actually reached their hands, it was held to give priority over a subsequent assignment of which earlier notice was given. Buller v. Plunkett, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 641; 1 Jo. & H. 441.

As between two equitable assignees the time of giving notice to a person who afterwards becomes trustee is of no importance, if both notices are given before the relation of trustee and cestui que trust is created. Webster v. Webster, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 655; 31 Beav. 39.

As between two assignees of a possible future fund, notice, before the fund has come into existence, to a person who is merely a potential future trustee or stakeholder is ineffectual to disturb the usual order of priorities. Somerset v. Cox, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 490; 33 Beav. 634.

An officer in the army upon his marriage covenanted with trustees that any money which should be received from the sale of his then or any future commission, &c., should be paid to the trustees upon the trusts of his marriage settlement. He subsequently became indebted to the regimental agents; he then gave them authority to apply for the sale of his commission, and he charged the proceeds with the payment of the debt. The trustees shortly afterwards gave the agents notice of the settlement, and of their claim to the proceeds. The commission was subsequently sold and the money was paid to the agents. Upon a bill by the trustees of the settlement,—Held, that the charge of the agents upon the proceeds arising from the sale of the commission was entitled to priority over the settlement; since, if notices given before receipt of the sale moneys were to be regarded as effectual, the army agents had notice of their own security before receiving any notice of the settlement; and if as ineffectual, then the first notice after the receipt of the sale moneys, and therefore the first effectual notice, was also that of their own claim. The sheriff having seized goods under a writ of fi. fa. against A, B claimed them, whereupon an interpleader summons was taken out by the sheriff and served on B, notwithstanding which B took the goods forcibly out of the possession of the officer in whose custody they were, and sold them:—Held, that B was guilty of contempt; and the Court made absolute a rule for an attachment against him, not to be enforced if he paid the amount of the execution into

(B) For disobeying Rule to pay Money.

A party who had been ordered by rule of a Court of law to pay a sum of money executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors, under section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. The party not paying the money on demand made after the assignment, the Court made absolute a rule for an attachment against him for the non-payment; but directed that the attachment should not issue until the leave of the Court of Bankruptcy had been obtained. Welch v. Buck, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 263.

(C) Rule for, when absolute in first Instance.

Where in pursuance of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97. s. 8. a rule nisi for the payment of a sum of money to the Receiver General of Inland Revenue as legacy duty has, on no cause being shewn, been made absolute against the person withholding such duty, and both rules have been personally served, the Court will grant a rule for an attachment absolute in the first instance. In re Evans, 3 Hurls. & C. 562.

ATTACHMENT OF DEBTS.

(A) What Debts may be attached and by what Courts.

[Burton v. Roberts, 8 Law J. Dig. 36; 6 Hurls. & N. 93.]

A party in an interpleader issue who has obtained an order for his costs under the 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 58. s. 7. is a judgment creditor within the garnishee clauses (sections 60. and 61.) of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125). A judgment creditor is not prevented from attaching a debt due to his debtor by the fact that the garnishee is taken in execution for the debt. Hartley v. Shemwell, and Marples v. Hartley, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 223; 1 Best & S. 1.

Where an Order in Council has directed that the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, shall apply to an inferior Court of record, that Court has power, under section 60, to issue garnishee orders in respect of judgments obtained in such Court. Dauber v. Barnes, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 302.

(B) Foreign Attachment—Custom of City of London.

The custom of the City of London, in reference to foreign attachment, cannot be pleaded, as a custom, on a plaint being entered in the Mayor's Court, to attach a debt due to the defendant from a third person, on the bare fact of the latter being found within the jurisdiction, although none of the parties are either citizens or resident in the City, and neither the original debt nor that of the garnishee accrued within the City; for such a custom is bad. Cox v. the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 64; 1 Hurls. & C. 338—affirmed in Ex. Ch., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 282; and by the House of Lords, 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 225.

(C) Discharge of Garnishee.

A judgment creditor, who has arrested his judgment debtor on a ca. sa., and detains him in execution, cannot proceed under the garnishee clauses of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854; and, therefore, to a declaration against the garnishee in the form prescribed by the Reg. Gen. Mich. Vac., 1854, it is a good plea, that the plaintiff had issued a ca. sa. against the debtor, who was still in execution at the plaintiff's suit. Jauralde v. Parker, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 237; 6 Hurls. & N. 431.

(D) Arrest of Garnishee.

A garnishee, against whom a judgment creditor has obtained leave to proceed by writ, calling upon him to shew cause why there should not be execution against him under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 128. s. 64, cannot be held to bail or arrested under stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. s. 2. Homer v. Luff, 3 Best & S. 818.

(E) Bankruptcy of Debtor before Payment by Garnishee.

If a judgment creditor obtain an order under section 61. of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, attaching a debt due to the judgment debtor, and, subsequently, another order under section 63, directing the garnishees to pay the amount attached to the judgment creditor, or that execution may issue against them, and the judgment debtor become bankrupt before payment by the garnishees or execution levied on them, the judgment creditor cannot avail himself any longer of the order, but must share equally with the other creditors; as he is only in the situation of a creditor having security under section 184. of the Bankruptcy Consolidation Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, and not within the exception to that section as a creditor having a mortgage or lien. Tilbury v. Brown, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 46.

ATTEMPTS TO COMMIT FELONY.

[See Jurisdiction; of Quarter Sessions.]

(A) To steal.

The prisoner was indicted under the stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 57. for breaking and entering a shop, with intent to commit a felony, viz. to steal. It was proved that the prisoner broke in the roof, with intent to enter and steal, and was then disturbed; but there was no evidence that he ever entered the shop:—Held, that the prisoner might be convicted of the misdemeanor of attempting to commit a felony. R. v. Bain, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 88; 1 L. & C. 129.

The prisoner was servant to a contractor who supplied meat to the camp at S. The course of business was for the contractor each morning to send by a servant a quantity of meat to the quartermaster-sergeant at the camp, and a soldier from each mess attended. The quartermaster-sergeant had his own scales and weights; with these he and the contractor's servant weighed out the proper quantity of meat for each mess respectively, which, after being weighed, was delivered to the soldier in attendance, for the mess. The account of the whole meat so delivered was credited to the contractor as supplied to the Queen. The surplus meat remaining after the messes had been supplied used to be taken back by the contractor's servant. On one occasion of a weighing the prisoner being in charge of the meat, and being the person who put the weights into the scale, fraudulently and with intent to cheat, put a false weight into the scale instead of the true one of the quartermaster-sergeant; so that when all the messes had been supplied 60 lb. of meat remained over, instead of 15 lb. A complaint having been made by a soldier of short weight during this weighing, an investigation took place at its close, and the fraud was discovered. The prisoner absconded at the commencement of the investigation. The intention of the prisoner was to steal the difference between the just surplus of 15 lb. and the actual surplus of 60 lb. Nothing remained to be done by him to complete his scheme, except to carry away and dispose of the meat, which he would have done if the fraud had not been detected:—Held, that on these facts the prisoner was rightly convicted of attempting to steal 45 lb. of meat, the property of the contractor. R. v. Cheeseman, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 89; 1 L. & C. 140.

If a person puts his hand into the pocket of another, with intent to steal what he can find there, and the pocket is empty, he cannot be convicted of an attempt to steal. R. v. Collins, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 177; 1 L. & C. 471.

(B) INDICTMENT.

In an indictment for attempting to steal in a dwelling-house, it is sufficient to aver that the prisoner attempted to steal the goods of A B in the house of A B, without specifying what the goods were. R. v. Johnson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 24; 1 L. & C. 489.

ATTORNEY AND SOLICITOR.

(A) ARTICLED CLERK.

(a) Service under Articles.

[See also (b) Order to enrol Articles stamped after Execution.]

Where articles of clerkship of an attorney had not been stamped within six months from their execution, but had been subsequently stamped under the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81. s. 3, and the clerk had served under them from their execution, the Court allowed the service to be reckoned from the date of the execution, and not from the date of the filing of the affidavit required by sections 8. and 9. of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, it satisfactorily appearing that the non-payment of the stamp-duty on the execution arose entirely from some unforeseen emergency, and was not intentional on the part of the attorney. Ex parte Bishop, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 48; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 150.

W was articled as a clerk to his father, an attorney, and served till the death of his father on the 23rd of January, 1858. He continued to attend at the office and to work at the business there till the 20th of February, when his articles were assigned to C, who had succeeded to the business of his father, and under whom he continued to serve:—Held, that the period between the death of the father and the assignment of the articles to C could not be reckoned in the computation of the five years required by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73. s. 12. Ex parte Wallis, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 176; 2 Best & S. 416.

The managing clerk to an attorney, upon the occasion of the latter dying, leaving a widow and a young son unable to take up the business, gave his services to them, and succeeded in keeping the business together; and the son, as soon as he was admitted an attorney, gave the clerk his articles, and promised that they should be duly stamped, the widow promising to pay the stamp-duty. Under these circumstances, the clerk became bound to the son by articles duly executed on the 11th of June, 1858. After the expiration of the time allowed by law for stamping and enrolling the articles, and not before, the clerk discovered that the duty had not been paid; but he continued to serve under the articles, and was in constant belief that the widow would perform her promise, until January, 1862, when he petitioned the Lords of the Treasury, who permitted the articles to be stamped on payment of the duty and 40*l.* penalty, pursuant to the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81. s. 3. This was done, and the articles enrolled in March, 1862. Under the above circumstances, the Court of Queen's Bench refused an application in Easter Term, 1862, that the service under the articles might date from their execution, on the ground that the clerk went on serving, having himself full knowledge that the articles were not stamped and enrolled (Cockburn, C.J. doubting). Ex parte Breden, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 184; 2 Best & S. 649.

But the Court of Common Pleas granted an application, made on behalf of the clerk in June, 1862, that the service under the articles might be computed from the date of their execution. Ex parte Breden, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 321; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 351.

Although the Treasury have consented to accept the penalty and stamp articles of clerkship more than six months after execution, under the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81. s. 3, yet, both for the purpose of protecting the revenue and ensuring the respectability of those who are to become attorneys, before this Court will allow the service under the articles while unstamped and unenrolled to count, pursuant to the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73. s. 9, the circumstances must be shewn to be such as satisfactorily to account for the omission to pay the stamp-duty and enrol the articles in due time. Ex parte Wilson, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 89; 4 Best & S. 889.

In December, 1859, W entered into articles for five years with S, an attorney, the articles being duly stamped and enrolled. In May, 1861, S got into difficulties and was obliged to go abroad; while S was abroad, W agreed with Messrs. B to serve the rest of his five years with them, and get his articles assigned to them; S returned in June and assented to this, and W went into Messrs. B's service, and in October, 1861, signed an agreement with them, to the above effect, which was then handed to them. This agreement was not stamped, as it was anticipated that the original articles would be assigned. S however ultimately refused to assign them, and the agreement of October, 1861, could not then be stamped without paying the penalty of 10*l.*, which W at that time was not in a position to afford. In Hilary Term, 1862, S was struck off the roll of attorneys; and on the 13th of May, 1862, W was by rule of Court discharged from his articles to S. In July, 1863, it was discovered that through inadvertence Messrs. B had not signed the agreement of October, 1861, but they afterwards signed it; and the penalty having been paid and the agreement stamped, the Court, on application in Michaelmas Term, 1863, allowed it to be enrolled as articles of clerkship, and the service under it to date from the 13th of May, 1862, the date when W was discharged from his former articles. Ibid.

An articled clerk having previously to his becoming articled, served for ten years as an attorney's clerk, is entitled to be admitted after three years' service as an articled clerk under section 4. of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, although the two services are not immediately consecutive; and the Court directed that an articled clerk should be examined for his admission in a case in which there had been an interval of seven years between the two services. Ex parte Vosper, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 113; 4 Best & S. 901.

What is sufficient service under articles of clerkship to an attorney must depend on the circumstances of each particular case, and the Court will not lay down any general rule. In re Duncan, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 190; 5 Best & S. 341.

"Supervision and control" of the Master is to be understood in a relative, not an absolute sense. Ibid.

An articled clerk, having served part only of the five years under his articles, after the expiration of the five years applied to the Court to be allowed to enter into fresh articles, and to count the time actually served as part of the necessary time of service. The Court refused to make any order; overruling Ex parte Smith (4 Best & S. 993) on this point. Ex parte Keddle, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 136.

A clerk, under articles for five years, having served for two years and a half, was incapacitated by ill health from serving for more than a year; he then resumed service. Before the expiration of the five years, he applied to the Court that the interval during which he had been unable to serve might be allowed to count as actual service. The Court refused the application as premature. Ex parte Rogers, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 136.

Where an articled clerk had served for nineteen months under his articles, and had then been compelled from illness and other causes to be absent for more than sixteen months, this Court permitted him to be discharged from the old articles and to serve the same master under new ones, for such a period as with the time during which he had already served would make up the full period of five years. Ex parte De Jivas, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 7; 4 Best & S. 992.

H entered into articles of clerkship as an attorney with his father, and duly served his clerkship for the five years from their execution. H did not know till nearly the end of his time that it was necessary that the articles should be stamped and enrolled; after his service was out they were handed to him by his father, who had always kept possession of them, and being unstamped, on application to the Lords of the Treasury, they permitted them to be stamped on the payment of 50*l.* penalty, pursuant to the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81. s. 3. The father made affidavit, that he omitted to have the articles stamped and enrolled within six months of the execution, from his being "wholly without the means to pay the stamp-duty, and because he thought that under the above section they could be afterwards stamped on the payment of a penalty; that he had no preconceived plan to article his son speculatively, but solely with the intention of ultimately stamping and enrolling the articles." Under the above circumstances, the Court allowed the articles to be enrolled and the service under them to be computed from the date of their execution on the authority of Ex parte Bishop (ante, (a) Service under Articles): Crompton, J. dissenting. Ex parte

Herbert, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 33; 1 Best & S. 825.

The Court will not order articles of clerkship to be enrolled and the service to count from the time of the execution, where the articles have been stamped after the six months on payment of a penalty by the permission of the Treasury, under the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81. s. 3, unless the delay in payment of the duty be satisfactorily accounted for. Ex parte Edwards, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 213.

A father and son executed a mortgage for 500*l.*, the mortgagee advancing only 400*l.*, and agreeing to advance the remaining 100*l.* shortly afterwards, and the father promised the son that he should be articled out of such 100*l.* as soon as it could be procured from the mortgagee. It never was procured; but the son, upon applying for it to the solicitor of the mortgagee, was told that as the money would probably be obtained in a month or six weeks, he had better article himself, and the articles could be stamped within a few months after they were executed. The son, acting on this advice, articled himself to an attorney on the 1st of November, 1861, and some time afterwards, on finding that the mortgagee would not make the advance, he attempted to raise the money required for stamping the articles from another person, but did not succeed in getting it until February, 1863, when the articles were stamped by permission of the Lords of the Treasury, on payment of a penalty of 20*l.* The Court, being of opinion that the clerk at the time he articled himself had not any reasonable expectation that the money would be forthcoming, refused to order the articles to be enrolled and the service to date from the time of their execution. Ibid.

The stamping of articles of clerkship to an attorney after their execution on payment of the duty and a penalty, under the statute 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81. s. 3, does not place the clerk in the same position as if the duty had been duly paid at the time, and the articles enrolled under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73; and the Courts before giving effect to articles of clerkship which have been so stamped will inquire into all the surrounding circumstances. Ex parte Belk, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 73; 2 Hurls. & C. 737.

Where the articles of clerkship were stamped after the expiration of the service under them on payment of the duty and a penalty of 50*l.*, and it appeared that the omission to stamp and enrol the articles had arisen from the failure, through want of means, of the father of the applicant to provide a portion of the duty, according to his agreement with his son, on his entering into the articles, and partly owing to the parties having acted under the advice of counsel, the Court refused to allow the service to count from the execution of the articles, but allowed two years of service under the articles. Ibid.

The Court will not allow articles of clerkship to be enrolled nunc pro tunc, and the service under them to be reckoned as from their date, where there has been an omission to cause them to be stamped within the time required by law, even though the Treasury has accepted the stamp-duty, with a penalty, unless it is shewn that the omission has been the result of some unforeseen emergency, or of the failure of same just expectation. The mere disappointment of a vague hope will not suffice. Ex parte Jones, 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 301.

Articles of clerkship were, by a mere slip, not enrolled within six months. The Court relieved the clerk from the effect of the error. In re Follett, 30 Beav. 629.

(B) ADMISSION AND RE-ADMISSION.

A person who has been admitted and enrolled an attorney or solicitor of the Courts of the Counties Palatine of Lancaster or Durham before the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, is entitled to be admitted an attorney of the Court of Queen's Bench, under section 14, without giving a term's notice. In re Watson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 1.

Quære—Whether the Court has power to admit an attorney, except during term. Ex parte Steele, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 326.

Quære—Whether the Court will admit a minor as an attorney under any circumstances. Ibid.

There must, at all events, be very urgent necessity to induce the Court to interfere in either case. Ibid.

An attorney having been struck off the roll in Easter Term, 1859, for misappropriating to his own use money received from a client for a particular purpose, the Court, in Hilary Term, 1865, allowed his name to be restored to the roll, on affidavits of numerous attorneys to his good character and conduct in the interval. In re Robins, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 121.

An attorney having been struck off the roll, in order to be called to the bar, was afterwards disbarred for professional misconduct; the decision of the Benchers being affirmed, on appeal, by the fifteen Judges. After the lapse of twenty years an application was made on his behalf to be re-admitted an attorney; but the Court refused the application, on the ground that there were no affidavits of professional persons and others as to his good conduct and character in the interval. In re Pyke, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 121.

But upon a subsequent application it appeared that since he was disbarred he had lived a very secluded life; and he had filed affidavits two months before the application, stating every place at which he had lived, and no affidavits were filed impeaching his character. The Court therefore dispensed with the affidavits usually required of professional and other persons as to his good conduct and character in the interval, and re-admitted him without a re-examination. In re Pyke, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 220; 6 Best & S. 703.

A solicitor, who had ceased to take out his certificate in 1853, with the intention of being called to the bar, which he had abandoned, was allowed to renew his certificate without undergoing an examination. In re Sewell, 32 Beav. 475.

A solicitor who, by a slip, neglected to produce his certificate to the Registrar within a month, as required by the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127. s. 21, was relieved from the consequences, and it was ordered that the certificate should have effect from the time of stamping the same. In re Smith, 33 Beav. 248.

(C) POWERS AND PRIVILEGES.

To a declaration by a client against his attorney for negligently conducting the defence in an action of ejectment, the defendant pleaded that the alleged grievances were sustained by the defendant, as such attorney, consenting to a Judge's order, which was set out in the plea, and by which the action of ejectment was stayed on certain terms therein mentioned, and that the defendant was not bound by any direction from the now plaintiff not to compromise such action, and was as such attorney, and under and by virtue of his retainer, at liberty to conduct such action in such manner as to him should, in the exercise of reasonable skill and care, appear to be more beneficial to the interests of the now plaintiff. Averment, that the defendant, in consenting to such Judge's order, acted in good faith, and exercised reasonable skill and care, and that it appeared to the defendant that by so consenting he was acting in the manner most beneficial to the interests of the now plaintiff:—Held, on demurrer, that the plea was a good answer. Chown v. Parrott, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 197 ; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 74.

Semble—That an attorney has authority from his client to compromise an action under the ordinary retainer, to bring or defend such action unless he be expressly forbidden by the client to do so. Ibid.

The plaintiff recovered judgment and took the defendant on a ca. sa.; W, attorney of the plaintiff's father, agreed with the defendant, that on delivery of certain documents he would discharge the defendant; the documents were delivered, and W gave defendant an order of discharge, directed by the plaintiff to his attorney; the sheriff refused to discharge, as the order was not directed to him:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to his discharge on condition that no actions were brought against the sheriff or any one else, and that the plaintiff's attorney's remedies on the judgment should not be prejudiced. Langley v. Headland, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 183; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 42.

An action was brought to recover the price of a piano. The plaintiff's attorney agreed to settle the action by the return of the piano and payment of costs:—Held, that, in the absence of a distinct prohibition from his client, he had authority to do so; and the defendant was entitled to have all further proceedings stayed. Pristwick v. Poley, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 189; s.c. nom. Prestwich v. Poley, 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 806.

A solicitor on his way to attend a summons at the chambers of one of the Judges in Serjeants' Inn held to be privileged from arrest under an attachment. In re Jewitt, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 730; 33 Beav. 559.

(D) DUTIES AND LIABILITIES.

When money, which forms part of a larger sum placed by his client in the hands of a solicitor for purposes of investment, is lent by him on the security of a mortgage, in which he has affected to act as principal, the client is bound by notice of all the circumstances which come within his (the solicitor's) knowledge. Spaight v. Cowrie; Edwards v. Spaight, 1 Hem. & M. 359.

Where in such a case the mortgage debt is afterwards settled upon trusts which are substantially trusts for the benefit of the original mortgagee, the trustees have no higher rights than their cestui que trust had before the settlement. Ibid.

A bill of interpleader, where the whole ground for relief rested on a false allegation of a threat, and intention by one of the defendants to bring an action, was dismissed, and the plaintiff's solicitor who filed the bill being proved to be aware that the allegation was groundless, it was ordered on the petition of one of the defendants, for whom he also acted as solicitor, that all items in his bill of costs in respect of the interpleader suit be disallowed. Cook v. the Earl of Rosslyn, in re Hook, 3 Giff. 175.

(1) At Law.

(i) Suspension for Misconduct.

Where an attorney of the Court has been guilty of gross misconduct, the Court will interfere summarily, although the misconduct does not amount to an indictable offence, and arose in a transaction in which the attorney was not acting in that character. In re Blake, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 32; 3 E. & E. 34.

B, having previously known an attorney and employed him as an attorney and solicitor, informed him that he had some money to invest, on which the attorney himself borrowed it, on the security of his promissory note and the deposit of a mortgage-deed of an estate in Ireland on which he had advanced a larger sum. The estate coming into the Encumbered Estates Court, the attorney borrowed the deed of B, in order, as he informed B, to substantiate his claim on the estate; he afterwards returned the deed, but by this temporary possession of it was enabled to receive the whole of his advance, which he accordingly received, and appropriated the whole to his own purposes. He told B nothing of the matter, but went on for several years paying him interest on his loan. The attorney, afterwards, became insolvent, and B lost the whole of his principal. On these facts, the Court suspended the attorney from practising for two years. Ibid.

(ii) Striking off the Roll.

An attorney having been convicted of embezzlement, in July, 1861, and sentenced to seven years' penal servitude, an application to strike him off the roll was held not to be too late in Michaelmas Term, 1862. The rule for that purpose may be served upon the prisoner. In re Thompson, 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 288.

The Court will not strike an attorney off the roll, where he has become bankrupt, having moneys of a client in his hands, which ought to have been paid over, unless a clear case of fraudulent misappropriation be made out against him. In re Sparks, 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 727.

(iii) Answering Matters of Affidavit.

If a rule be obtained against an attorney to answer affidavits and to shew cause why he should not pay a sum of money, and he do not answer or shew cause why he should not pay, the Court, on an affidavit of service, will make absolute the rule to pay and grant an attachment for not answering. In re Bluck, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 262.

Where an attorney does not appear to shew cause against a rule calling on him to answer the matters of an affidavit, the Court will grant a rule to answer within a certain time, and, in default, will issue an attachment, and strike him off the roll. In re

Worman, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 83; 1 Hurls. & C. 636.

It is no answer to a rule calling on an attorney to answer matters that the applicant has already filed a bill in equity against the attorney for an account in reference to the transactions complained of, even though the proceedings in equity have resulted in a decree against the attorney. Ex parte Thomas, 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 705.

Where it has been referred to the Master to examine into the charges and to report to the Court, it is not competent to the counsel for the accused to go into the evidence given before the Master; the Court will only look to his report. Ibid.

(2) In Equity.

The jurisdiction of the Court over solicitors as officers of the Court for misconduct is very special, and will not be exercised on an ordinary summons for taxation of a bill of costs. In re Forsyth, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 509.

On occasion of the transfer of the securities of first and second mortgagees to a third mortgagee, a sum of money was paid to the solicitor acting on behalf of the first and second mortgagees and the mortgagor on account of his costs, and was added to the mortgage debt. Afterwards he sent in his bill of costs to the third mortgagee, which included charges for business done for the mortgagor, and also for business done for the mortgagees in a common law Court. The third mortgagee took out a summons for taxation of the bill:—Held, that he could have no relief upon the application, either under the Solicitors' Act or under the general jurisdiction of the Court. Ibid.

Motion that a former solicitor of the plaintiff, who had declined on the ground of privilege to answer to whom he had applied on behalf of the plaintiff, might attend at his own expense before the examiner and answer the question, refused with costs. Marriott v. the Anchor Reversionary Co. (Lim.), 3 Giff. 304.

The rules of the Court as to privileged communications will not exempt a defendant from answering, who states that his knowledge has been acquired "by virtue of his employment as the solicitor of his client." It must have been acquired by means of confidential communications between the solicitor and client. March v. Keith, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 127; 1 Dr. & S. 342.

Information obtained by a solicitor from a third party, though while acting professionally for a client, is not privileged (overruling Greenough v. Gaskell, 1 Myl. & K. 98). Ford v. Tennant, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 465; 32 Beav. 162.

A receiver was appointed by the Court upon the representation of the plaintiff's solicitor that the receiver had entered into the usual recognizances, which he had not in fact done. A loss occurred, in consequence of the receiver's liability being only in the nature of a simple contract debt. The solicitor was, at the instance of a defendant, made personally liable for the loss occasioned by his neglect. Simmons v. Rose; Weeks v. Ward, in re R. A. Ward, 31 Beav. 1.

Held, also, that the country solicitor was liable, though the representations were made by his London agents. Ibid.

An attorney is not liable to an action for negligence at the suit of one between whom and himself the relation of attorney and client does not exist, for giving, in answer to a casual inquiry, erroneous information as to the contents of a deed. Fish v. Kelly, 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 194.

(e) Delivery of Papers.

If a solicitor is in custody for debt, he will be ordered to deliver the papers and documents of his client to a new solicitor, upon his undertaking to hold them subject to any lien there may be upon them for costs. In re Williams, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 609.

The Master of the Rolls decided that the retention of papers by a counsel for fees and by a law-stationer for charges will not entitle a solicitor to his discharge under an attachment for the non-delivery of the papers of a late client; but, upon appeal to the Lords Justices, it was held that the solicitor, having delivered all papers in his possession or power within the meaning of the order, was entitled to his discharge, with costs to him of the appeal. In re Williams, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 610; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 104.

A client employing a firm of solicitors is entitled to the services of all the members of the firm, and a dissolution of partnership amounts to a discharge of the client. For the purpose of completing any business in hand at the time of discharging a client, the papers must be given up to his new solicitor, the lien of the former solicitor reviving on the completion of the business. The former solicitor is entitled to have a schedule of the documents so handed over, and the expense of preparing such schedule must fall upon the person requiring the papers. Rawlinson v. Moss, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 797.

(E) PROFITS.

Prima facie, the emoluments derived from offices of the character of a clerkship to the guardians of a union do not fall within the ordinary description of profits of an attorney. Collins v. Jackson, Jackson v. Collins, 31 Beav. 645.

The profits of the offices of clerkship to poor law guardians, or superintendent registrar of births, &c., treasurer of turnpike trust, stewardship of a manor, treasurership of a charity, and receivership of tithes, at a fixed salary,—Held, to form part of a partnership between solicitors. Ibid.

(F) DEALINGS WITH CLIENT.

A contract between attorney and client that the attorney shall advance money for carrying on a lawsuit to recover possession of an estate, and that the client shall, if the suit be successful, pay the attorney, over and above his legal costs and charges, a sum according to the benefit to the client from possession of the estate, is void on the ground of maintenance. Earle v. Hopwood, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 217; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 566.

After the issuing of a writ, the attorney gave the plaintiff the following memorandum,—"I undertake to carry on this action on having cash provided for costs out of pocket, such costs not to exceed 15*l.*, including counsel's fee; not any witnesses' expenses":—Held, that this was an engagement on the part of the attorney not in any event to charge the client more than 15*l*. Moon v. Hall, 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 760.

An agreement (to be carried into effect in this country) which would be void on the ground of champerty if made here, is not the less void because made in a foreign country where such a contract would be legal. Where, therefore, an attorney entered into an agreement in France with a French subject to sue for a debt due to the latter from a person residing here, whereby the attorney was to receive by way of recompense a moiety of the amount recovered,—Held, that, the agreement being void for champerty, the attorney was remitted to his ordinary retainer as an attorney, and the work having been done, and the client having received the benefit of it, was entitled to his costs as between attorney and client. Grell v. Levy, 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 73.

Lapse of time is a ground for not setting aside a purchase, though the contract was to be kept secret, and the purchase was made by a solicitor from his client, and the question may be determined independently of the question of value. The Marquis of Clanricarde v. Henning, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 865; 30 Beav. 175.

If the Court considers that full value was given for the estate, the bill will be dismissed with costs, but if the question of value is doubtful, without costs. Ibid.

In 1837 a solicitor bought lands from his client, who was in embarrassed circumstances. In 1855 the heir-at-law of the client filed a bill to have the sale set aside and it was set aside accordingly, on the ground of the relative position of the vendor and purchaser, and of gross inadequacy of price. An account was directed to be taken between the parties, and it appeared, on taking the account, that there was no evidence of the payment of the purchase-money beyond the acknowledgment in the deed of conveyance and the receipt indorsed upon it. One of the Vice Chancellors considered this sufficient; but upon appeal,—Held, by the Lords Justices, that no part of the purchase-money could be allowed in the account, it being the duty of the solicitor to give his client the same protection as if the transaction had been with a stranger, and to preserve independent proof that he (the solicitor) had actually made the payment. Gresley v. Mousley, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 537; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 433.

Gift made in 1852, pending the relation of solicitor and client, by a client to his solicitor, by means of a parol direction on the part of the client to the solicitor to retain a sum of money in the hands of the latter belonging to the client, set aside upon a bill filed in November, 1861, the relation of solicitor and client having continued from the time of the gift up to the early part of 1861, when it was terminated. O'Brien v. Lewis, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 569; 4 Giff. 221.

Although a gift by a client to his solicitor may be influenced by proper motives, it is subject to be set aside unless there be clear evidence of removal of that pressure upon the client, which the Court always presumes where the relation of solicitor and client is proved to subsist. Ibid.

Claim by a solicitor against a testator's (his client's) estate for a sum of money advanced to the client on loan, but which, in fact, formed the proceeds of a bond debt due to the testator, and received by the solicitor at the client's direction, and which the solicitor alleged the client had given him, by an agreement prepared by such solicitor at the client's expense, and containing no recital of intended bounty, disallowed. In re Holmes's Estate; Woodward v. Humpage, Bevan's case, 3 Giff. 337.

Gift by a client to a solicitor, while that relation subsisted between them, was declared invalid at the instance of the residuary legatees of the donor, but legacies to the solicitor, his wife and children were supported. The principles which govern such cases stated. Walker v. Smith, 29 Beav. 394.

By agreement in writing between a solicitor and his client it was stipulated that the former should have 5*l*. per cent. commission on the gross amount of property recovered by him for the latter, in addition to his costs:—Held, that the stipulation was contrary to the policy of the law, and that the solicitor must refund the amount received by him for commission, though included in a settled account. Pince v. Beattie, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 734.

A purchase by solicitors of the equity of redemption of their client's property set aside, although another solicitor had been called in, and the defendants had ceased to act as solicitors just before the contract for purchase, it appearing that the other solicitor had, with the knowledge of the defendants, not properly discharged his duty, and that the defendants had concealed from him an important fact. Gibbs v. Daniel, 4 Giff. 1.

The intervention of another solicitor or adviser, who, with the knowledge of the purchaser, neglects or does not properly discharge his duty, is not sufficient to support a purchase by a solicitor from his client. Ibid.

(G) BILL OF COSTS.

(a) Delivery of Bill.

No particular form of heading being prescribed by section 37. of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73. as essential to an attorney's bill of costs, if the bill be sent with a letter, and the party to whom it is sent knows that it is intended to charge him, it is sufficient within the requirements of that section. Champ v. Stokes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 243; 6 Hurls. & N. 683.

The defendant, when surveyor of the highways of the parish of L, retained the plaintiff to conduct the defence of an indictment against the inhabitants for non-repair of a highway. Pending these proceedings, the defendant ceased to be surveyor, and a new surveyor was appointed. The plaintiff sent by post to the defeodant his bill of costs, headed, "The surveyor of the township, &c. to A B C, solicitor.—The Queen against the Inhabitants, &c.," inclosed in the following letter:—"Mr. C. Stokes. Dear Sir,—Herewith you have my bill of costs in the Lanphey matter, &c. I have sent a copy to the surveyor of the highways of the parish of Lanphey. Yours truly, A B C":—Held, a sufficient delivery of a signed bill, within section 37, to entitle the plaintiff to recover against the defendant. Ibid.

A clerk to Improvement Commissioners under a local act, who is paid by a fixed salary, is not within the Attorneys and Solicitors' Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, so as to require the delivery of a signed bill, although he is an attorney, and his services consisted of work which, before his appointment at a fixed salary, he did as an attorney. Bush v. Martin; The Same v. the Same, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 17; 2 Hurls. & C. 311.

Upon a motion by a cestui que trust to tax a bill of costs, which had been delivered to and paid by a trustee, the solicitor will not be allowed to amend it by adding a sum of money, part of a previous bill of costs, which had also been paid. In re Gregg, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 632; 30 Beav. 259.

A solicitor had employed an auctioneer to sell some property for his client. He, however, made no previous arrangement as to the amount of his remuneration, and the auctioneer had retained, out of the deposits, more than would be allowed under the Bankruptcy scale:—Held, reversing the decision of the Taxing Master, who had merely allowed the amount according to the scale in Bankruptcy, that the whole charge ought to be allowed to the solicitor. In re Page (No. 3), 32 Beav. 487.

A solicitor, who has included in his bill of costs a lump or gross sum, may on taxation before the Master supply a detailed statement shewing how the sum is made up, and the Master may allow such of the items contained in the detailed statement as are proper, not exceeding in the aggregate the gross sum originally charged; but the Master can in no case allow more than the original amount. In re Tilleard, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 765.

Six railways, forming parts of a general system, were projected by the same persons. An act of parliament was obtained authorizing the construction of two only, the other four being abandoned, and the special act provided that the expenses, costs and charges of obtaining and passing the act, and incidental and preparatory thereto, should be paid by the company:—Held, that the costs incurred in relation to the abandoned railways were to be regarded as costs incidental and preparatory to the obtaining of the act, and were properly payable by the incorporated company. Ibid.

Application of a solicitor after an order for taxation to withdraw a non-taxable item from his bill refused. In re Blakesley and Beswick, 32 Beav. 379.

On an ordinary taxation, the Taxing Master had disallowed the costs of a deed of reconveyance from a benefit building society of the property in a registered county, thinking that a receipt was sufficient under the 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 34. s. 2. The decision was reversed by the Court. In re Page, 32 Beav. 485.

A client having objected to a bill of costs delivered by his solicitor, the solicitor admitted that the bill (which he alleged was made out on the understanding that he was to be paid liberally), contained items which would not be allowed on taxation. The client applied for an order to tax the bill; but the order could not be obtained for some days, the offices being closed for the vacation. In the mean time, and before the order could be carried into the Taxing Master's Office, the solicitor delivered a second bill on a reduced scale, with notice of his withdrawal of the first bill. The Court allowed the second bill to be substituted for the first in the order for taxation, upon payment by the solicitor of the client's costs up to the time of the delivery of the second bill. In re Chambers, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 292; 34 Beav. 177.

(2) When granted.

N, a solicitor, was employed as such by J. from 1833 to 1857, and also in the payment and receipt of money, and he delivered his bills of costs and cash accounts between himself and J, to the number of forty-six, most of them before the year 1857. Other of the bills were delivered after April in that year, but none of them were paid, excepting that N was allowed by J. to retain moneys in his hands in respect of certain items in the accounts. No settlement was ever come to between the parties. In March, 1858, J presented a petition under the statute, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, alleging overcharges and improper charges, and praying taxation:—Held, on appeal from an order of the Master of the Rolls, that as the bills formed items of account, themselves unsettled, none of those bills could be considered as paid: that the bills contained excessive and improper charges; and that, although there had been a delay of more than twelve months between the delivery of the bills and the presentation of the petition, the Court could order a general taxation more especially as the relation of solicitor and client existed up to a time within twelve months of the presentation of the petition. Ex parte Johnson, in re Nicholson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 585; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 93.

When a bill of costs is paid, the onus of proving overcharges is thrown on the client. In re Towle, 30 Beav. 170.

Charges for attendances, to the extent of eight on one day, are not sufficient to open a paid bill. Ibid.

Where a mortgagee had instituted a suit for foreclosure, and an arrangement had been made for a transfer, and the bill of costs was not delivered until the day appointed for completion, and was not paid until fourteen days after, the Court refused to order a taxation, no overcharges being satisfactorily proved. The Court considered that the mortgagee ought to have obtained an order to stay the suit, on payment of the mortgage and the deposit of the amount claimed for costs. Ibid.

In an action by a client against his solicitor, the latter pleaded his bill of costs by way of set-off. The client obtained an order for the delivery of the bill, and suffered himself to be non-prossed:—Held, that it was not necessary to state these circumstances on an ex parte application in Chancery for taxation. In re David, 30 Beav. 278.

A and B compromised a suit, B agreeing to pay A's costs, and any question on this was to be referred to an arbitrator who was named. A's solicitor delivered his bill of costs to B:—Held, that B was entitled to a taxation by an order of course. In re Hartley, 30 Beav. 620.

Where a bill of costs cannot be taxed as against the solicitor, the Court has no jurisdiction under the 38th section of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73. to order it to be taxed as between a client and a third party—In re Jessop (32 Beav. 406) and In re Baker (Ibid. 526) overruled. In re Massey, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 492; 34 Beav. 463.

On the day fixed for the completion at a solicitor's office of the sale of mortgaged property belonging to a former client, who was in somewhat embarrassed circumstances, the solicitor delivered his bill of costs. The client and his new solicitor attended, and in order to prevent the postponement of the completion, allowed the solicitor to retain the amount of his bill, but under protest. The bill contained overcharges to a considerable amount:—Held, that the bill was paid under circumstances of pressure, and that taxation ought to be ordered. In re Pugh, 1 De Gex, J. & S. 673.

Agreement by a solicitor to receive a fixed sum for costs for business hereafter to be done is not binding on the client, who is, notwithstanding payment under it, entitled to an order of Court for the delivery of a bill of costs and its taxation. In re Newman, 30 Beav. 196.

A solicitor delivered his bill of costs to his client, made out in double columns, one being the amount allowed on taxation, which he refused to accept when tendered. The client then paid the larger sum to obtain his papers; and, upon his petition,—Held, notwithstanding the payment, that he was entitled to an order to tax the bill, as he had been constrained to pay the larger sum by the refusal of the solicitor to accept what he himself had stated that he was legally entitled to. Ex parte Tosland, in re Letts, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 100; 31 Beav. 488.

To prevent the sale of the mortgaged property by a first mortgagee, a puisne mortgagee took a transfer of the first mortgage, by deed executed by him, which recited the amount due on the first mortgage. This, however, included the costs of the first mortgagee's solicitor, no account of which had been delivered until afterwards. The bill contained some costs of the solicitor against the mortgagor, and, therefore, not mortgagee's costs:—Held, that the puisne mortgagee was not entitled, on summons, to an order for the taxation of the bill. In re Forsyth, 34 Beav. 140.

(3) Costs of Taxation.

Moneys specifically paid by a client to his solicitor for counsel's fees and stamps, as they were required,—Held, properly included in the solicitor's bill in calculating the sixth on a taxation. In re Metcalfe, 30 Beav. 406.

(4) Practice.

An order to tax the bill of a solicitor, deceased, will be revived upon an ex parte motion made by his executors. In re Waugh, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 796 n.; 29 Beav. 666.

A client may apply ex parte against an executrix of a solicitor deceased, to revive an order for the taxation of the solicitor's bills of costs. In re Nicholson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 796; 29 Beav. 665.

The order to revive an order to tax will be made in the Rolls Court, though the order for taxation was made specially by the Lords Justices, and though they reserved to themselves a right to deal with such special circumstances as might be certified by the Taxing Master. Ibid.

Upon a petition by a mortgagor to tax the bill of the mortgagee's solicitor, after payment the mortgagee must be served. In re Baker, 32 Beav. 526.

An order of course to tax a solicitor's bill incurred by three persons, obtained on the application of two of them, is irregular. In re Ilderton, 33 Beav. 201.

A client obtained an order of course to tax, after action brought, but before notice of it, and the order did not provide for the costs of the action:—Held, that this was not irregular, and a motion to discharge it was refused, with costs. In re Farington, 33 Beav. 346.

A solicitor delivered four bills, the last of which and the cash account shewed, upon the whole, a large balance due to the solicitor. The solicitor brought an action to recover the balance, whereupon the client obtained an order of course to tax the last bill and to stay the action in the mean time. The order was held irregular, and was discharged, with costs. In re Yetts, 33 Beav. 412.

An application for the delivery and taxation of the bill of costs of a solicitor, who claims to retain, in satisfaction of costs, money received by him on his client's account, and for payment by the solicitor to the client of the excess of the money retained over the amount of his bill, is an application under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, and must therefore be made in chambers under the General Order of the 2nd of August, 1864. In re May, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 236; 34 Beav. 132.

When the common order for taxation has been obtained, not made in a suit or matter, but under the Solicitors' Act, all special applications connected therewith must be made to the Master of the Rolls, even though the Chancery proceedings, in respect of which the order has been made, may have been depending in some other branch of the Court, and orders may have been made therein. In re Bell, 2 Hem. & M. 501.

(H) LIEN FOR COSTS.

An attorney cannot set up the lien of his London agent on the papers of his client against the claim of that client, the client having paid his attorney's bill of costs. In re Andrew, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 403; 7 Hurls. & N. 87.

The Court will grant an attachment against the attorney for disobeying an order of the Court, for delivery of such papers to his client, notwithstanding those papers are detained by the London agent against the will of the attorney. Ibid.

The attorney for a successful litigant was declared by the Court in which the action was brought to be entitled, pursuant to 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127. s. 28, to a charge upon the property recovered through his instrumentality, for the amount of his taxed costs in the action, although the estate of his client (who had died since the action) was being administered in the Court of Chancery. Wilson v. Hood, in re Seaman, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 204; 3 Hurls. & C. 148.

Though the Court will not interfere as against the defendants with a bona fide settlement of an action with a view of enforcing the plaintiff's attorney's lien for his costs of the action, they will, nevertheless, while the sum agreed upon as a compromise remains unpaid, direct the defendants to pay to the plaintiff's attorney so much of the sum as is necessary to satisfy his charge. Slater v. the Mayor of Sunderland, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 37.

The London agent of a country solicitor is not entitled to a lien on the documents of a client for the amount of his charges, if nothing is due from the client to the country solicitor. Waller v. Holmes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 24; 1 Jo. & H. 230.

It makes no difference whether the bill has been paid in cash or by set-off in account, if at the time of the lien claimed nothing remains due to the country solicitor. Ibid.

Although in a suit instituted on behalf of an infant plaintiff, the Court will, where the defendants have been ordered to pay the costs of the suit but are insolvent, direct the costs due to the plaintiff's solicitor to be paid out of a fund in court, the proceeds of sale of real estate recovered in the cause, it will not, under section 28. of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127. (the Attorneys and Solicitors' Act, 1860), direct those costs to be made a charge on the real estate so recovered, inasmuch as that section applies only to suits instituted by adult plaintiffs. Bonser v. Bradshaw, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 159.

Where the directors of a joint-stock company carry on a business not authorized by the deed of settlement, and costs are thereby increased, the solicitors of the company have no lien for their costs on the papers of the company. In re the Phœnix Life Assurance Co.; Howard and Dolman's case, 1 Hem. & M. 433.

Where, in such a case, moneys have been recovered in any of the actions, although the solicitors would have had a lien for their costs on such moneys while in their hands, yet, after they have paid over such moneys to the company, and allowed them to be incorporated with the general assets, they have no lien on those assets in respect of such costs. Ibid.

Where, in such a case, moneys have been paid by the company to the solicitors, an account of costs generally, the solicitors have no right, post litem motam, to appropriate such payments to the costs incurred in respect of the unauthorized business, but on the contrary the Court will appropriate the payments to the costs which the company was liable to pay. Ibid.

Where a sum is due for costs in a suit to a London agent of a country solicitor, whose costs in the suit have been ordered to be paid out of a fund in court, the Court will, under section 28. of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127. (the Attorneys and Solicitors' Act, 1860), order the costs of the London agent to be paid out of the fund in court to the extent of the country solicitor's interest therein. Tardrew v. Howell, Parry v. Howell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 57; 3 Giff. 381.

A solicitor is entitled, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, to a charge upon property recovered or preserved, for his costs of the litigation by which it is recovered or preserved, irrespective of his client's interest in the property, and although it turns out that the latter has not and never had any interest therein. Bailey v. Birchall, Barnes v. Ratcliffe, Bailey v. Ratcliffe, 2 Hem. & M. 371.

The Court will, before the completion of a taxation, order the delivery up of papers by a solicitor to his client, either upon payment into court of the amount claimed, or in case it appears from the solicitor's own account that a balance is due from him to his client. In re Bevan and Whitting, 33 Beav. 439.

A solicitor does not, by taking the body of his client in execution on a judgment obtained by him at law for his costs in a suit in equity, lose his lien for such costs upon the costs of the suit ordered to be paid by the opposite party to his client. O'Brien v. Lewis, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 665; 4 Giff. 396.

Where a solicitor had obtained a foreclosure decree for a client (who had subsequently died, and a decree for administration of his estate had been made), the Court, under the 28th section of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, made a charging order for the costs of the suit against the real estate of the client. Wilson v. Round, 4 Giff. 416.

The solicitor of a party to a suit has, independently of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, a paramount lien for his costs of suit upon the interest of that party in a fund brought into court, through the solicitor's exertions; and, semble, notwithstanding the doubt suggested by the terms of the statute, this lien must prevail, even against an assignee for value without notice. Haymes v. Cooper, Cooper v. Jenkins, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 488; 33 Beav. 431.

Where, therefore, a plaintiff in a suit, to whom a defendant had been ordered to pay costs, obtained a charging order nisi upon a share of funds in court belonging to the defendant,—Held, that it could only be made absolute, subject to the lien for the taxed costs of the defendant's solicitor. Ibid.

Where a solicitor was employed by the next friend in establishing an infant's title to certain land, the infant having attained twenty-one, the Court, under the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127. s. 28, declared, on petition, so much of the costs as remained unpaid a charge on the land recovered. Brown v. Bradshaw, 4 Giff. 260.

A solicitor ordered, pending a taxation of his bill, to deliver over his client's papers, on the client undertaking to produce them, and giving security for the amount claimed. In re Jewitt (No. 2), 34 Beav. 22.

(I) SET-OFF OF COSTS.

An attorney may set off the amount of his costs, although he has not delivered a bill of such costs one month before the action. Brown v. Tibbits, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 206; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 855.

Declaration on an agreement, by the defendant, to indemnify the plaintiff against the costs which the plaintiff might be obliged to pay in a certain suit, conducted by the defendant as the attorney of the plaintiff, with an allegation that the plaintiff was compelled to pay in such suit a certain sum for costs; and breach, that the defendant had not indemnified the plaintiff, or paid such sum:—Held, that a plea of set-off, pleaded to so much of the declaration as related to the plaintiff's claim in respect of the payment of the said sum for costs, was a good plea. Ibid.

A, being indebted, employed a solicitor to prepare a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors, which the solicitor did, but in such a form as not to bind non-assenting creditors. The trustees accepted the trusts of the deed, and employed the solicitor to get in the estate. Subsequently, but more than twelve months after the execution of the deed, A was adjudicated a bankrupt. The deed contained a trust for payment of the costs of preparing it. In taxing the solicitor's bill of costs against the trustees,—Held, that the solicitor was entitled to set off, against moneys received by him on behalf of the trustees, the costs of preparing the deed, although it had not been prepared upon the retainer of the trustees. In re Sadd, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 562; 34 Beav. 650.

(K) ORDER FOR PAYMENT OF COSTS.

After declaration the plaintiff executed a release to the defendant and gave his own attorney notice not to proceed; the release was pleaded; to this plea there was a replication confessing the release; judgment was signed for the costs, and writ of execution issued. Notice was then given to the sheriff by the plaintiff not to execute process on peril of being treated as a trespasser, and thereupon the plaintiff's attorney obtained an order, calling on the plaintiff "or defendant" to pay his costs:—Held, that this was a proper case for the interference of the Court, and that the form of the order was good. Ex parte Games, in re Williams v. Lloyd, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 317; 3 Hurls. & C. 294.

(L) RECOVERY OF COSTS BY UNCERTIFICATED ATTORNEY.

The objection that the attorney is not duly qualified, and that a party to an action cannot, therefore, recover his costs, must be taken before the Master on the taxation of costs, and, if not taken then, cannot afterwards be taken on a motion to set aside the taxation, unless the omission be satisfactorily explained. Fullalove v. Parker, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 239; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 246.

It is not a satisfactory explanation merely to state that the applicant was not aware of the defect in the attorney's qualification, when the taxation took place, but it must also appear that by the exercise of reasonable diligence the defect could not have been discovered earlier. Ibid.

If money has been paid by a party to an action to an unqualified attorney, he cannot recover it back, and to this extent he may recover his costs from his opponent. Ibid.

Bail in Error: Payment into Court in lieu of.

The plaintiff had judgment in this Court, and the damages were referred to an arbitrator, and a sum of money paid into Court to cover the damages and costs, upon the terms that it should be in lieu of giving bail in error and to abide the further order of the Court, and that thereupon all further proceedings upon the reference should be stayed until after the proceedings in error should be disposed of. The judgment for the plaintiff was afterwards reversed in the Exchequer Chamber:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to have the money paid out to him without awaiting the result of an appeal to the House of Lords. Castrique v. Imrie, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 281; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 340.

Bail on Appeal: dispensing with.

The Court or a Judge has a discretion to dispense with bail on appeal, as well as with bail in error. Beavan v. Witmore, 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 442.

An official assignee of a district Court of Bankruptcy, having been sued by the trade assignee for contribution to the costs of an unsuccessful action to which the former was an assenting party, and judgment having gone against him,—Held, that it was a fit case for dispensing with bail on appeal. Ibid.

(A) CONSTRUCTIVE DELIVERY AND RIGHTS OF THE BAILEE.

The plaintiff, being indebted to A, entered into an agreement that certain goods should be held by A as a security for the debt, and the agreement contained an acknowledgment that A had received into his possession the goods which were the subject of the pledge. Part of the goods were, in fact, delivered to A, but a cart and one set of harness were, by arrangement, left in possession of the plaintiff. Shortly afterwards, upon A getting into difficulties, the plaintiff took back all the goods which were the subject of the pledge into his own possession, but, upon A's being declared bankrupt, his assignees seized the goods, and sold them for the benefit of A's creditors:—Held, in trover by the plaintiff, against the assignees, that there was a constructive delivery of all the goods into the possession of the pawnee. Martin v. Reid, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 126; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 730.

Semble, per Willes, J., that the pawnee of a chattel has a right to sell it, although no special day be named for the performance of the obligation, after which day the property of the pawnee shall become absolute. Ibid.

(B) JUS TERTII.

Where one of two contracting parties so conducts himself as to hinder the performance of the contract by the other, or to subject the latter to an action at the suit of some third person if he duly perform the contract, no action will lie for the non-performance. The European and Australian Co. v. the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 246.

When a bailor mortgages the chattel bailed, and the mortgagee has a right to demand possession from the bailee and does demand it, the bailee may refuse to give the chattel up to the bailor. Ibid.

The plaintiffs delivered a ship to the defendants under a contract, which provided, among other things, that the defendants should during the continuance of the contract and while the ship remained in the possession and use of the defendants, pay and discharge certain claims which would arise against the owners of the ship for its expenses, and upon the determination thereof re-deliver the ship to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs afterwards mortgaged the ship, and certain expenses were incurred within the above provision, and after that the mortgagees demanded possession under their mortgage:—Held, first, that such mortgage and demand were an answer to the claim of the plaintiffs to have the ship re-delivered to them; but, secondly, were no answer to their claim to have the expenses paid. Ibid.

A bailee is not estopped from disputing the title of his bailor, and setting up the jus tertii, where the bailment has been determined by what is equivalent to an eviction by title paramount. Biddle v. Bond, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 137; 6 Best & S. 225.

The plaintiff seized goods belonging to R under a distress for rent of a house alleged to have been demised by the plaintiff to R, and having seized them he delivered them to the defendant, an auctioneer, for the purpose of selling them. When the sale was about to begin R gave notice to the defendant that he must not sell the goods, or if he did sell them that he must retain the proceeds for him, R, as the distress was void, and as the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between himself and the plaintiff. This was true, and the distress was void altogether. The defendant did sell the goods, but kept the proceeds for R:—Held, that he was entitled to set up the jus tertii, and had a good defence to an action by the plaintiff. Ibid.

Plaintiff when a young child resided with her aunt in the house of the defendant's testator, where the aunt lived as housekeeper, and the plaintiff was almost adopted into the testator's family. The aunt was a married woman living apart from her husband who had deserted her, and previously to her death she gave the plaintiff some articles of jewelry and apparel; part of these the plaintiff gave the testator to keep for her, and the rest she placed in her own boxes in the testator's house. Upon the aunt's death her husband once called and claimed her effects, but the testator repudiated the husband's right, and the husband never afterwards claimed them or interfered further in the matter. When the testator died, which happened whilst the plaintiff was away at school, the defendant as executor took possession of the articles which had been so given to the plaintiff, and refused to restore them to her:—Held, that the plaintiff was in possession so as to be entitled to maintain an action against the defendant for these articles; and that it was not competent to the defendant to set up the right of the aunt's husband as an answer to the action. Bourne v. Fosbrooke, 34 Law J. ## BANKER AND BANKING COMPANY.

[Certain banking copartnerships discontinuing the issue of their own notes enabled to sue and be sued by their public officer by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 32.]

(A) Nature of a Banking Company.
(B) Dealings with Customers.
(C) Actions by and against.
(a) Payment by Mistake.
(b) Conduct of Manager.

(A) Nature of a Banking Company.

A company called a "Savings Bank" was formed with limited liability and registered under the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856, the objects being alleged to be to receive deposits, grant loans on security and to conduct emigration agencies, with a capital of 50,000*l.* in shares of 1*l.* each. An order to wind up was made in Bankruptcy, and afterwards a petition to wind up in Chancery was presented, on the ground that the company was not a banking company, and therefore that there was no jurisdiction to wind up in Bankruptcy; and it being proved that the company was not registered under either of the Banking Companies Acts, 1857 and 1858; that money could not be withdrawn except upon a stated period of notice; that cheques could not be drawn in the ordinary form; and that the company itself kept an account with a banking-house,—Held, that the company was not a banking company within the meaning of the statutes regulating joint-stock companies, and that being a company of limited liability registered under the act of 1856, it must be wound up as directed by that statute in the Court of Bankruptcy. Ex parte Coe, in re the District Savings Bank (Lim.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 8; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 335.

(B) Dealings with Customers.

In 1847 the customer of a bank gave a mortgage to the bankers to secure, with interest at 5*l.* per cent., money due and to become due to them upon a running account, on which it had been usual to make annual rests, and charge compound interest on the balances. In 1855 the customer assigned his property to trustees for the benefit of creditors:—Held, that the bankers had no right to make rests after the relation of banker and customer had ceased, and that the mortgage was a security only for the balance due at the date of the assignment, with simple interest from that time at 5*l.* per cent. per annum. Crosskill v. Bower, Bower v. Turner, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 540; 32 Beav. 86.

If bankers take a mortgage security from a customer for a fixed sum owing to them by the latter, the relation of banker and customer ceases thenceforth as to that sum, and it cannot be included in the customer's banking account so as to entitle the bankers to charge compound interest thereon; and in reference to the sum so secured, the mutual rights and obligations are thenceforth those of mortgagees and mortgagor. Mosse v. Salt, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 756; 32 Beav. 269.

Bankers cannot refuse to allow income-tax to a customer upon interest accruing on a mortgage security. Ibid.

As between a banker and his customer, the mode in which the account has habitually been made out will be viewed as evidence of an agreement that it should be taken in that way; and in the absence of any special agreement, express or implied, evidence as to the custom of bankers is receivable for the purpose of determining the principle upon which the account is to be taken. Ibid.

Quære — Whether a conveyance of land is a "security" within the custom which gives to bankers a general lien on securities deposited by their customers. Semble—not. Wylde v. Radford, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 51.

The articles of association of a joint-stock bank provided that the bank should have a paramount lien on the shares of any shareholder for all moneys due to them from him, and that they might decline to register any transfer whilst the transferring shareholder was indebted to them. A shareholder being unable to meet certain bills of exchange accepted by him and held by the bank, the bank took from him renewed bills for the same amount. Before the renewed bills arrived at maturity the shareholder transferred his shares, but the bank declined to register the transfer:—Held, that the renewed bills, though they suspended the remedy, did not discharge the antecedent debt, and that consequently the bank had a lien on the shares and were not bound to register the transfer. In re the London, Birmingham and South Staffordshire Bank, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 418; 34 Beav. 332.

Bankers retained the balance of a customer to answer a future liability which might arise in respect of bills which they had discounted for him to a much larger amount than the balance, and the customer brought an action against the bankers for damages for having dishonoured his cheques, and for the amount of his balance. After the action was commenced several of the above bills, to a larger amount than the balance, were dishonoured. Upon a bill filed by the bankers against the customer for an account and for an injunction to restrain the action at law, the Court (considering there was a substantial question to be tried in equity), upon motion, made during the Sittings in London at which the trial of the action was to take place, granted an injunction restraining the action. The Agra and Masterman's Bank (Lim.) v. Hoffman, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 285.

Where a customer of bankers gets them to discount bills at a time when his account is largely overdrawn, and the amount is simply carried to the credit of his account, the bankers are holders for value, though no money was actually paid. In re Carew's Estate Act, 31 Beav. 39.

The defendant, a merchant at Newcastle, was a customer of the plaintiff's bankers at Newcastle, whose London agent was the Union Bank. H, a merchant at Wolgast, in Prussia, wrote to the defendant, stating that he was inclined to consign to him a cargo of wheat, and asking for how much and at what date the defendant would open for him a credit in London. The defendant wrote in reply: "You may draw against transmittal of bill of lading at 30*s.* to 32*s.* per quarter in advance for your best yellow wheat on our account at fourteen days, one, two or three months' date, on the Union Bank of London." H afterwards wrote to the defendant, stating that he was about to consign to him 8,320 scheffels of wheat, shipped by the vessel Anna, Capt. K, and that he annexed duplicate bill of lading. On the same day H wrote to the Union Bank, stating that he had drawn on them six bills of exchange for 400*l.* each, for account of defendant. The Union Bank, having no instructions, sent the letter to plaintiffs. Messrs. B & C afterwards presented to the Union Bank for acceptance six bills of exchange for 400*l.* each, drawn and indorsed by H, together with a paper writing, purporting to be a bill of lading, addressed to the Union Bank. The defendant came to the plaintiffs' bank and had some conversation with the manager respecting the cargo of wheat supposed to have been shipped by H, when defendant said "it was a large amount, and that they must only accept against the bill of lading." The defendant then wrote to the plaintiffs as follows: "We shall feel obliged by your requesting the Union Bank of London to accept the drafts of Mr. H, of Wolgast, for 2,400*l.* against properly indorsed bill of lading of 8,320 scheffels of wheat, per Anna, E K Master, on our account." The Union Bank, at the request of the plaintiffs, accepted the drafts, and the plaintiffs debited the defendant with the amount. Before the drafts became due, it was discovered that the bill of lading was forged, and that no cargo was shipped on board the Anna. H was afterwards convicted of uttering a forged bill of lading. The Union Bank having paid the bills and debited the plaintiffs with the amount,—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the amount from the defendant on an implied contract to indemnify them. Woods v. Biedemann, 1 Hurls. & C. 478.

(a) Payment by Mistake.

The plaintiff presented a cheque at a bank, which the cashier of the defendants (the bankers) took, and gave the plaintiff in return notes and gold. Whilst the plaintiff was counting the notes one of the defendants, having discovered that the drawer of the cheque had no assets, demanded the money back. The plaintiff refused to give it up, and the defendants thereupon took it by force:—Held, in an action by A of assault and trespass for taking the money from him by force, that he was entitled to recover. That the transfer of the money was complete; that as between the plaintiff and the defendants there was no mistake at all, the mistake being between the defendants and their customer; and that the defendants, therefore, could not have recovered back the money from the plaintiff in an action for money had and received. Chambers v. Miller, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 30; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 125.

Quære—Whether, even if they could have so recovered it, they had any defence to this action. Semble—that they had not. Ibid.

Per Williams, J., payment in fulfilment of an undertaking, and not in satisfaction of a prior breach of an agreement, requires no assent on the part of the payee to make it a complete transaction. It is complete as soon as the money is handed over. Ibid.

(b) Conduct of Manager.

The declaration in an action against the manager of a banking company, after alleging the retainer and employment of the defendant and the nature of his duties as manager, stated, amongst other things, that he "did not, nor would take due and proper care not to advance the money of the company to persons of doubted, insufficient or bad means of credit, or on doubtful, insufficient or bad securities, or to discount bad or forged bills and notes, and negligently and improperly advanced the money of the company to persons of doubtful, insufficient and bad means and credit, and on doubtful, insufficient and bad securities, and discounted and renewed bad and forged bills and notes, and wholly neglected to take due and proper care, or to use or employ due and proper skill and diligence in and about the management of the affairs of the bank, and the discharge of the duties of manager as aforesaid." Plea to so much of the breach as above set out, that the deed of settlement of the company contained a clause, which provided, amongst other things, that "none of the directors, trustees or other officers should be answerable or accountable for the insufficiency or deficiency of any security or fund in or upon which the moneys of the company might be placed out or invested, or for any loss, damage or misfortune which might happen to the moneys, funds, effects or property of the company, unless the same should happen in consequence of the wilful neglect or default respectively of such director, trustee or other officer of the company." That the defendant was the manager and an officer of the said company within the meaning of the said deed of settlement, and was employed as such upon the terms of the said last-mentioned clause; and that the said alleged breaches to which the plea was pleaded did not happen by reason or in consequence of the wilful neglect or default of the defendant as such manager as aforesaid:—Held, that the plea was a good answer as to so much of the breach to which it was pleaded. Ward v. Greenland, 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 527.

(A) Jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy, the Commissioners, and the County Court.

A Court of competent jurisdiction having pronounced its decision, it is not proper or competent for any other tribunal of law or equity to enter into the consideration of the foundation of the debt. In re Hayward, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 33.

The jurisdiction over trust-deeds for the benefit of creditors, executed and registered in London under the 192nd and following sections of the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, is confined exclusively to the Court which would have adjudicated the bankruptcy and exercised jurisdiction over the estate of the debtor. Ex parte Cox, in re Eaton and Eaton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 49.

Trustees were appointed of a deed of arrangement between debtors and their creditors, and disputes arose among such trustees. Two of them petitioned that the remaining trustee might be removed and the trust fund vested in them. The Court of Bankruptcy made an order directing the fund in hand to be paid over to the accountant in Bankruptcy; and appointed an official assignee to act as if appointed under a bankruptcy. On appeal, the Lord Chancellor decided that the Court below had no power to make such order. Ex parte Ruck and Wickham, in re Wickenden and Mansell, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 9.

The Court has jurisdiction to order a respondent in bankruptcy to pay the costs of a co-respondent. The official assignee, on the above bankruptcy being annulled, was allowed his expenses of the custody and sale of the bankrupt's estate out of the assets received by him, and the petitioning creditor was ordered to pay the amount of such expenses to the bankrupt as well as his costs and the costs of the official assignee. Ex parte Woolheim, in re Woolheim, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 26.

The Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to summon a trustee under a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors to be examined touching his dealings with the trust estate; and the Court of Appeal will not inquire into the sufficiency of the grounds upon which such a summons has been issued. Ex parte Laurence, in re Beale's Assignment, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 61; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 307.

A Commissioner in Bankruptcy made an order, under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 125, in these terms: "That the household goods, furniture, &c. being in or about the messuage or dwelling-house and premises in the occupation of the said T. Taylor, in Cross Street, Middleton, and known as the Cross Keys, be sold and disposed of by the assignees for the benefit of the creditors of the said T. Taylor":—Held, per Erle, C.J., and semble, per Byles, J., that the order was sufficiently specific. Held, also, per Byles, J., that the order was not bad upon the face of it; and could not be held to be bad, unless it appeared from the evidence that a more specific order might have been made. Fielding v. Lee, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 143; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 499.

Section 94. of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134. does not apply to the case of a prisoner presenting a petition in forma pauperis, and owing debts exceeding 300*l.*; and, therefore, where in such a case the Judge of the county court of the district in which the bankrupt was in prison adjudicated him bankrupt, and transferred the proceedings to the county court of the district in which the bankrupt had resided for six months next before the filing of his petition, it was held that the Judge of the latter county court was right in refusing to entertain the case. In re Coombs, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 65; 3 Best & S. 296.

A debtor being in custody in the gaol at C, within the jurisdiction of the C County Court, the registrar of the C County Court, holden at C, made an order of adjudication in Bankruptcy, directing the adjudication to be prosecuted in the county court of N, holden at P, the district in which the debtor had resided and carried on his business for the six months prior to his imprisonment. On the investigation before the county court at P, it appeared that the debts would amount to a sum exceeding 300*l.*, and the registrar of the last-named Court thereupon declined to proceed with the adjudication:—Held (making absolute a rule calling on the Judge and Registrar of the county court of N, holden at P, to shew cause why the said adjudication should not be prosecuted in their court), that whether the words "having regard to the amount of debts," in section 101, refer to the limitation "not exceeding 300*l.*" in section 94, or not, it was sufficient to give the jurisdiction that the Registrar of the county court of C should have been satisfied that the debts were not likely to exceed 300*l.* In re Harrison, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 159; 1 Hurls. & C. 819.

(B) ACT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(a) Assignment of Property.

A person bought iron ore, and mixed it with ore which he raised from lands rented by him in the proportion of 65 per cent. of what he bought to 35 per cent. of what he so raised, and then smelted the whole into pig iron, which he sold:—Held, that he was a trader, within the meaning of the Bankrupt Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, although he only so mixed the ore which was the produce of his lands with ore which he bought in order to make the former a marketable commodity. Turner v. Hardcastle, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 193; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 683.

A deed of assignment of all the stock and effects of a trader, in trust for his creditors, was executed for the purpose of being used as an act of bankruptcy only in case it should be necessary to so use it in order to defeat an execution creditor, the intention being, at the time the deed was so executed, not to have a general act of bankruptcy of which any one could take advantage, but to wind up the estate, if possible, under the deed:—Held, that the deed operated, nevertheless, as a valid act of bankruptcy, and that the general form of notice was sufficient. Ibid.

Quære—Whether the validity of such act of bankruptcy could be affected by the petitioning creditor being privy to the making of such deed. Ibid.

In an action of trover for goods by the assignees of a bankrupt, which had been purchased by the bankrupt under an agreement, by which the purchase-money was to be paid by instalments, and an assignment of the property was to be executed by the vendor, when the whole purchase-money had been paid; with power for the vendor to re-enter in case of default in payment of the instalments,—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the full value of such goods against a mere wrong-doer, notwithstanding default had been made in payment of some of the instalments, and the vendor had to that extent an interest in the goods. Ibid.

An assignment made under pressure by a trader to certain creditors to secure their debts, which does not assign all his property, but leaves untouched a substantial portion, is not a fraudulent transfer, nor void under the Bankrupt Laws. Smith v. Timms (Ex. Ch.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 215; 1 Hurls. & C. 849.

A trader, being pressed by two creditors, one of whom had a bill of sale on part of his property, and the other creditor an execution on the residue of his goods, applied to the defendant to assist him, and in consideration of the defendant agreeing to pay off the two creditors, assigned to the defendant, by a bill of sale, all his estate and effects. The defendant paid off the creditors:—Held (affirming the judgment below, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 141), that the assignment was not an act of bankruptcy, as it was not an assignment in consideration of a past debt only, but an assignment in consideration of the assignee releasing the trader's property from a charge already laid upon it. Whitmore v. Claridge (Ex. Ch.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 87.

A debtor by deed, in consideration of a bygone debt of 230*l.*, assigned to the defendants certain property amounting to 160*l.* He had other property consisting of an equity of redemption valued at 150*l.*, and book debts to the amount of 50*l.*, of which 22*l.* were good. His debts amounted to 1,100*l.*, of which 600*l.* was due to the defendants, and the residue to other creditors. At the time the deed was executed the debtor was insolvent, and the defendants knew it, and they also knew that if they put the deed in force it would prevent the debtor from carrying on his trade. The deed was put in force by the defendants, and the debtor's trade was stopped:—Held, that the assignment was an act of bankruptcy, as the defendants by putting the deed in force prevented the continuance of the trade, and thereby necessarily defeated and delayed creditors. Young v. Fletcher, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 154; 3 Hurls. & C. 732.

An assignment by a trader of all his property and effects for a present advance of part of their value is not necessarily an act of bankruptcy. It is for the jury to say whether, under the circumstances, the effect of the assignment is to defeat and delay creditors. Pennell v. Reynolds, 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 707.

If a trader raises money by selling his goods at an undue value (not for the purpose of carrying on his business, but in contemplation of stopping payment, and for the purpose of cheating his creditors) to one who has notice, either by express information or from the nature of the transaction, that he is selling his goods not in order to carry on his business but with a fraudulent intention, the sale is an act of bankruptcy and void, and the assignees may recover the goods from the purchaser. Fraser v. Levy, 6 Hurls. & N. 16.

An assignment by a trader in insolvent circumstances of all his stock-in-trade, is an act of bankruptcy. The Oriental Bank Corporation v. Coleman, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 635; 3 Giff. 11.

A trader owed money to his brother, and the latter issued an execution for recovery of the same and took the whole of the bankrupt's property. One of the Commissioners considered that the issuing of the execution had not been at the instance of the bankrupt, and that, therefore, there had been no good act of bankruptcy to support an adjudication under the 67th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849. On appeal, the Lords Justices refused to interfere with the discretion of the Commissioner. Ex parte Boyd, in re Murless, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 6.

One of the Commissioners having annulled an adjudication, on the ground of want of an act of bankruptcy, the bankrupt having executed a mortgage of all his effects, &c., in consideration of an advance from a society, of which the bankrupt was a member, to secure his monthly payments, with a proviso that in default, or if any legal proceedings should be taken against the mortgagor "tending towards bankruptcy," the whole payments were to be due, and the trustees of the deed were then to have a power of sale; on appeal, the Lords Justices reversed the decision. Ex parte Lewis, in re Hollier, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 11.

A trader, by deed, after reciting that he was unable to pay his debts, conveyed certain real estate to a trustee, upon trust to pay all costs, charges and expenses, "already or hereafter" to become due to his solicitor, and the professional charges of an accountant, and apply the residue in payment of the debts of such of the creditors of the bankrupt as should execute the deed, rateably. The deed was not registered under the 194th section of the act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134:—Held, that the deed could be received in evidence against the bankrupt, and (supporting a decision of one of the Commissioners) that it was, under the circumstances of the case, an act of bankruptcy. In re Wensley, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 23; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 273.

An unstamped deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors is not admissible in evidence to prove an act of bankruptcy. Ex parte Potter, in re Barron, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 46.

Whether such a deed is admissible for that purpose unless registered—quære. Ibid.

Ex parte Wensley (1 De Gex, J. & S. 273; 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 23) questioned. Ibid.

Traders having overdrawn their account at the bank, and being hopelessly insolvent, gave to the bankers a bill of sale comprising their whole property to secure the existing debt and future advances, with a stipulation that no further advances were to be made until the debt was reduced to 300*l.* Two days afterwards they sent letters to their creditors, offering a composition of 10*s.* in the pound:—Held, affirming the decision of one of the Vice Chancellors, that the bill of sale was an act of bankruptcy. Lacon v. Liffen, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 315; 4 Giff. 75.

Although a mortgage given on the eve of bankruptcy to secure an antecedent debt is not void as a fraudulent preference if made under pressure, yet if the result of the mortgagee's entering into possession would be immediately to render it impossible for the mortgagor to carry on business, it is an act of bankruptcy as being "an assignment of the mortgagor's solvency." Goodricke v. Taylor, 2 Hem. & M. 380.

It makes no difference in the application of this rule that the mortgagor was liable as surety only, if it be clear, from the surrounding circumstances, that the principals were known by him to be unable to pay. Ibid.

Semble—It is immaterial whether the debt for which the mortgage is given was or not recoverable at law at the time. Ibid.

An adjudication was made against a trader in 1861, which was afterwards annulled. Another adjudication was made in 1862. The act of bankruptcy on which the second adjudication was founded was the payment of a sum of 1,100*l.* to the party at whose instance the adjudication of 1861 was made in settlement of his demand. One of the Commissioners confirmed the adjudication of 1862. On appeal, the Lords Justices (having called for other evidence than that which was before the Commissioner) were of opinion that the payment of the 1,100*l.* not being proved to have been made by an agent on behalf or with the knowledge or assent of the alleged bankrupt, was not a compounding with the petitioning creditor, within the 71st section of the Consolidation Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106), and annulled the adjudication. In re Scott Russell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 37.

A trader absented himself for three or four days from his place of business, and in his absence a bill of exchange was presented for payment and was dishonoured; and application was also made for payment of other bills. The trader was adjudicated bankrupt, the act of bankruptcy being this absence "with intent to delay his creditors." One of the Commissioners in the country annulled the bankruptcy, the alleged bankrupt swearing that his absence was occasioned by an attempt of his to get up evidence of perjury against one of his workmen, and to obtain pecuniary assistance. Pending this dispute as to the adjudication, the trader signed a declaration of insolvency. On appeal, the decision of the Commissioner was affirmed, on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to support the adjudication; but the Lord Chancellor, under the circumstances, refused to allow the trader his costs, as his "declaration of insolvency" whilst applying to annul an adjudication was inconsistent with an honest desire for the equal distribution of his assets. Ex parte Barney, in re Horton, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 41.

(C) PETITION FOR ADJUDICATION.

An adjudication ought not to be founded upon a doubtful debt. In re Potts, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 34.

It is an objectionable, or at least an inconvenient mode of proceeding, and one not deserving of encouragement, to found a petition for adjudication upon a disputed balance of a complicated diversity of cross-demands and unsettled accounts. In re Scott Russell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 37.

Semble—That the pendency of an action by a creditor against the debtor in which an order of reference has been made to arbitration, but no arbitrator appointed, does not prevent the creditor from proceeding in bankruptcy against the debtor in respect of the same debt. Ibid.

It is doubtful whether a trader can, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, petition for adjudication against himself for his own benefit alone. Ex parte Hewitt, in re Drinkwater, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 83.

Where a company has been ordered to be wound up, the relation of debtor and creditor is, as a general rule, not constituted between a contributory and the official manager until a call is made; and, consequently, a call made after the passing of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, is, in the absence of special enactments as to its legal effect, a sufficient petitioning creditor's debt to support an adjudication in bankruptcy against a contributory who is a non-trader. Secus, where the winding-up is under the Companies' Act, 1862, in which case having regard to the 75th section of the act, the call will be held to be a debt accrued due at the time when the contributory executed the deed of settlement, and therefore not to constitute a good petitioning creditor's debt, if in fact the deed of settlement was executed by the contributory previously to the passing of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. This case has been overruled on appeal to the House of Lords—see 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 25; 1 Law Rep. H.L. 9. Ex parte Harding, in re Williams; Ex parte Canwell, in re Vaughan, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 26.

Where, after adjudication in bankruptcy upon the joint petition of two creditors, the debt of one of them was disallowed, and the debt of the other was insufficient as a single petitioning creditor's debt, it was held, that the latter could not, by increasing his proof to a sufficient amount, support the adjudication. Ex parte Brown, in re Brown, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 51.

The proper course in such a case is either to allow the petition to be amended or to proceed upon a new adjudication. Ibid.

A trader, on the 11th of October, assigned all his estate to trustees, for the benefit of his creditors, but the deed contained a proviso that, if he should, within two calendar months, petition for arrangement under the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 211), or sign a declaration of insolvency, the deed was to be void, and the property was to be administered under the Court of Bankruptcy. Four days afterwards he presented such a petition, and obtained protection. On the 31st of October a creditor petitioned for an adjudication on the act of bankruptcy committed on the 11th, and an adjudication was made on the 2nd of November. Notice to dispute the adjudication was given on the 6th, and on the 13th the same was annulled by one of the Commissioners; but, on appeal,—Held, that the adjudication must stand, the arrangement clauses of the statute not superseding or controlling the powers conferred by the 101st and 104th sections of the act. Ex parte Treherne, in re Saunders, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 6.

A creditor is entitled to file a petition for an adjudication, although a petition of the bankrupt for arrangement be pending, if the creditor has not acquiesced in or sanctioned the arrangement. Ibid.

(D) ADJUDICATION AND ANNULLING THEREOF.

A trader, resident in Scotland, was adjudged bankrupt on the petition of a creditor resident in the same country. The trader brought an action against the petitioning creditor, but the latter refused to appear to it. The Court ordered that if he did not appear to the action within ten days the adjudication should be annulled; and he having failed so to appear, the adjudication was annulled. Ex parte Woolheim, in re Woolheim, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 26.

Upon the sale by auction of certain property of A B, a bankrupt, it was purchased by R on behalf of himself and of S the solicitor of the assignees in bankruptcy. Subsequently, by arrangement between A B and his creditors, a composition was accepted by the latter, a composition deed executed which ratified previous sales and acts of the assignees, and the adjudication annulled, but without prejudice to sales, &c. by the assignees. A B then filed a bill against S and R to set aside the sale, when it appearing that the composition deed had been obtained upon misrepresentation, one of the Vice Chancellors dismissed the bill:—Held, on appeal, that the order for annulling the adjudication must, for the purposes of the suit, be treated as valid, and that the provision therein for ratifying sales by the assignees, though protecting purchasers against having their titles impeached by reason of the bankruptcy being annulled, did not protect them from impeachment on other grounds, and consequently that the equitable rights of the assignees to impeach the sale must be regarded as having passed to the plaintiff, and the purchase be set aside; but without prejudice to the rights of the assignees or of the creditors, as against the plaintiff, to the benefit, if any, arising from the sale being set aside. Adams v. Sworder, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 318; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 44.

It is competent to creditors to pass a resolution suspending proceedings under the 110th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, notwithstanding that the bankrupt has obtained his order for discharge. Ex parte Boldero, in re Rodenhurst, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 34.

(E) PROOF OF DEBT.

On a loan transaction between the bankrupts and a creditor, it was arranged that the creditor should, in addition to interest, be paid an annuity so long as any moneys remained owing in respect of the loan. The annuity was secured by a bond in a penal sum and by mortgage. The creditor proved against the estate for the money due on the loan, and afterwards tendered a proof in respect of the annuity, or for the penal sum mentioned in the bond; but one of the Commissioners having refused to allow the proof, the creditor appealed. The Lords Justices held, that the annuity was merely in the nature of increased interest, and was not a subject of proof, and dismissed the appeal, with costs. Ex parte Robinson, in re Nicholson and Stone, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 12.

(b) Contingent Debts and Liabilities.

When the verdict is given before, but the judgment is not obtained until after, the plaintiff has become bankrupt, the defendant's costs are not a "debt or contingent liability" provable under the bankruptcy. Oxlade v. the North-Eastern Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 171; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 695.

The liability of a shareholder of a joint-stock company to pay future calls is not a liability to pay money on a contingency within section 178. of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, and consequently such shareholder's bankruptcy is no bar to an action for a call made subsequently to such bankruptcy. The General Discount Co. v. Stokes, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 25; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 765.

The 153rd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, authorizing proof in respect of a claim for unliquidated damages, applies only where there has been a breach of contract previously to adjudication. Ex parte Mendel, in re Moor, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 14; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 330.

S contracted with J to deliver twenty tons of oil in the month of January, 1863. Before the expiration of the time for completing the contract, S executed a statutory composition-deed. No part of the contract was ever completed:—Held, that J. was not entitled to prove under the deed for damages in respect of the breach of contract. Ibid.

The date of a trust-deed in the form set out in Schedule D. is that of the supposed adjudication to which the 197th section refers. Ibid.

A liability in respect of a breach of covenant for title, contained in a purchase-deed, arises immediately upon the execution of the deed; therefore, where the bankruptcy of the vendor occurred after the execution of the purchase-deed, but before the amount of damage sustained by the purchaser was ascertained, the latter was held entitled to prove for the amount. Ex parte Elmes, in re Hughes, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 23.

D H mortgaged lands in fee to W H for 1,000*l.*, but fraudulently retained the title-deeds of a portion of the property. He afterwards sold and conveyed this portion for 675*l.* to E, and entered into covenants for title, and delivered over the title-deeds to him. D H afterwards became bankrupt, and W H instituted a foreclosure suit, in which he obtained a decree from the Master of the Rolls; which was affirmed, by the Lords Justices, on appeal. E paid the principal and interest, and costs, and tendered a proof for the amount against the estate of the bankrupt:—Held, that he was entitled to prove for the principal and interest and costs up to and including the original hearing, but not for the costs of the appeal. Ibid.

The bankrupts employed Messrs. W, who were metal-brokers, to purchase iron for them, to be delivered and paid for at a future day. Messrs. W, as the custom of the trade was, entered into contracts for the purchase of the iron, without disclosing the names of their principals. Before the day for delivery and payment arrived the adjudication in bankruptcy took place, and the assignees having declined to complete the contract, Messrs. W completed the purchase on their own account, and resold the iron at a loss, and carried in a proof against the bankrupt estate for the amount of the loss so sustained:—Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that the claim could not be supported either as a liability to pay money on a contingency, under the 178th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, or as a debt payable upon a contingency, under the 177th section of the same act, nor could it be sustained as a demand in the nature of damages, to which the bankrupts were liable at the time of the adjudication, under the 153rd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and the proof was therefore disallowed. Ex parte Kempson, in re Barker, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 21.

There can be no proof under a deed of trust and the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, for damages on a contract unless the contract was broken before the deed. Ex parte Halliday, in re Hall and Jones, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 312.

H & Co. purchased a cargo, the buyers to name the port of delivery. On arrival of the ship they declined to name the port of delivery, and signified their inability to perform the contract. The sellers therefore named the port, and sold the cargo at a loss; but before this was done, H & Co. executed a deed of trust under the 192nd section:—Held, that the contract was still subsisting at the date of the deed, and that the sellers could not prove for the loss. Ibid.

(c) Bills and Notes.

Shortly before the bankruptcy of J W, a foreign bill accepted by him became due, and was presented and noted, but not protested for non-payment. W W, the bankrupt's son, took up the bill for the honour of the acceptor, and applied to prove for the amount against the estate. W W agreed with the assignees to refer it to arbitration; but no consent to such arbitration, pursuant to the 153rd section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, was obtained by the assignees. The award was against W W's claim, and the Commissioner rejected the proof. On appeal, it was held, that W W was bound by the award; but the question as to W W's right to prove as holder of the bill, independently of the award, was not decided. Ex parte Wyld, in re Wyld, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 10.

The fact that the claims of several indorsees of bills of exchange, drawn upon and accepted by the bankrupts, have been satisfied by the drawer, affords no presumption that the claim of another indorsee of a similar bill of exchange drawn and accepted by the same parties has been satisfied in like manner. Ex parte Graham, in re Grant, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 1.

The amount due for damages for breach of a covenant to replace a certain amount of stock in a railway company on a given day (the stock being such as might be presumed to have a market value), is provable under the bankruptcy of the covenantor, as a demand within section 165. of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. So also is provable the amount of damage sustained by a breach of a covenant to indemnify against the payment of calls on mining shares assigned as security for the replacement of such stock. Where therefore an action was brought for such breaches of covenant, it was held that a plea of the defendant's bankruptcy and that the causes of action arose before his bankruptcy was a good plea. Betteley v. Stainsby, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 337; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 477.

[See PARTNERS.]

W M, a partner in trade with T L, in 1854 closed a negotiation for the purchase of a freehold estate. He then proposed to his partner to join him in the purchase, and the same was agreed to, and the purchase-money was paid out of the partnership funds by cheques upon the bankers of the firm, and an account was opened with that bank headed "The T Estate Account." In this account the purchase-money and all receipts and payments in respect of the T estate were entered. The estate was conveyed in 1855, as to one undivided moiety to such uses as L should appoint, with ultimate remainder to him in fee, and as to the other undivided moiety in the same manner in favour of M. L and M respectively built a mansion for his residence on such part of the estate as he selected, but the greater part of the estate remained in the possession of a tenant under an unexpired term already granted by the vendor of the estate. Two years after the purchase, the partners mortgaged the T estate to the Bank of England, to secure balances on bills to be discounted, and they were described as carrying on business as "S, L & Co." In 1860, the firm was adjudicated bankrupt, and the Bank of England proved against the joint estate for the amount then due on the security, and claimed also to enforce the security against the T estate as forming part of the separate estate of each partner. One of the Commissioners decided that the sites of the mansions and their appurtenances were separate estate, but that the remainder of the T estate was joint estate. From this decision both the assignees and the Bank of England appealed:—Held, varying the order of the Commissioner, that whatever equity there might be as between L and M on a partition suit, the mere erection of mansions was no proof of an intention to sever the estate, and that the whole was joint estate, and formed partnership assets, and the value that it actually realized was ordered to be deducted from the debt due to the Bank of England. Ex parte M'Kenna, in re Streatfeild, Laurence & Co.; Ex parte the Bank of England, in re Same, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 25; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 645.

C, B and D by deed became partners for twenty-one years, C having a capital of 100,000*l.* in the business. The 10th clause of the deed provided that C's share in the capital, to the extent of 100,000*l.*, should be continued in and be considered as part of the partnership effects, and that the surviving partners should pay the same to C or his executors by yearly instalments; the 11th clause that the surviving partners should give a bond for the whole of C's capital, with an indemnity from all the co-partnership liabilities, and that C or his executors should release and assign to the surviving partners C's share and interest in the partnership assets and property. It was also provided that the capital of C should be secured, with interest at 5*l.* per cent., to be paid, after his death or retirement, by bond of the surviving partners, payable by instalments, and that the executors of C should indemnify the surviving partners and release and assign C's share of the assets; and it was provided that C might, by any instrument in writing, admit his nephew, R, into the partnership. R was in due form introduced into the partnership. C died, and thereupon the bond and release were executed. The partnership of B, D and R became bankrupt. There were no creditors of the old firm. The executors of C tendered a proof for the 100,000*l.* and a further sum which, on a settlement of accounts between the executors and the surviving partners, was found to be due to them, and contended that all connexion between them and the surviving partners ceased when the bond was given and the release was executed. For the other creditors, it was argued that the fund forming C's share of the capital was bound as a trading fund for twenty-one years, the whole term of the partnership. One of the Commissioners decided in favour of the executors, and the creditors appealed; but the Lords Justices affirmed the decision of the Commissioner. Ex parte Creditors of the Bankrupts, other than Brooking and others (Executors of Coster), in re Beater, Dennant & Russ, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 15.

A partner cannot prove a debt against the estate of his co-partner as long as there are joint debts of the partnership unsatisfied. Ex parte Collinge, in re Holdsworth, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 9.

Upon a dissolution of partnership between H & A, A assigned to H all his interest in the partnership property, and took from him a bond for 10,000*l.* H became bankrupt, and A executed an assignment for the benefit of his creditors:—Held, in accordance with the above rule, that the trustees under the deed of assignment could not prove the bond debt against the separate estate of H while there were joint debts of the partnership unsatisfied. Ibid.

Although, generally speaking, a partner has full authority to deal with the partnership property for partnership purposes, and, if the business of the partnership is such as ordinarily requires bills of exchange, to draw, accept and indorse bills, in the name of the partnership, yet, if a person discounting bills drawn and indorsed by a partner in the partnership name, has notice that the partner is dealing with the bills for his private purposes, he is bound to ascertain the extent of the authority of the individual partner, and if the dealing be not authorized, he has, upon the bankruptcy of the firm, no right to prove against the joint estate of the partnership, except to the extent to which the partnership may be indebted to the individual partner. Ex parte the Darlington District Joint-Stock Banking Co., in re Riches, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 10.

The rule that a partner cannot prove against the separate estate of his co-partner until the joint debts are satisfied, was intended for the benefit of the joint creditors, and is only applicable to prevent the creditor partner from coming into competition with them. Therefore, where the separate estate of the debtor partner is insufficient for the payment of his separate debts, exclusive of the debt to his co-partner, the rule has no application. Ex parte Topping, in re Levey and Robson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 13.

When a testator has authorized the employment of his estate in trade, though the firm in which it is so employed becomes bankrupt, no proof can be made against the estate of the bankrupts in respect of the money of the testator so employed. Scott v. Izon, 34 Beav. 434.

A debt due by one partner in a firm to his co-partner cannot be proved against the joint estates until all the joint debts have been paid in full, but it can properly be proved against the separate estate of the debtor as soon as the joint debts of the partnership have been discharged by the solvent partner. Ibid.

(f) Breach of Trust.

Three trustees were ordered to pay into court in an administration suit money found due from them. One became bankrupt and another died. An application by the third trustee for leave to prove under the bankruptcy for such sum of money as the bankrupt was indebted to the trust estate, including such sums as the bankrupt was bound to pay as between himself and his co-trustees, was refused by one of the Commissioners; but, on appeal, the Lord Chancellor gave leave to the trustee to go in and prove for such debt as he might establish, but directed that any dividend which might be realized should be dealt with by the Court in which the administration suit was pending. Ex parte Bromley, in re Redfearn, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 33.

[See (b) (6) Sequestration.]

By section 184. of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, no creditor having security for his debt shall receive upon such security more than a rateable part of such debt, except in respect of any lien upon any part of the property of such bankrupt before the date of the fiat or the filing of a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy. The defendant, in an action upon a bill of exchange, obtained an order for a commission to examine witnesses abroad. It was made a condition that he should pay 100*l.* into court, which he did, and subsequently a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy was filed against him. The plaintiff went on with the action, and recovered a verdict for more than 100*l.*:—Held, by Cockburn, C.J. and Wightman, J., dubitantibus Blackburn, J. and Mellor, J., that the plaintiff was entitled to have the 100*l.* paid out to him, for that he was not a creditor having security for his debt within the 184th section. And held by Blackburn, J. and Mellor, J., that he had a lien upon the 100*l.* within the meaning of the section, and that he was entitled to get the whole of it. Murray v. Arnold, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 11; 3 Best & S. 287.

At the hearing of a suit instituted by the wife of a bankrupt for redemption of a mortgage executed by the husband and wife of the wife's real estate, the assignees of the bankrupt, who were co-defendants with the mortgagee, disclaimed their right to redeem, and a decree was made giving the first equity of redemption to the wife. After this decree, the Commissioner in Bankruptcy allowed the mortgagee to prove against the estate of the bankrupt for the full amount of his principal and interest. Upon appeal to the Lord Chancellor, it was held that the disclaimer of the assignees operated only in acceleration of the wife's right to redeem, but if she did not exercise the right, then, the purpose for which the disclaimer was given having ceased to exist, the assignees' equity of redemption would continue as before. Consequently, the mortgagee could only be admitted to prove, subject to the condition that in the event of the bill being dismissed as against him, the interest of the bankrupt in the mortgaged premises should be sold, and proof admitted for the residue of the mortgage debt, after deducting the proceeds; or, in the event of redemption by the wife, the proof should be admitted subject to the same being expunged, or remaining wholly or partially for the benefit of the person paying the mortgage debt. Ex parte Paine, in re Gleaves, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 65.

The receipt of dividends under a bankruptcy will, after a great lapse of time and loss of the securities, be accepted as prima facie proof of the existence of the debt, and any objection to it must rest on evidence shewing some probable reason for supposing, not that it may be, but that it is, bad. Ex parte Graham, in re Grant, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 1.

Thus, where a bankruptcy took place in 1783, and a person claiming under an assignment of a proof received dividends in 1820 and 1824, the representatives of the assignee claiming in 1863 were held entitled to the dividends subsequently declared, though the deed of assignment was not produced. Ibid.

A creditor, after proving his debt, received 500*l.* under a collateral security on property of the bankrupt, and was subsequently paid dividends on the full amount of his proof until application for a final dividend, when the receipt of the 500*l.* became known:—Held, that the dividends on the 500*l.* must be deducted from the final dividend, and that the creditor must be charged with interest at 5*l.* per cent. on the excess of dividends actually received from time to time over what would have been receivable if the proof had been properly reduced. Ibid.

Under the usual order made upon the petition of an equitable mortgagee, directing the securities to be realized and applied in payment of principal, interest and costs, and giving the equitable mortgagee leave to prove for the deficiency, the calculation of interest must be made to the date of the bankruptcy only, and the mortgagee cannot claim to retain, in the first instance, out of the proceeds of the securities, interest accrued subsequent to the bankruptcy. Ex parte Lubbock, in re Flood and Lott, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 58.

A firm of two persons, D and Y, carrying on business as D, Y & Co. at Liverpool, and of three persons, D, Y & Y, carrying on business in Pernambuco, were adjudicated bankrupts in 1854 at Liverpool. A creditor of both firms proved for a debt under this bankruptcy, and received a dividend, after which receipt the house at Pernambuco also became bankrupt, and the creditor proved the same debt against the estate there, and received a dividend in respect of it. In 1861 an order was made by the Commissioner in England that the proof in this country should be expunged, unless the creditor paid to the assignees the dividend received by him at Pernambuco. This order was varied by the Lords Justices, who declared that the creditor was not entitled to any dividend in England, except the first which he had received, but without prejudice to any question as to that dividend, or to any question under the foreign bankruptcy. The assignees presented a petition praying that the creditor might be ordered to refund such first dividend: — Held, (affirming a judgment of the Commissioner,) that, in the absence of all evidence to shew that the law of Brazil would not have given the creditor the right to receive the dividend there, he was under no obligation as to that which he received here; but that, as he had rightfully received, he was entitled to retain it, and the petition was dismissed, with costs. Ex parte Smith, in re Deane, Youle & Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 60.

By the rules and the ordinary practice of the Stock Exchange, it is customary among brokers for one to make advances to another upon the deposit of foreign shares, &c., or to make purchases of similar securities; such loan to be repaid, or such purchase to be completed, upon the next of the settling days fixed for such transactions; but, according to the rules and customs of the association, if such loan should not be repaid, or such purchase completed, on that settling day, it is the right, in the absence of any new agreement, of the lender, or seller (as the case may be) either to sell the securities, or to retain them himself, at a price to be fixed by officers appointed for that purpose; and if the price so fixed should prove to be less than the debt in the case of a loan, or less than the price agreed to be paid in the case of a sale, the borrower or purchaser is liable to pay the deficiency; but any surplus beyond the loan, or the price agreed upon, is to be paid by the party retaining the shares to the borrower or purchaser. Further, if the borrower or purchaser should be unable to repay or complete, by reason of his being proclaimed a defaulter, the lender or seller is bound to take the shares in question at the price fixed by the proper officer. In the year 1858 P, M and M (the bankrupt) were members of the Stock Exchange. In November in that year P advanced M (the bankrupt) a sum of money, on the deposit of certain foreign railway shares. On each of the days for settling the account was adjusted between them, and the transaction was by agreement carried over from time to time at each successive settling day, until the month of April 1859, when M (the bankrupt) became a defaulter, at which time a balance was due to P after deducting the market value of the shares. M (the bankrupt) was so adjudicated in July, 1859, and P tendered a proof against his estate; but one of the Commissioners being of opinion that the transaction was one of gaming, and as such illegal, rejected the proof. In March 1858 M and M (the bankrupt) had this dealing, namely, that the former sold to the latter foreign railway shares, the sale to be completed on the next settling day; which was not done, but an adjustment of the account was made on each settling day, until M (the bankrupt) finally became a defaulter, when a balance was due to M after deducting the value of the shares, which shares he retained. This balance M claimed to prove in the bankruptcy; but the Commissioner, for the same reason as he rejected P's proof, rejected that of M:—Held, on appeal, that there was no gaming in either case, and that the proofs must be admitted. Ex parte Phillips, in re Morgan; Ex parte Marnham, in re Morgan, 30 Law J. (F) TRANSACTIONS AFFECTED BY BANKRUPTCY.

[See ante, (B) ACT OF BANKRUPTCY.]

The sheriff, having taken the goods of A, a trader, in execution under a fi. fa., at the suit of B, sold them to B. A few days before the sale B had received notice that A had filed a petition in the Court of Bankruptcy for an arrangement with his creditors. This petition was afterwards dismissed, and on the day of the dismissal, on the petition of a creditor, A was adjudicated a bankrupt. This, by relation back, made the filing of the petition for an arrangement an act of bankruptcy from the time of the filing, under section 76. of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849:—Held, that B had notice of a prior act of bankruptcy before the purchase under the execution; and, consequently, that the transaction was not protected by section 133. of the same act, and that the assignees of the bankrupt were entitled to recover the goods. Edwards v. Gabriel (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 113; 7 Hurls. & N. 520.

The 133rd section of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106,—which enacts that all executions executed and levied by seizure and sale of a bankrupt's goods before the date of fiat or filing petition shall be valid notwithstanding a prior act of bankruptcy, provided the execution creditor had not at the time of levying or sale notice of any prior act of bankruptcy,—has reference only to an act of bankruptcy prior to the seizure; and, therefore, an execution levied by seizure before any act of bankruptcy is not invalidated by a subsequent act of bankruptcy and notice thereof before sale. Edwards v. Scarsbrook, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 45; 3 Best & S. 280.

Under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 202. any security given for the purpose therein mentioned is declared to be void. This section is repealed by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, and is re-enacted (section 166.) with a proviso in favour of bona fide holders for value of such securities (if negotiable) :—Held, that the latter section is not retrospective, and that a bill of exchange drawn prior to the passing of this act is not affected by this proviso. Reed v. Wiggins, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 131; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 220.

The defendant agreed with the plaintiff and others of his creditors to pay them a composition on their debts, but in order to give the plaintiff a fraudulent preference, and to induce him to agree to the composition, the defendant agreed to grant the plaintiff an additional composition, and to carry out this object the plaintiff assigned his debt to S, the defendant's brother, and accepted a bill drawn by the plaintiff for the additional composition. The bill being overdue, the defendant by deed, reciting that S was indebted to the plaintiffs in the amount of the bill, assigned to the plaintiff a policy of assurance by way of security, covenanting to keep up the assurance, and repay any premiums paid by the plaintiff:—Held, that this arrangement was an answer to an action on the covenant, within the principle of Fisher v. Bridges. Geere v. Mare, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 50; 2 Hurls. & C. 339.

Prima facie a trader who, on the eve of bankruptcy, hands over to a creditor assets which ought to be rateably distributed among all his creditors, must be taken to have acted in fraud of the law. But if circumstances exist which tend to explain and give a different character to the transaction, and to shew that the debtor acted from a different motive, these circumstances ought to be left to the jury; and the proper direction in such a case is that, unless the jury come to the conclusion that the debtor had the intention of defeating the law, and preventing the due distribution of his assets, by preferring one creditor at the expense of the rest, the transaction stands good in law. The whole question turns upon the intention of the trader in disposing of his goods to the particular creditor. Bills v. Smith, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 68; 6 Best & S. 314.

Where, on the occasion of the choice of assignees, a misapprehension existed as to the willingness of a certain gentleman to act, an order was made for a new choice, and the costs attending the application were ordered to be paid out of the estate. Ex parte the Wolverhampton and Staffordshire Banking Co., in re Boddington, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 30.

An executor and trustee of a will was declared bankrupt. Under the will he took both real and personal estate, in trust for the testator's widow, E C, for her life, with remainder to her infant children. He fraudulently misapplied the trust property, and under his bankruptcy E C was admitted to prove against his estate. On the choice of assignees, she applied for leave to vote, but her application was refused by the Registrar, and on appeal by the Commissioner; but, on appeal, the Lords Justices held that she was sufficiently interested to be entitled to vote. Ex parte Cadwallader, in re James, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 66.

(1) In general.

Under the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, a bankrupt, by force of his adjudication, is divested of whatever leasehold property he possessed at the period of his bankruptcy; and the act does not reserve to him any right of electing to continue to be the owner of such property. Cartwright v. Glover, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 324; 2 Giff. 620.

A deed of partnership contained a proviso that a withdrawing partner should not be entitled to credit for the value of the lease of certain mines vested in a trustee for all the partners in shares, according to the capital contributed by them respectively, but that the account to be taken should consist only of his share in the assets of the partnership other than the value of the lease, and that in the event of bankruptcy of any partner an account should be taken of his share and interest in the mines, except the value of the lease, which was not to be taken into account. One of the partners having become bankrupt, it was held, that such a stipulation was a fraud upon the Bankrupt Laws, and void as against the assignees in bankruptcy. Whitmore v. Mason, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 423; 2 Jo. & H. 204.

A party bought land, &c., of a trader, and afterwards the trader was adjudicated bankrupt. A person holding the purchase-deed for the purchaser, was summoned, after the adjudication, under section 120. of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, before a county court Judge, to produce the deed. The Judge ordered it to be impounded, and the property to be delivered up to the assignees to be sold for the benefit of the creditors. Ex parte Cole, in re Attwater, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 11.

On appeal, the Lord Chancellor discharged the order, and the assignees were directed to pay the costs. Ibid.

The 137th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134), does not authorize the sale of the books of a solicitor who has become bankrupt. Ex parte Roberts, in re Holden, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 8.

The interest of a bankrupt in property given to him contingently on his obtaining his certificate passes to his assignees in like manner as any other contingent interest. Davidson v. Chalmers; Perry v. Chalmers, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 622; 33 Beav. 653.

A testatrix gave real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust during the life of her nephew, then an uncertificated bankrupt, at their uncontrolled discretion, to apply the income for the benefit of him, or his wife, or his children, and as to the income which should not be applied, upon trust to invest the same; but should he at any time obtain his certificate so as to enable him to hold and enjoy real and personal estate for his own personal use, enjoyment and benefit, then the testatrix directed that thenceforth during his life and so long as he shall be able to hold and enjoy real and personal estate for his own personal use, enjoyment and benefit, the whole income should be paid to him for his own use. The nephew never married, and after several years he obtained his discharge:—Held, that the will conferred on the nephew a contingent interest in the income, which passed to the assignees, and, upon his obtaining his discharge, vested in them absolutely. Ibid.

Whether payments made by the executors for the benefit of the bankrupt out of the income accruing previously to his obtaining his discharge were valid —quære. Ibid.

By a marriage settlement real estate was vested in trustees for a term of 500 years, upon trust, after the death of the survivor of H and his wife, to raise, by sale or mortgage, 2,000*l.* for the portions of their younger children. T, one of such younger children, assigned, by way of mortgage, his interest in the 2,000*l.*, and notice of the mortgage was given to the surviving trustee of the settlement. Afterwards he executed a deed of further charge, of which, until after his bankruptcy, no notice was given to the trustee, and subsequently he became bankrupt. At the date of the deed of further charge the 2,000*l.* had not become raiseable:—Held, as between the owner of the further charge and the assignees in bankruptcy claiming under the reputed ownership clause, that T's interest under the settlement was a chose in action only, and not an interest in land; and that the claim of the assignees were entitled to priority. In re Hughes, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 725; 2 Hem. & M. 89.

A & Co. contracted with B & Co. for the purchase of a large quantity of railway sleepers, to be delivered at intervals at the wharf of A & Co., and to be paid for on delivery. The sleepers arrived at the wharf of B & Co., in timbers of length sufficient when sawn asunder to make each two sleepers. After several deliveries had taken place, one of the firm of B & Co. called at the office of A & Co., and obtained from A an advance of 600*l.* on account of the last cargo of timber, which he represented to be, and which then was at the wharf of B & Co., and a portion of which had already been sawn into sleepers:—Held, that this was such a specific appropriation of the timber and sleepers to A & Co. (who had possessed themselves of them) as to entitle them to retain them as against the assignees of B & Co., who had become bankrupt after the advance. Langton v. Waring, 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 315.

(2) Order and Disposition and Reputed Ownership.

By a bill of sale A B conveyed all his goods to the plaintiff for the sum of 100*l.* It was provided that if A B, on a certain day named, or on such earlier day as the plaintiff, by notice in writing, should appoint, should repay the 100*l.* and interest, then the conveyance was to be void. Provided also, that, after default in payment of principal or interest, the plaintiff should have power to sell the goods and pay himself all that was due for principal, interest and costs, and pay the balance to A B in the usual way. Provided further, that, until default, A B should hold, make use of and possess the goods. A B continued in possession of the goods until he became a bankrupt. After A B had committed an act of bankruptcy, but before he was adjudicated bankrupt, the plaintiff served him with a notice to repay the 100*l.* within two days, in accordance with the bill of sale; but before the notice had expired A B had been adjudicated a bankrupt, and the messenger of the Court of Bankruptcy had taken possession of the goods:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the goods from the assignees, for that they were in the possession, order and disposition of the bankrupt with the consent of the true owner within the meaning of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 125. Spackman v. Miller, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 309; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 659.

Writs of fi. fa. on judgments recovered by R against M were issued on the 22nd of January; the sheriff seized the goods of M under these writs on the 23rd, and advertised a sale for the 30th; M filed his petition for adjudication of bankruptcy in the district court, was duly adjudged a bankrupt, and the goods were claimed by the messenger of the Court on the 24th of the same month:—Held, that M's assignee was entitled to the goods as against R. Young v. Roebuck, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 260; 2 Hurls. & C. 296.

Section 103. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861,—which enacts that "every adjudication against any prisoner for debt, so brought up as aforesaid, shall, unless the Court otherwise direct, have relation back to the date of his commitment or detention,"—has reference to sections 98. and 99; and therefore where a debtor was arrested under a ca. sa. and lodged in prison, and he afterwards petitioned in forma pauperis and was brought before the county court and adjudicated a bankrupt under sections 98. and 99, the adjudication relates back to the date of the committal to prison, and goods which were then in the order and disposition of the bankrupt with the consent of the true owner, though taken possession of by him before the adjudication, passed to the bankrupt's assignees. Bramwell v. Eglington, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 130; 5 Best & S. 39.

As section 103. makes the adjudication relate back to the commitment or detention absolutely and not merely as an act of bankruptcy, section 133. of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. affords no protection in such a case. Ibid.

Goods were assigned by S to the defendant by a bill of sale under seal in consideration of 50*l.* advanced by the defendant, with a proviso that if S paid the 50*l.* upon demand in writing given to him, or left at his last place of abode, the deed should be void, but in default of payment contrary to the proviso, "then at any time thereafter" it was to be lawful for the defendant to take possession of the goods, which were to remain in S's possession until default. At the same time S accepted and gave the defendant a bill of exchange at four months for 50*l.* to secure the same debt, and the defendant at once indorsed it over for value. On the 16th of February, the bill being still current, the defendant, knowing S to be in gaol under a ca. sa., left a demand in writing at his house, and took possession of the goods the same evening; S was adjudicated a bankrupt on the 23rd of February:—Held, assuming the 23rd of February to be the material date, that on that day the goods were not in the order and disposition of the bankrupt with the consent of the defendant, the true owner; for that, if the defendant had been premature in taking the goods the same day as the demand, yet that did not prevent his taking possession in proper time before the 23rd; and that the mere taking of the bill of exchange did not suspend his remedy under the bill of sale. Ibid.

Quære—Whether section 103. applies to an adjudication made by the Registrar under section 101. Ibid.

To make a valid verbal contract for the sale of goods above the value of 10*l.* where nothing has been given to bind the bargain or by way of part payment binding upon the vendee, there must be an acceptance and actual receipt, and such acceptance must be made with the consent of the vendor; and until such acceptance, the property in the goods is not changed and the vendor may exercise his right to rescind the contract. And if under such circumstances the contract has been rescinded, no act on the part of the vendee, or of his assignees in case of his subsequent bankruptcy, can effect an acceptance so as to change the property in the goods. Smith v. Hudson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 145; 6 Best & S. 431.

Goods purchased under such a contract and sent by the vendor to a railway station, consigned to the order of the vendee, are not, whilst lying at the station, waiting the order of the vendee, and before any order given or other act done by him constituting an acceptance of the goods, in his "possession, order or disposition," with the consent of the true owner, so as, upon his bankruptcy, to give his assignees any right to them under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 125, notwithstanding the goods were no longer in transitu, and the right of stoppage therefore did not exist. Ibid.

A, an innkeeper at Sheerness, being indebted to B, under what the jury thought sufficient pressure, on the 30th of May employed his own attorney to prepare a bill of sale of all his effects in favour of B, to secure an existing debt and a small further advance (the amount being about a fair equivalent for the value of the goods), and sent it to B. On the 10th of July B. sent a man to A's premises to paint out A's name, and on the 15th went down to Sheerness and took possession, leaving A there to manage the concern on his behalf. On the 15th A filed a petition in bankruptcy, and on the 16th was duly adjudged bankrupt. In an action by the assignees to recover the value of the goods thus conveyed, the jury having found that the transaction was bona fide, and that possession was really and notoriously taken by B prior to the bankruptcy,—Held, that the transaction could not be avoided, either as an act of bankruptcy (there being no relation) or as a fraudulent preference; and that the goods were not in the order and disposition of A at the time of his bankruptcy. Shrubsole v. Sussams, 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 452.

A transfer of shares in a joint-stock company was executed by a shareholder, a blank being left for the name of the transferee and for the date. On the day on which the transfer was executed by the transferor, the assistant secretary certified on the transfer, on the application of the purchaser, that the certificates for the shares were at the company's office, the certificates not having yet been issued to the shareholders. Before the name of a purchaser was inserted in the transfer, the transferor became bankrupt. The assistant secretary of the company in his evidence said that after the certificate which he had made on the transfer, a transfer of the shares would not have been permitted except under the above transfer or upon the production of that transfer cancelled:—Held, by one of the Vice Chancellors, that the shares were in the order and disposition of the transferor at the date of his bankruptcy; but, upon appeal, this decision was reversed, it being considered that the shares were neither in the order and disposition nor in the reputed ownership of the transferor at that time. Morris v. Cannan, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 425.

A having a contract with the Admiralty to deliver coals at certain foreign ports at stipulated prices, shipped coals in performance of the contract, and in pursuance of the terms of the contract, deposited three parts of the bills of lading with the Admiralty, retaining a fourth part himself, which he deposited, together with the policies on the ships, with B, to secure an advance. The deposit was accompanied by a letter, stating that it was made to secure the amount of the advance, and undertaking, in case of default in repayment at maturity or on demand, to enable B to receive the value of the cargoes. B having giving no notice to the Admiralty until after he, B, was aware of an act of bankruptcy by A, on which an adjudication was afterwards founded,—Held, that the moneys which became due from the Admiralty passed to the assignees, under the order and disposition clause of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act. North v. Gurney, 1 Jo. & H. 509.

Held, also, that the goods having been delivered, the owners from whom the ship had been chartered had no claim against the said moneys for unpaid freight. Ibid.

Costs being given against all the defendants, a direction was added, that this should be without prejudice to any question as to contribution between them. Ibid.

The order of the Court of Bankruptcy for sale of goods, as in the reputed ownership of a bankrupt is ex parte; and, semble, it cannot be appealed against by the true owner. Mather v. Lay, 2 Jo. & H. 374.

But the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction, notwithstanding such order, to restrain a sale and determine the rights of the parties. Ibid.

An application by the true owner to the Court of Bankruptcy for a stay of proceedings held not to be a bar to a subsequent bill for injunction to stay a sale. Ibid.

A mortgaged a policy of insurance, and also a share in his father's estate to B. The executors under the father's will paid their trust funds into court under the Trustees' Relief Act. B, the mortgagee, gave notice of his incumbrance upon the policy to the insurance company, and gave notice of his mortgage upon the estate to the executors, and obtained a stop-order upon the fund in court. He then submortgaged both the policy and the estate to C, who gave notice of his incumbrances to the executors, but did not give notice to the insurance company, nor did he obtain a stop-order upon the fund in court. B became bankrupt:—Held, that the policy remained in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, but that the notice to the executors was sufficient to take the interest in the estate out of his order and disposition without any stop-order upon the fund in court. Thompson v. Tomkins, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 633; 2 Dr. & Sm. 8.

It was also decided that the costs which had arisen out of the litigation between the assignees and the mortgagee were not to be borne by the general estate; and as each party had been successful in one part, neither of them would be entitled to any costs as to the controversy. Ibid.

By agreement dated the 11th of April, 1862, B & B, shipbuilders at Sunderland, contracted to build a vessel for F, who agreed to pay for the same upon certain terms therein mentioned. On the 12th of April, 1862, B & B, by deed, assigned the contract to S, to secure an antecedent debt, and an advance then made (amounting together to 500*l.*), and also future advances; and by the assignment it was declared that, subject to F's right, S should be entitled to a lien on the vessel for the above sums. On the 19th of May, 1862, the agreement of the 11th of April, 1862, was cancelled, and by memorandum of agreement, dated the 20th of May, 1862, B & B contracted to complete the vessel for, and to sell it to, S for 1,150*l.*, of which the 500*l.* already advanced was to be taken in part payment. Neither the deed of the 12th of April, 1862, nor the agreement of the 20th of May, 1862, was registered under the Bills of Sale Registration Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36). On the 2nd of June B & B became bankrupt: and the vessel was then incomplete. Upon a bill filed by S against the assignees in bankruptcy of B & B, for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that S was entitled to a lien or charge on the vessel, or for specific performance of the agreement of the 20th of May, 1862, one of the Vice Chancellors decided that S was entitled, under the deed of the 12th of April, 1862, to a lien or charge upon the vessel, and a sale thereof was ordered. Upon appeal, the Lords Justices held that the lien under the deed of the 12th of April was destroyed, either by the cancellation of the agreement with F, or by the fact that the 500*l.* thereby secured was merged into and taken as part payment of the purchase-money under the agreement of the 20th of May; but that under the latter instrument the plaintiff was entitled to a lien on the unfinished ship for the 500*l.* actually advanced. Their Lordships also held, that no registration of the instrument of the 20th of May was necessary, under the Bills of Sale Act, and that the vessel was not in the order and disposition of the builders as reputed owners at the time of their bankruptcy within the meaning of the Bankrupt Act. Swainston v. Clay, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 503; 4 Giff. 187.

Until the Court has made an order for the payment of costs out of a fund in court, the solicitor has no lien on such fund for such costs; therefore, where the solicitor to a party in a suit assigned the costs due and to become due to him in the suit, and subsequently became insolvent, and an order was afterwards made for the payment of the costs out of a fund in court, and the official assignee in insolvency of the solicitor claimed the costs as against the person to whom they had been assigned as being under the order and disposition clause, on the ground that (though notice had been given to the solicitors for the plaintiff in the suit) no stop order had been obtained on the fund in court:—Held, that it was not necessary to get a stop order on the fund in court, and therefore that the person taking under the assignment was entitled to the costs. Lord v. Colvin, 2 Dr. & S. 82.

In December 1861 the bankrupt contracted with W to build a barge for him, to be paid for in bricks; the barge to be completed on the 5th of June 1862. The bankrupt hired a yard for a certain number of months, for the purpose of completing the contract, which period expired before the completion of the work, and W then hired the yard. In June it was agreed by the bankrupt in writing that the barge should be held by W as a security for advances made by him. In July the bankruptcy took place. The advances made by W exceeded the amount of work done and materials supplied by the bankrupt:—Held (reversing the decision of the County Court Judge sitting in Bankruptcy), that W had a lien upon and was entitled to hold the barge, unless the assignees chose to complete the contract. Ex parte Watts, in re Attwater, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 35.

The object of the 19th section of the Joint-Stock Companies' Act, 1856, enacting that "no notice of any trust, express or implied or constructive, shall be entered on the register or receivable by the company," was that the company itself should not be bound by any notice of any trust, but the section does not prevent an equitable mortgage by deposit of shares from being so far completed by notice as to be valid as against the assignees in bankruptcy of the mortgagor, claiming them under the reputed ownership clause of the Bankruptcy Act. Ex parte Stewart, in re Shelley, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 6.

The directors and secretary of a joint-stock company joined in depositing the certificates of shares belonging to them with a banking company, as a security for money advanced:—Held, that this transaction amounted to a sufficient notice to the company of an equitable assignment of the shares belonging to the secretary, so as to support the title of the equitable mortgagees against his assignees in bankruptcy. Ex parte Boulton, in re Sketchley (1 De Gex & J. 163; Ibid. Bankr. App. Cas. 37; 26 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 45) distinguished. Ibid.

(3) Book Debts.

The 137th section of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, which empowers a bankrupt's assignees to sell the book debts of the bankrupt, is not confined to debts entered in a book, but applies to all such debts as would, in the ordinary course of the bankrupt's business, be entered in his books. Shipley v. Marshall, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 258; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 566.

A bankrupt who, in addition to the trade of a saddler, had been engaged in the purchase and sale of copyrights of newspapers, sold, shortly before his bankruptcy, the copyright of a newspaper of which he was the proprietor, but made no entry of the sale in any book, except his diary. One of the terms of the sale was, that the purchase-money should be secured by a mortgage on the newspaper:—Held, (Williams, J. dubitante), that the purchase-money due to the bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy was a book debt within the meaning of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134. s. 137, the right to sue for which would pass on a sale of such debts by the assignees under that section, though the right to insist on the mortgage would not so pass. Ibid.

(4) Chose in Action of Bankrupt's Wife.

Where a right of action of the wife of a bankrupt or insolvent is of such a nature that if vested in the bankrupt or insolvent it would pass to his assignees, the interest of the bankrupt or insolvent in such right of action passes to his assignees. Richbell v. Alexander, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 268; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 324.

A right of action for the conversion, before the marriage, of the wife's goods falls within this rule. Ibid.

An action brought to enforce such a right must be brought in the names of the wife and of the assignees, who are necessary parties; and an action by husband and wife must fail. Ibid.

(5) Lease.

The assignees of a bankrupt are bound to exercise their option of accepting a lease in which the bankrupt is lessee within a reasonable time; and, in ejectment, where title is traced through a bankrupt's assignees, it is a question for the jury whether, under all the circumstances of the case, the assignees accepted the lease within a reasonable time. Mackley v. Pattenden, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 225; 1 Best & S. 178.

To a declaration for breaches of covenants contained in a lease, in writing, of certain premises from the plaintiffs to the defendant, the defendant pleaded his discharge in bankruptcy, a refusal by the creditors' assignee to accept the lease, his own execution of a surrender of the lease to the plaintiffs, his tender of the deed of surrender, and offer to deliver up possession to them, without, however, alleging that the lease was lost or destroyed, or that he was prevented from giving it up:—Held, that the plea was bad. Colles v. Evanson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 320; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 372.

If a judgment creditor of a beneficed clergyman, issue a sequestration, and, the clergyman becoming bankrupt, his assignee under the bankruptcy issue a second sequestration, the former sequestration will remain valid and have priority, even though it were not published till after the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. Hopkins v. Clarke (Ex. Ch.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 334; 5 Best & S. 753—affirming the judgment below, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 93.

(7) Under Second Bankruptcy.

The plaintiffs were assignees in bankruptcy of one K who, at the time of the adjudication under which the plaintiffs were appointed, was already an uncertificated bankrupt. The plaintiffs sued the defendant in trover for goods which K had acquired after his first bankruptcy, and which he had fraudulently assigned to the defendant. The assignees under the first bankruptcy did not in any manner interfere:—Held, that the second bankruptcy was not void; that the title of the bankrupt to the property after acquired, which was good against every one except the assignees under the first bankruptcy, was transferred to the assignees under the second, and that the first assignees not having interfered, the second assignees were entitled to maintain this action. Morgan v. Knight, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 168; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 669.

On the 27th of March, 1861, J P being then a trader, committed an act of bankruptcy by a fraudulent conveyance of all his goods; on the 11th of October his landlord levied a distress for four years' arrears of rent; on the same day the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134. came into operation, and on the 17th of October, J P, being then a non-trader, was adjudicated a bankrupt upon his own petition, under the 75th section of that act. The 129th section of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. enacts, that no distress for rent made and levied after an act of bankruptcy, whether before or after the issuing of the fiat or the filing of the petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, shall be available for more than one year's rent accrued prior to the date of the fiat or filing of the petition:—Held, that to bring the case within that section the act of bankruptcy must be one to which the title of the assignees could relate; that no such relation existed to the act of bankruptcy of the 27th of March; and that, therefore, the landlord was entitled to retain the four years' rent against the assignees. Paull v. Best, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 96; 3 Best & S. 537.

Since the custody and possession of a bankrupt's estate has been vested in the official assignees, the mere relative position of trade assignees and messenger will no longer suffice to create a liability in the trade assignees to pay the messenger, without an express promise to pay, or an express employment of the messenger; for the messenger, in receiving the property, and taking care of it, prima facie represents the official assignee. Stubbs v. Twynam, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 8.

An official assignee of a district court of bankruptcy having given his assent to the bringing of an action in his name jointly with that of the trade assignee for the recovery of part of the bankrupt's estate, and, the action proving unsuccessful, the trade assignee having paid the costs,—Held, that he was entitled to sue the official assignee for contribution. Bevan v. Whitmore (Ex. Ch.), 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 763—affirming the judgment below, 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 438.

M in March, 1859, consigned oats to the correspondents of the plaintiffs at Melbourne for sale, the proceeds to be remitted to the plaintiffs, and against this consignment the plaintiffs accepted in favour of M a bill at four months for 600*l.*, it being agreed that the plaintiffs should be repaid that sum out of the proceeds of the sale of the oats,—any deficiency to be made good by M, who was also to pay interest to the plaintiffs on the 600*l.* from the time the bill came due till the arrival in this country of the proceeds of the oats. In June, 1859, M became bankrupt, the plaintiff's acceptance remaining in his hands unnegotiated. The assignees of M took possession of the bill, and paid it into the Bank of England, to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy for the estate of M; and the bill was presented to the plaintiff's bankers at maturity (July, 1859), and paid by them, the plaintiffs being in ignorance of the fact of its having remained in M's hands unnegotiated. The account sales of the shipment were received from Melbourne in March, 1860, shewing that M's estate had been overpaid to the extent of 270*l.*:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover back that money from the assignees. De Pass v. Bell, 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 517.

A notice to the effect that A has committed an act of bankruptcy by filing a petition for a private arrangement with his creditors, and that the sheriffs must not sell the goods of A seized under a writ of fi. fa. delivered to the sheriff on the day of the filing the petition (such petition having been subsequently dismissed and A adjudged a bankrupt on a creditor's petition), is notice of an act of bankruptcy committed by A at the date of filing the petition. Edwards v. Gabriel, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 245; 6 Hurls. & N. 701.

The defendant, a creditor, obtained a judgment and issued a fi. fa., under which the sheriffs seized the debtor's goods on the 6th of July; on the 9th the debtor filed a petition for an arrangement with his creditors under section 211. of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106; on the same day notice of this was given to the sheriffs, by the solicitors to the petition; the sheriffs sold to the execution creditor on the 13th; on the 7th of August the petition for arrangement was dismissed by the Court of Bankruptcy, and A was, the same day, adjudged bankrupt on the petition of another creditor:—Held, in an action of trover by the assignees of A, against the sheriffs and the execution creditor, that the assignees were entitled to recover the proceeds of the sale. Ibid.

The defendant, a merchant at Hull, kept an account with the Hull Bank, upon the terms that they should procure P & Co., their London agents, to accept on their credit bills drawn by the foreign correspondents of the defendants against their consignments to him, and of which P & Co. were advised by the Hull Bank. The defendants paid the Hull Bank a quarter per cent. on the amount of the acceptances, and they paid P & Co. a fixed annual sum for transacting their London business. When a bill was accepted by P & Co. the Hull Bank debited the defendant with the amount, and they charged him interest from the time the bill was due. The Hull Bank became bankrupt, and P & Co. paid all bills accepted by them which were due after the bankruptcy:—Held, in the Exchequer Chamber (reversing the decision of the Court of Exchequer), that the assignees of the Hull Bank, and not P. & Co., were entitled to recover from the defendant the amount of such bills. Barkworth v. Ellerman, 6 Hurls. & N. 605.

(H) Of the Bankrupt.

(a) Protection from Arrest and other Process,

A bankrupt having surrendered, his examination was commenced, and adjourned to a subsequent day. Before that day the Commissioner granted a certificate—under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 257. and Schedule (B, a.)—withdrawing protection, at the instance of a creditor, and a ca. sa. was sued out of the Court of Exchequer, under which the bankrupt was arrested by the sheriff, before the day to which the examination had been adjourned. After that day another certificate was granted, and a ca. sa. under it from this Court was lodged with the sheriff as a detainer against the bankrupt:—Held, assuming the bankrupt to have been absolutely privileged from arrest by the 112th section until he had finished his examination, and the original arrest consequently to be illegal, that the detainer was good, being lodged after the privilege had ceased; for that the principle applicable to such a case is, that whenever an arrest by the detaining party would have been good, a detainer by him, being equivalent to an arrest, is good also, unless it appears that the first arrest was a wrongful act of the sheriff himself, or that there was some collusion between the detaining party and the creditor making the arrest, or between the detaining party and the sheriff. Bateman v. Preston, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 133; 3 E. & E. 578.

A bankrupt after adjudication, and up to final examination, is protected from arrest under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, without the Commissioner's indorsement of protection on the summons. The Commissioner has no authority to deprive him of protection up to that time. Ockford v. Freston; and Chapman v. Freston, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 89; 6 Hurls. & N. 466.

A Commissioner's certificate, under section 257. in the Form given in Schedule (B, a.), certifying that the bankrupt is not protected by the Court from process, granted by the Commissioner before the day to which the final examination of the bankrupt has been adjourned, is void; a ca. sa. sued out on it is invalid, and an arrest on such ca. sa. illegal; and this Court, although it has no jurisdiction over the Commissioner's certificate, will set aside the writ and discharge a bankrupt arrested on such writ from custody. Ibid.

A ca. sa. issued on a (B, a.) certificate granted on the day to which the final examination has been adjourned, but after the termination of such examination, though valid, will not operate as a detainer against a bankrupt already in custody under a writ founded on a void certificate; for, whether the circumstances under which the sheriff arrested would render him liable to an action or not, if the custody under the original arrest be illegal, no subsequent writ, though valid, can operate as a detainer. Ibid.

Per Pollock, C.B. and Wilde, B., dubitante Martin, B., the principle of the decision in Hooper v. Lane embraces this case. Ibid.

A petition and order for protection of a debtor's property from all process under section 211. of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106), did not affect property levied and seized under a writ of fi. fa. previous to the petition and order; and the sheriff was therefore bound to proceed to a sale notwithstanding notice of such order. Bottomley v. Heyward, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 500; 7 Hurls. & N. 562.

The defendant in August, 1860, presented a petition to the Court of Bankruptcy, under the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, s. 211, and obtained the usual order for the protection, which was from time to time renewed until the 5th of June, 1861, and his proposal (to pay 10*s.* in the pound by certain instalments) was assented to by the requisite number of creditors, and approved and confirmed by the Commissioner. On the 5th of March and 4th of April, 1861, the plaintiffs obtained two judgments against the defendant; on the 21st of April, 1861 (and whilst his protection was in force), they commenced an action against him upon those judgments. The Court refused to stay the proceedings therein. Naylor v. Mortimore, 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 566.

A bankrupt having surrendered, his examination was commenced on the 6th of November and adjourned to the 3rd of December. On the 29th of November the Commissioner, at the instance of a creditor, granted a certificate, under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 257, and Schedule (B, a.), and a ca. sa. was sued out of the Court of Exchequer, under which the bankrupt was, on the 1st of December, arrested. On the 4th of December another certificate was obtained, and another ca. sa. was sued out of the Court of Exchequer at the instance of another creditor, and lodged with the sheriff. On the 15th of January another certificate was obtained, and another ca. sa. was sued out of the Court of Queen's Bench, at the instance of another creditor, and lodged with the sheriff. The Court of Exchequer held that the first ca. sa. was invalid and the arrest upon it illegal; and that although the second ca. sa. was valid, the bankrupt could not be detained in custody, the original arrest being illegal. The Court of Queen's Bench, however, held, that the detainer upon the ca. sa. from that Court was good. A writ of habeas corpus having been obtained from the Court of Chancery, it was held, that both the original arrest and the subsequent detainers were illegal, and that the bankrupt was entitled to his discharge. Ex parte Freston, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 460; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 612.

Three partners were sued upon a promissory note given by them for a partnership debt, and judgment was recovered against all. After suit, but before judgment, C, one of the partners, executed a deed under section 192. of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, by which he assigned all his estate to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, no reference being made to the partnership or its assets or liabilities. The deed was registered under section 198. of the same act, and a certificate obtained and notice given. C was arrested under the judgment, and on application for his discharge one of the Commissioners refused to release him; but, on appeal, held, that C was protected from arrest as well from joint as from separate creditors. In re Castleton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 71.

The discretionary power given to the Court of Bankruptcy by the 112th section of the Bankruptcy Law Consolidation Act, 1849, of releasing from prison a bankrupt who has been arrested for debt, is only to be exercised for the purpose of advancing the interests of the creditors under the bankruptcy, and is not given for the benefit of the bankrupt. Ex parte Stuart, in re Waugh, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 4.

Therefore where a bankrupt, who had left England shortly before the adjudication of bankruptcy, failed to surrender at the day appointed and remained abroad for about five years, making occasional visits to England under a false name, and only applied for leave to surrender after he had been arrested on mesne process,—Held, that the mere circumstance that his discharge might afford some additional facility in reference to the accounts, was not a sufficient ground, under the other circumstances of the case, for discharging the bankrupt. Ibid.

Whether the 112th section applies to the case of a bankrupt in custody upon mesne process—quære. Ibid.

The first part of the 112th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, empowering the Court of Bankruptcy to give protection from arrest to a bankrupt not in prison at the date of the adjudication has no retroactive operation; and the Court has no power under that part of the section to release from prison a bankrupt who was in custody under final process at the time of obtaining his protection. Ex parte Kimberley, in re Kimberley, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 28.

And, semble, the latter part of the same section giving the Court a discretionary power to order the release of a bankrupt who having surrendered and obtained his protection, is in prison for debt at the time of obtaining such protection, does not apply to the case of a bankrupt who has passed his last examination, and has been taken in execution upon final process while without protection. Ibid.

A bankrupt passed his final examination, and obtained his order of discharge, suspended for twelve months, with protection for three months renewable from time to time on giving notice to the assignees and opposing creditors. After the expiration of the three months the bankrupt was taken into custody under an execution, and he then applied, upon notice, for a renewal of his protection and a release from custody. He obtained a renewal of the protection; but upon the application for a release from custody, it was held, affirming the decision of one of the Commissioners, that the Court had no power under the first part of the above-mentioned section to grant the application, and that whether it had or had not a discretionary power under the latter part of the same section, it was not a case for the exercise of that discretion. Ibid.

The prisoner, a bankrupt, having failed duly to surrender himself, and having thereby committed a felony under the statute 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 251, a warrant of a Bankruptcy Commissioner issued for his apprehension. An information also for the offence was laid before a Magistrate, who issued his warrant thereon to arrest the prisoner. All these proceedings took place before the 11th of October, 1861, on which day the new Bankruptcy Act, 1862, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, came into operation. Section 230. of that act repeals the former act, but provides that that repeal shall not affect any proceeding pending or any penalty incurred for anything done prior to the commencement of the new act:—Held, that there were proceedings pending against the prisoner, and also a penalty incurred by him, for an act done by him prior to the new act, and therefore that he might be indicted subsequently to the 11th of October 1861, for the felony under the provisions of the old act; though as to these matters the act was repealed, and though the new act made a similar offence committed after the 11th of October 1861 a misdemeanor only. R. v. Corss Smith, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 105; 1 L. & C. 131.

An indictment against a bankrupt for embezzling part of his estate with intent to defraud his creditors, alleged that he committed an act of bankruptcy "by being unable to meet his engagements with his creditors, and by filing his petition in the Court of Bankruptcy for the B district, for adjudication of bankruptcy against himself"; and that afterwards, on the said petition being so filed, he was adjudged a bankrupt. It did not state that he had filed a declaration of insolvency:—Held, that the indictment was bad. R. v. Massey, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 21; 1 L. & C. 206.

A count of an indictment, laid under the 221st section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, charged that the defendant was adjudged bankrupt in the Liverpool District Court of Bankruptcy, and that, upon his examination in the said court, with intent to defraud his creditors, he did not fully and truly discover to the best of his knowledge and belief all his property, to wit, all his personal property in money and goods; and did not, as to part of his property, fully and truly discover, to the best of his knowledge and belief, how and to whom and for what consideration and when he had disposed of, assigned or transferred such part thereof, to wit, 1,000*l.*, 1,000 sacks of corn, 10 horses, &c. The defendant having been found guilty on this count, and having brought a writ of error,—Held, that, at all events after verdict, the count was good; that the offence being charged in the words of the statute, any want of particularity was cured, after verdict, by the 7 Geo. 4. c. 64. s. 21; and that if the count charged two offences, duplicity was not ground of error. Nash v. the Queen, in error, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 94; 4 Best & S. 935.

Quære—Whether the count charged two offences. Ibid.

If a person adjudicated bankrupt take no steps within the prescribed period to annul the adjudication, the London Gazette containing the advertisement of his bankruptcy is conclusive evidence of the bankruptcy in criminal as well as in civil proceedings taken against him. R. v. Levi, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 174; 1 L. & C. 597.

(I) Arrangements under the Control of the Court.

The defendant petitioned the Court of Bankruptcy for protection, under section 211. of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, and made a proposal for the benefit of his creditors. The Commissioner declared the defendant a bankrupt, and adjourned the proceedings into open court. There was an appeal against this order, which was reversed, and a further order of adjournment was then made by the Commissioner in order that a fresh proposal might be made by the defendant, which proposal was eventually accepted by a resolution assented to by more than three-fifths in number and value of the creditors, and the Commissioner granted a certificate of conformity under section 221. The plaintiffs were creditors of the defendant upon three bills of exchange at the time the latter petitioned the Court of Bankruptcy for protection, and they proved their debt at the sitting appointed for that purpose. Subsequently, they commenced two actions on the above three bills of exchange and recovered judgment therein, and upon these two judgments the present action was brought:—Held, that the certificate, if a bar at all, was as complete a bar to the action on the judgments as to an action to recover the original debts on which those judgments were founded. Naylor v. Mortimore, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 273; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 207.

In respect of a debt owing by the defendant to the L Company, an unincorporated bank, the assent to the above proposal was given by a person professing to hold a letter of attorney, as required by section 217. This letter of attorney was itself under seal, but it was executed by the manager of the company, who was not authorized by any instrument under seal. The company had ratified the act of their manager, and accepted the composition:—Held, that the letter of attorney under which assent was given on behalf of the L company was sufficient. Ibid.

The proposal accepted by the creditors provided that payment of the composition should be made on a certain day, partly in cash and partly in promissory notes; and that payment of the promissory notes should be guaranteed by the bond of one H. In carrying out this arrangement, some of the creditors were paid wholly in cash, instead of being paid partly in cash and partly in promissory notes; others were paid after the time stipulated for, and the bond which was executed was subject to a condition, that if proceedings in bankruptcy were taken against the defendant it should be void. But all the creditors except the plaintiffs, who refused to receive it, were paid the full amount of their composition in accordance with the proposal:—Held, that the arrangement had been carried out in conformity with the proposal; that it was competent for the defendant to pay some of the creditors their instalments in a manner otherwise than provided for, provided all were satisfied; and that the condition in question did not vitiate the bond, for that, under the circumstances, there was not at any time any means by which the bond could have been avoided under the condition, by any person whatever. Ibid.

Held, also, that the proceedings subsequent to the appeal were rightly continued. Ibid.

A B was in trade for thirty years, and was also a farmer. He never took stock. A London firm, with whom he principally did business, were in the habit of drawing bills upon him, in the nature of accommodation bills, which he accepted. The London firm failed, and A B then stopped payment; and it appeared that he had been insolvent two years before, but he did not then know the extent of his debts and liabilities. He presented a petition for arrangement, but upon the opposition of a small number of his creditors, the Commissioner, under the 223rd section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, adjudged him a bankrupt as having postponed the presentation of his petition longer than was excusable. This order was, however, reversed on appeal. Ex parte Mortimore, in re Mortimore, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 17; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 599.

(L) Certificate and Order of Discharge.

(a) Grant of, in general.

A trader was adjudged bankrupt in 1851, and his certificate was wholly refused by one of the Commissioners; and, on appeal, the judgment was affirmed, on the ground that the bankrupt had engaged in gambling in stock within the 201st section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106), which section is repealed by the act of 1861). After a lapse of ten years, during which he had lived abroad, but had there been sued by a creditor holding a security provable under the bankruptcy, and was imprisoned at his suit for a period of nine months, he applied to one of the Commissioners for his discharge under the 160th section of the act of 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134), but his Honour refused to order the same, principally on the ground of his going and remaining abroad after the refusal of his certificate:—Held, on appeal, that he was entitled to an absolute and unconditional discharge. In re Matheson, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 23.

The Court will not lay down any general rule as to the granting an order of discharge under the above act of 1861, but each case must depend upon its own individual circumstances. Ibid.

In the inquiry into the circumstances, acts which, under the 201st section of the act of 1849, would constitute offences disentitling a bankrupt to any certificate are not to be taken into the consideration of the Court, that section having been repealed. Ibid.

Where a bankrupt had omitted certain contracts and property from his statement of accounts, one of the Commissioners had adjourned the further hearing of an application for his discharge sine die, with limited protection under the 110th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, but the Lords Justices (without expressing any opinion on the bankrupt's right to an order of discharge) gave him leave to appear again before the Commissioner. In re Delamere, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 35.

A bankrupt applied for his order of discharge under the 158th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134), when one of the Commissioners suspended the order for eighteen months without protection, on the ground that the bankrupt had falsely represented an accommodation bill as a trade bill. The bankrupt denied the false representation, and appealed. The Lords Justices considered that the fact of the falsehood of the representation was doubtful, and that it was also doubtful whether there was any power to suspend the discharge of a bankrupt the proceedings in whose bankruptcy were pending at the time the act of 1861 came into operation, on account of offences punishable under the repealed 256th section of the Consolidation Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106), and therefore they thought it best and the right course to issue an immediate discharge. In re Bond, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 47.

Quære—Whether there is any power to suspend the discharge of a bankrupt, the proceedings in whose bankruptcy were "pending" at the time the act of 1861 came into operation, by reason of his having been guilty of offences punishable under the repealed section of the act of 1849, but for which no punishment is provided by the act of 1861. Ibid.

D and B, partners, borrowed, in 1854, 1,000*l.* on their joint personal security. B, in 1859, retired from the partnership, but the debt continued upon the security of D only, and was made payable in 1869. In 1861, D, being sued for arrears of interest, petitioned for adjudication, and was adjudged bankrupt, and the only debt proved was the 1,000*l.* The bankrupt's examination shewed insolvency for a period of ten years before the adjudication. One of the Commissioners having granted an unconditional order of discharge, the Lords Justices, on the appeal of the assignee, suspended the order and granted another protecting the bankrupt from molestation in respect of debts under the adjudication, but leaving after-acquired property liable for all debts proved or provable under it. Ex parte Hewitt, in re Drinkwater, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 83.

Where proceedings under the bankruptcy have been suspended under the 110th section of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, and the bankrupt has not made a full discovery of his estate, it is doubtful whether under the above section, he is entitled, as of right, to an order of discharge, or only entitled to apply for the order which may be granted or withheld on consideration of his general conduct. In re Delamere, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 67.

The discretion of the Court as to refusing or suspending a certificate to the bankrupt which existed under the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, is not continued by the act of 1861 as to the order of discharge, but the bankrupt is entitled to an order of discharge unless he be guilty of any of the offences mentioned in the latter act. In re Mew and Thorne, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 87.

The bankrupt's father was a manufacturer living at G, and having a mill at M, four miles distant. The bankrupt was in the employ of his father, and also carried on business on his own account at M, where he slept during five nights of the week, returning to his father's house at G on Saturday, and remaining with him as part of his family till Monday. In his petition the bankrupt described himself merely as "of G, manufacturer." Whether this was a misdescription upon which the adjudication might be annulled, quære; but held, that it was no ground for reversing an order of discharge. Ex parte Crabtree, in re Taylor, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 33.

An action founded on tort is not an action to recover money due within the meaning of the 159th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and a vexatious defence to such an action is therefore no ground for refusing the order of discharge. Ibid.

In re Mew and Thorne (31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 87) adhered to. Ibid.

For a malicious injury done before the act of 1861 came into operation a verdict with damages was returned by a jury against B. He afterwards was adjudicated bankrupt upon his own petition; and one of the Commissioners granted him an order of discharge. On appeal, the Lords Justices differed in opinion, the Lord Justice Knight Bruce considering that it is not within the power of the Court to refuse or suspend the order of discharge when the bankrupt has not been guilty either of conduct amounting to a misdemeanor under the act of 1861, or of one or more of the offences enumerated in the third paragraph of its 159th section; but the Lord Justice Turner dissented, being of opinion that as the act nowhere makes it obligatory upon the Court to grant the order of discharge, it must have been intended that the Court should have a discretion to suspend or refuse such an order. The appeal of the plaintiffs in the action was therefore dismissed. Ex parte Glass and Elliot, in re Boswall, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 73.

The words "order of discharge" in the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, denote two different things: first, the order made by the Court on the application of the bankrupt, and which is made and pronounced by the Commissioner, subject to appeal, and is recorded in the proceedings; and, secondly, that further document or certificate which is formally drawn up and handed over to the bankrupt after the time allowed for appealing has elapsed. The order of discharge referred to by the 1st rule of the 159th section is the first of these, and the date from which it takes effect is the time when it is pronounced by the Court. Consequently, where, after the making of the order of discharge by the Commissioner, but before the expiration of the time required by the 170th section to elapse before the order of discharge should be drawn up, property devolved upon the bankrupt, it was held that he, and not the assignees, was entitled to it. Ex parte Bell, in re Laforest, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 50.

The 159th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, is not retrospective, and an offence created by that clause must, in order to justify the refusal or suspension of the order of discharge, have been committed subsequently to the passing of the act. Ex parte White, in re White, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 22.

It is the duty of the Commissioner when applied to by a bankrupt for his discharge under the circumstances mentioned in the 110th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, to be judicially satisfied, before granting it, that the bankrupt has made a full discovery of his estate. Ex parte Jones, in re Wilson and Slater, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 11.

The power given to the Court by the 162nd section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, to adjourn a bankrupt's last examination sine die, is not to be used for the purpose of indirectly defeating the bankrupt's right to an order of discharge in cases where the order could not be directly refused under the 159th section of the act of 1861. Ex parte Grummitt, in re Grummitt, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 43.

A Registrar acting as the deputy of the Commissioner, under the 27th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, has power to grant orders of discharge in unopposed cases; and this power is not taken away by implication by the 52nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, nor by the 159th section of the same act. Ex parte Lees, in re Emberton, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 25.

The order of discharge in such a case ought to be signed by the Registrar, and not by the Commissioner. Ibid.

P, carrying on business in Australia, was proceeded against in the Insolvency Court there, and being unable to get his certificate, left the colony, and came to this country, where he was sued by an Australian creditor who had not proved his debt under the proceedings in insolvency. Judgment was recovered against him, and he was shortly afterwards adjudicated bankrupt on his own petition. The Commissioner was afterwards applied to on behalf of the creditor to dismiss the petition, but he refused to do so, and this decision was not appealed from. Subsequently the Commissioner made an order granting the bankrupt his discharge after suspension for eight calendar months, with protection. Upon the matter coming before the Lord Chancellor, upon appeal from the order of discharge, it appearing that the bankrupt had contracted debts without reasonable ground of expectation of being able to pay, the order was suspended (with intermediate protection) for twelve months, for the purpose of gaining information as to any future property of the bankrupt, the Lord Chancellor at the same time intimating that the order of discharge would be granted ultimately only upon the terms of the future property being made available for the creditors. Ex parte Gibson, in re Pattrick, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 31.

Semble—If the adjudication had been appealed against in due time, it would have been annulled. Ibid.

A trader obtained money on the discount of bills of exchange drawn by him and his firm, representing to the discounters that the bills were ordinary trade bills, and not accommodation bills, and on that footing they were discounted. The trader became bankrupt, and one of the Commissioners, for the above misconduct and other reasons, refused him any certificate, and also refused him liberty to apply for his discharge, if taken in execution, until he should have been in prison six months. The bankrupt appealed from this judgment; but the Lords Justices, being of opinion that the representations amounted substantially to obtaining money by untrue pretences and fraudulent misrepresentations, refused to mitigate the sentence, and dismissed the appeal. Ex parte Laurence, in re Laurence, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 33.

A trader purchased goods of a manufacturer, and after the invoice had been made out, he added to the invoice an amount more than double that of the sum charged by the manufacturer as the cost price of the goods, and upon the invoice so added to, or fabricated, he procured a loan of money to two-thirds of the fabricated price. The custom of the trade was to "salt" invoices to the extent of 5*l.* per cent. on the amount charged as cost price, to meet the incidental expenses of shipment, and the trader represented to the lender that this invoice had only been so "salted." The goods were shipped to Australia, and sold for an amount less than the true cost price. The trader became bankrupt, and for this and other acts of misconduct one of the Commissioners refused him his certificate; and, on appeal, the Lords Justices affirmed the decision, and dismissed the bankrupt's petition with costs. Ex parte Johnson, in re Johnson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 38.

A father, a solicitor in practice, took his son, aged twenty-four, into partnership. The son never investigated the affairs of the firm, but though he lived with and was maintained by the father, he drew out of the concern annually 300*l.* for his own purposes. The father became bankrupt, and subsequently also the son. On the latter applying to one of the Commissioners for his discharge, his Honour suspended it for twelve months, three months to be without protection. On appeal, the Lords Justices mitigated the sentence by a suspension for three months only, with protection. Ex parte Holden, in re Holden, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 86.

Semble—A speculation is not "rash and hazardous" within the meaning of the 159th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, unless it is not only dangerous, but such as no reasonable man would enter into. Ex parte Downman, in re Downman, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 49.

A bankrupt accepted accommodation bills without consideration, to an amount far beyond his means or expectations, for a firm in large business, to whom he was under considerable obligations, and whom he believed to be perfectly solvent:—Held, affirming the decision of the Commissioner, that his conduct amounted to a contracting of debts without reasonable or probable ground of expectation of being able to pay the same within the 159th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and his order of discharge was absolutely refused. Ex parte Barker, in re Barker, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 13.

The primary consideration of the Court of Bankruptcy should be for the benefit and satisfaction of the civil rights of the creditors, and not the satisfaction of any personal injury; and no moral consideration not belonging to the jurisdiction of the Judge ought to influence the nature or amount of a sentence passed by him on the bankrupt. Ex parte Griffiths, in re Griffiths, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 44.

Though the bankrupt may have committed acts for which he is liable to imprisonment, under the 159th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, yet if they are not acts for which the Court is in the habit of awarding imprisonment, no amount of moral misconduct not coming within that section can be called in aid to justify such a sentence. Ibid.

Semble—Where a debt originates in special circumstances, and is contracted with a view to a special emergency, and is not attributable to the ordinary expenditure and style of living of the bankrupt (as where the bankrupt has borrowed money for his defence to a suit in the Divorce Court), it ought not to be taken into account in estimating whether he has contracted debts without reasonable ground of expectation of being able to pay the same. Nor can damages recovered against the bankrupt in the Divorce Court be considered as a debt so contracted. Ibid.

A solicitor was co-trustee under a settlement of a sum of 3,000*l.* charged upon certain property. He borrowed a sum of 300*l.*, and, as security, deposited the title-deeds of the above-named property, without the knowledge of his co-trustee, and without informing the lender of the fact of the 3,000*l.* charge. The solicitor was adjudicated bankrupt, and one of the Commissioners refused him any certificate, on the ground that the above was fraud both on the cestuis que trust and on the lender of the 300*l.* On appeal, the Lords Justices, considering that wilful fraud could not necessarily be implied from the facts of the case, mitigated the sentence by the grant of a certificate of the second class, after a suspension of two years from the date of the adjudication, and said that their invariable rule was never to alter an order of a Commissioner refusing a certificate, where fraud was established. In re Preston, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 1.

During a period of unquestionable solvency, but shortly before bankruptcy, a trader purchased goods for, as he alleged to the seller, home trade. The goods were very soon after consigned to a relative in America, and when sold were disposed of at very great loss. After his bankruptcy he applied for his discharge, but was opposed on the ground of having made misrepresentations, and that the consignment of the goods to America was a rash and hazardous speculation within the meaning of paragraph 3. of section 159. of the statute, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134. The Court, affirming the view of one of the Commissioners, held that this paragraph of the 159th section was not applicable to the case, the bankrupt at the time of the venture being possessed of property beyond the amount of his liabilities, and the representations, though erroneous, not being fraudulent. Ex parte Evans, in re Barnard and Rosenthal, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 63.

One of the Commissioners had refused the bankrupt any certificate for, amongst other offences, a fraudulent preference; but the Lords Justices, on appeal, on hearing further evidence, were of opinion that there had not been a fraudulent preference, and, the assignees not opposing, granted a certificate of the second class. In re Shotter, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 5.

A trader, when involved in difficulties and hopelessly insolvent, deposited the title-deeds of property, of which he was surviving trustee, with his brother, who was entitled to the same property for life, under the will of which the bankrupt was trustee as a security for a debt owing to the brother. The certificate was refused on the ground that this was a fraudulent preference, but protection was granted valeat quantum. In re Barton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 7.

[See ante, (H)·(b).]

A bankrupt had been guilty of acts which amounted to a misdemeanor within the 221st section of the statute, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134; and one of the Commissioners, under section 159. of the same act, granted him an order of discharge with a suspension of twelve months. On appeal, the Lords Justices considered that the Commissioner had jurisdiction to direct a prosecution before a Court of Criminal Justice, and that it was not incumbent on him, with or without a jury, to try the case himself; and they discharged the order, and directed a prosecution by the assignees at the next assizes. Ex parte Dobson, in re Wilson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 1.

Subsequently friends of the bankrupt subscribed money in order to provide a dividend, if the order made by the Court should be discharged. Their Lordships discharged their order, and permitted the money to be accepted by the assignees. Ibid.

Reasonable evidence of the guilt of parties is necessary before a prosecution by indictment, under the 221st section of the act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, can be directed. It cannot be so on a case of mere suspicion. Ex parte William and George Strickland, in re Still, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 12.

An order for the prosecution of a bankrupt may be made before the appointment of a creditors' assignee, and notwithstanding the bankrupt has not been examined or had any opportunity of explanation afforded him; and it is a matter for the discretion of the Commissioner whether a previous inquiry or an examination of the bankrupt shall be directed. Ex parte Levi, in re Levi, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 23.

An order for prosecution, reciting that there is reason for supposing that the bankrupt has been guilty of some one or more of the offences set forth in the 221st section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, is properly framed without specifying the particular offences with which the bankrupt is charged. Ibid.

The 109th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, giving power to the creditors to determine whether any, or what, allowance shall be made to the bankrupt up to the time of passing his last examination, does not repeal the 194th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, by which that power is given to the Court; but the power still remains in the Court, subject to the control of the creditors under the later act. Ex parte Ellerton, in re Leech, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 32.

The time of "passing the last examination," up to which a bankrupt's allowance is to be paid under the 109th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, is the time appointed under the 140th section for passing the last examination, and not the time when the last examination is actually passed. Ex parte Osborn, in re Jowett, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 15.

The 154th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, discharges the bankrupt from liability to a surety in respect of payments of premiums on a policy of insurance becoming due subsequently to the date of the adjudication. Saunders v. Best, 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 731.

(M) PRACTICE.

One of the Commissioners pronounced an order, and one of the parties affected by it appealed within twenty-one days. Another party affected also appealed after the twenty-one days had expired, but before the first petition of appeal was heard:—Held, that the order of the Commissioner in these circumstances was not "final," and that the second petition of appeal was presented in time. Ex parte M'Kenna, in re Streatfeild, Laurence & Co.; Ex parte the Bank of England, in re Same, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 24.

A prisoner who had been adjudicated bankrupt by a registrar was allowed, on appeal, to examine witnesses to prove that his arrest was illegal by reason that the debt was not of sufficient amount to justify arrest; but the Court being of opinion that he was legally in custody on an execution issued by a Court of competent jurisdiction, and which execution that Court had refused to set aside,—Held, that the appeal must be dismissed. In re Hayward, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 33.

The date of an order is the day when it was made, and the time for appealing under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 12. runs from that day, and not from the day when the order was drawn up. Ex parte the Dudley and West Bromwich Banking Co., in re Hopkins, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 68.

Ex parte Heslop (1 De Gex, M. & G. 477) not followed. Ibid.

The effect of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, transferring the jurisdiction of the Insolvent Debtors' Court to the Court of Bankruptcy, is to give the same right of appeal in insolvency cases as is given by the 12th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, in bankruptcy cases. Ex parte Perkins, in re Perkins, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 37.

Motions by way of appeal under No. 32. of the General Orders pursuant to the act 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, are to be placed in the paper in the same way as appeal petitions were formerly. Ex parte Lewis, in re Hollier, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 11.

The 32nd General Order of 1861 having directed that all appeals to the Court of Appeal shall be brought on by motion, the 12th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, requiring all appeals to be entered within twenty-one days from the date of the decision or order of the Court, is no longer applicable, and it is sufficient if the notice of motion is given within the twenty-one days. Ex parte Bromley, in re Redfearn, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 33.

Notwithstanding the repeal of the 18th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, the discretionary power of the Lords Justices as to appeals to the House of Lords remains. There is no right of appeal by common law to the House of Lords. In re Newton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 81, 82.

An order having been made in July, 1861, granting a bankrupt his discharge, with a condition as to his after-acquired property, the Lords Justices refused an application by the bankrupt for leave to appeal to the House of Lords, and determind to rehear the case themselves, directing that a new deposit of 20*l.* should be made. Ex parte Drinkwater, in re Drinkwater, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 20.

After the case had been so re-heard, an order was made, varying the former order by suspending it for a certain time, giving the bankrupt protection in the mean time, and an unconditional discharge at its termination. Ibid.

Application to receive fresh evidence on appeal refused. In re Potts, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 34.

The 32nd Order in Bankruptcy must be construed with reference to evidence on the matters in issue, and does not preclude the introduction of fresh evidence for the purpose of informing the Court of Appeal of what has taken place in the Court below. Ex parte Page, in re Neal, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 14; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 283.

In the former case some ground must be shewn for the admission of the new evidence. Ibid.

It is not necessary that the notice of motion by way of appeal, upon the ground, among others, of rejection of evidence, should state that ground. Ibid.

The Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to allow fresh evidence in addition to that adduced before the Commissioner; and, when produced, will entertain the question, and not send it back to the Commissioner. Ex parte Miller, in re Miller, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 45.

The time for appeal against an adjudication does not expire until two calendar months after the advertisement of the bankruptcy, under the 233rd section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, varied by the 24th section of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 119, notwithstanding that the former section uses the word "commenced" proceedings. Ibid.

A creditor who intended to oppose the discharge of a bankrupt was misinformed as to the case being not to come on before a particular Commissioner, and did not therefore attend. The bankrupt was discharged by another Commissioner, and on appeal the case was remitted back as being a surprise on the creditors and a proper subject for appeal under the 171st section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134). Ex parte Johnstone, in re Newton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 63.

A creditor who has not opposed a bankrupt's order of discharge before the Commissioner is not thereby precluded from appealing against it. Ex parte Burgess, in re Monk and Brooks, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 51.

A creditor who has not proved his debt when an order of discharge is granted cannot appeal against the order. Ex parte Greenwood, in re Monk and Brooks, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 50.

An order made by a Registrar sitting for the Commissioner under the 27th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, must shew, on the face of it, the nature of the circumstances under which the Registrar was authorized so to sit. Ex parte Morgan, in re Pennell, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 61.

One trader had been solely, and afterwards he and his partner had been jointly, adjudicated bankrupt: the Lord Chancellor, discharging an order made by the Registrar, gave leave to apply to the senior Commissioner as to the consolidation of the proceedings. Ex parte Churchill, in re Griffiths, and in re Thorneycroft and Griffiths, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 48.

An official assignee who has no other duty than to assent will not be allowed his costs out of the estate. Ibid.

It is not necessary to the validity of a resolution to suspend proceedings in a bankruptcy passed by a meeting of creditors, under the 110th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, that previous notice of the meeting should be advertised in the Gazette. Ex parte Boldero, in re Rodenhurst, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 34.

Where by a resolution of the creditors the proceedings in bankruptcy have been suspended under the 110th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, the bankrupt is not, on making a full discovery of his estate, entitled as of course to his order of discharge, but in granting such order the rules laid down by the 159th section must be observed. Ex parte M'Kerrow, in re M'Kerrow, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 37.

By a Bankruptcy Act (1849) notice of disputing the requisites on bankruptcy must be given "within ten days after rejoinder." Rejoinders having been abolished in equity, the Court, eight weeks after replication, allowed ten days to the defendants to give the notice which they had previously neglected to do. Lee v. Donnistoun, 29 Beav. 465.

Trustees of a deed of assignment for benefit of creditors were allowed out of the estate the costs they had bona fide incurred, although the debtor was afterwards adjudicated bankrupt. Ex parte Tomlinson, in re Boyce, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 41.

An action, by direction of a Commissioner, was brought with the assent of the creditors, to try a disputed point. The action failed, and some creditors objected to the allowance of the assignees' costs on the ground that the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to order the action to be brought, as not being an action within the meaning of the 153rd section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, but the Lords Justices ordered the costs to be paid out of the bankrupt's estate, on the ground that the objection ought to have been made earlier, that is, before the result of the action was known. Ex parte Edmondson, in re Thomson, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 32.

A testator, by his will, made before the act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85.) establishing the Divorce Court, vested property in trustees, upon trust, out of the rents and profits, to pay an annuity to his son G and E, his (the son's) wife, jointly, and further, out of the rents and profits of "the property so left in trust for his son G," to pay to the wife, if she survived, 50*l.* annually, so long as she continued unmarried; but if G survived, to pay him 100*l.* annually. G was divorced from E on account of her adultery:—Held, that G was entitled to the whole annuity. Knox v. Wells, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 150; 2 Hem. & M. 674.

Stock invested in joint names of husband and wife held to belong to the wife as survivor. In re Gadbury, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 780.

It is against public policy to compromise a suit for a divorce; and the Court will not entertain a bill for specific performance of a contract founded on such compromise. Gipps v. Hume, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 37; 2 Jo. & H. 517.

(B) HUSBAND.

(a) Rights and Liabilities in respect of Wife's Property.

A testator having bequeathed the dividends of a fund to his niece for life, remainder to her children, by a codicil reciting that her husband was dead, declared that in case she married again without the consent of the trustees, she should forfeit the legacy and take only 50*l.* a year. The niece, without the consent or knowledge of the trustees, married, received the dividends for some time, and died. On a bill by the trustees against the husband (who denied knowledge of the clause of forfeiture), the Court declared the husband subject to the liabilities that affected the wife. Charlton v. Coombes, 4 Giff. 382.

A lady, three months before her marriage, but after she was engaged to be married to her future husband, executed a voluntary settlement of a fund upon herself for life, and after her death upon such trusts as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust for such persons as under the Statutes of Distribution would be entitled thereto at her death, as if she had died possessed thereof intestate and without having been married. The settlement also empowered the trustees, notwithstanding the trusts aforesaid, to transfer the trust fund as the lady should, whether covert or sole, by request in writing, direct. The husband, prior to the marriage, was told by the lady that she had executed a document affecting the above fund, but he did not then make any inquiries as to the nature of such document. The lady died about two years and a half after the marriage, without having made any appointment or disposition of the fund; and the husband, shortly after her death, for the first time ascertained that the settlement was to the effect above stated. The husband thereupon filed a bill to have the fund transferred to him. It appeared that his wife, during her lifetime, had stated to him that she had been informed by her solicitor that he would be entitled to the fund if he survived her:—Held, that, as the information which the husband received as to the nature and effect of the settlement was incorrect, he was entitled to have it declared that it was invalid, and ought to be set aside. Prideaux v. Lonsdale, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 317; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 433.

A law-stationer, who was an executor of the person who had bequeathed the above fund to the lady, advised and framed the settlement, and although he was not a party thereto, he was made a defendant to the suit:—Held, that, as his conduct had been mainly the occasion of the litigation, the husband was entitled to a decree against him, together with the other defendants, with costs. Ibid.

In an action against a husband for necessaries supplied to a wife while living apart, the plaintiff's case being, that the wife had originally left the defendant with his consent, had been since, by his instrumentality, wrongfully temporarily confined in a lunatic asylum, and after her discharge, had for a time received from him a weekly allowance wholly inadequate for her support, and had been compelled to accept this inadequate allowance in preference to returning to live with him, in consequence of his threat that if she did return, he would send her to a lunatic asylum,—Held, that the form of question to be left to the jury was—"Was the wife justified in leaving her husband, without his consent, by his conduct? If not so justified—Did he agree she might pledge his credit?" Biffin v. Bignell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 189; 7 Hurls. & N. 877.

Held also, that the nature of the threat which would justify her in refusing to return to her husband, ought to have been explained to the jury. Johnston v. Sumner discussed. Ibid.

A husband and wife were living together; she had a separate income of her own, over which the husband exercised no control; the husband also agreed to make her a certain allowance for her expenditure on herself and their children, with an express stipulation that she should contract no debts whatever. The husband did not pay the stipulated allowance in full, and what he did pay was not sufficient to supply to his wife and children such articles as the jury thought were suitable to their estate and degree:—Held (per Erle, C.J., Williams, J. and Willes, J.), that the husband was not liable for goods supplied to the wife on credit, although such goods were suitable to the estate and degree of herself and the children, for that having power to draw inferences of fact, they did not infer that the husband had held out that the wife had authority to bind him to that extent. Held (per Byles, J.), that the husband was liable; for that the wife had an apparent authority to pledge her husband's credit, and the plaintiff had no notice, under the circumstances, that such authority was revoked. Jolly v. Rees, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 177; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 628.

Where a husband by his cruelty compels his wife to live apart from him, he is liable upon contracts made by her for necessaries, notwithstanding she in fact receives from him an allowance, if the jury find the allowance insufficient, regard being had to his means and position in life. Baker v. Sampson, 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 383.

Where a debtor has advanced moneys for necessaries supplied to the deserted wife of the creditor, he is entitled in equity to set off such moneys against the creditor's legal demand. Jenner v. Morris, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 361; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 45.

A wife, after divorce, is entitled for her sole benefit to such of her property and effects as were not reduced into possession by her husband during coverture. Wells v. Malbon, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 344; 31 Beav. 48.

T W having become lunatic, was taken to an asylum in London. His wife, who at the time of her marriage was entitled to separate property, removed to London in order to be near her husband, and borrowed money on his credit to meet the expense of such removal of herself and husband, and to provide herself with necessaries. T W died, and a bill was filed for the administration of his estate. The persons who had made the advances to the wife carried in their claim for the amount against T W's estate:—Held, by one of the Vice Chancellors and affirmed on appeal, that the claim must be allowed. Davidson v. Wood, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 400; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 465.

Semble—That a woman possessed of separate estate is entitled to maintenance by her husband, although he be lunatic, and is not bound to pledge her separate estate in order to provide herself with necessaries. Ibid.

The costs of a solicitor employed by a married woman to institute proceedings on her behalf against her husband to obtain a decree of judicial separation, are not necessaries for which the husband is liable, unless there was at least great probability of ultimate success; and to entitle a solicitor so employed to recover the costs from the husband, or to prove for them against the husband's estate, he must, in the absence of actual success, be at least able to shew that he made proper investigation and inquiry into all the circumstances of the case before he commenced the proceedings. In re Hooper, Baylis v. Watkins, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 300; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 91.

Whether previous inquiry and the existence of reasonable grounds for instituting such a suit would entitle the solicitor to recover from the husband if, in the result, the wife failed—quære. Ibid.

(c) Rights and Liabilities in respect of Wife's Acts.

A contract entered into and paid for by a wife, without the knowledge, but for the benefit of the husband, is valid and binding when ratified by the husband. Millard v. Harvey, 34 Beav. 237.

A wife, unknown to her husband, requested her father to sell her husband a field to be paid for out of her savings. The father at first refused, but he received the money, and shortly afterwards put the husband into possession. For ten years the money was retained by the father without payment of interest, and the field by the husband without payment of rent. The father then attempted to eject the husband, who being made acquainted with the circumstances, insisted on retaining the field:—Held, that the father was bound to convey it to the husband. Ibid.

During coverture probate was granted to a feme executrix. The husband died insolvent, leaving the wife surviving, who died leaving assets:—Held, that the wife's assets were not liable to make good the joint receipts of herself and her husband during the coverture. Soady v. Turnbull, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 539.

Semble—Where probate is granted to a feme covert during marriage the husband and his estate are alone liable in equity for devastavits committed by him, or by him and his wife, during the coverture. Ibid.

(d) Liability for Wife's Costs in Divorce Court.

The husband is liable to an action, at the suit of his wife's solicitor, for costs necessarily incurred by her in filing a petition in the Divorce Court for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty and adultery, although the petition is not proceeded with, and the course prescribed by the practice of the Divorce Court for obtaining the wife's costs has not been pursued. Rice v. Shepherd, 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 332.

(e) Liability for Wife's Funeral.

Where the wife dies when living apart from her husband, and is buried by the person in whose house she dies in a manner suitable only to her rank, the husband is liable to repay the funeral expenses, although he has never been asked to bury his wife; if he has not been prevented from discharging that duty by any fraud or misconduct of the person who is at the expense of such funeral. Bradshaw v. Beard, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 273; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 344.

(f) Gift to Wife.

A wife with the knowledge and approval of her husband, invested money belonging to the latter in the purchase of Government stock in their joint names. Subsequently, under the authority of a power of attorney given to her by the husband, she sold a portion of the stock and kept the money in her custody, and it so remained at the husband's death:—Held, that the stock remaining in the joint names of the husband and wife survived to her, but there being no evidence of an intention on the part of the husband to make an absolute gift to the wife, that the proceeds of sale of the stock formed part of the husband's general assets. In re Gadbury, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 780.

In order to constitute a gift by a husband to his wife, the husband must use words which clearly indicate that he has divested himself of all beneficial interest in the subject-matter of the gift. Such words need not be technical, and may be spoken either at the time of the gift or afterwards. Grant v. Grant, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 641; 34 Beav. 623.

A husband may constitute himself a trustee for his wife; the declaration need not be in writing, but the words must be clear, unequivocal and irrevocable. Ibid.

The Court will not act upon the unsupported testimony of a claimant upon the estate of a deceased person. Ibid.

(C) WIFE.

(a) Rights in respect of Husband's Property.

A woman who under the old practice had been divorced a mensa et thoro on the ground of adultery, and had not since been reconciled to her husband,—Held, upon his dying intestate, to be entitled, as his widow, to a share of his personal estate, under the Statutes of Distribution. Rolfe v. Perry, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 149.

(b) Property of.

Where a marriage settlement was valid when executed the wife does not, by adultery, lose any benefit which it conferred upon her; and the Court of Chancery has no power to set aside the settlement, although the marriage has been dissolved by the Divorce Court. Evans v. Carrington, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 364; 2 De Gex, F. & J. 489; 1 Jo. & H. 598.

Where there was a fund in court, to which a married woman was entitled absolutely under a will, the Court directed that she should attend and give her consent, and sign a separate receipt for the money; her husband appearing by counsel and consenting to the payment. Mawe v. Heaviside, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 937.

A husband and wife having a joint power of appointment over an estate the ultimate limitations of which in default of appointment were to the use of the husband and wife in moieties in fee, executed the power by way of mortgage to secure the husband's debt:—Held, that this was no mortgage of the wife's estate, and, consequently, that she was not entitled to have her moiety exonerated out of the estate of the husband. Scholefield v. Lockwood, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 106; 32 Beav. 434.

T D, being entitled to three estates, the first unincumbered, the second mortgaged for 1,400*l.*, and the third for 3,000*l.*, settled them to the use of himself for life, remainder to such uses as he and his wife should jointly appoint, with an ulterior limitation as to one moiety to himself in fee, and as to the other moiety as his wife should appoint. Subsequently, T D and his wife appointed the first and second estates to A B, by way of mortgage to secure 1,000*l.* borrowed by T D. Subsequently A B entered into possession of the first and second estates, kept down the interest, and paid off part of the principal moneys out of the rents. T D and his wife died, and upon A B selling under a power of sale contained in his mortgage deed, there remained a net surplus in his hands after satisfying the 1,400*l.* and his own debt:—Held, first, that as between a judgment creditor of T D and the appointees of T D's wife, the principal debt of 1,400*l.* must be borne equally by the respective moieties of the husband and wife of the proceeds of sale, so as to restore to the husband's estate the rents and profits applied by A B in satisfaction of principal moneys; and, secondly, that a counter equity existed on the part of the appointees of the wife to have the surplus rents and profits applied in discharging the interest upon the 3,000*l.*; and in case of loss to the appointees of the wife through the neglect of the tenant for life to keep down the interest, they would have a right of set-off to the extent of this loss against the judgment creditor, and an inquiry was directed to ascertain the value at the death of the tenant for life of the estate comprised in the 3,000*l.* mortgage. Ibid.

A, with the concurrence of B, his wife, who was entitled to certain stock for her separate use during the joint lives of herself and A, applied to an insurance office for a loan of 700*l.*, of which 302*l.* was needed to pay off a previous mortgage on the wife's separate interest, and the residue for the husband's necessities. A policy was thereupon, with a view to the loan, effected in the same office, insuring the payment of 800*l.*, on the death either of A or of B, to the survivor; and, by an indenture of the same date, the policy was assigned by A, and the dividends of B's separate estate both by A and B, to trustees for the office, to secure the loan. B also joined A, "so far as she could bind her separate estate," in covenanting, with the trustees, for title, and for payment of premiums. A having died, B as survivor, claimed the policy moneys as a reversionary interest to which she was entitled at the date of the mortgage, and neither assignable nor assigned thereby; and the Master of the Rolls decided in favour of her claim: but, on appeal,—Held, by the Lords Justices, reversing the decision of the Master of the Rolls, that the loan, policy, and indenture of mortgage together constituted one transaction; that B's interest under the policy was, from the first, subject to a paramount charge in favour of the lenders, and that, consequently, it was unnecessary to decide whether B could have assigned, or had in fact assigned, her interest in the policy. Winter v. Easum, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 665; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 272.

Whether B's interest in the policy was assignable as being in the nature of an accretion to her separate estate—quære. Ibid.

Agreement, in contemplation of marriage, to settle a money fund of the wife's for her separate use, to revert to the husband if he should survive:—Held, that the wife's reversionary interest in the fund was taken under the agreement and not as a resulting use, and that she could not dispose of the fund under the powers of the statute. Clarke v. Green, 2 Hem. & M. 474.

Where an estate L had been contracted to be purchased by a woman who married leaving part of the purchase-money unsatisfied, which was paid by her husband who took the conveyance to himself and devised the estate,—Held, that the estate was the property of the wife subject to a charge in favour of her husband for the amount of purchase-money contributed by him. Maddison v. Chapman, 1 Jo. & H. 470.

The husband having devised all his lands, houses, tenements, real and personal property at L and elsewhere, and died, leaving no real property to L other than the charge aforesaid and having given benefits by his will to his widow,—Held, that he had a sufficient interest to satisfy the words of the will without attributing an intention to devise his wife's property, and that the widow was not put to her election. Ibid.

A deed relating to a reversionary interest in a fund was executed by some married women and their husbands. One having survived her husband, who died before the fund fell into possession,—Held, that the deed was not binding on her, and that therefore it was not binding on any of the other parties to it. Bolitho v. Hillyar, 34 Beav. 180.

A married woman under a general power of appointment exercisable during coverture, by deed of appointment executed after marriage, appointed the property to trustees in trust during the joint lives of herself and her husband for her sole and separate use, and, if she should survive her husband, on trust for herself absolutely, but in case she predeceased him, as she should appoint, and, in default of her appointment, to her next-of-kin. There were no children, and the marriage having been dissolved by a final decree of dissolution on account of the husband's misconduct,—Held, that the wife was absolutely entitled. Jessop v. Blake, 3 Giff. 639.

Money of a wife was, by the direction of her husband, paid to the trustees of a post-nuptial settlement, which was not binding on the wife:—Held, that her right by survivorship was destroyed, the property having by these means been reduced into possession. Hamilton v. Mills, 29 Beav. 193.

A husband deserted his wife two days after their marriage. She became entitled to an annuity of 100*l.* a year; but as the trustee refused to pay it without the receipt of her husband, she was left without means of support, and was wholly maintained by her sister. After a decree for judicial separation, upon the petition of the wife and sister,—Held, upon the request of the wife, that the accumulations of the annuity must be paid to the sister, and that nothing should be paid to the husband. In re Ford, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 180; 32 Beav. 621.

In a foreclosure suit against a husband and wife, the agreement for the mortgage having been entered into by the wife when a feme sole, and part of the moneys paid to her, but the mortgage executed by both husband and wife, the Court made a decree against both. Lewis v. Poole, 3 Giff. 636.

On a Tuesday, an intended husband, who was an infant, wrote to the trustee of the intended wife, "that he especially wished his wife's property entirely settled on herself," and that the wedding was to take place on the Saturday. They married, unknown to the trustee, on the Wednesday, without any settlement:—Held, that this letter contained no settlement or agreement for a settlement binding on the husband or wife. Beaumont v. Carter; Carter v. Beaumont, 32 Beav. 586.

A testator devised his real estate to his son, subject to an annuity of 50*l.* to his wife for life, and to the payment of a sum of 1,000*l.* to his daughter A E at the end of six months after his wife's death; and the testator declared that if default should be made in payment of the said sum of 1,000*l.*, it should be lawful for A E to enter upon the lands, and by receipt of the rents, or by demise, sale or mortgage of the same, or any part thereof, or by any other ways and means to raise the said sum of 1,000*l.*, &c. The wife died in 1853. The husband of A E assigned to the F society the 1,000*l.*, and afterwards took the benefit of the Insolvent Act. A E filed a bill against the owner of the lands and the F society to have the legacy raised by sale or mortgage, and her right to a settlement thereout declared, and to restrain the F society from proceeding against the owner of the land upon his paying the 1,000*l.* into court, &c. The F society demurred to the bill, on the ground of the right to the 1,000*l.* being a legal chattel interest in the husband in right of his wife, and assignable by him, and therefore not the subject of equitable jurisdiction, or one upon which the wife's right to a settlement could attach; but the demurrer was overruled by the Master of the Rolls, and afterwards upon appeal. Duncombe v. Greenacre, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 413.

Where a husband was an uncertificated bankrupt, and had become entitled in right of his wife to a sum of about 13,000*l.*, the Court, having regard to the circumstances of the case, directed the whole amount to be settled, as against the assignees in bankruptcy, on the wife and children, there being no other provision for them except a sum of 150*l.*, to which the wife was entitled under her father's and mother's marriage settlement. Smith v. Smith, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 637; 3 Giff. 121.

A reversionary interest of a wife in a legacy of 1,000*l.* was, upon becoming payable, settled upon herself and children, though it had been mortgaged by her husband for value. Duncombe v. Greenacre, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 882; 29 Beav. 578.

A married woman became entitled to a legacy of 200*l.* and applied for a settlement. The Court, in consideration of the husband having already spent some portion of the wife's property, and now living apart from her, and being unable to support her and her children, directed that the whole amount should be settled on the wife and her children. In re Merriman's Trust, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 367.

A husband assigned his interest in his wife's property for value, and afterwards took the benefit of the Insolvent Act:—Held, that the wife was entitled to a settlement of the whole corpus, but not to the arrears of income. Newman v. Wilson, 31 Beav. 34.

A married woman, being equitable tenant in tail in remainder of an undivided share in lands to be purchased with a sum of trust money, she and her husband joined in mortgaging her interest. The fund was misappropriated. Proceedings having been taken for its recovery, the husband and wife succeeded in obtaining the restoration of her share of the fund which was brought into court, with arrears of interest since the time when her estate came into possession. The mortgagee did not concur in any steps to recover this share. The husband, when the mortgage was made, was maintaining his wife, but had become a bankrupt before her interest came into possession, and was uncertificated:—Held, that the wife had no equity to a settlement out of the capital, nor, as against the mortgagee, out of the future income of the fund. But held that the mortgagee had no claim to the arrears of income of the mortgaged property, which he had taken no steps to recover; and that the assignees of the husband could only take, subject to the wife's equity to a settlement, and that the whole arrears ought to be settled. The Life Association of Scotland v. Siddal, 3 De Gex, F. & J. 271.

The mere filing of a bill by a married woman to enforce her equity to a settlement is not sufficient to confer upon her children a right to a settlement in the event of her death. Wallace v. Auldjo, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 748; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 643; 2 Dr. & S. 216.

A married woman filed a bill to enforce, for the benefit of herself and children, her equity to a settlement out of property to which she was equitably entitled; but she died before decree. The children filed a bill after her decease claiming a settlement:—Held, by the Lords Justices, affirming a decree of one of the Vice Chancellors, that all benefit of the wife's suit was lost by her death; that the rights of the husband were the same as if she had never instituted it; and that the bill in the suit of the children must be dismissed with costs (overruling Steinmetz v. Halthin, 1 Gl. & J. 64). Ibid.

Where a husband is unable to maintain his wife, and the fund is small, the Court will order the whole to be settled; but in a case where the husband was in good circumstances, the Court directed one-half the fund to be settled on the wife. In re Grove's Trusts, 3 Giff. 575.

Where a married woman, who, prior to her marriage, was entitled under a will to a debt payable after the death of her sister, secured on land by the deposit of title-deeds, by deed acknowledged, joined her husband in assigning her share and interest in the said debt and the said real security, in order to secure moneys due by her husband,—Held, in a suit to administer the testator's estate, that she was not entitled to a settlement out of the proceeds of the real estate. Williams v. Cooke, 4 Giff. 343.

A married woman has no equity to a settlement out of her fee-simple estates, as against the mortgagee of her husband's life interest therein. Durham v. Crackles, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 111.

Distinction between property of the wife which the husband takes absolutely and that in which he only takes a life interest. Ibid.

Semble—A married woman is not entitled to a settlement out of her fee-simple estates—Sturgis v. Champneys (5 Myl. & Cr. 97; 9 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 10) disapproved of. Gleaves v. Paine, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 182; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 87.

A wife, suing in forma pauperis, without a next friend, held to be entitled as against the assignees in insolvency of her husband to a settlement for her separate use for life of the rents of real property, the legal estate in which was vested in trustees for her benefit for life. Barnes v. Robinson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 143.

A trustee is always justified in refusing to pay over the wife's fund to the husband, even at her request, and insisting on affording her an opportunity of asserting her equity to a settlement. And where a trustee has paid into court a fund to which a married woman is absolutely entitled, he is entitled as of course to his costs as between solicitor and client, unless his conduct has been simply capricious or vexatious. In re Swan, 2 Hem. & M. 34.

(D) SEPARATE ESTATE OF WIFE.

(a) How acquired.

A gift to the testator's widow "for her sole use and benefit" does not give her a separate estate, so as to entitle her on marrying again to sue by her next friend. Gilbert v. Lewis, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 347; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 38.

A trust only for a married woman, her executors, administrators and assigns, is not a trust for her separate use. Spirett v. Willows, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 365.

By a marriage settlement, 2,000*l.*, part of a mortgage debt of 4,000*l.* due to the wife, was settled upon trust for her for her separate use, and the residue was left unsettled. The husband having become bankrupt, an inquiry was directed whether, having regard to the marriage settlement and to the present circumstances of the husband, any and what additional settlement ought to be made out of the unsettled portion of the property on the wife and children of the marriage. Ibid.

(b) Power over and Disposition of.

A married woman is entitled to dispose of her separate property when living apart from her husband by sentence of judicial separation without alimony. In re Andrews, 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 371.

Stock was settled to the separate use of a married woman for life and after her decease as she should appoint by will, and in default of appointment for her next-of-kin. The married woman died in her husband's lifetime, having exercised her power, and a suit being instituted in chambers to administer her estate, her separate creditors took out a summons, and sought to prove under the decree:—Held, that the married woman did not by exercising her power of appointment constitute the property appointed separate estate. Blachford v. Woolley, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 534; 2 Dr. & S. 204.

If freeholds of inheritance be vested in trustees upon trust for a married woman for her separate use, she does not thereby acquire any additional power of disposing of the equitable fee, and cannot do so otherwise than by a deed duly acknowledged under the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 74. Lechmere v. Brotheridge, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 577; 32 Beav. 353.

Secus—as respects an estate in lands limited for the separate use of a married woman during her life: this she may alienate, in equity, by deed unacknowledged. Ibid.

Adams v. Gamble (12 Irish Chanc. Rep. 102) dissented from. Ibid.

A married woman having property settled to her separate use, and not restrained from alienation, has, as incident to her separate estate, and without any express power, a complete right of alienation by instrument inter vivos (not acknowledged under the Fines and Recoveries Act), or by will. And there is no distinction in this respect between an equitable fee and other property. Taylor v. Meads, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 203.

A testator, by his will, bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the income "when and as the same should be due and received," to S C (a married lady), for her separate use, without power of anticipation. The residue comprised a bond on which interest was payable yearly on the 31st of October. On the 23rd of May, 1860, S C assigned to A B all interest and moneys comprised in the bequest which had "accrued and become payable." On an appeal from a decision of the Master of the Rolls,—Held, by the Lords Justices, differing from his Honour, that the interest on the bond debt between the 31st of October, 1859, and the 23rd of May, 1860, did not pass by the assignment; as well because the interest was not at the date of assignment "due and received" within the meaning of the clause restraining anticipation, as also because it had not "accrued and become payable" within the meaning of the deed of assignment. In re Brettle; Jollands v. Burdett, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 471; 2 De Gex. J. & S. 79.

A married woman S was entitled to a gross sum, payable on the death of her father, for her separate use, subject to a restraint on anticipation. During her father's life she promised, by letters, to repay to D out of the fund, when it fell in, advances made by him to her and her husband. After the death of her father the fund was paid into court, and S still being under coverture, verbally promised D that he should be paid out of the fund if he would offer no opposition to her application for payment out of court; and it was accordingly paid to her:—Held, that D had no charge on the fund, the letters being ineffectual by reason of the restraint on anticipation, and the subsequent parol promise being void for want of consideration and under the Statute of Frauds. In re Sykes's Trust, 2 Jo. & H. 415.

Upon the evidence that a married woman, desiring to execute a voluntary settlement, transferred stock, to which she was entitled for her separate use, into the names of trustees, and approved of a draft declaration of trust,—Held, that there was a locus pœnitentiæ, and that the trusts did not attach unless the draft had been finally authorized before the transfer to the trustees; and an inquiry to that effect being answered in the negative, the fund was ordered, on the petition of a married woman, to be retransferred for her separate use. Ibid.

Where personal property was bequeathed to a woman upon trust, for her separate use, but without the intervention of any trustee, and she afterwards, being discoverte and sui juris, sold the stock, spent a portion of the proceeds and invested the rest in shares of a joint-stock bank and Canada Bonds,—Held, that by so doing she had determined the trust for her separate use. Wright v. Wright, 2 Jo. & H. 647.

A married woman, to whom alimony has been granted by the Ecclesiastical Court, may dispose by will, as against her husband, of her savings thereout, in the same manner as if she was a feme sole. Moore v. Barber, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 667.

The Court will not order the discharge of a married woman arrested on a ca. sa., if it appears that she has property settled to her separate and inalienable use. After the refusal of the Court to discharge a married woman under the above circumstances, her husband obtained his discharge under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. On a second application, on that ground, for the discharge of the wife, the Court refused to order the discharge on a rule, but gave the applicant leave to bring a writ of audita querela. Ex parte Butler, in re Jay v. Amphlett, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 176; 1 Hurls. & C. 637.

A married woman, who had property settled upon her in the usual way to her separate use, in 1837 made a joint promissory note with her husband for 950*l.*, and delivered the same to his bankers as a security for his overdrawn account; from time to time the note was renewed until the death of the husband, in 1855, the last renewal bearing date 1848. At the time of his death the debt due by the husband to the bankers was 2,340*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.*, which was reduced by the realization of certain other securities they held to 917*l.* 11*s.*, for which sum, on the 28th of August, 1856, she, after her coverture had determined, made and delivered her promissory note:—Held, that there was a good consideration for the last-mentioned note, as the note made in 1848, although made during coverture, was binding on her separate estate in equity, and that it was immaterial whether it was barred by the Statute of Limitations or not. Latouche v. Latouche, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 85; 3 Hurls. & C. 576.

J G, a married woman living apart from her husband, carried on business on her own account between the years 1849 and 1855. Messrs. B & W, upholsterers, who were aware of her being married and separated from her husband, supplied her with goods and furniture used in her business during those years, for which she paid out of the money produced by that business. In 1856 T G, the husband, executed a deed of separation made by himself, J G, his wife, and W S C, a trustee for her, by which deed T G assigned to W S C all the moneys, securities for money, household chattels, stock-in-trade and personal estate which J G had acquired or then possessed, or which might be then due to her in respect of her business, and all the estate and interest of him, the said T G, therein, to be held in trust for such persons and purposes as she should, notwithstanding coverture, appoint, and, in default, in trust for her for her separate use T G covenanted that it should be lawful for J G to live apart from him; that she might carry on any business; and that any real or personal estate she might acquire might be held and disposed of by her as she pleased. W S C covenanted to indemnify T G against all debts of J G while living apart from him. B & W, in 1856, after the date of this deed, continued to supply her with goods to the amount of above 600*l.*, for which she from time to time paid money on account; and finally, in January, 1858, a balance of above 372*l.* was due. T G died in October in the last-mentioned year; and Messrs. B & W having become bankrupt, their assignees filed a bill in the Chancery Court of the County Palatine of Lancaster against J G and W S C for the purpose of enforcing their claim against the property which, during the coverture of J G, constituted her separate estate. After the institution of this suit, J G executed a bill of sale to W S C of the whole of her separate estate for securing money due to him and further advances. The bill in the suit was then amended; and, as amended, prayed a declaration of the priority of the plaintiffs' claim over the bill of sale. The Vice Chancellor of that Court made a decree declaring that the separate estate of J G at the time of her husband's death, and J G personally to the value of that estate at that time, were liable to the plaintiffs; and that W S C took no higher interest in the separate estate than J G had therein at the date of the bill of sale:—Held, on appeal, overruling that decision,—the Lord Justice Knight Bruce considering that as the goods had not been obtained by fraud, but without the knowledge, on the part of B & W, of the position of J G, the circumstances of the case were insufficient to charge either herself personally, or her separate estate (the Lord Justice Turner, however, differing as to the ground of decision),—that the decree could not be supported; and that the bill must be dismissed, but without costs. Johnson v. Gallagher, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 298; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 495.

General review, per the Lord Justice Turner, of the law relating to the rights and remedies of creditors of married women against their separate estates. Ibid.

(E) SEPARATION DEEDS.

A deed of separation between husband and wife contained a covenant by the trustees of the wife that she would not molest or disturb her husband:—Held, that a suit in the Divorce Court for a judicial separation was no breach of the covenant. Thomas v. Everard, 30 Law J. Rep. N.S.) Exch. 214; 6 Hurls. & N. 448.

By a deed, executed before the Divorce Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), on the separation of the defendant from Ann his then wife, on the ground of the wife's adultery, which was recited in the deed, the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff that he, the defendant, his executors or administrators, or some or one of them, would, during the natural life of the said Ann, pay her a certain annuity; and in consideration thereof the plaintiff covenanted with the defendant that the said Ann should not sue for alimony, and also that the plaintiff would indemnify the defendant from all debts which might be contracted by the said Ann. After the passing of the Divorce Act, the marriage between the defendant and the said Ann was dissolved by a decree of the Divorce Court by reason only of the adultery recited in the deed:—Held, that such dissolution of the marriage was no defence even on equitable grounds, to an action against the defendant for breach of his covenant to pay the annuity. Goslin v. Clark, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 330; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 681.

To an action on a covenant by the husband, contained in a deed of separation, to pay the plaintiff, his wife's trustee, a yearly sum for her maintenance, it is no defence at law or in equity that the deed contains a coveoant of licence to the wife to live as if she was sole and unmarried, in such way as she might think fit, free from all restraint in her way of living; nor, if the deed has been acted upon, is it any defence to such an action, that at the instance of the plaintiff the wife concealed from the husband the fact of her pregnancy, in order that he might be induced by such ignorance to execute the deed, and that he was induced by such ignorance to execute it. Kendall v. Webster, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 492; 1 Hurls. & C. 440.

A husband, in a separation deed, covenanted with his wife's trustees, who indemnified him against her debts, that he would not compel or endeavour to compel her to cohabit or live with him by any legal proceedings, or otherwise howsoever:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, upon a bill filed by the wife and her trustees, that she was not entitled to an injunction to restrain the husband from proceeding in a suit he had commenced in the Divorce and Matrimonial Court to obtain a restitution of conjugal rights, &c.; but this decision was reversed, upon appeal, and the injunction was granted. Hunt v. Hunt, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 161.

A husband who, by his misconduct, had proved himself unfit to have the custody of his children, executed a separation deed, by which he covenanted that his wife should live separate, and that his children should at all times be under her sole care and management, and that he would pay her certain annuities for her own maintenance and that of the children:—Held, by the Lord Justice Turner, that, under the circumstances, the covenant excluding the paternal right was not void as opposed to public policy, and by the Lord Justice Knight Bruce, that it did not vitiate the rest of the deed; and accordingly a decree made by the Master of the Rolls, at the suit of the wife, for payment of the annuities, and restraining the husband from removing or interfering with the children, was affirmed, on appeal, with a variation, however, making the injunction operate until further order only. Swift v. Swift, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 394; 34 Beav. 266.

(F) Wife's protected Property.

Under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. s. 21. no police magistrate or Justices, other than those by whom the order was made, can discharge an order of protection given to a married woman. Ex parte Sharpe, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 152.

Quære—Whether the Court for Matrimonial Causes has not power in all cases to discharge such an order. Ibid.

The protection of an order granted to a wife under the 21st section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. is confined to the lawful earnings of lawful industry, and does not extend to earnings (or property purchased with earnings) acquired by her as keeper of a brothel. Mason v. Mitchell, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 68; 3 Hurls. & C. 528.

Under statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. s. 21, the application to discharge an order for the protection of a wife's property must be made to the magistrate by whom it was granted; or, semble, to the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. R. v. Arnold, 5 Best & S. 322.

(G) Actions and Suits: Pleading and Evidence in.

The provision of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 40, that in any action brought by a man and his wife for an injury done to the wife, in respect of which she is necessarily joined as a co-plaintiff, it shall be lawful for the husband to add thereto claims in his own right, is not imperative, and therefore does not affect the husband's legal right to maintain a separate action for such claims. Brockbank v. the Whitehaven Junction Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 349; 7 Hurls. & N. 834.

A married woman seeking to set aside an appointment made by herself under a power should sue by her next friend, and not be joined as co-plaintiff with her husband. Hope v. Fox, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 272; 1 Jo. & H. 456.

(H) Offence of Desertion of Wife.

To constitute the offence of desertion, under 5 Geo. 4. c. 83. s. 4, there must be a chargeability of the wife or children consequent on the running away, and the offence is not completed until chargeability: therefore it is sufficient, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 11, if the information be laid within six months of the chargeability—dissentiente Bramwell, B. Reeves v. Yeates, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 241; 1 Hurls. & C. 435.

(A) Proof of Illegitimacy.

On a question of the legitimacy of the child of a married woman, the onus lies upon the person alleging illegitimacy to shew that the husband and wife never were together, or that the interview took place under circumstances which rendered sexual intercourse impossible. The evidence to prove illegitimacy must be not only sufficient to raise strong doubts, but such as will produce conviction in the mind of Judge or jury, and there is no onus upon the party whose legitimacy is in question to shew opportunities of access. Plowes v. Bossey, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 681; 2 Dr. & S. 145.

(B) Order of Affiliation.

(a) Jurisdiction to make the Order.

J M, a single woman, made application on the 15th of June 1858 to S, a Justice of the Peace, for a summons against P, as being the father of her bastard child. The application was within twelve calendar months of the birth of the child. S issued the summons, but it was not served, owing to P absenting himself. On the 3rd of August 1859, S died. On the 14th of July 1860 J M made application to W (who was also a Justice) for another summons. W issued such summons, and after a hearing of the case, the Justices in petty sessions made an order adjudging P to be the putative father of the child, and ordering him to pay, &c.:—Held, that such order was bad, as W had no power to issue a summons upon the application which had been made to S, and as the application which was made to himself was after the expiration of twelve months from the birth of the child. R. v. Pickford, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 133; 1 Best & S. 77.

A woman, having applied on two occasions for an order of affiliation to the Justices of the petty sessional division in which she had been residing with her parents, and been refused after a hearing on the merits, took lodgings in a neighbouring borough, "because," as she deposed, "people said if she came there, she would have a better chance," and when she had been there nearly a month, she applied to the borough Justices and obtained an order of affiliation:—Held, that the object of the woman's removal was to obtain a new tribunal, and therefore she did not "reside" within the borough so as to give the borough Justices jurisdiction under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101. s. 2. R. v. Hughes distinguished. R. v. Myott, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 138.

If, upon the hearing of a bastardy summons against A, the mother deny that B has had connexion with her at a particular time, evidence may be given to shew that B had such connexion with her, supposing that the effect of such evidence is not merely to contradict her, but also to shew that B might by means of that connexion have been the father of the child; such evidence being material to the issue. R. v. Gibbons distinguished. Garbutt v. Simpson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 186.

Upon a complaint by a married woman, who was living apart from her husband, charging a third party under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101. with being the father of a bastard child of which she had been delivered, evidence having been given which justified the magistrates in presuming non-access of the husband,—Held, that it was no ground of objection to their decision that the magistrates allowed the wife to be asked a question tending to prove non-access of her husband, the magistrates certifying that they found the non-access independently of her evidence. Yates v. Chippindale, 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 512.

Under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101. s. 4, which requires notice of appeal by the putative father against an adjudication in bastardy to be given to the mother within twenty-four hours after the adjudication and making of the order, and recognizances to be entered into within seven days,—the time runs from tht verbal adjudication at the petty sessions, and noe from the time the formal order is drawn up and signed by the Justices. R. v. the Justices of Flintshire overruled. Ex parte Johnson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 91; 3 Best & S. 947.

Where, therefore, at petty sessions holden on the 17th of February, the Justices adjudged W J to be the putative father of a bastard child, and ordered him to pay a weekly sum for its maintenance, and a formal order, as of the 17th of February, was afterwards drawn up, and signed by one of the Justices on the 1st of March, and by the others on the 3rd of March; and a verbal notice of appeal was given immediately on the adjudication, but a written notice was also given on the 2nd of March, and recognizances entered into on the 4th of March,—Held, that the recognizances were too late, and the appeal could not be heard. Held, also, that the irregularity in signing the order was not such as to vitiate it. Ibid.

Quære—Whether the formal order must be signed by all the Justices at the same time? and whether a verbal notice of appeal is sufficient under the 4th section? Ibid.

(C) Maintenance.

There is no obligation upon the personal representative of the mother of a bastard child to expend the money or property which belonged to the mother in the maintenance of such child. Ruttinger v. Temple, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 1; 4 Best & S. 491.

(A) Validity of, in general.
(B) Assignment of after-acquired Property.
(C) Construction of.
(D) Registration of.
(E) Filing of.
(F) Affidavit of Attesting Witness.
(G) Description of Assignor and of Attesting Witness.

(A) Validity of, in general.

B executed a bill of sale, by way of mortgage, of household goods to D (the plaintiff), as a security for a debt of 130*l.*, then due from him to D, and for a further advance of 160*l.* then to be made, the receipt of which was acknowledged, and the execution purported to be attested, on the day the bill was dated, the 9th of January. The 160*l.* was not in fact paid till two days after; and the signature of the attesting witness was affixed on the latter day. The bill of sale was registered as of the 9th of January, the day it bore date. The goods mortgaged remained in the possession of B, and were so when seized under a writ of fi. fa., at the suit of T (the defendant) against B. At the trial of an interpleader issue of D v. T, there was evidence that, before the mortgage was executed, D was aware that an execution might be expected against B's goods. The Judge left to the jury the question whether the transaction between B and D was bona fide or a mere sham. The jury having found that the transaction was bona fide, the plaintiff had a verdict; and the Court, on a motion for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, held, approving Wood v. Dixie, that inasmuch as the mortgage, even if made with the intention of defeating an execution creditor, was not necessarily void, that the direction was sufficient; and that, the consideration-money having been paid two days after the execution of the bill of sale, the registration was not informal. Darvill v. Terry, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 355; 6 Hurls. & N. 807.

Under the Bills of Sale Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36.) ss. 2 and 3, it is not necessary that the vendee should state on the bill of sale the name of the person who really advances the money, unless there be some trust in favour of the vendor, although the circumstances be such that a Court of equity would hold the vendee to be a trustee only. Robinson v. Collingwood, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 18; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 777.

E, by an agreement in writing, sold certain timber lying partly on his private wharf and partly on a public wharf, to G for 300*l.*, E agreeing to pay all rent and other charges upon the timber for six months, within which time G was to remove it. G took possession of the key of the private wharf and sold some of the timber lying there, but he did nothing with reference to the timber on the public wharf (the key of which remained in the hands of the wharfinger), except taking persons to look at it with a view to its sale. E, by another written agreement, sold to G for 50*l.* some furniture lying in a house, the property of E, and part of which house E had previously used as an office and occasionally slept in, but of which apartments E had the use. By the agreement G out of the 50*l.* was to pay the wages due to E's servant, who remained in the house, and the rates and taxes. E did not use the house after the agreement:—Held, that on these facts there was no possession or apparent possession of the timber, either at the private or public wharf, or of the furniture, by E within the Bills of Sale Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, so as to render them liable to seizure under an execution against E. Gough v. Everard, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 210; 2 Hurls. & C. 1.

Quære—Whether the agreements were "bills of sale" within the meaning of the statute. Ibid.

(B) ASSIGNMENT OF AFTER-ACQUIRED PROPERTY.

A, by deed, assigned to B all the machinery in and about a certain mill, upon trust for securing a sum of money; and it was thereby provided, that all the machinery which, during the continuance of the security, should be fixed or placed in the mill, in addition to or substitution for the former machinery, should be subject to the trusts of the assignment, and A undertook to do all that was necessary to vest the substituted and added machinery in B. The assignment was duly registered as a bill of sale, and, after the date of it, A placed other machinery in the mill, in addition to that which was there at the date of the assignment, and gave notice to B of each substitution and addition. A continued in possession according to the terms of the assignment. Vice Chancellor Stuart held, that the machinery being in A's possession, as agent of B, B was entitled, as against a judgment creditor of A who had sued out execution against A, to the additional machinery; but this decision was reversed by Lord Chancellor Campbell, on the ground of A's possession not being sufficient to support B's claim, and on the ground that to give B the complete title to the substituted and added machinery, it was necessary that there should be a novus actus interveniens. Holroyd v. Marshall (House of Lords), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 193; 10 H.L. Cas. 191; in the Court below, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 385.

After-acquired chattels may be assigned in equity, and words of agreement to assign, or of licence to seize, may, in equity, operate as an actual assignment; but if according to the proper construction of the words used, a mere licence to seize is intended, they will have no effect until actual seizure. Reeve v. Whitmore; Martin v. Whitmore, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 497; 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 63.

The lessee of a brick-field executed to G a bill of sale of the bricks, plant, &c. then in and upon the premises, to secure 3,000*l.*, with interest, to be repaid on a specified day, with a proviso that the lessee should have the use and enjoyment until default, or the expiration of one day after notice in writing by G requiring possession, when possession should be given, with a power of entry and sale. And the lessee gave and granted to G, his executors, administrators and assigns, or his or their agents or servants, licence at all times during the continuance of the security to enter on the premises and there remain, and seize and hold possession of the property then on the premises, as if the same formed part of the chattels thereby assigned. The lessee subsequently executed other bills of sale to R in a similar form. G, who assisted the lessee in the management of his business, deposited his bill of sale and the papers relating to the brick-field with his private bankers by way of equitable mortgage. Subsequently, the lessee fell into difficulties and R took possession, and shortly afterwards G having become bankrupt, the assignee in bankruptcy of G also took possession by the messenger, and refused to withdraw. The bankers had omitted to give notice to the lessee, who swore that he was not, until G's bankruptcy, aware of the deposit having been made:—Held, that the bill of sale to G operated as an assignment only of the property then on the brick-field, with a licence to seize future property. Also, that the bankers could only claim what was due from the lessee to G at the date of his bankruptcy, the business relations between the lessee and G not being sufficiently intimate to warrant the Court in inferring that the former had notice of the deposit. Ibid.

Quære—Whether the entry by the messenger was an exercise of the right of seizure conferred by G's security. Ibid.

A receiver having been appointed and put into possession by the Court of Chancery, and the exercise of the licences to seize having been thus prevented,—Semble, That the rights of the mortgagees in reference to after-acquired property must be determined by reference to what they might have done under their powers to seize at the time when the Court interfered. Ibid.

G K, who was a trader, by a bill of sale, assigned to the defendant "all his household furniture, plate, linen, china, glass, all his stock, cattle, horses, farming implements, crops, book-debts, and all other his personal estate and effects whatsoever then being or hereafter to be upon or about his dwelling-house, farm and premises." The bill of sale also empowered the defendant, "in case the sum of 300*l.* and interest should not be paid on demand, to enter upon the premises which might be in the occupation of the debtor, and there distrain the goods and chattels there found for the sum of 300*l.* and interest." After the execution of the bill of sale, G K purchased goods from time to time in the way of his trade, some of which were upon and about his premises on the 8th of January, 1862, on which day a formal demand of the sum of 300*l.* was made on G K's wife, and on non-payment of the same, on the same day, the defendant entered and seized all the furniture, goods, chattels and effects found upon the premises:—Held, that the demand on the wife was not a sufficient demand, and that the property acquired by G K after the execution of the bill of sale did not pass to the defendant. Belding v. Read, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 212; 3 Hurls. & C. 955.

(C) Construction of.

A receipt in the following form: "Received of J D and C J, the trustees under the deed of settlement, for the benefit of my wife, the sum of 93*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* for the purchase of my household goods and effects mentioned in the inclosed inventory and valuation as purchased this day by J D and C J, as trustees named in the deed of settlement, and empowered to purchase by such deed," is not a bill of sale within the statute 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36. Allsop v. Day, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 105; 7 Hurls. & N. 457.

Semble—A bill of sale within that act must be an instrument by which property was intended to pass. Ibid.

By a deed, in consideration of 410*l.* money advanced, the present and future stock, &c. of the plaintiff were assigned to the defendant, subject to a proviso that if the money were repaid at the end of ten years, or at such earlier day or time as the defendant should appoint by notice in writing, sent by post, or delivered to the plaintiff, or left at his house or last place of abode, the deed should cease and be void: provided that if default should be made in payment contrary to the proviso, then and immediately thereupon it should be lawful for the defendant to enter upon the plaintiff's premises and seize and sell the goods, &c. The defendant served a notice on the plaintiff at noon to pay the money due at half-past twelve p.m. of the same day, and then, on default, seized and sold the goods on the plaintiff's premises:—Held, that the notice, under the deed, must be a reasonable notice, and that half-an-hour's notice was not reasonable. Brighty v. Norton, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 38; 3 Best & S. 305.

By a bill of sale the plaintiff covenanted to pay to the defendants the sum secured, with interest, immediately on demand in writing being made to him or left at his place of abode. If he did not immediately on such demand pay the money the instrument authorized the defendants to break and enter the plaintiff's house, and seize and sell the goods conveyed, but until default in payment on such written demand the plaintiff was to use and enjoy the goods as his own. By the defendants' directions, their attorney wrote a paper demanding from the plaintiff immediate payment of the sum and interest (not stating the amount of interest), and gave it to J to give it to the plaintiff, and the attorney authorized J to receive the money. J gave the paper to the plaintiff, but did not tell him that he had authority to receive payment. The defendants, by their agent, seized the plaintiff's goods before reasonable time had been allowed the plaintiff to pay the money to the defendants or to their attorney:—Held (affirming the decision below, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 33; 4 Best & S. 442), that there had been a due demand of payment, but that there had been no default in payment on the part of the plaintiff, as a reasonable time for making payment had not expired before his goods were seized; that, consequently, the plaintiff was entitled to maintain an action for taking his goods, but that the measure of damages should be, not the value of the goods, but the value of the plaintiff's interest in them at the time of seizure. Toms v. Wilson (Ex. Ch.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 382; 4 Best & S. 455.

B, who was yearly tenant of the dwelling-house which he occupied, being indebted to the plaintiff, executed a bill of sale, by which he assigned to the plaintiff "all the household goods, furniture, stock-in-trade and other household effects, and all other goods, chattels and effects in or about the said dwelling-house," "and all other the personal estate whatsoever," of the said B, with power to the plaintiff to sell the same in case of default in payment of the debt due to him from B, and to stand possessed of the moneys to arise from such sale, upon trust to satisfy the expenses and debt, and to account for the surplus, if any, to the said B:—Held, that notwithstanding the general words used, B's term or interest in the said dwelling-house did not pass under such bill of sale to the plaintiff. Harrison v. Blackburn, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 109; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 678.

Held, also, that even if the term did pass, the plaintiff could not before entry maintain an action of trespass in respect of such dwelling-house. Ibid.

(D) Registration of.

The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 91. s. 34,—which enacts that no copy of any bill of sale of personal chattels shall be filed unless the original be produced to the officer duly stamped,—does not invalidate the registration, otherwise regular, of a bill of sale not duly stamped; but on payment of the penalty and stamp duty required, the bill of sale is available under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36. s. 1. Bellamy v. Saull, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 366; 4 Best & S. 265.

A debtor, unable to meet his engagements with his creditors, entered into a deed commencing as follows: "To all to whom these presents shall come, we, whose names and seals are hereunto subscribed and set, being severally and respectively creditors of V, &c., greeting." The deed then recited that V. was indebted to the said several creditors in the several sums set opposite to their names in the schedule to the deed, and that V, being unable to pay his debts in full, had offered a composition of 7*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, payable by instalments, guaranteed by D B, which sum the said creditors covenanted to accept in full satisfaction of their claims. Then followed a release in the usual form. The deed then stated that D B having agreed to become security for the due payment of two sums of 3*s.* and 3*s.* in the pound to the said several creditors whose names are mentioned in the said schedule, "hereby guarantees the due payment of the said respective sums of 3*s.* and 3*s.* in the pound to the said creditors of V, and whose names and claims are mentioned in the said schedule; and we, the said several creditors, agree to accept the said D B as security for the due payment of the said sums," &c.; and V hereby covenants with the said D B, that in consideration of the said D B having become security as hereinbefore mentioned, he, V, has granted and assigned unto the said D B all his stock-in-trade," &c. "for the payment of the said respective sums of 3*s.* and 3*s.* in the pound as hereinbefore mentioned, in trust for the said creditors": —Held, that the deed appeared on the face of it to be a deed for the benefit of all the creditors of V; and that it was exempt from registration by the 7th section of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, as an assignment for the benefit of the creditors of a person making or giving the same. The General Furnishing and Upholstery Co. v. Venn, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 220; 2 Hurls. & C. 153.

(E) FILING OF.

The filing of a copy of a bill of sale of personal chattels is valid and effectual under the statute 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, although the original bill of sale has been previously altered or destroyed. The property in the chattels will remain in the person to whom they were conveyed by the deed on its execution. Green v. Attenborough (Ex. Ch.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 88; 3 Hurls. & C. 468.

By section 1. of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, every bill of sale of personal chattels, if not filed within twenty-one days after the making or giving of such bill of sale, shall, as against all assignees, &c., and as against all sheriff's officers and other persons seizing any property comprised in such bill of sale, be null and void so far as regards the property in or right to the possession of any personal chattels comprised in such bill of sale, which at the time of executing such process, and after the expiration of the said period of twenty-one days, shall be in the possession or apparent possession of the person making such bill of sale:—Held, that such a bill of sale is not invalid by reason of its not having been filed, if the effects comprised in it are seized before the expiration of the time within which it might have been so filed, and, therefore, that when a bill of sale was given on the 27th of June, and a writ of fi. fa. was issued, under which the sheriff seized on the 5th of July, the person claiming under the bill of sale was not prevented from setting it up, and asserting that the effects were his, although at the time of seizure it had not been filed. Marples v. Hartley, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 92; 3 E. & E. 610.

(F) AFFIDAVIT OF ATTESTING WITNESS.

It is no objection to the affidavit required by section 1. of the Bills of Sale Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36.) that it is entitled in the Queen's Bench, and is stated to be sworn before a Commissioner of the Exchequer, if that Commissioner be, as is generally the case, also a Commissioner of the Queen's Bench; the test being, whether the party making the affidavit could be convicted of perjury if it were false; which, semble, he might be under the above circumstances. Cheney v. Courtois, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 116; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 634.

(G) DESCRIPTION OF ASSIGNOR AND OF ATTESTING WITNESS.

G & H carried on the business of printers in partnership, at New Street, Blackfriars, in the city of London. They were described in a bill of sale given by them, and in the affidavit filed pursuant to the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36. s. 1, as residing in New Street, Blackfriars, in the county of Middlesex, and as printers and copartners:—Held, that the description of residence was sufficient under the statute; for that the description of G & H as "residing at New Street, Blackfriars" (without adding "in the city of London"), "printers and copartners," would have been sufficient information for the purpose of identification to persons dealing with G & H, and the addition of "in the county of Middlesex" could not have misled them. Hewer v. Cox, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 73; 3 E. & E. 428.

The affidavit, required by the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36. s. 1. to be filed with the bill of sale, must contain a description of the residence and occupation of the maker of such bill of sale at the time of making such bill, and not at the time of filing the affidavit. London and Westminster Loan Co. v. Chace, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 314; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 730.

Where however the affidavit described the maker of the bill of sale as "a gentleman," which was a correct description at the time of making the bill of sale, but not at the time of filing the affidavit, the Court held, that the word related back to the time of making the bill of sale, so as to satisfy the requirements of the statute. Ibid.

One who up to and at the time of the execution of a bill of sale has never been actually engaged in any trade or occupation, is properly described therein (or in the affidavit filed therewith) as a "gentleman." Gray v. Jones, 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 743.

In a bill of sale the grantor was described as "James Robert Veal, of No. 25, Bernard Street, Russell Square, in the county of Middlesex, gentleman." In the affidavit filed therewith, pursuant to 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36. s. 1, he was described in the same way. The description of his residence was correct, but he was in reality at the time of giving the bill of sale in the employ of C & Co. of Watling Street, in the city of London, as a buyer of silk:— Held, that the bill of sale was invalid by reason of the description being incorrect. Adams v. Graham, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 71.

Where goods are seized under a fi. fa. within twenty-one days of the making of a bill of sale, the Bills of Sale Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, does not apply, although the form of registering the bill of sale has been gone through, but in a defective manner. Banbury v. White, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 258; 2 Hurls. & C. 300.

The attesting witness to the bill of sale was in the attestation truly described as an attorney. The affidavit filed with the bill of sale was made by the attesting witness, who there described himself as "gentleman," and deposed that the bill of sale, a true copy whereof and of the attestation of the execution thereof was thereunto annexed, was made by, &c., in the presence of and duly attested by the deponent, and then proceeded, "and I further say that my residence and occupation hereinbefore set forth is the true description of my residence and occupation." Quære—Whether there was a sufficient compliance with the Bills of Sale Act? Ibid.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

[Certain restrictions on the negotiation of promissory notes and bills of exchange under a limited sum removed by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 105.—'The Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange (Ireland) Act (1861),' amended by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 23.—The law relating to bills of exchange and promissory notes in Ireland amended by 27 Vict. c. 7.]

(A) Form and Operation of.

An instrument in the form of a bill of exchange, drawn by A S, was accepted by the defendant for a debt due from A S to the plaintiff. The plaintiff's name was in the body of the instrument as the payee, and in the corner at the foot of it the plaintiff's name and address were written by the defendant as follows: "To Mrs. Emma Fielder, Nelson Lodge, Trafalgar Square, Chelsea":—Held, that the instrument was not addressed to any one, and might be treated as a promissory note. Fielder v. Marshall, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 158; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 606.

The defendant, intending to become surety to the plaintiffs for A, put his name at the back of a blank bill stamp, on which A wrote his name as acceptor, and the plaintiffs then drew upon it a bill of exchange payable to their (the drawers') order:—Held, that the defendant was liable to the plaintiffs on this instrument as the drawer of a bill, payable either to bearer or to the plaintiff's order. Matthews v. Bloxsome, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 209.

A proviso in a bill of exchange drawn by a joint-stock company, limiting the liability thereunder, is repugnant and void. In re the State Fire Insurance Co., ex parte Meredith's and Convers's claims, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 300.

(b) Payee.

The defendant, the secretary of a benefit building society, was sued on a promissory note in this form: Midland Counties Building Society, No. 3, Birmingham, 1st September 1856. One month after demand, we jointly and severally promise to pay Mr. John Bottomley the sum of one hundred and twenty pounds, with interest thereon, after the rate of six pounds per centum per annum, (payable half-yearly) for value received. W. R. Heath, S. B. Smith, Directors; W. D. Fisher, Secretary:—Held, that the defendant was personally liable on the note. Bottomley v. Fisher, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 417; 1 Hurls. & C. 211.

A document, "On demand, I promise to pay J W, T S, and D M, or to their order, or the major part of them, 100*l.*," is a promissory note, on which the three payees can maintain an action. Watson v. Evans, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 137; 1 Hurls. & C. 662.

The acceptor supra protest of a bill of exchange, for the honour of the drawer, is, like the drawer himself, estopped from denying that the bill is a valid bill; and, consequently, it is not competent to him to set up as a defence to an action against him by an indorsee, that the payee is a fictitious person, and that he was ignorant of that fact at the time he accepted the bill. Phillips v. Im Thurn, 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 220; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 694.

(c) Imperfect Instrument.

An instrument in the form of a bill of exchange, addressed to and accepted by the defendant, but without the names of either a payee or drawer, is neither a bill of exchange nor a promissory note, but only an incohate instrument. M'Call v. Taylor, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 365; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 301.

(B) Stamp: Cancelling on Foreign Bill.

The duty of cancelling the stamp affixed to a foreign bill of exchange is equally imposed both on the holder and the transferee of such a bill, by the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83. s. 5. Pooley v. Brown, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 134; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 566.

Where, therefore, the defendant sold to the plaintiff a number of foreign bills of exchange, of which the stamps were not cancelled, both parties being ignorant of the deficiency at the time of the transfer, —Held, per Erle, C.J. and Keating, J. (dissentiente Williams, J.), that on discovering the mistake the plaintiff could not recover from the defendant the price paid for the bills as upon a failure of consideration, both parties being equally in fault. Ibid.

The claim to have the money returned was not made till more than a year after the sale of the bills took place:—Held, per Curiam, that even had the action lain, the plaintiff had lost his right to maintain it, by reason of the delay. Ibid.

Semble, per Williams, J., that if the bills had been returned to the defendant, he might, as holder, have sued the acceptors, though he might have been unable to transfer the bills so as to have made them available in the hands of another person. Ibid.

(C) Acceptance.

(a) By Partners.

If a member of a trading firm accept a bill in the name of the firm, drawn upon him by his separate creditor, on account of his separate debt, the presumption is that the bill is so accepted without the concurrence of the other members of the firm, and that the creditor knows it; and in an action by the creditor upon the bill against the firm the jury ought so to be directed—Ripley v. Taylor distinguished. Levieson v. Lane, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 10; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 278.

In an action by an indorsee against the members of a firm on a bill accepted in the name of the firm, upon its being proved that the acceptance was by one of the partners in fraud of the partnership and contrary to the partnership articles, the onus is cast on the plaintiff of shewing that he gave value. Hogg v. Skeen, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 153; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 426.

(b) Per Pro.

The acceptance of a bill of exchange "per pro." acts as an express notice to the party taking the bill, that the authority of the agent is limited, and the holder of such a bill cannot maintain an action against the principal, if the agent has exceeded his authority. Stagg v. Elliott, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 260; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 373.

(D) Transfer.

J P, having died possessed of certain goods on which the plaintiff had some claim, the defendant was allowed by the plaintiff to take possession of the goods on giving an acceptance for the value; and, by arrangement between them, a bill was drawn and indorsed to the plaintiff by procuration in the name of the deceased J P, and accepted by the defendant. The plaintiff having brought an action on the bill,—Held, that the defendant was precluded from setting up as a defence that the indorsement was not J P's. Ashpitel v. Bryan, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 91; 3 Best & S. 474.

The payee of three promissory notes executed the following indorsement, preceded by the delivery of them to the indorsee: "I bequeath—pay the within contents to Simon Smith or his order at my death." There was a single witness to the payee's signature. In the act of delivery of the notes, the payee expressed an intention to be "master of them as long as he lived":—Held, that the transaction constituted a testamentary gift, and was, as such, void, there being only one witness. In re Patterson, Mitchell v. Smith, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 596.

Semble, by the Lord Justice Turner, that, but for the payee's expressed intention to keep the ownership for life, the disposition might have been construed as a gift inter vivos, in trust for him for life, and then for the indorsee absolutely. Ibid.

(b) Bill drawn in several Parts.

A foreign bill of exchange was made in four parts by A, and was indorsed by the payee to B, who indorsed to the defendants, who indorsed to C, who indorsed to the plaintiff. The first of the four parts only came into the possession of the plaintiff, and he having lost that part brought an action against the defendants for not delivering over the other parts. Only the first part had ever come into the possession of the defendants, nor were they able to obtain possession of the others:—Held, that no action would lie against them, as there was no obligation upon them to hand the other parts to the plaintiff. Pinard v. Klockman, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 82; 3 Best & S. 388.

The drawer of a bill payable to his order discounted it, and gave it to the discounter with intent to transfer to him all his rights in respect of the bill, but did not indorse it, though he would have done so if asked:—Held, that the discounter had no authority to put the drawer's name on the back of the bill. Harrop v. Fisher, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 283; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 196.

The discounter having put the drawer's name on the back of the bill, the acceptor offered a composition for the bill, but afterwards withdrew his offer:—Held, that on the above facts the discounter could not maintain an action in his own name against the acceptor on the bill. Ibid.

Declaration on a bill of exchange, drawn by L to his own order, accepted by the defendant, and indorsed by L to the plaintiff. Plea that A, being the holder of the bill, commenced an action against the defendant under the Bills of Exchange Act, 1855, and from the indorsement on the writ it appeared, as the fact was, that L had indorsed the bill, which action is still pending; and that the plaintiff afterwards commenced his action; and that the plaintiff took and became the holder of, and L indorsed the bill, as in the declaration mentioned, to the plaintiff after the same became due, and without consideration, and with notice of the pendency of the first action:—Held, a bad plea. Deuters v. Townsend, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 301; 5 Best & S. 613.

(E) Discharge from Liability on.

(a) By Payment.

A & Co., B & Co. and the defendant had all drawn bills largely upon each other, and certain of these bills, which had been accepted by the defendant, were in the hands of the plaintiffs, as bona fide holders for value, having been indorsed to them by A & Co. and B & Co. respectively. The plaintiffs had received from A & Co., from B & Co. and from the defendant certain payments on account of these bills, and they now sued the defendant upon the same bills, giving him credit for the payments made by himself only, and not for those made by A & Co. and B & Co., claiming to hold the excess for the use of the drawers. The defendant offered to pay to the plaintiffs, in full, all principal, interest and expenses due upon the bills, after taking credit for the payments already made by him, and also for the above payments by A & Co. and B & Co., and he now paid that amount into court:—Held, that, though these were not strictly accommodation bills, it was not a case in which the holder could sue for and on account of the drawers; that the defendant was entitled to take credit for all these payments, and that the sum paid into court was sufficient. Cook v. Lister, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 121; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 543.

(b) By giving Time.

If one maker of a promissory note signs as surety only for the other, and the payee has notice of this when he takes the note as security for money advanced to the principal, he cannot give time to the principal without the consent of the surety. If he does, the surety is discharged in equity, although the payee has never agreed to treat him otherwise than as a principal party liable upon the note, for an equity arises from the relation of principal and surety and notice thereof to the payee; and if the surety is sued on the note after such time given, he may set up the defence by way of plea on equitable grounds. Greenough v. M'Clelland (Ex. Ch.), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 15; 2 E. & E. 429.

(F) Consideration.

The plaintiffs, trustees under a local act, called on the defendant, who was agent of the owner of certain houses, to pay certain expenses chargeable under the act on the owner. The defendant told the plaintiffs that he was not owner, but that B was, and that B, and not he, the defendant, was liable. The plaintiffs, bona fide believing the defendant to be personally liable, threatened to take proceedings against him to enforce payment; on which the defendant, notwithstanding he knew that he was not really liable, the plaintiffs consenting to take a less amount than their claim by instalments, gave them promissory notes to meet the instalments. The plaintiffs having sued the defendant on the notes,—Held, that there was good consideration for them, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Cook v. Wright, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 321; 1 Best & S. 559.

A, a legatee under a will of doubtful validity, was requested by her brother to allow him to inspect the will. She refused, but afterwards agreed to deposit the will with a third person, upon his depositing also with the same person a promissory note, signed by himself and payable to her, for 60*l.*, the amount of her legacy. At the same time she signed an agreement that upon payment of the 60*l.* to her she would deliver up the will. Shortly afterwards, and before the payment of the 60*l.*, at her brother's request, the will was delivered by her to his attorney. Inquiries were then set on foot, which led to the supposition that the will might never have been properly executed, and an arrangement was ultimately entered into by all the members of the family, upon the supposition that the will was an invalid instrument, but the claim of A upon the promissory note was not included in this arrangement, and the will was not returned to A:—Held, in an action by A against her brother upon the note, that there was sufficient consideration for the note by the deposit of the will, and the promise to deliver it up on payment of the note, and that the will had, in substance and effect, been delivered to the brother, by having been delivered to his attorney in compliance with his request. Smith v. Smith, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 149; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 418.

A new security given to a creditor by an insolvent petitioner under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, upon his agreeing not to oppose the granting of the final order for protection, cannot be enforced, although the Commissioner required the insolvent to make an arrangement with the creditor, and adjourned the petition for that express purpose, and intimated that no final order would be made, unless such an arrangement were effected, and was privy to and consented to the new security being delivered on account of the old debt. Humphreys v. Welling, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 33; 1 Hurls. & C. 7.

To a declaration against the defendant as acceptor of bills of exchange, he pleaded that he borrowed 1,500*l.* of the plaintiff, and it was agreed between them that he should pay interest at the rate of more than 5*l.* per cent. per annum, viz. 100*l.*, contrary to the statutes then in force, and that to secure the principal and interest the defendant accepted bills to the amount of 1,600*l.*, that these bills were dishonoured at maturity, and that after the passing of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90. the bills sued on were given by way of renewal of the old bills, and to secure the payment to the plaintiff of the money secured by the old bills, including the 100*l.* interest:—Held, by Pollock, C.B., Channell, B., and Wilde, B. (Martin, B. dissenting), that there was good consideration for the bills, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover on them. Flight v. Reed, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 265; 1 Hurls. & C. 703.

Notwithstanding the general rule that the onus is on the maker of a negotiable instrument to shew that it has been paid, the holder is bound in the first place (unless he be a derivative indorsee for value during the currency of the bill or note) to shew that the maker received value for it. Dettmar v. the Metropolitan and Provincial Bank, 1 Hem. & M. 641.

When a bank, with knowledge of the relative position of the parties, places the proceeds of a promissory note, which has been made in their favour by A (a person just come of age) unreservedly in the power of B (a person who stands in loco parentis to A), knowing at the time that B claims to be creditor of A to a large amount for necessaries supplied, and B afterwards misappropriates the money, the bank will be restrained from suing on the note. Ibid.

(G) Notice of Dishonour.

In an action, by indorsee, against indorser of a bill of exchange, due notice of dishonour not having been given to the defendant,—Held, that the defendant having suffered judgment by default in a prior action brought against him by a holder on the same bill, had admitted his liability to that person on the bill, and therefore he might be taken either to have dispensed with the necessity of due notice, or to have acknowledged the notice given to be sufficient as against himself. Rabey v. Gilbert, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 170; 6 Hurls. & N. 536.

If the drawer of a bill of exchange, after the time for giving notice of dishonour has expired, promised to pay the bill, that is a waiver of notice; and if there is no plea of waiver, the Court will add such a plea. Cordery v. Colville, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 210; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 374.

Per Byles, J., a promise to pay the bill whether made before or after the time for giving notice has expired is evidence that due notice has been given. A promise to pay the bill before the time for giving notice has expired may also be used as evidence that notice has been dispensed with; and a promise to pay made after the time for giving notice has expired is evidence that notice has been waived. Ibid.

If a creditor takes a bill of exchange from his debtor as collateral security for the payment of his debt, and retains it until it becomes due, his duty is to present the bill for payment, and, if the bill be dishonoured, to give notice of dishonour in the same way as if he were absolute owner of the bill. If he omits to do this, and the bill consequently becomes worthless, he cannot afterwards sue his debtor, either on the bill, or on the original consideration. Peacock v. Purssell, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 266; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 728.

Where an indorser of a bill of exchange, who has had no notice of dishonour, on being told that the holders are about to take proceedings against him on the bill, says he will pay it if they will give him time,—that is evidence from which a jury may infer that he has waived the right to notice. Woods v. Dean, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 1; 3 Best & S. 101.

A count by indorsee against drawer of a bill of exchange, alleging presentment and dishonour, and due notice thereof to the defendant, is sustained by proof of a subsequent promise by the defendant to pay, notwithstanding it is proved (or admitted) that due notice of dishonour was not given. And the Court will, if necessary, amend the declaration, by alleging a waiver of notice. Killby v. Rochussen, 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 357.

(H) Actions and Suits.

The defendant, a British subject resident in Florence, signed two promissory notes there, as joint and several maker with his brother in London, to whom he sent them by post. His brother then also signed them, and delivered them in London to the payees:—Held, in accordance with Cox v. Troy, that the cause of action arose when the notes were delivered to the payees in this country, and that the defendant could therefore be sued here under the 18th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852. Chapman v. Cottrell, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 186; 3 Hurls. & C. 865.

(b) In respect of lost Bill or Note.

B accepted a bill of exchange drawn by R, who sent it to the plaintiffs; they returned it to R for indorsement; he burned it, and became bankrupt. Upon a bill by the plaintiffs asking that B, as acceptor, might pay the sum for which the bill was drawn,—Held, that the plaintiffs had no claim for relief against the acceptor, and that the bill must be dismissed with costs. Edge v. Bumford, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 805; 31 Beav. 247.

(I) Summary Procedure on.

Where a defendant, sued under the Bills of Exchange Act, has obtained leave from a Judge to appear to the writ and to defend the action, the Court will not set aside the order upon affidavits which, in substance, merely amount to a denial of the matter set up by way of defence, even although the affidavits allege affirmatively a totally different transaction from that which the defendant has represented, setting up that the defendant, in obtaining leave to defend the action, has acted in contravention of an agreement between the parties on which the bill was given, and in breach of good faith. Febart v. Stevens, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 1.

(K) Cheques.

The general rule, as established by Rickford v. Ridge, that the holder of a cheque is only bound to send it to his agent for presentment by the post of the day after that on which he has received it, and that the agent has the following day to present it for payment, applies not only as between the parties to the cheque, but as between banker and customer, unless circumstances exist from which a contract or duty on the part of the banker to present earlier, or to defer presentment to a later period can be inferred. Where, therefore, a cheque upon a bank at Lewes was paid on a Friday morning into a bank at Worthing, by a customer of the last bank, to the credit of his account with that bank, presentment of the cheque for payment at the Lewes Bank on the following Monday was held to be in time, as the Worthing bankers were only bound to send it by Saturday's post to their agent at Lewes. Hare v. Henty, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 302; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 65.

A draft payable to order is not rendered void by being post-dated; the provisions of 55 Geo. 3. c. 184. s. 13. and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 20. being applicable only to drafts payable to bearer. Whistler v. Forster, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 161; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 248.

The holder without indorsement of a draft payable to order, though taken by him bona fide and for value, has no better title than the person from whom he took it; and such holder is affected by fraud, of which he has notice before he obtains the formal indorsement. Ibid.

A cheque payable to bearer and stamped with a penny stamp, and dated the 22nd of July, was on the 22nd of June drawn by the defendant and given by him to G, who indorsed it to W, who handed it to the plaintiff, and received in return the plaintiff's cheque for the same amount. The plaintiff took the defendant's cheque without notice or knowledge that it had been post-dated:—Held, in accordance with Williams v. Jarrett and Whistler v. Forster, that the cheque appearing to be correctly stamped according to its purport, and having been taken by the plaintiff without notice that it was post-dated, and innocently, he was entitled to recover upon it against the defendant. Austin v. Bunyard, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 217; 6 Best & S. 687.

On Wednesday May 6, A received at Monmouth

a cheque drawn upon M & Co., bankers at Ross, about ten miles distant. On Friday, the 8th, he paid it into his bankers at Monmouth, and they on the same day sent it by post to their London agents (the City Bank), to be passed through the country clearing house there. The drawees' London agents were B & Co. (whose names appesred in a printed memorandum at the foot of the cheque), but their account with them was closed on the 7th. The cheque being refused by B & Co. at the clearing house, the City Bank sent it by post on Saturday, the 9th, for payment to the drawees, who kept it until Friday, the 15th, and then returned it to the City Bank, who received it on Saturday, the 16th, and sent by that day's post to their correspondents, the Monmouth Bank, who (receiving it on Saturday, the 17th) sent notice of the dishonour by the post on Tuesday, the 19th, to the drawer, whom it reached on the 20th. A run upon the bank of M & Co. commenced on Monday, the 11th, and on Wednesday, the 13th, at noon, they finally stopped payment. In an action in the county court by the Monmouth Bank against the drawer, it was proved that the drawees sent cash through the post to country bankers in payment of cheques drawn upon them as late as Monday, the 11th, but did not honour any cheques forwarded to them by London bankers after Thursday, the 7th; that, if the cheque in question had been received by them by post from the City Bank on Friday, the 8th, it would not have been paid; but that, if presented across the counter at any time before the final stoppage on Wednesday, the 13th, it would have been paid. The county court Judge having upon these facts nonsuited the plaintiffs, this Court, upon appeal, affirmed his decision, holding that the presentment was not in due time. Bailey v. Bodenham, 33 Law J. ## BLEACHING AND DYEING WORKS.

The Bleaching and Dyeing Works Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 78. s. 9, excepts from its operation any building used solely for the purposes declared in 8 & 9 Vict. c. 29, which includes an incidental printing process carried on within buildings "lying adjacent to each other, or forming a part or parts of the establishment where the chief process of printing is carried on":—Held, that this is not confined to a building which, by local proximity, forms part of the establishment where the chief process of printing is carried on, but extends to a building which, in a commercial sense, forms part of such establishment. Hoyle v. Oram, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 213.

The process of "finishing" is not within the Bleaching and Dyeing Works Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 78, unless it be carried on as incidental to the operation of bleaching or dyeing. Howarth v. Coles, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 262; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 139.

BOND.

(A) CONSTRUCTION OF.
(B) DISCHARGE: LEGAL IMPOSSIBILITY TO PERFORM.

(A) CONSTRUCTION OF.

By the condition of a bond, the obligor was to pay the money by monthly instalments, and "when and as often as he should make default in the payment of any of the said monthly instalments, he should pay to the obligees 1*s.* in the pound for each and every pound of the said instalment so left unpaid":—Held, that the obligees were not entitled to anything in respect of fractional parts of a pound. Three Towns Loan Society v. Doyle, 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 290.

(B) DISCHARGE: LEGAL IMPOSSIBILITY TO PERFORM.

The Corporation of London, under the authority of a local act of parliament, and in consideration of money which they were thereby authorized to raise, executed a bond to the plaintiff, conditioned to pay the plaintiff a certain annuity out of certain tolls levied under several acts for improving the navigation of the river Thames. The annuity was, by the act under which the money was raised, made a charge on such tolls. The Thames Conservancy Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. cxlvii., local and personal) was afterwards passed to carry out an agreement between the Crown and the Corporation as to the said river, and by that act the conservancy of the Thames is vested in a new body, called the "Conservators of the River Thames," and the powers before vested in the Corporation of London of receiving the tolls is transferred to such conservators, who are to appropriate the tolls, first, to paying the expenses of passing the act, and then to the expenses of carrying the act into execution, and to apply the surplus, after a certain time, in paying off any money borrowed on the credit of such tolls:—Held (Willes, J. dissentiente), that as the effect of the Thames Conservancy Act was to take away from the Corporation of London the power to receive the tolls, the plaintiff could not sue the Corporation on their bond; but that his remedy for compelling payment of the annuity out of the tolls was only against the Conservators of the Thames. Brown v. the Mayor of London, 30 Law J. ### BOUNDARIES.

Where the boundary between two conterminous parishes is a highway, the presumption is that the half highway on either side of the medium filum belongs to the parish on that side. R. v. the Board of Works for the Strand, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 23; 4 Best & S. 526.

An act of parliament, passed for the purpose of creating a new parish of A out of the old parish of M, enacted that "all that precinct included within the bounds hereinafter expressed" should form the new parish. On the northern boundary where the old parish of M was divided from the parish of S by a highway, the precinct was described thus: "with all the houses and grounds abutting on and upon the king's highway or great road":—Held, that this carried the boundary of the new parish to the medium filum of the highway. Ibid.

When an order of the Metropolitan Board of Works has been made, under section 140. of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, ordering that the whole of a street situate in more than one district should be under the exclusive management of one particular vestry, and that vestry makes an order, under section 160, upon one of the other districts for contribution towards the expenses, if the order is good on the face of it, the only mode of appeal open to the district is by contesting the propriety of the assessment at the audit, under section 195; and the Court, on a return to a mandamus ordering the payment of the sum assessed, will not go into the matter, but grant a peremptory mandamus. ## BRIDGE.

(A) LIABILITY TO REPAIR.
(B) LIABILITY TO LIGHT.

(A) LIABILITY TO REPAIR.

An act of 20 Geo. 2, after reciting that it would be for the convenience of the inhabitants of the counties of Surrey and Middlesex that a bridge should be built across the Thames from W to S, enacted that it "shall and may be lawful for S D, his heirs and assigns, to build the said bridge." Powers were given to take lands on each side for the purpose. And it was further enacted that, "for and in consideration of the great charges and expenses S D, his heirs, or assigns, would be at, not only in building the bridge, but also in erecting and maintaining other matters necessary to be erected, &c., it shall and may be lawful for the said S D, his heirs and assigns, from time to time to take" certain tolls by way of pontage for every person, carriage, or horse passing the bridge. And after reciting that it may happen that the bridge may receive such damage as to be dangerous or impassable, in such case "it shall and may be lawful" to S D, his heirs and assigns, to set up a ferry across the river as near the bridge as conveniently may be, and take for the passage over the ferry the pontage granted by the act, "provided that the ferry shall not continue longer than is necessary for repairing or rebuilding the bridge." The bridge was made extra-parochial, and was not to be deemed a county bridge so as to make either Surrey or Middlesex liable to repair it. A subsequent act of 20 Geo. 3,—after reciting that by the former act certain tolls and powers had been granted to S D to build the bridge, and that it had been accordingly built and passable for many years, and that it is now in a ruinous condition, and if not effectually repaired or rebuilt would be manifestly to the inconvenience of the public, and that M D S was the sole proprietor, and had proposed to effectually repair or rebuild it, and that the pontage granted under the former act had been found by experience greatly inadequate to the expense of building and keeping in repair the same,—enacted that it should be lawful to M D S, his heirs and assigns, to take, under this and the former act, certain increased tolls. The bridge having been built under the first act, the public constantly used it, and the proprietors for the time being took the tolls and exercised the powers of the two acts, and did all the necessary repairs until the year 1859, when the principal arch fell in, and the bridge became impassable. On this the defendant, the present proprietor of the bridge, set up a ferry, and took, and continues to take, the tolls authorized by the two acts:—Held, upon the true construction of the two statutes, that, although there was no duty expressly imposed, yet, inasmuch as the taking of the tolls was on condition and in consideration of building and maintaining the bridge, the defendant, at least as long as he remained proprietor and took the tolls, was bound to reinstate the bridge and maintain it in a state practicable for passage. When the parties agree that if judgment be given for the plaintiff, a mandamus may issue, this means if the Court think fit that it shall do so. Nicholl v. Allen, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 43; 1 Best & S. 916: affirmed in Ex. Ch., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 283; 1 Best & S. 934.

(B) LIABILITY TO LIGHT.

A company built Vauxhall Bridge under a local act (49 Geo. 3. c. cxlii.), by which they were empowered to make (amongst others) a road leading to the bridge in the parish of Lambeth and county of Surrey, and they were required to put up lamp-posts and lamps on the road and bridge, and to keep the road and bridge lighted under pain of being indicted if in default; half the bridge was to be deemed to be in the parish of Lambeth and county of Surrey, but not to be deemed a county bridge so as to subject the county or parish to the repairs of the bridge or road. By a subsequent local act (9 & 10 Vict. c. cccl.) certain Commissioners were empowered to cause (amongst others) the said road to the middle of Vauxhall Bridge to be kept properly lighted, and it was lawful for them to keep lighted such streets as they might think proper; and the "present lamps and posts in the streets within their jurisdiction, and which shall or may hereafter be erected or fixed," were vested in the Commissioners:—Held, that the obligation to light the road and half the bridge and the property in the lamps were transferred from the company to the Commissioners, and from them to the vestry of the parish of Lambeth by "The Metropolitan Local Management Act" (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 90, 130. and 250. R. v. the Vestry of Lambeth, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 252; 3 Best & S. 1.

Quære—Whether, if the obligation and property had not been transferred from the company to the Commissioners, they would not have been transferred to the vestry from the company under the 90th section? Ibid.

(A) BURIAL BOARDS.

(a) Election of Members: Vacancies.

By the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85. s. 12, any vacancies in a burial board may be filled up by the vestry when and as they shall think fit; by the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128. s. 4, any vacancy shall be filled up by the vestry within one month after it shall have happened; and in case any vestry shall neglect to fill up such vacancy, it may be filled up by the burial board:—Held, that a vacancy having occurred, the vestry might fill it up after the month, the burial board not having done so. R. v. Overseers of South Weald, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 193; 5 Best & S. 391.

The mere fact that a parish has been divided into three separate parishes for all ecclesiastical purposes, under the 58 Geo. 3. c. 45, does not prevent the vestry of the old parish from appointing a burial board, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85. s. 10; and a burial board having been appointed for the old parish, and it not appearing that either of the new parishes had appointed a burial board under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 81. s. 5, the Court granted a peremptory mandamus to the overseers of the old parish to pay to the burial board out of the poor-rates of the entire parish the expenses which they had incurred. R. v. the Overseers of Walcot, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 217; 2 Best & S. 555.

Where a parish has been divided into separate parishes for ecclesiastical purposes under the 58 Geo. 3. c. 45, and the vestry of the old parish collectively has appointed a burial board and established one burial-ground for the whole parish, the vestry of one of the new parishes may also appoint a burial board under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 81. s. 5; and the Court granted a peremptory mandamus to the overseers of the old parish to levy a rate upon such new parish and to pay the burial board of that parish, pursuant to their certificate, the expenses they had incurred. R. v. the Overseers of Walcot St. Swithin, 31 Law J. ### (B) BURIAL GROUNDS.

(a) For United Parishes.

The parish of A and the hamlet of C constituted one parish for all ecclesiastical purposes. They had one church for their joint use, and, up to January 1860, one burial-ground adjoining the church. A and C respectively maintained their own poor, appointed their own overseers, surveyors of highways, assessors of taxes and constables, and made out their own jury lists and lists of voters. The ratepayers of each were accustomed to meet in one vestry and to transact all business usually performed in a vestry, with the exception of the above separate matters. The vestry of A and C resolved that a burial board should be appointed, and they did in fact appoint one, and obtained the approval of a Secretary of State. The burial board borrowed money on mortgage for the purposes of providing, laying out and inclosing a burial-ground, and charged the future rates of the parish of A with the payment of such money, and the interest thereon. Subsequently, the board required a sum of money for paying the agreed interest upon the said principal money, and also a sum for the purpose of providing a sinking fund in order to pay off the debt, and they made an order upon the overseers of C to pay out of the rates for the relief of the poor of C the sum of —l., which had been ascertained by apportioning the expenses between A and C in proportion to the value of the property in them, as rated to the relief of the poor:—Held, that A and C were united parishes within the meaning of section 11. of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, and that the one burial board was rightly constituted for the two together:—Held, also, that the order upon the overseers of C was good, as the proportion to be paid by A and C respectively ought to be calculated according to the rateable value from time to time as it became necessary to raise the money:—Held, also, that the expenses of providing a burial-ground, of paying the mortgage moneys, and the ordinary expenses of maintaining the burial-ground were to be raised in the same way:—Held, also, that the mortgage-deed was not defective by reason of its charging the sum borrowed upon the future rates of the one parish, and also upon the future rates of the other part of the parish. R. v. the Overseers of Coleshill, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 219; 2 Best & S. 825: affirmed in Ex. Ch., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 96; 4 Best & S. 667.

The 18th section of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128,—which enacts, that in every case in which an Order in Council is issued for the discontinuance of burials in any churchyard or burial-ground, the burial board or churchwardens, as the case may be, shall maintain such churchyard or burial-ground of any parish in decent order and keep its fences in repair, the expenses to be repaid by the overseers out of the poor-rates of the parish or place in which such burial-ground is situate,—applies only to a burial-ground belonging to a parish, and does not extend to a burial-ground the property of private persons. R. v. the Burial Board for St. John, Westgate, and Elswick, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 15; 1 Best & S. 679: affirmed in Ex. Ch., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 205; 2 Best & S. 703.

(C) Burial Fees.

The Burial Acts do not give or confer upon the vicar of a parish claiming an undefined interest in an adjoining district, of which he is not "incumbent," any right to receive fees for the performance of the burial service over the remains of the inhabitants of such district buried within a cemetery established therein when no fees have ever been paid to the vicar for such service, and their right of sepulture within the parish has always been denied. Hornby v. the Burial Board of Toxteth Park, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 643; 31 Beav. 52.

An incumbent of a church or ecclesiastical district, to sustain his right to perform the burial service and receive the fees for interment in a cemetery established under the Burial Acts, must shew that the inhabitants of the parish or district from which the person dying came had a right to be interred in the churchyard or burial-ground of the parish or district, and that he would have had a right to the fees had the person dying been interred therein. Ibid.

But an incumbent of a parish or district having neither a churchyard nor burial-ground belonging to the church, or having only a burial-ground in which the right to interment could only be obtained by purchase, is not entitled to perform the burial service in a cemetery over the body of a late inhabitant of his district or to claim any fees for the interment, though the burials in the ground in which interments might be purchased are diminished. Ibid.

A cemetery made under the Burial Acts may in effect convert a district in which a cemetery is established into a distinct parish. Ibid.

In a divided district neither the vicar of the parish nor the incumbents of the churches can claim the fees paid for the burials in a cemetery formed within the district, as none of them collectively or individually fill the character of incumbent within the meaning of the Burial Acts. Ibid.

BY-LAW.

Under the provisions of a local act, certain persons were empowered to make by-laws for the regulation of the common pastures within the borough of B. Among others, they made a by-law to the following effect: "If any person shall stock or depasture, or attempt to stock or depasture any bull or entire or vicious horse . . . . on any part of the said common pastures, then, and in every such case, the person or persons so offending, and the owner or owners of the said stock or cattle, shall respectively forfeit and pay for every such offence the sum of 5*l.*, to be levied and recovered according to the form of the statute in that behalf":—Held, that this by-law was divisible; and that although the latter part as to the owners of the animal was bad, the former part was good, and therefore that a person who depastured a vicious horse upon the common pastures might be ordered to pay the 5*l.* penalty. R. v. Lundie, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 157.

(A) Construction of Canal Acts.

(a) Compensation to Mine Owners and others.

By the 9 Geo. 4. c. 98. the undertakers of the Aire and Calder Navigation were empowered to make a canal, and enter lands for the purpose, making satisfaction to the owners; and in case a difference should arise between the undertakers and the owner of any lands, &c., which might be taken and damaged or prejudiced by the execution of any of the powers granted by the act "touching the purchase-money or recompense to be made," a jury were to be summoned who were "to assess and ascertain the sum to be paid for the purchase of the land, and also what other separate and distinct sum should be paid by way of recompense, either for the damage which might before that time have been sustained as aforesaid, or for the future temporary or perpetual continuance of any recurring damages which should have been so occasioned, and the cause of which should have been only in part obviated or repaired by the undertakers, and which could or would be no further obviated, repaired or remedied by them." All mines and minerals were reserved to the owners of the lands taken or used for the purposes of the act, with power to get them, provided that in working them no injury should be done to the canal; and power was given to the undertakers to enter any lands through or near to which the canal should pass, and to examine any mines worked thereon, and, if they had been worked contrary to the direction of the act, to require the persons so working the mines to desist. There were no clauses in the act obliging the undertakers to purchase the minerals under or near the canal, or to make any compensation to the owners for preventing the working so near to the canal as to injure it. In 1833 certain lands were conveyed under the act to the undertakers. It was known at the time that there were seams of coal under the land conveyed and under the adjoining land of the same owner, but it had not been then ascertained whether the coal could or would be gotten. There was no dispute between the parties as to the amount to be paid; one sum was agreed on as the purchase-money, and no question was raised as to any other compensation for damage. The canal was constructed through the land; and a tenant, under a lease subsequent to the conveyance, began to work the coal under and near to the canal, when he was stopt by the undertakers under the powers of the act:—Held, that the tenant was not entitled to any compensation frnm the undertakers for this hinderance. R. v. the Undertakers of the Navigation of the Rivers Aire and Calder, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 337.

The Dudley Canal Act, 16 Geo. 3, provides that no owner of mines shall carry on any work for getting such mines under any tunnel, or within twenty yards of the same, without the consent of the company; and that no owner of any mines shall, without such consent, carry on any work for coal or minerals within twelve yards of the canal, "except as hereinafter mentioned." Then follows a clause which provides that the owners of mines may without consent, get coals and minerals beyond the prescribed limits; and also a clause which provides that the company may enter upon lands and mines for discovering the distance of the canal from the working parts of such mines, and that if any mine shall be worked contrary to the act, they may use all necessary means for making the canal safe. By a subsequent clause it is provided, that when the owner of any mine lying under the canal or within the limited distance shall be desirous of working the same, he shall give the company three months' notice of his intention, and upon the receipt of such notice it shall be lawful for the company to inspect such mines in order to determine what minerals may be gotten without prejudice to the canal; and if upon inspection the company shall refuse to permit the owners of such mines to work them, then the company shall within three months pay to the owners the value thereof. Another clause provides, that nothing in the act contained shall defeat the right of any owner of land through which the canal shall be made, to the mines under the land used for the canal, and that it shall be lawful for such owner to work such mines, provided that no injury be done to the navigation:—Held, in the Exchequer Chamber, that the prohibition against working any mine within twenty yards of a tunnel without the consent of the company, was not absolute, but subject to the same exception as working within twelve yards of the canal, and therefore if the company refuse to permit the owner of a mine to work it within twenty yards of a tunnel they are bound to pay him the value thereof. The Birmingham Canal Navigation Co. v. the Earl of Dudley (Ex. Ch.), 7 Hurls. & N. 969.

By the 32 Geo. 3. c. 100, "an Act for making a canal from the Cromford Canal in the county of Nottingham to the town of Nottingham and the river Trent," certain commissioners were appointed for carrying out the purposes of the act, who were directed, in case of a dispute between them and the proprietors of land adjoining the canal concerning the amount of compensation to be paid to the latter for damages sustained by the execution of the powers of the act, to take measures for summoning a jury, for whose verdict as to the amount of compensation they should give judgment. It was then declared that the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the Commissioners should be binding and conclusive to all intents and purposes:—Held, that the verdict of the jury was conclusive only as to the amount, and not as to the right of the claimant to compensation, which might be elsewhere contested. Barber v. the Nottingham and Grantham Rail. Co. (Lim.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 193; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 726.

In an action for injury caused by the leaking of water from a reservoir belonging to the canal, it was pleaded that the damage was caused by the leaking of water through the banks of the reservoir, and not in any manner whatsoever by reason of the execution of the powers of the act, but by the default of the plaintiffs themselves in sinking shafts and pits in their own land, and so causing large quantities of water which naturally lay in the underground soil in which the pits and shafts were sunk, and which formed the banks and support of the said reservoir, to leak out and flow into the said shafts and pits:—Held, on demurrer, that the plea was bad. Ibid.

A Canal Act provided that no owner of any mines should carry on any work for the getting of coal or minerals within the distance of twelve yards from the canal; nor should any coals or other minerals be got under any part of the canal or towing-paths or under any reservoir to be made by the company, or under any land or ground lying within the distance of twelve yards of either side of the canal, or any reservoir, &c., except as thereinafter mentioned, without the consent of the company. By another clause, it was provided, that when the owner of any coal-mine, &c. lying under the canal, towing-path, reservoir, &c., or within the distance thereinbefore limited, should be desirous of working the same, then such owner should give notice of his intention to the company three months before he should begin to work such mines lying as aforesaid; and upon the receipt of such notice it should be lawful for the company to inspect such mines, in order to determine what coal or other minerals might be come at and actually gotten, &c., and if the company should neglect to inspect such mines within thirty days next after the receipt of such notice, then the owners of such mines were authorized to work such part of the said mines as lay under the canal or reservoir, or within the distance aforesaid; and if upon inspection the company should refuse to permit the owners of the mines to work such parts of the mines lying as aforesaid, or any part thereof, as they might have come at and gotten, then the company should within three calendar months pay to the owners the value thereof. By another clause, it was provided, that nothing in the act contained should defeat, prejudice or affect the right of any owner of lands or grounds upon or through which the canal, &c. should be made, to the mines lying within or under the lands or grounds to be set out or made use of for such canal, but all such mines were reserved to such owners respectively; and that it should be lawful to such owners, subject to the conditions therein contained, to work all such mines, provided that in working such mines no injury be done to the said navigation, anything therein contained to the contrary notwithstanding:—Held, that where notice had been given by the owner of a coal-mine of his intention to work the same under a reservoir belonging to the canal company, and the latter did not inspect the mines, or prohibit his working, or purchase his rights, the mine-owner, notwithstanding the proviso to the last-mentioned clause, was entitled to work the mine under such reservoir in the usual and ordinary mode; and, the reservoir having been damaged by reason of such working, that no action was maintainable by the company against the mine-owner for such damage. The Stourbridge Canal Co. v. the Earl of Dudley (Ex. Ch.), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 108; 3 E. & E. 409.

(c) Rights of Fishing.

A Canal Act provided that the lord of every manor through which the canal and reservoirs thereto belonging should be made, should be entitled to the right of fishery in so much of the canal and reservoirs as should be made in, over or through the common waste lands within his manor, and that the owners of any other lands through which the canal should be made, should also have the like right of fishery of and in so much of the said canal as should be made in, over or through their lands wherein they had the right of fishery before the passing of the act:—Held, that the right reserved to the lord of the manor was confined to common or waste lands where the lord was owner of the soil, and therefore did not extend to open Lammas lands, the soil of which was in various owners, the occupiers intercommoning for a certain part of the year. The Grand Union Canal Co. v. Ashby, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 203; 6 Hurls. & N. 394.

(B) Tolls; Inequality.

A canal company was incorporated by a local and personal act, which provided that the rates charged by the company of proprietors for the carriage of coal and other merchandise should be equal throughout the whole length of the canal. By the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 28, the proprietors of any canal are allowed to alter the tolls, rates or duties granted to them upon the whole or any portion of the canals according to local circumstances, or the quantity of traffic, or otherwise as they may think fit. The act also provides that the tolls levied under its powers are to be charged equally to all persons and after the same rate, whether per mile or per ton per mile. The company having imposed a charge of a penny a ton per mile for all coal conveyed upon their canal, together with an additional rate of one half-penny a ton for all coal conveyed a less distance than five miles,—Held, that they might lawfully impose such charges on the plaintiffs, and at the same time charge only three farthings a ton per mile for coals conveyed by them for others over a distance less than five miles, such persons having agreed to secure to the defendants a fixed minimum of tolls. Strick v. the Swansea Canal Co., 33 Law J. (A) Rights and Liabilities of Carriers.

(a) Conveyance of Passengers.

The plaintiff took a ticket from the defendants from C to N; the plaintiff, after waiting a long time, was told by a porter that the train was late in consequence of an accident, and the train eventually arrived an hour and a half late. The consequence was that the plaintiff was late for the train at G, which would have carried him on to N. The train-bill was not put in, but only some correspondence in which the defendants repudiated their liability on the ground that by the train-bills they gave notice they would not be liable for the trains not keeping time:—Held, that there was no evidence of a cause of action. Hurst v. the Great Western Rail. Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 264; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 310.

A by-law of a railway company ran thus:—"Each passenger booking his place will be furnished with a ticket, which he is to shew and deliver up when required to the guard, &c.," and "each passenger not producing or delivering up his ticket when required, is hereby subjected to a penalty not exceeding 40*s.*":—Held, that under this by-law holders of annual tickets for travelling on the line are bound to produce their tickets to the railway officers as much as ordinary passengers. Woodard v. the Eastern Counties Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 196.

(b) Conveyance and Care of Passengers' Luggage.

A railway passenger, with knowledge that the railway company, though allowing each passenger to carry free of charge a certain amount of luggage, required all merchandise carried to be paid for, took with him, as if it was personal luggage, a case of merchandise, and did not pay for it as such:—Held, that no contract whatever touching the same arose between him and the company, and therefore on its being lost he was not entitled to recover the value of it from the company. The Belfast and Ballymena Rail. Co. and the Londonderry and Coleraine Rail. Co. v. Keys, 9 H.L. Cas. 556.

A declaration, or plaint, alleged that A, at the request of B, a common carrier on a railway, became a passenger by the said railway, and paid his fare in that behalf; that C was a servant of B, and as such servant required A to deliver to him, C, a case which A was then carrying with him, in order that the same might be carried in a certain compartment of the train; that A delivered to C the said case to be safely carried, and to be re-delivered at the end of the journey, then averred the duty of B, as a common carrier, and A's own performance of all the conditions precedent to the discharge of that duty by B, and that the case was not re-delivered, whereby, &c. The defendant pleaded that A had notice of the rule on the said railway, that passengers and their personal luggage were carried at one rate, and merchandise carried at another rate of payment; and that payment was required for all merchandise carried on the railway; that the plaintiff took the case with him as personal luggage, and did not pay for the same as merchandise; and that the case contained merchandise. The plaintiff replied that the case was, in appearance and fact, fit and proper for the conveyance of merchandise, not luggage, and did contain merchandise; that there was no improper concealment on his part, and that the defendant received the same as personal luggage, and without making objection thereto, and without demanding extra remuneration:—Held, that even supposing that the declaration shewed a good cause of action by reason of a contract between A and B, through C, the servant, still the plea was an answer to it, and that the effect of the plea was not got rid of by the replication, which was clearly bad, for not averring, in any way, that the defendants had notice or knowledge that the case contained merchandise. Ibid.

The plaintiff took a ticket as a passenger on a railway, for which he paid the ordinary fare. By the railway company's act of parliament each passenger was allowed to take with him his ordinary luggage not exceeding a certain weight without any charge for the carriage. The plaintiff had no knowledge of this act, and he brought with him on the railway as luggage a box which contained only merchandise, but did not exceed the weight of luggage allowed to passengers. The box had the word "glass" written on the top, but no question was asked by the company's servants or any information given by the plaintiff as to its contents. In an action for the loss of the box,—Held, that as the box contained merchandise and not luggage, there was no contract by the company to carry it, and the company therefore were not liable. Cahill v. the London and North-Western Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 289; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 154.

Semble—Per Erle, C.J., and Willes, J., that the provisions of the act of parliament as to luggage were binding on the plaintiff, who was a passenger, and that therefore he must be taken to have had notice that the company did not carry merchandise gratuitously, but only the ordinary luggage of the passenger. Ibid.

And held, on appeal, by the Exchequer Chamber, that if a railway company, which by the terms of its regulations allows a passenger to take personal luggage free of charge, chooses to let him take as luggage a package which it knows to be merchandise, the company is responsible if the package be lost. But if the passenger takes a package of merchandise as his luggage, and the company does not know that it is merchandise, it is not answerable for the loss. The mere fact that a package looks like merchandise and is marked "glass," is not enough to fix the company with responsibility. Ibid., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 271; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 818.

By the 17 & 18 Vict. c. ccxi. s. 39. (local and personal), it was provided that every passenger might take with him his ordinary luggage, not exceeding 150 lb. in weight for first-class passengers, and other passengers in proportion, free of charge. The plaintiff had taken a cheap first-class excursion ticket subject to the express condition, of which he had notice, that no luggage was allowed. He had, nevertheless, put his portmanteau, which weighed less than 150 lb., into the train:—Held, that he had waived the benefit of the above section, and that he was bound to pay for the carriage of the portmanteau. Rumsey v. the North-Eastern Rail. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 244; 14 Com. B Rep. N.S. 641.

Where a person has, by fraud, induced another to perform a service for him, intending not to pay for the performance of it, still there is a liability implied by the law, which may be enforced in the same way as an obligation arising out of an express contract. Ibid.

The holder of a railway excursion ticket,—expressed to be "issued subject to the conditions contained in the company's time and excursion bills," one of which conditions was, that "luggage under 60 lb." should be carried "free, at passenger's own risk," is bound by the terms of this special contract, which is not void under the Traffic Act; and he has consequently no claim against the company for the loss of his luggage, although it be proved that he did not know the condition on which it was being carried. Stewart v. the London and North-Western Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 199; 3 Hurls. & C. 135.

An attorney, going by railway to attend a county court, took in his portmanteau documents and banknotes for use in certain causes in which he was engaged as an attorney. The portmanteau was carried under the private act of the railway company without charge as passenger's "ordinary luggage"; it was missing at the end of the journey, and not recovered for some days:—Held, that these articles were not "ordinary luggage" of the plaintiff as a passenger, and that the railway company were not liable in damages for the consequences of the temporary loss of them. Phelps v. the London and North-Western Rail. Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 259; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 321.

The plaintiff, having travelled by the defendants' railway, left a box at their cloak-room, paying 2*d.* for booking, and received a ticket, on the condition that the defendants would not deliver up luggage deposited without the production of the ticket. The plaintiff called on the next (Sunday) evening with the ticket, but there was no one in attendance at the room; and after waiting some time, the plaintiff went to another part of the station, found an attendant, and so obtained his box: he was thus delayed forty minutes. The cloak-room on week-days was practically open all day, but on Sunday only a few minutes before and after trains arrived; but the defendant was not aware of this. The plaintiff having brought an action for damages caused by this delay,—Held, that the ticket being silent on the subject, the contract by the defendants was to re-deliver the box within a reasonable time after a reasonable demand; but whether there had been unreasonable delay, under the circumstances, was a question for the jury alone, and that there was evidence which ought to be left to them. Stallard v. the Great Western Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 137; 2 Best & S. 419.

The plaintiff, after travelling by the line of a railway company, deposited her bag, containing wearing-apparel and jewellery of the value of 20*l.*, at the cloak-room of the railway station. On so depositing the bag, the plaintiff paid the charge of 2*d.*, and received a ticket, on the back of which was printed—"The company will not be responsible for articles left by passengers at the station unless the same be duly registered, for which a charge of 2*d.* per article will be made, and a ticket given in exchange; and no article will be given up without the production of the ticket or satisfactory evidence of the ownership being adduced. A charge of 1*d.* per diem, in addition, will be made on all articles left in the cloak-room for a longer period than twenty-four hours. The company will not be responsible for any package exceeding the value of 10*l.*" It did not appear whether the plaintiff read this notice on the ticket, but she brought the ticket to the cloak-room when she returned there for the bag. In an action against the company for not safely keeping the bag, — Held, that the Railway Traffic Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31. s. 7.) did not apply, as the company did not receive the bag in the capacity of carriers. Van Toll v. the South-Eastern Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 241; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 75.

Held, also, that the inference from the above facts was, that the plaintiff assented to the terms of the notice on the ticket, and that therefore as the value of the articles exceeded 10*l.* the company were not liable for their loss, although occasioned by the company's negligence. Ibid.

(1) Arrangement with Carrier's Agent.

A, a carrier, was in the habit of carrying goods for B; the ordinary course was to deliver the goods to B immediately on their arrival at M, where B carried on business. B requested A to employ C as his agent, and afterwards, without notice to A, arranged with C not to deliver in due course, but to give him notice of the arrival of the goods, and to keep them till he sent for them. C on one occasion forgot to give notice pursuant to this arrangement, and B brought his action against A for such neglect:—Held, that A was not liable. Butterworth v. Brownlow, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 266; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 409.

(2) Special Contract limiting the Common Law Liability.

(i) Effect of General Notice.

The appellant's agent was in the habit of sending goods by the respondents' railway, and had received printed notices from them stating that the company would receive, forward and deliver goods, solely subject to the conditions thereunder stated; and among the conditions thereunder stated was a condition that the company should not be responsible for the loss of or injury to any marbles unless declared and insured according to their value. The agent, by the direction of the appellant, sent certain marbles to one of the company's stations, and instructed the carter to inquire what the insurance would be, who was told by a clerk of the company that he did not know unless the value of the goods was stated. Some correspondence ensued as to the rates of insurance for marbles, and the agent was informed verbally what the respondents' charge for the carriage of the marbles would be at the insured rate and what at the uninsured rate. The agent subsequently, by a letter of the 1st of August, 1857, instructed the company to forward the marbles "not insured," having just before such letter again received notices similar to those before mentioned. The marbles were forwarded as directed, and when delivered were found to be damaged by exposure to rain. In an action for this damage by the appellant against the company as common carriers, the company pleaded, under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31. s. 7, fourthly, that the marbles were delivered to be carried by them subject to a certain special contract, whereby it was agreed that they should not be responsible for the loss of or injury to marbles unless declared and insured according to their value, and that the same were not nor was any part thereof so declared or insured; fifthly, that the marbles were delivered and received on the above condition, and that such condition, made by the respondents and assented to by the appellant, was a just and reasonable condition. It having been decided by the Exchequer Chamber (reversing the judgment of the Queen's Bench) that the defendants were entitled to the verdict on these pleas, the House of Lords reversed that decision, and affirmed the judgment of the Queen's Bench; holding that no general notice given by a railway company is valid in law for the purpose of limiting the common law liability of the company as carriers; but that such common law liability may be limited by such conditions as the Court or Judge shall determine to be just and reasonable; and,—per the Lord Chancellor and Lord Wensleydale (Lord Cranworth and Lord Chelmsford dissenting),—such conditions must be embodied in a special contract in writing, to be signed by the owner or person delivering the goods. Held, further, Lord Chelmsford dissenting, that the condition insisted upon by the company was neither just nor reasonable, as the effect of such a condition would be to exempt the company from responsibility for injury however caused, whether by their own negligence, or even by fraud or dishonesty on the part of their servants. Held, further, Lord Chelmsford dissenting, that the letter of the 1st of August, 1857, did not constitute a special contract in writing, the words "not insured" being insufficient either expressly or by reference to embody the condition itself into the letter. Peek v. the North Staffordshire Rail. Co. (House of Lords), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 241; 10 H.L. Cas. 473.

(ii) Reasonableness of Conditions.

[See ante, (i) Effect of General Notice. And see post, (B) (a).].

A railway company were sued as common carriers for the loss of empty packages, which had already traversed the line of railway of the defendants when full, and for the return carriage of which, when empty, it was the custom not to make any further charge. The packages were delivered to the defendants at a station on their line of railway, addressed to a station on another line, to which place the defendants were not carriers. The person who delivered the goods signed the two following, with other conditions:—(1.) The company will not be answerable for the loss, or detention of, or damage to wrappers, or packages of any description charged by the company as "empties." (2.) Nor in respect of goods destined for places beyond the limits of the company's railway; and, as respects the company, their responsibility will cease when such goods shall have been delivered over to another carrier in the usual course for further conveyance. Any money which may be received by the company as payment for the conveyance of goods beyond their own limits will be so received only for the convenience of the consignors, and for the purpose of being paid to the other carrier." The goods were safely carried by the defendants to the termination of their own line of railway, and there delivered to another company. They were lost on the railway of the latter company:—Semble, that, in respect of the empty packages, the defendants were not to be considered as gratuitous bailees, and that the first condition was, therefore, not just and reasonable within the meaning of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31. s. 7). But held, that the second condition was just and reasonable within the meaning of that act, and was a good answer to the plaintiff's claim. Aldridge v. the Great Western Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 161; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 582.

Quære—Whether, without the conditions, the defendants as to forwarding these goods on other lines were liable as common carriers. Ibid.

A railway company gave public notice that fish would only be conveyed on their line by special agreement, and by particular trains; and that the sender should sign the following conditions:—"The company shall not be responsible under any circumstances for loss of market or for other loss of injury arising from delay, or detention of train, exposure to weather, stowage, or from any cause whatever other than gross neglect or fraud:—Held, in the Exchequer Chamber (affirming the judgment of the Court of Exchequer), that the conditions were just and reasonable within the meaning of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31. s. 7. In the case of a carrier "gross negligence" includes the want of reasonable care, skill and expedition which may properly be expected from him. Beal v. the South Devon Rail. Co. (Ex. Ch.), 3 Hurls. & C. 337.

(d) Conveyance of Goods within Carriers' Act, 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 68. s. 1.

Where the sender of a parcel by a carrier declares the nature and value of the articles in it at the time of its delivery to the carrier, if the carrier do not demand any increased rate for carriage to which he may be entitled under the Carriers' Act, and only the ordinary charge for carriage be paid, the carrier is not protected by the statute from his common law liability in case of an injury happening to the parcel during its journey: affirming the decision below, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 153; 6 Hurls. & N. 366. Behrens v. the Great Northern Rail. Co. (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 299; 7 Hurls. & N. 950.

The question whether an article is of the description mentioned in the 1st section of the Carriers' Act, 1 Will. 4. c. 68. is a question of fact for a jury. Brunt v. the Midland Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 187; 2 Hurls. & C. 889.

Elastic silk webbing is a woven fabric composed of one-third silk and two-thirds of india-rubber and cotton, the silk being the most valuable of the materials, and this webbing is called in the trade "silk web," as distinguished from cotton web:—Held, the question being reserved for the Court with power to draw inferences, that this webbing is within the definition in the act of "silks wrought up with other materials." Ibid.

A person who sends an article of a dangerous nature, to be carried by a carrier, is bound to take reasonable care that its dangerous nature should be communicated to the carrier and his servants who have to carry it; and if he does not do so, he is responsible for the probable consequences of such omission. Where, therefore, the defendant caused a carboy, containing nitric acid, to be delivered to the plaintiff, who was one of the servants of a carrier, in order that it might be carried by such carrier for the defendant, and the defendant did not take reasonable care to make the plaintiff aware that the acid was dangerous, but only informed him that it was an acid, and the plaintiff was burnt and injured by reason of the carboy bursting whilst, in ignorance of its dangerous character, he was carrying it on his back from the carrier's cart, it was held that the defendant was liable in an action for damages. Farrant v. Barnes, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 137; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 553.

(f) Conveyance of Live Stock.

(1) As Common Carriers and under Special Limitations of Liability.

The plaintiff delivered to the defendants, a railway company, a dog to be carried, and signed a ticket containing the following terms: "Received the annexed ticket subject to the following conditions: The company will not be liable in any case for loss or damage to any horse or other animal above the value of 40*l.*, or any dog above the value of 5*l.*, unless a declaration of its value, signed by the owner or his agent at the time of booking, shall have been given to them; and by such declaration the owner shall be bound, the company not being in any event liable to any greater amount than the value declared. The company will in no case be liable for injury to any horse or other animal or dog, of whatever value, where such injury arises wholly or partially from fear or restiveness. If the declared value of any horse or other animal exceed 40*l.*, or any dog 5*l.*, the price of conveyance will, in addition to the regular fare, be after the rate of 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent. upon the declared value above 40*l.*, whatever may be the amount of such value, and for whatever distance the animal is to be carried." The value of the dog was 21*l.*, but the plaintiff made no declaration of its value, and paid only the regular fare, 3*s.* The dog escaped from the train during the journey, without any neglect or default on the part of the company. The plaintiff having sued the company for the loss, it was held, in the Exchequer Chamber (dissentiente Wilde, B.), reversing the judgment below, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, Erle, C.J. and Keating, J. being of opinion that section 7. of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, was confined in its application to cases where the loss or injury was occasioned by the neglect or default of the company, and had no bearing on a case such as the present, where the loss arose from pure accident, and that the company were exempt from liability by the terms of their contract. Harrison v. the London, Brighton and South Coast Rail. Co. (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 113; 2 Best & S. 122.

Held, further, by Erle, C.J., Williams, J., Channell, B. and Keating, J., that, assuming that the statute applied to this case, the conditions in the ticket were reasonable and just, and that they were not to be construed as meaning to exempt, or as having the effect of exempting the company from liability for loss or injury occasioned by wilful misconduct on their part. Ibid.

Per Erle, C.J., it is for a jury, not for the Judge, to say whether the per-centage charged on the extra value declared in respect of any animal is reasonable. Ibid.

Conditions annexed by a railway company to their "cattle tickets," that "the company are to be free from all risk and responsibility with respect to any loss or damage arising in the loading or unloading, or injury in the transit from any cause whatever, it being agreed that the animals are to be carried at the owner's risk," and that "the owner of the cattle is to see to the efficiency of the waggon before his stock is placed therein, complaint to be made in writing to the company's officer before the waggon leaves the station," are—on the authority of M'Manus v. the Lancashire and Yorkshire Rail. Co.—neither just nor reasonable. Gregory v. the West Midland Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 155; 2 Hurls. & C. 944.

The defendants, a railway company, received certain cattle to be carried for the plaintiff to B station. They induced him to sign a ticket containing certain "special conditions," among others that the defendants were not to be answerable for "any consequences arising from over-carriage, detention or delay in, or in relation to the conveying or delivering of the said animals, however caused." The cattle were sent to the H station, which was a more distant station than the B station, and where they remained for some hours until they were found by the plaintiff. In consequence of the delay, and from want of food and water, the cattle were injured. There was no consideration for the special contract by charging the plaintiff a smaller rate of charge, or anything of the kind:—Held, that the cattle were injured within the meaning of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31. s. 7, and also that the condition in the ticket was unreasonable within the meaning of that section. Allday v. the Great Western Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 5; 5 Best & S. 903.

(2) Declaration of Value.

The first count of a declaration alleged, that the plaintiff employed the defendants, a railway company, to provide trucks for the carriage of horses of the plaintiff for reward, in consideration whereof the defendants promised that the trucks should be reasonably fit and proper for the carriage of the plaintiff's horses; breach by the defendants in not providing proper trucks, whereby the plaintiff's horses were injured. Second count—that the defendants, as carriers on the railway, having received from the plaintiff certain horses to be conveyed by them on their railway for hire, the said horses were injured in consequence of the defective state of the trucks provided by the defendants, and their negligence and want of care. The defendants paid 25*l.* into court, and the plaintiff claimed damages ultra. At the trial, it appeared that before the defendants would furnish the trucks, the plaintiff was requested by them to sign, and did sign, a declaration, that the value of each horse did not exceed 10*l.*, and in consideration of the rate charged for conveyance, that he agreed that they were to be carried entirely at the owner's risk. Evidence was given for the plaintiff that the horses were worth more than 10*l.* each, and it was admitted that, if taken at their real value, 40*l.* was the amount of compensation the plaintiff would be entitled to, but if at 10*l.* each, then 25*l.* was the right amount:—Held, that the declaration of the value of the horses was not part of the contract between the plaintiff and the company, but a statement of a fact by the plaintiff assumed and agreed to by the company as the basis upon which the contemplated contract was to be framed; and that consequently the plaintiff was not at liberty afterwards to deny the truth of this conventional state of the facts, nor to shew that the real value of the horses exceeded 10*l.* each: affirming the decision below, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 65; 7 Hurls. & N. 477. M'Cance v. the London and North-Western Rail. Co. (Ex. Ch.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 39; 3 Hurls. & C. 343.

The 7th section of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), enables a railway company to make reasonable conditions with respect to receiving, forwarding and delivering animals, &c., and provides that no greater damages shall be recovered from such company for the loss of or injury to a horse than 50*l.*, unless the person sending or delivering the same shall, at the time of such delivery, have declared it to be of a higher value than as above mentioned, in which case it shall be lawful for the company to demand and receive reasonable per-centage upon the excess of the value so declared, and which shall be paid in addition to the ordinary rate of charge, and such increased rate of charge shall be notified as prescribed in the 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 68. The plaintiff sent a horse of great value to the yard of the defendants' railway station or the purpose of its being carried by their railway. By the direction of one of the defendants' servants the plaintiff's groom was leading the horse to the platform, when it was startled by another horse, and backed upon some sharp iron girders lying on the spot, receiving such an injury that it was necessary to kill it. No declaration of value had been made, nor had any ticket been taken or fare demanded; the usual practice at that station being to put the horse into the box, in which it was to be conveyed, in the first instance. The defendants were guilty of negligence in putting the girders in the place upon which they were lying:—Held, by Cockburn, C.J., that as the negligence complained of was not the negligence of the defendants in their character of carriers, they were not entitled to the protection of the above section; and secondly, that if they would have been otherwise entitled to the protection, there was no evidence of their having notified the increased rate of charge as required by the section; and that therefore, on both grounds, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the full value of the horse. Held, by Mellor, J., that the provision in the section applied not only to the risks of carriage and conveyance, but also to those which attend the receiving and delivery; that the injury was done in receiving the horse; and therefore that, as there was no declaration of value, the plaintiff could not recover more than the 50*l.* Held, by Blackburn, J., that the statute is not confined to neglects and defaults after the relation of carrier and customer has been completely established, and that the real value above 50*l.* cannot be recovered unless the declaration is made before the injury happens, though it happen before the receipt by the railway company be complete. Hodgman v. the West Midland Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 233; 5 Best & S. 173.

A rule to reduce damages is a rule to enter the verdict within the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 34, and therefore gives a right to appeal. Ibid.

Section 7. of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31. (Railway and Canal Traffic Act) provides that no greater damages shall be recovered from a railway company for the loss or injury to a horse than 50*l.*, unless the person sending or delivering the same shall at the time of such delivery have declared it to be of a higher value, in which case it shall be lawful for the company to demand and receive reasonable percentage upon the excess of the value so declared, and which shall be paid in addition to the ordinary rate of charge:—Held, that the knowledge of the company as to the value of a horse not derived from a declaration to that effect by the sender does not give the company any right to demand an increased rate of charge under the above section. Held, also, that to entitle the company to demand such increased rate, the declaration must be made with an intention by the sender of the horse that it should so operate. Robinson v. the South-Western Rail. Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 234; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 51.

[See Aldridge v. Great Western Rail. Co., ante, (c) (2) (ii).]

By arrangement between the Great Western Railway Company and the South Wales Railway Company, whose lines of rails were in connexion, each company was to work both the lines, and the fares were to be divided between them. The plaintiff, wishing to go from London to Milford on the South Wales line, took a railway ticket at the Paddington Station of the Great Western Railway Company, paid his fare, and became a passenger to be conveyed by that company to Milford. After the train had passed from the Great Western Railway on to the South Wales Railway, it came (without any negligence on the part of those who managed the train) into collision with a locomotive engine left on the line by the negligence of some servants of the South Wales Company, and the plaintiff was injured:—Held, that the Great Western Railway Company was liable to the plaintiff for the injury; for a railway company impliedly contracts with a passenger to use due and reasonable care in keeping its line in a proper state for traffic, and by the arrangement between the companies the South Wales line became the line of the Great Western Railway Company in respect of their obligation to passengers. Blake v. the Great Western Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 346; 7 Hurls. & N. 987.

Per Byles, J., the same obligation would have arisen from the contract to carry the whole distance if no arrangement had existed between the companies. Ibid.

Goods were delivered to P & Co., agents at Worcester for the Great Western Railway, to be carried to Chester "via Stafford." The goods were conveyed over the line of the Great Western Railway from Worcester to Stafford, and thence to Chester over the London and North-Western Company's line, the Great Western Railway having no line between Stafford and Chester. The wagons of the Great Western Company travelled the whole journey. P & Co. were also agents for the London and North-Western Company, whom they favoured rather than the Great Western Company:—Held, that there was evidence of one contract with the Great Western Company to carry the whole journey from Worcester to Chester, and that they were therefore liable for any damage done to the goods during the journey. Webber v. the Great Western Rail. Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 170; 3 Hurls. & C. 771.

Although the consignor of goods directs a carrier to deliver them to the consignee at a particular place, the carrier may deliver them wherever he and the consignee agree. The London and North-Western Rail. Co. v. Bartlett, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 92; 7 Hurls. & N. 92.

The plaintiff having sold corn by sample, to be delivered to the purchaser at his mill, at B, sent the corn by the defendants, railway carriers, paying the freight to B station, and an extra sum for cartage from B to the mill. In pursuance of general orders previously given by the consignee to the defendants, but not communicated to the plaintiff, the defendants left the wheat at their station at B, and advised the consignee of its arrival, who examined it, but left it there for two months, and afterwards refused to take it. The wheat was deteriorated in quality during that time:—Held, that the defendants were not liable to an action by the plaintiff for not delivering at the mill, as the non-delivery there was pursuant to the orders of the consignee, and that it made no difference in this respect that the plaintiff could not recover the price of the wheat from the purchaser in consequence of there being no acceptance of the wheat within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds. Ibid.

Semble—The rights of the plaintiff and the purchaser were not affected by the non-delivery at the mill. Ibid.

A railway company undertaking to carry goods from A to B, must deliver them within a reasonable time, having reference to the means at their disposal for forwarding them; and they are not justified in delaying the delivery by adopting a particular mode of forwarding the goods, merely because that is the usual mode adopted. Hales v. the London and North-Western Rail. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 292; 4 Best & S. 66.

By a railway company's act, the tolls which the company were authorized to take were to be paid to such person and in such manner as the company should by notice, to be annexed to the list of tolls, appoint, and in case of refusal on demand to pay such tolls as may have accrued due to the person so appointed to receive the same, such person was empowered to seize the goods in respect of which such tolls ought to have been paid, and also any other goods belonging to the person to whom the goods made liable to seizure should belong, and which should pass on the railway, and to detain the same until payment of such tolls, and to sell the goods and satisfy the tolls thereout as the law directs in cases of distress for rent. The company carried coal on their railway for P, a coal merchant, under an agreement by which P was to pay the monthly accounts for such carriage, at the end of each month by a bill at two months. P stopped payment on the 6th of August, and was adjudicated bankrupt on the 24th of that month, having previously given the company a bill for the amount of the monthly account for carriage of coal, which bill became due on the day P stopped payment. This bill having been presented for payment and dishonoured, the company on the 8th of August seized all the coal which P had delivered to them to be carried on their railway, and on the 23rd of August the traffic manager of the company made a formal demand in writing of the amount due from P for the carriage of coal; this not being paid, the company afterwards sold the coal:—Held, that the assignees in bankruptcy of P were entitled to recover the value of the coal seized, as the seizure was not authorized by the statute, inasmuch as it was made by the company, and not by the person named in the notice of tolls as the person to whom they were to be paid, and as, notwithstanding the presentment and dishonour of the bill, there had not been prior to the seizure any such demand and refusal of payment as the act required. North v. the London and South-Western Rail. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 156; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 132.

(B) CHARGES AND TRAFFIC ARRANGEMENTS.

(a) Undue Preference and Unequal Charges.

Common carriers are bound to carry such goods as are tendered to them for the purpose of being carried, together with the proper charge for such carriage; and they cannot insist upon the sender signing such conditions as are unreasonable. Garton v. the Bristol and Exeter Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 273; 1 Best & S. 112.

A condition that the company should not be liable for the loss, detention, or damage of any package insufficiently packed, is unreasonable—agreeing with Simons v. the Great Western Rail. Co. Ibid.

Common carriers have no right to close their offices, and refuse to receive goods which are tendered to them with the proper amount for carriage, while at the same time they continue to receive goods, prepared, assorted and packed in the same manner, from a particular individual. Ibid.

By 6 Will. 4. c. xxxvi. the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company was incorporated, and the company was empowered to charge for the carriage of parcels. By 8 & 9 Vict. c. clv. s. 19, amending the 6 Will. 4. c. xxxvi., the company was authorized to charge at so much per ton per mile:—Held, that this provision overrides the provisions of 6 Will. 4. c. xxxvi., so far as concerned parcels exceeding 500 lb. in weight, but not as to parcels below that weight. Ibid.

The company obliged the plaintiffs to pay more than the maximum amount allowed by 8 & 9 Vict. c. clv. s. 19:—Held, that the excess paid on all parcels exceeding 500 lb. in weight might be recovered back. Ibid.

Common carriers cannot, in addition to the charges for the carriage of goods between the place where the goods are handed to them, and the place where they are ordered to be delivered, charge for collection and delivery, where they have not, in fact, collected or delivered the goods. Such charges, if imposed, and paid under protest, may be recovered back. Ibid.

The defendants, being common carriers from B to E, and also from B to B, charged the plaintiffs, who employed them to carry goods between those places, higher rates than were charged to other persons:—Held, that the sums paid in excess of the sums charged to other people could not be recovered by the plaintiffs, under a count for money had and received, on the ground simply that the charges made by the company were unequal. Ibid.

The defendants, being common carriers, were in the habit of charging certain rates upon the aggregate weight of parcels containing the same kind of goods, and brought at one time, by any one of the public, not being a common carrier; but when the plaintiffs, who were common carriers, sent a number of such packages in one parcel addressed to the plaintiffs, but each of such packages addressed separately to the person to whom it was to be sent, the defendants insisted upon charging for each parcel separately:—Held, in accordance with Parker v. the Great Western Rail. Co., that such a mode of charging was improper, and that the plaintiffs might recover the amount so improperly charged to them. Ibid.

The defendants, sometimes intentionally, and sometimes by mistake, charged the plaintiffs heavier rates than were set out in the bills published by them:—Held, that the plaintiffs could recover back the excess paid. Ibid.

By section 188. of 6 Will. 4. c. xxxvi., which incorporated the defendants as a company, it was enacted that the company should paint on boards an account of the several rates and tolls to be taken by them, and should affix such boards upon the toll-houses, &c.; and by section 189. it was enacted that the company should not take any rates or tolls, &c. except during the time that the said board should be so affixed as aforesaid:—Held, that the omission to put up such boards did not prevent the defendants from recovering such sums of money as they had a right to charge, and that the plaintiffs could not, as a result of such omission, recover back such sums as they had been charged. Ibid.

Semble—That the enactment in section 188. does not apply at all to the tolls charged for the carriage of goods in the carriages of the defendants. Ibid.

A railway company permitted a carrier (who also acted as superintendent of their goods traffic) to hold himself out as their agent for the receipt of goods to be carried on their line, and his office as the receiving office of the company; and goods were received by him at that place without requiring the senders to sign conditions which the company required all other carriers who brought goods to their stations to sign:—Held, an undue preference, and the subject of an injunction under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31. Baxendale v. the Bristol and Exeter Rail. Co., 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 787.

The defendants were a railway company from Folkstone to London under 6 Will. 4. c. lxxv, and other statutes, and a steam-packet company between Boulogne and Folkstone under 16 & 17 Vict. c. clvi., by which latter act they were authorized to maintain a packet communication between Boulogne and Folkstone. The statute 6 Will. 4. c. lxxv. s. 133. empowered the defendants to charge what to them should seem proper in respect of small parcels not exceeding 100 lb. weight each, and by 2 Vict. c. xlii. s. 17. the defendants were required to charge equally all persons and after the same rate for the carriage of goods of a like description by their railway. The 16 & 17 Vict. c. clvi. by its 15th section empowered the defendants to maintain and work steam-vessels for the purpose of carrying on an efficient communication between Folkstone and Boulogne, and authorized them to "take tolls in respect of such steam-vessels," and by sections 16. and 17. it established a maximum rate for charges in respect of the conveyance of passengers, and declared that it should be "charged to all persons equally and after the same rate in respect of passengers conveyed in a like vessel":—Held, that this last statute, which created the defendants a steam-packet company, has made no provision for equality of charges in respect of the conveyance of goods, and that the other statutes have no application to sea transit. Branly v. the South-Eastern Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 286; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 63.

Therefore, where the plaintiff, a carrier at Boulogne, delivered to the defendants three packages of goods coming under the description of "packed parcels," to be carried by the defendants by their steamboats to Folkstone, and from thence by their railway to London, and the plaintiff paid double the rate he would have paid had the goods not been so packed, but only the rate the defendants charged alike all persons according to a tariff published by them at Boulogne, in which they stated that packed parcels would be charged twice the rate of separate parcels, and there was nothing in the law of France which made this illegal,—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover back the amount of extra charge paid for such packed parcels. Ibid.

Held, also, by Erle, C.J., that the plaintiff could not recover back such amount even if the railway statutes did apply to the contract made with the defendants in France. Ibid.

(b) Allowance for Cost of Collection and Delivery to Carriers.

A railway company which carried on the business of common carriers and were empowered by their private act to charge "for the carriage of small parcels," that is to say, parcels not exceeding 500 lb. in weight each, "any sum which they think fit," charged a through rate for the carriage of goods, which rate included their collection and delivery as well as conveyance on the line of railway, and was charged in all cases, whether the goods were collected and delivered by the company or not. The company formerly made a rebate off such rate for collection and delivery, if the same were done by the customer, but the company afterwards refused to make any rebate for this off the rate charged for the carriage of the goods under 500 lb. weight. The plaintiff, who was a carrier, delivered goods under 500 lb. weight at various stations of the company's railway for carriage on their railway, and was compelled by the company to pay the rate so charged for carriage without any rebate for collection and delivery, although such collection and delivery had been done by the plaintiff and not by the company:—Held (overruling the decision below, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 225; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 1), that the plaintiff was entitled to recover back from the company the amount of such rebate in an action for money had and received. Baxendale v. the Great Western Rail. Co. (Ex. Ch.), 33 Law J. Rep. N.S. C.P. 197; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 137.

(c) Terminal Charges.

The defendants, a railway company, were by their special acts required to carry, as common carriers for hire, passengers, animals, goods, &c., for which they were by their said acts entitled to demand tolls and certain rates therein specified. The defendants having, as common carriers, received, carried on their railway, and delivered to the plaintiff certain goods consigned to him, charged him (without any previous agreement), in addition to a toll charge at the rate of 3*d.* per ton per mile (the rate at which they were by their said acts authorized to charge for tolls), a sum of 12*s.* 6*d.* as a "terminal charge" for the following services, conveniences and expenses, namely, —the receiving the goods by their porters and servants when brought to their station; the weighing and invoicing the same and loading it on their trucks; the use of their station, yards, sheds and platforms; the gaslight and other conveniences necessarily connected with such stations, sheds, and platforms for the purposes of receiving, loading and unloading goods; the making of proper entries of the receiving and delivering the goods by the defendants' clerks and agents in books kept for that purpose; and also for the risk incidental to the loading, carrying, and unloading:—Held, that the defendants were not entitled to charge any sum as a "terminal charge" over and above the charges authorized to be taken as tolls by their special acts. But, semble, that for some of the services, conveniences and facilities afforded by the defendants beyond the mere carriage of the goods, they might, by previous agreement, be entitled to make some charge. Pegler v. the Monmouthshire Rail. and Canal Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 249; 6 Hurls. & N. 644.

(C) DAMAGES; CRITERION OF.

In an action against carriers for the non-delivery, according to contract, of goods of a marketable kind intended for sale, the jury may give as damages the difference between the market value on the day the goods ought to have been brought to market and the day on which they are afterwards brought to market, although no notice be given to the carrier that the goods were intended for market; for such damages are the natural and immediate consequence of the defendant's act. Collard v. the South-Eastern Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 393; 7 Hurls. & N. 79.

There is no difference in the application of this rule, between a delay occasioned by the detention of goods in the hands of the carrier, and a delay necessary for the purpose of restoring goods to a marketable state when delivered by the carrier in a damaged condition. Ibid.

The plaintiff sent hops in bags from Kent to London by the defendants' railway for the purpose of delivery to the vendee, a hop-dealer. The hops were detained by the defendants several days, and received some damage from water, and the vendee refused to accept them. The plaintiff dried the hops, and when fit for sale the price had fallen in value. Independently of that, the stained portion of the hops deteriorated the marketable value of the whole, although for the purpose of brewing, the value of the bulk was unaffected:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, as damages, from the defendants the difference in price of the amount of deterioration in market value, and was not confined to the value of the parts actually damaged, although the defendants had no notice that the hops were sent for the purpose of sale, and not for use. Ibid.

Where goods are sent by a carrier, the consignee is entitled to recover their value at the place to which they are consigned, as distinguished from the place at which they were delivered to the carrier. Rice v. Baxendale, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 371; 7 Hurls. & N. 96.

In an action against a carrier for the loss of a parcel of goods, the measure of damages is, in general, the market value of the goods at the place and time at which they ought to have been delivered. If there is no market for the sale of such goods at the place, then the jury must ascertain their value by taking the price at the place of manufacture, together with the cost of carriage, and allowing a reasonable sum for importer's profit. Rice v. Baxendale commented upon. O'Hanlan v. the Great Western Rail. Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 154; 6 Best & S. 484.

CERTIORARI.

Where the military status alone, apart from the civil status of a person, is affected by the sentence of a court-martial, this Court will not interfere to control the jurisdiction of the Court. Where, therefore, a military officer has been found guilty of an offence and sentenced by a court-martial to be dismissed the service, the Court refused to grant a certiorari to bring up the proceedings on a suggestion that the court-martial had no jurisdiction over the offender. In re Mansergh, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 296; 1 Best & S. 400.

Semble—That this Court has no jurisdiction to grant a certiorari to bring up the proceedings of a court-martial holden in India; and this, though the documents are in the custody of the Judge Advocate General in England. Ibid.

Under the provisions of section 16. of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98. (the Local Government Act), the ratepayers of T petitioned one of the Secretaries of State to settle the boundaries with a view to the adoption of the act. An order was made setting out the boundaries, and a resolution was duly carried for the adoption of the act. An appeal was presented to the Secretary of State by S, a ratepayer, on the ground that the boundaries, as set out, comprised land not included within the limits from which the petition proceeded. After inquiry into the circumstances, the Secretary of State dismissed the petition, and ordered that the act should, after the expiration of one month from the date of the order, have the force of law within the district of T:—Held (dubitante Cockburn, C.J.), that the Court would not, after all this had been done, issue a certiorari to bring up the order for settling the boundaries of the district. In re Todmorden, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 305.

CHAMPERTY.

[See ATTORNEY AND SOLICITOR, (F) Dealings with Client; Grell v. Levy.]

A legatee, too poor to sue, assigned the legacy for less than it was worth to the plaintiff, who bought it for the purpose of enforcing payment by suit:—Held, that this did not amount to champerty or maintenance. Tyson v. Jackson, 30 Beav. 384.

CHARITY.

[The jurisdiction of the Charity Commissioners in certain cases established by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 112.]

(A) CHARITABLE TRUSTS ACTS.
(B) CONSTRUCTION OF INSTRUMENT CREATING.
(C) VALIDITY OF DEVISE AND BEQUEST.
(D) SUPERSTITIOUS USES.
(E) ADMINISTRATION OF.
  (b) Trustees.

(A) CHARITABLE TRUSTS ACTS.

Lands given for the benefit of the poor of a parish generally, or to trustees to permit the churchwardens to distribute the rents among the poor of the parish generally, as directed by two or more of the inhabitants of the parish,—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, to be vested in the churchwardens and overseers as a corporation, under the 59 Geo. 3. c. 12. s. 17, and therefore that the Charity Commissioners had no jurisdiction to make an order vesting the legal estate in the lands in the official trustee of charities without the consent of the churchwardens and overseers. Ex parte Nicholls, in re the Hackney Charities, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 169.

Secus—as to lands given upon a special trust, that the rents might be bestowed in loaves of bread. Ibid.

Held, also, per the Master of the Rolls, that the Charitable Trusts Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 136. s. 8), gives a right to appeal to two inhabitants within three months after "definitive publication" of the order of the Charity Commissioners, irrespective of any consent either of the Attorney General or the Board, or of the amount of the income of the charity. But, on appeal, held, per the Lord Justice Turner, (Knight Bruce, L.J. concurring on other grounds, in an order reversing that made at the Rolls), that the right of appeal is conferred on any two inhabitants of the parish only in cases where the actual gross annual income of the charity exceeds 50*l*. Ibid.

Per the Master of the Rolls—The three calendar months after "definitive publication" are to be computed from the date when publication becomes complete by the expiration of the month during which it is directed to be made. Ibid.

(B) CONSTRUCTION OF INSTRUMENT CREATING.

If lands are given to a corporation, subject to certain specified charges for charitable purposes, the increased rents will belong to the donees of the lands. The question is one of construction alone. A decision of the House of Lords is as binding on that House itself as upon any inferior tribunal,—dubitante Lord Kingsdown. The Attorney-General v. the Dean and Canons of Windsor (House of Lords), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 529; 8 H.L. Cas. 369.

A testator gave the produce of real estate for the maintenance of three boys at one of the Universities for three years, who had been brought up at the petty school at Wakefield, which he had founded, until they should be fit to go to the Free Grammar School, and from thence to the University. A scheme for the management of the charity declared that the boys should be chosen first from those born in the town of Wakefield, who shall have been three years at the Free School, then from boys born in the parish of Wakefield who have been three years at the Free School, and then from other boys who have been three years at the Free School. The Charity Commissioners advised that the proper construction of the scheme was, that the qualification of a candidate for the exhibition to the University was a residence at the Free School for three consecutive years immediately preceding the election. The Governors did not adopt this advice; and, upon a complaint by a candidate that an undue election had been made, the Master of the Rolls decided that the three years were not necessarily those next preceding the day of election, but that a boy born in the town, who had been for three years at the Free School, was eligible, though he had left for five years and had gone to another public school from which he was elected; and his Honour refused an application to set aside the election, with costs. On appeal to the Lords Justices, they held, in conformity with the opinion of the Charity Commissioners, that the three years must be an entire period immediately preceding the election, though their Lordships refused to disturb the election of the candidate who had been sent to the University, and ordered the costs both of the petitioner and the respondent to be paid out of the charity funds. In re Storie's University Gift, and in re the Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 and 1855, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 193.

The Court having inferred from reference to the parish church in the deed of endowment, that a school founded in 1601 was a Church of England school, held, that the trustees and the schoolmaster also (if possible) ought to be members of that church, but that the instruction was open to scholars of every religious denomination. The Attorney General v. Clifton, 32 Beav. 596.

The trust deed of a Baptist chapel provided that the trustees should allow the minister to occupy a house (part of the trust property), but in case he did not occupy it, authorized the trustees to let it, and apply the rents to pay off the mortgage. The trustees without offering it to the minister let the house to another person for the alleged purpose of applying the rent to pay off a mortgage, but the Court set the lease aside and ordered possession to be given to the minister. Ward v. Hipwell, 3 Giff. 547.

The majority of trustees of a dissenting chapel have no right to deal with the trust property otherwise than according to the true construction of the deed of trust. Ibid.

A testatrix in 1763 bequeathed her residue in trust for the vicar of N for the time being for ever, he annually preaching a sermon, the same to be paid "in augmentation" of the vicarage. The income had not been paid from 1841 to 1863, and in 1847 a sequestration had issued against the vicar, and he had become insolvent in 1852, but no sequestration had issued upon it. The Court assumed the assent of the ordinary:—Held, that the gift constituted an augmentation to the living and not a mere legacy to the vicar for the time being, and that the arrears down to 1847 belonged to the vicar and the subsequent income to the sequestrator. In re Parker's Charity, 32 Beav. 654.

By an act of parliament for the employment and maintenance of the poor in the city of Canterbury (1 Geo. 2. c. 30), certain persons were constituted guardians of the poor for the purpose of managing a charity school, with a direction that the rents of the charity should be applied for the maintaining and lodging of sixteen poor boys of the city, to be called Bluecoat boys, who were to be nominated and elected by the mayor and commonalty of the said city. A doubt having arisen as to the description of boys to be elected to vacancies in the school, a suit was instituted; and the Court held, that the mayor and corporation were not bound to confine themselves in their election to those poor boys who required parish relief, or the children of persons requiring such relief.

The Guardians of the Poor of Canterbury v. the Mayor and Corporation of Canterbury, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 810.

Devise to two colleges for the use and education of the descendants of any brothers, &c., "or in default of such to their next poor kindred":—Held, that this was a good charitable trust, but that if no objects existed the property was given beneficially to the two colleges. The Attorney General v. Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, 34 Beav. 654.

An estate was devised in equal moieties to two colleges on charitable trusts, and upon an information relating only to one moiety, a decree had been made and enrolled:—Held, that having regard to the pleadings and parties, it was no bar to a subsequent information which embraced the two moieties. Ibid.

College statutes made under the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 88, held not to affect the rights of a founder's kin. Ibid.

(C) VALIDITY OF DEVISE AND BEQUEST.

A bequest to a charity upon trust to be applied for certain specified purposes will not fail if the object of the gift can be effected, though the charity itself may have ceased to exist. Marsh v. the Attorney General, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 233; 2 Jo. & H. 61.

Where a bequest to a charity fails pro tanto, as being given out of the proceeds of pure and impure personalty, the proportion in which the bequest fails is to be ascertained according to the state and value of the assets at the testator's death and not at the time of the apportionment. Calvert v. Armitage, 1 Hem. & M. 446.

A testator, by his will, gave his estate in L to two colleges for the only use, education in piety and learning of four of the descendants of his brothers and sisters, and three of the descendants of the brother and sister of his first wife, and three of the descendants of the brothers and sisters of his second wife, and in default of such to their next of kindred, for the first by the father's side, for the second by the mother's side; "and the lease of the said L to be at one-third part under true value to my said wives' kindred ever, viz. brothers and sisters, there and at Harrow." The colleges entered into possession of the estate, and leases were granted in accordance with the direction for upwards of 200 years:—Held, upon an information filed at the relation of one of the colleges, that the estate was devised to the colleges absolutely for charitable purposes; and that the direction to lease to the kindred was void as amounting to a perpetuity. The Attorney General v. Greenhill, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 208; 33 Beav. 193.

Held, also, that a single defendant to whom leases had been granted in accordance with the direction, sufficiently represented all parties interested under the direction to lease; and that the decision being in favour of the colleges a decree might be made, although one only of the two colleges was before the Court. Ibid.

A legacy was given upon trust to appropriate the income towards the maintenance of family graves existing in B churchyard, and then to pay the surplus to the rector of the parish for the time being:—Held, that the first purpose was void as tending to a perpetuity, and that as the amount required to carry it into effect could not be ascertained the gift of the surplus was void for uncertainty. Fowler v. Fowler, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 674; 33 Beav. 616.

(D) SUPERSTITIOUS USES.

A trust for the benefit of several officiating priests in different Roman Catholic chapels, on condition of their saying masses for the repose of the soul of the donor, is void as a superstitious use, and cannot be supported as a charitable use. In re Blundell's Trusts, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 52; 30 Beav. 360.

A trust for printing, publishing and propagating the works of Johanna Southcote is not a superstitious use so as to be absolutely void, but is a charitable trust. Thornton v. Howe, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 767; 31 Beav. 14.

(E) ADMINISTRATION OF.

If two schemes are proposed for the regulation of a charity, and both depart from the obsolete purposes of the original foundation, the Court will approve of that which promotes, though indirectly, the object of the original foundation, and it will reject that which might possibly increase what the original foundation sought to prevent. In re Bridewell Hospital, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 99.

Where, therefore, a charity was founded for the suppression of idleness and vagrancy, by providing compulsory labour for adults, it was varied, by providing for youth of the same class instruction and intellectual exertion, with a view to impress upon them good principles and furnish them with industrial habits to direct their future course in life. Ibid.

A scheme which merely provided a nightly refuge for the destitute, without any condition of labour being attached, was rejected, on the ground that it had a tendency to increase, rather than diminish, vagrancy and idleness. Ibid.

An annual sum given for a chaplain of a prison will not be applied for the delinquents for whose welfare he was to be appointed. In re Hussey's Charities; Cheyne v. Apreece; Symons v. Delaval, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 491.

A testatrix gave an annual sum for a clergyman to preach on Sunday and pray daily with the prisoners in the gaol at L. There were now two gaols at L:—Held, that the income ought to be paid to the chaplains of both gaols in proportion to the number of prisoners under their charge. Ibid.

A scheme directed for regulating the French Protestant Church in London and the charities connected therewith. The Attorney General v. Daugars, 33 Beav. 621.

In a suit for a scheme for a charity, the Court declined going into questions as to the validity of the appointment of existing officers of the charity, against whom there was no personal imputation, or to remove them. Ibid.

(b) Trustees.

In the reign of Edward the Sixth a charity was founded in Ilminster for the teaching of "literature and godly learning." The trustees were to appoint and remove the schoolmaster. When their number was reduced to four, they were to fill it up to twenty. They were to take accounts, &c., and if the funds gave a surplus, they were to apply it to relieve the inhabitants, in mending highways and bridges, and supplying water. For the last 156 years dissenters had frequently been appointed members of the body of trustees, and in 1857 the surviving trustees named fifteen persons, all of whom were qualified to be trustees, except that three of them were dissenters. Their appointment was objected to. The Master of the Rolls held them to be "eligible." The Lords Justices varied his order, declaring that dissenters ought not to have been appointed. On appeal, the Lords were equally divided, and so the order of the Lords Justices stood affirmed. It was affirmed without costs, which were ordered to come out of the fund. Baker v. Lee (House of Lords), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 625 ; 8 H.L. Cas. 495.

The trustees of a charity were by a decree of this Court to be chosen at a vestry meeting of the parish; the constitution of the vestry was altered by the legislature:—Held, that the legislature could control the decree and the scheme, but that the vacancies among the trustees must be filled up by the vestry for the time being. In re Hayle's Estate, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 612; 31 Beav. 139.

The Court, though holding a trustee to have been originally improperly appointed, declined to remove him. The Attorney General v. Clifton, 32 Beav. 596.

Residence within a parish being a necessary qualification of trustees on their appointment,—Held, that their removal out of the parish after their appointment, to such a distance as to make it impossible to attend to their duties, would be a vacating of their office. Ibid.

The Hospital of St. John at Bedford appeared to have been founded, or reconstituted, in 1280, "for the support of two or three brethren, the most advanced of whom was to hold the place of master, and for the relief of the poor of Bedford." The mastership of the hospital had from the earliest mention of the parish of St. John been inseparably united with the rectory of the parish. From the year 1280 to 1374, the master was elected by the brethren, but in 1444, a vacancy was filled up on the presentation of the mayor of Bedford, and from that time the united mastership and rectory had always been filled up on the presentation of the mayor or the mayor and burgesses, but there was no evidence to shew by what right these presentations were made. The corporation seal of the hospital was still in existence and leases were granted thereunder and small payments were made to ten poor persons called beadsmen:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, that the long exercise by the mayor of the right to present to the mastership could not supersede the original trusts; and that as well the property of the hospital as the right of presentation to the mastership remained subject to these trusts. The Attorney General v. the Master and Co-brethren of the Hospital of St. John, Bedford, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 441.

On appeal, the Lords Justices affirmed the decree so far as it related to property of the hospital, but held that the corporation could not be treated as trustees of the right of presentation to the mastership. Ibid.

In a suit relating to the validity of the removal of a pastor, the trustees were ordered to pay the costs. They paid them out of the charity funds, but upon an information by the Attorney General they were ordered to replace the amount. The Attorney General v. Daugars, 33 Beav. 621.

Although as a general rule the Court, in ordering capital funds of a charity to be applied for a special purpose, requires that they shall be recouped out of income, its object being to enlarge the benefits of the charity, yet in a case where the only object of a charity was (subject to small charges for repairs, &c.) the support of an incumbent, the Court upon the petition of the incumbent and trustees of the chapel funds, ordered 1,000*l.* to be applied out of the capital towards repairing and enlarging the chapel, without requiring it to be recouped out of income. In re Willenhall Chapel Estates, 2 Dr. & S. 467.

Where it was necessary to grant a large number of building leases of charity lands in nearly the same form under the provisions of an act of parliament, and one lease had been settled in chambers, the Court allowed the charity to grant other building leases from time to time in the same form without reference to chambers, the model lease being appended to the order. The Attorney General v. Christ Church, Oxford, 3 Giff. 514.

If a charity proceeds against a part of property charged with a rentcharge and is successful in proving its claim, the Court will direct an inquiry as to the other property charged, but at the expense of the party desiring such inquiry. The Attorney General v. Naylor, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 151.

A testator, after reciting his desire to encourage learning in Jesus College, gave all his real and personal estates upon trust, out of the yearly rents to provide stipends for six scholars and six exhibitions (which together amounted to 108*l.* a year), and to lay out the remainder in the purchase of advowsons. By a codicil he recited the purchase of lands in M; he then founded a school at B, and gave two sums of 15*l.*, one to clothe thirty scholars, and the other to the schoolmaster; and he "gave so much money to be laid out yearly, and as often as the visitors and trustees of the school should think fit, for the repair of the school-house, there being of the present rents of my estate in M, above the 108*l.* per annum and the two sums of 15*l.*, the sum of 4*l.* 17*s.*, which being reduced by 3*l.* 12*s.*, the rent of the school-house and land, left 1*l.* 5*s.* per annum for the repair of the school-house for ever." The M estate had since increased in value, and, after providing for the stipends given by the will and codicil, there remained a surplus beyond the 4*l.* 17*s.* Upon an information, asking that the surplus, or some part thereof, might be applied for the benefit of the school,—Held, that the school was not entitled to the whole of the surplus rents, but only to such a proportion as 4*l.* 17*s.* bore to the original annual rents of the M estate, and that such part must be applied in payment of the rent of the school-house and land, and then for the repair of the school-house. The Attorney General v. Jesus College, Oxford, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 675; 29 Beav. 163.

(A) Right to the Possession of Church and Chancel.
(B) Services.
(C) Estates.
(D) District and District Church.
(E) Church Building Acts.

(A) Right to the Possession of Church and Chancel.

Though the freehold of a parish church may be in a lay rector, the right of the possession of the church is in the minister and churchwardens; and therefore a lay rector cannot maintain trespass against the vicar of the parish for breaking open a door leading from the churchyard into the chancel. Griffin v. Deighton (Ex. Ch.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 181; 5 Best & S. 108: affirming the decision below, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 29.

(B) Services.

A B gave 1,000*l.*, which he vested in trustees, for the endowment of a new district church. After it had been consecrated, A B and the trustees by deed declared that the funds were held in trust to pay the income to the incumbent so long as he "conducted the services according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England in strict and literal accordance with the order of the Book of the Common Prayer," and they also provided that disputes were to be referred to the bishop:—Held, that daily service was not required, and that disputes as to the conduct of the services ought to be referred to the ordinary. In re Hartshill Endowment, 30 Beav. 130.

Whether, under the above circumstances, A B had any power, after consecration of the church, to regulate the trusts of the endowment fund—quære. Ibid.

If numerous churches belong to a body of dissenters and each church claims a right to act independently of the other churches in all matters pertaining to it, as well spiritual as temporal, and two modes of communion divide the congregational polity of the churches in practice, a congregation of one church, though it has practised one mode of communion for years, may still change to the other; and the dissentient minority abstaining from all communion with the congregation will be subject to the discipline of the church, and may be declared not to be members of the congregation. The Attorney General v. Gould, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 77.

This Court will not interfere to prevent a congregation of such a church from adopting a practice which from time to time shall be approved of by the majority of the congregation, so that it does not affect a fundamental point of faith. Ibid.

Where, therefore, by a deed dated the 24th of November 1746, a chapel was conveyed to trustees and their heirs, to and for the use and benefit of the congregation of Particular Baptists within the city of N for the time being, that the same might always be held and enjoyed for and as their place of worship,—it was held, as the principles of open communion and strict communion were not fundamental points of faith, and must be subject to the regulation of each church or congregation, that the majority of a congregation holding communion at the chapel might reject the practice of "strict communion," which was alleged to have been practised from the foundation of the chapel, and adopt the practice of "open communion" without violating the trusts declared of the chapel. Ibid.

(C) Estates.

The parson has no right without the consent of the patron and ordinary to open mines under the glebe. Holden v. Weekes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 35; 1 Jo. & H. 280.

The patron is the proper person alone to institute a suit for the purpose of restraining waste by the incumbent, but the ordinary may institute a suit to take proceedings to prevent waste by collusion between the patron and the incumbent. Ibid.

The patron coming to the Court to restrain waste is not entitled to an account of past profits before the filing of the bill. Ibid.

(D) District and District Church.

The formation of a district or chapelry on the requisition of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, by an Order of the Queen in Council, under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70. s. 9, is valid, without any enrolment in Chancery of the name, boundaries, &c., as required by the 59 Geo. 3. c. 134. s. 6. R. v. the Overseers of South Weald, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 193; 5 Best & S. 391.

An ancient chapelry, situate within a large parish, had from time immemorial had a separate church and churchyard, and separate churchwardens and church-rates, and the incumbent had performed marriages, christenings, churchings and burials, and retained the fees to his own use. The right of presentation to the chapelry (which was a perpetual curacy) was in the rector of the parish. The chapelry was described as a "parish" in the Ecclesiastical Survey, but in recent local acts of parliament the church of the chapelry was referred to as a "church or ancient chapel of ease":—Held, that the chapelry was not a distinct parish, and that under the power conferred by the 59 Geo. 3. c. 134. s. 16, authorizing the assignment of a district to a chapel of ease or parochial chapel, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners were authorized to divide the chapelry into districts and to assign a particular district to the ancient chapel. Tuckniss v. Alexander, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 794.

The incumbent of a district parish validly constituted under the Church Building Acts (58 Geo. 3. c. 45. and 59 Geo. 3. c. 134), has an exclusive right to celebrate marriages by banns, between persons both of whom are resident within the district parish. Ibid.

Whether after the creation, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37. (Peel's Act), of new parishes out of parts of any existing parish, the incumbent of the old parish still retains by virtue of the saving clause (s. 18.) the right to publish banns and celebrate marriages between persons both of whom are resident in the new parishes —quære. Ibid.

Where a licence is granted, in due form, for marriage at a particular church, the incumbent is under no obligation to inquire whether there has been a sufficient residence to justify the granting of the licence. His proper course is to assume the regularity of licence and to perform the marriage ceremony. Ibid.

(E) Church Building Acts.

[See Churchwardens; Election of.]

The Church Building Acts do not apply to a parish which has already been the subject of private legislation. Fitzgerald v. Champneys, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 777; 2 Jo. & H. 31.

By a deed of 1840 a certain chapel was vested in trustees, upon trust to permit the same to be used as a chapel of ease, dependent upon the parish church, and to permit the vicar for the time being or his curates to officiate as ministers thereof, and to allow the vicar and churchwardens to let the pews, and to permit the churchwardens to receive the pew-rents and other emoluments for the benefit of the vicar, after paying the necessary expenses; and the vicar and churchwardens were authorized to appoint the clerk, pew-openers and other officers of the chapel. By an Order in Council, dated October 1860, the said chapel was constituted a district chapelry, and it was ordered that marriages, baptisms, &c. should be solemnized and performed in the chapel, and that the fees should belong to the minister of such chapel for the time being, subject to a proviso that so long as the existing vicar remained vicar the fees should be paid to him, but the Order did not mention or affect to deal with the pew-rents:—Held, that the effect of the Order in Council was to withdraw the chapel from all the purposes included in the trust deed; to constitute the district chapelry a benefice; and to deprive the vicar and churchwardens of the parish church of all right to receive the pew-rents, or to nominate the officers of the church. Fitzgerald v. Fitzpatrick, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 670.

Whether after the creation of the district chapelry the pews of the chapel could lawfully be let and the pew-rents received for the benefit of the minister of the chapel—quære. Ibid.

CHURCHWARDENS.

(A) Election of.

Where a new church has been built, and a district assigned to it, under 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 38, and the bishop has given his licence for the publication of banns, and the solemnization of marriages therein, and for the taking by the minister of the same fees as were taken at the mother church, such district does not become a separate and distinct parish within section 14. of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, so that the provisions of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37. should apply to it. And held, therefore, in such a case, that it was still lawful for the pew-renters to choose one of the churchwardens, and that it was not necessary that he should be appointed by the parishioners. R. v. Perry, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 141; 3 E. & E. 640.

Semble—That the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37. s. 5. does not apply to a district constituted under the 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 38, with a licence by the bishop under the 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 85. Ibid.

Though a district of an old parish, appropriated to a new church under the 58 Geo. 3. c. 45, the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37. and the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, becomes a separate parish for all ecclesiastical purposes, it remains part of the old parish for parochial purposes, and the inhabitants of the district have a right to vote in vestry in the election of churchwardens for the old parish. R. v. Stevens, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 90; 3 Best & S. 333.

(B) Invalid Appointment, Remedy for.

Where, by custom in a parish, the rector nominates one churchwarden and the parishioners the other, and the rector nominated as churchwarden a person who was not resident nor the occupier of any house or land in the parish, and the person so appointed was afterwards sworn into office; and it was desired to question the validity of the appointment, on the ground that the person appointed was not legally qualified: the Court held, that an application for a mandamus to the rector to nominate a churchwarden was a proper course for that purpose, and made absolute a rule for such a mandamus. In re Barlow, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 270.

A quo warranto does not lie for usurping the office of churchwarden. Ibid.

(C) Duration of Office.

A churchwarden, whose year of office has expired, continues in office where his successor has been elected, but has not been sworn, nor has made the substituted declaration, nor has done any act which would make him churchwarden de facto. Bray v. Somer, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 135; 2 Best & S. 374.

Such churchwarden is therefore bound to sign the jury lists under the 7 Geo. 4. c. 50. ss. 8. and 9, and is liable to penalties under section 45. for not having done so. Ibid.

(D) Rights and Liabilities.

Where an incumbent of a church was making alterations in the pews and internal fittings and in the flooring of a church, a suit being instituted by the churchwardens, the Court ordered that the plaintiffs and defendants should lay before the Judge in chambers proposals for fitting up the interior of the church, such proposals to be subject to the approbation of the bishop, and on the chief clerk's certificate that the plan was so approved, the Court ordered the adoption of the plan. Cardinall v. Molyneux, 2 Giff. 535.

By immemorial custom churchwardens may be bound to pay visitation fees to the registrars of the archdeacon. Shepherd v. Payne (Ex. Ch.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 158; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 132.

When proof has been given that for an unbroken period of 130 years a certain fixed amount has been paid for fees which can have a legal origin, the jury should presume the immemorial existence of the payment, unless evidence be given to satisfy them that the payment is a usurpation; and this presumption should be made by them, notwithstanding that they do not in point of fact believe in the existence of the payment from the time of legal memory. Ibid.

If during the latter part of the 130 years a larger sum than the sum paid during the first 70 years of that period be charged and paid, the excess will evidently be an usurpation; but the fact of the excess does not destroy the value of the evidence as to the payment of the original sum. Ibid.

Slight evidence raising an inference that the payments in some years previous to the 130 years were lower and varying in amount, is not sufficient to satisfy the onus cast on those who seek to upset a right founded on so long an enjoyment, and to rebut the strong presumption in favour of its legal origin. Ibid.

A agreed to build an organ for B, and to fix it in the parish church of C for 768*l.*, to be paid by certain yearly instalments. The agreement then provided that, "in the event of the said organ being completed and erected as aforesaid, and the said sum of 768*l.* or any part thereof not being paid at the time or times thereinbefore mentioned, then it was thereby declared and agreed that the whole sum or balance, with the interest then due thereon, should become due and payable to W, and might be sued for and recovered accordingly; and in the mean time, and until the said balance and interest should be paid and discharged, W should have a lien on the organ; and, in default of any or either of such payments as thereinbefore mentioned, W might either dispose of or remove the organ as he might think proper":—Held, that the property in the organ remained in A until the instalments were paid. The instalments being unpaid, A demanded the organ of the vicar of C and the churchwardens. The vicar kept the church-door locked, and refused to allow the organ to be removed, claiming a lien upon it. The churchwardens did nothing:—Held, that the vicar was liable in trover, not the churchwardens. Walker v. Clyde, 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 381.

Semble—That the absence of a faculty for the removal of the organ was no answer to the plaintiff's claim. Ibid.

CLERK OF THE PEACE.

[The law relating to the removal of clerks of the peace amended by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 65.]

By the 103rd section of the Municipal Corporation Act (5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 76), after the grant of a separate court of quarter sessions to a borough, "the town council shall appoint a fit person to be clerk of the peace during his good behaviour"; and by section 105. the Recorder is to hold quarter sessions, "of which he shall be sole Judge, and such court shall be a court of record, and shall have cognizance of all crimes, offences and matters whatsoever cognizable by any Court of quarter sessions for counties," provided that no Recorder shall have power to make or levy a county rate or to grant licences for alehouses, &c., or to "exercise any powers by the act specially vested in the town council":—Held, that the removal of the clerk of the peace of a borough for misbehaviour was vested by the above enactment in the Recorder; such power of removal being given by the 1 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 21. s. 6. to the quarter sessions in counties; and that the town council had no power to remove. R. v. Hayward, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 177; 2 Best & S. 585.

Semble—That the effect of the 1 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 21. s. 6. is to give the jurisdiction to the Quarter Sessions alone; and that the custos rotulorum has no power, since the act, to remove a clerk of the peace. Ibid.

Having in Possession a Coining Mould.

The police entering prisoner's house in his absence took from some persons inside a plaster of Paris mould of a half-crown, part of which was still wet, after a resistance on their part, and an attempt by them to destroy the mould. Materials suitable for melting lead and making plaster of Paris moulds were found in various parts of the house. Shortly afterwards the prisoner came in. He had passed a bad half-crown thirteen days before, but there was no evidence to shew that it was made in the mould seized:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence to justify the conviction of the prisoner for knowingly and without lawful excuse feloniously having in his custody and possession a mould on which was impressed the figure and apparent resemblance of the obverse side of a half-crown. R. v. Weeks, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 141; 1 L. & C. 18.

The prisoner knowingly passed as and for a half-sovereign a coin of less value, of about the same size and colour as a half-sovereign. On the obverse side was the Queen's head, as on a half-sovereign, but with a different inscription. No evidence was given of the appearance of the reverse side of the coin. The coin itself was not produced to the jury:—Held, that there was some evidence to support a conviction of the prisoner uttering, with intent to defraud, a coin resembling a half-sovereign in size, figure and colour. R. v. Robinson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 176; 1 L. & C. 604.

The discharge of an insolvent from his debts, under a sequestration pursuant to an act of a colonial legislature having power from the imperial legislature of this country to make laws, is no answer to an action by an English subject on a contract made and to be performed in England. Bartley v. Hodges, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 352; 1 Best & S. 375.

Declaration for money received, money lent, money paid, interest, and on accounts stated. Plea, that the defendant was resident in the colony of Victoria, and that the debts were contracted within the colony of Victoria, and subject to the laws thereof; and that the defendant was discharged from the debts by the insolvent law of the colony. Replication, 1. That when the debts were contracted the plaintiff was resident at L in England, and that at the time of the commencement of the suit the defendant was resident in England. 2. That under and by virtue of the contracts by which the debts became payable, they ought to have been paid to the plaintiff in England. Held, that the replications shewed no answer,—because the first admitted that the debts sued on were contracted within the colony of Victoria; and the second did not shew that they were payable in England, and not elsewhere. Gardiner v. Houghton, 2 Best & S. 743.

If an absolute owner in fee of a West India estate appoints a manager, he is entitled to a lien on the inheritance for the full amount of what is due to him on account of his management, and the costs of the cultivation. Bernard v. Davies, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 41; sub nom. Bertrand v. Davies, 31 Beav. 429.

If a manager is appointed by a tenant for life he can acquire no lien on the inheritance of the estate for the costs of such management and cultivation after the death of the tenant for life. Ibid.

If emblements are growing on the estate at the decease of the tenant for life, the manager will be entitled to a lien for the sums expended in their production, if the person in remainder is entitled to the benefit thereof. Ibid.

If, upon notice, the manager refuses to give up possession to the remainderman, and claims a lien on the estate for moneys expended during the life of the tenant for life, he will be treated as a mortgagee in possession, and on such principle accounts will be directed against him. Ibid.

If a mortgagor (owner in fee) of a West India estate appoints a manager, and dies, the costs of management and cultivation are not a lien on the estate against the mortgagees, who have not acquiesced in the appointment. Ibid.

COMMON.

To a declaration in trespass the defendant pleaded thirty years' enjoyment of right of common of pasture over the locus in quo for the cattle levant and couchant upon the toftstead belonging to him as appurtenant thereto:—Held, that the number of commonable cattle not being in question, it was not necessary, for the support of the plea, that the cattle should actually be fed upon the produce of the toftstead; and that there is no distinction, in this respect, between a plea, founded on the Prescription Act, and a plea grounded on prescription properly so called. Carr v. Lambert, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 66; 3 Hurls. & C. 499.

The rights of common exercisable over Hainault Forest, and the jurisdiction of the Commissioners under the Disafforesting Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 43.) and the Allotment Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 37.) considered and discussed. In re Hainalt Forest, 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 648.

COMMISSIONERS' CLAUSES ACT.

In an action for penalties against a town commissioner, under a local Lighting and Drainage Act, which incorporated the Commissioners' Clauses Act, 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 16, for acting as a commissioner after being disqualified, a bill was produced, made out by the defendant, and addressed to the commissioners, for lime purporting to have been supplied at four different times, and receipted by the defendant:—Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury that the defendant was "concerned in a contract," within the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 16. s. 9, which enacts, that any person who at any time after his appointment or election as a commissioner shall be concerned or participate in any manner in any contract under the authority of the special act, shall thenceforth cease to be a commissioner. Nicholson v. Fields, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 233; 7 Hurls. & N. 810.

Held, also, that he thereby became "disqualified," within section 15. of the same act, which imposes a penalty on commissioners acting after having become disqualified. Ibid.

The special act enacted that every person rated to a certain amount within the limits of the act should be a commissioner:—Held, that a person so rated and acting as a commissioner was an appointed commissioner, within the meaning of section 9. of the general act. Ibid.

[Provisions relating to the constitution and management of companies incorporated for carrying on undertakings of a public nature consolidated by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 118 (the Companies' Clauses Act, 1865).]

1.—RAILWAY AND OTHER INCORPORATED COMPANIES.

2.—JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.

3.—DISSOLUTION AND WINDING-UP OF COMPANIES.

1.—RAILWAY AND OTHER INCORPORATED COMPANIES.

(A) CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

When the legislature authorizes railway directors to take, for the purposes of their undertaking, any lands specially described in their acts, it constitutes them the judges whether they will or not take these lands, provided that they act with the bona fide object of using the lands for the purposes authorized by the act, and not for any collateral purpose. Having provided for affording compensation to the owners of the lands, the legislature leaves it to the company to determine what lands are necessary to be taken. The Stockton and Darlington Rail. Co. v. Brown, 9 H.L. Cas. 246.

Quære — Whether the words "the Court of Chancery," in the 5th section of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. cxlix. (the Stockton and Darlington Railway Act), apply exclusively to the Lord Chancellor or to the Lords Justices sitting in Lunacy? Ibid.

The Vice Chancellor made a decree which was afterwards varied by the Lords Justices. This House restored the decree of the Vice Chancellor, and further proceedings being necessary, remitted the cause to him, to proceed with it in the same state in which it was when brought by appeal before the Lords Justices. Ibid.

A company, entitled to take tolls in return for a public service, is not bound, independently of express enactment, to exact the same tolls from all persons alike, but is at liberty to remit the tolls, or any portion of them, to particular persons, at its pleasure and discretion. The Hungerford Market Co. v. the City Steamboat Co. (Lim.), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 25; 3 E. & E. 365.

The plaintiffs, the Hungerford Market Company, by a clause in their act of incorporation, were empowered to take (inter alia) from the master of any steamboat, in respect of every passenger landing or embarking from the wharf to be erected by the plaintiffs, the tolls to be from time to time fixed and appointed by the plaintiffs, not exceeding the rate of 2*d.* for each passenger. The plaintiffs fixed and appointed the toll at 2*d.* for each passenger; but, by agreement, they charged the defendants, a steamboat company, in respect of their passengers landing or embarking, tolls at the rate of 1*s.* 4*d.* per 100 passengers, while by another agreement they charged another steamboat company only 1*d.* per dozen passengers: — Held, in the absence of any equality clause in their act, that it was competent to the plaintiffs to make these agreements, and that they were entitled to charge and recover against the defendants tolls at the rate agreed on: the true construction of the clause empowering them to take tolls being, that the tolls must be fixed and appointed, in order to inform the public and persons interested, the maximum toll which they could be called upon to pay, leaving the right of the plaintiffs to lower or remit the toll, if it otherwise exist, wholly untouched. Ibid.

(B) Powers, Duties, and Liabilities.

(a) As to Shareholders generally.

A railway company had authority to keep steam-vessels for the purpose of a ferry:—Held, that such vessels, when not otherwise employed, might be used by the company for excursion trips to the sea. Forrest v. the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Rail. Co., 30 Beav. 40.

A company incorporated for the purpose of making a railroad cannot, with the dissent of one of the shareholders, carry on a trade distinct from the purposes for which it was incorporated. Ibid.

A registered shareholder in a railway company,—which was afterwards incorporated with a new company by an act of parliament, enacting that every registered shareholder in the old company should be deemed to hold a share in the new company, to be called a deferred share, and entitled on demand to receive a certificate for such deferred share,—Held, entitled to sue in respect of the funds of the new company, although he had not exchanged his shares or received a certificate as a shareholder in the new company. Spackman v. Lattimore, 3 Giff. 16.

When the promoters of the new undertaking signed the subscription contract for sums which they represented to parliament as out of their own funds, but which in fact they borrowed, and afterwards sought to charge against the funds of the new company, the Court, at the instance of the plaintiff, a shareholder of the old company, restrained by injunction such application of the funds. Ibid.

Bill against the directors of a railway company, which had power to borrow moneys not exceeding 45,000*l.* "on mortgage or bond" so soon as the whole capital had been subscribed and one half paid up, alleging that moneys had been illegally borrowed, and praying for a declaration that such borrowing was illegal, and to restrain the defendants from repaying the moneys out of the company's assets:—Demurrer allowed, on the ground that there was no allegation that one-half of the subscribed sum had not been paid up, or that the defendants intended to issue bonds or mortgages before it was due. Nowell v. the Andover and Redbridge Rail. Co., 3 Giff. 112.

(b) As to taking Land.

A railway company under the misapprehension that a tenant for life was owner in fee of certain land, entered into an agreement with his supposed agent, under the 84th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and took possession of the land on which they constructed their railway. On a bill by the remaindermen and mortgagees, the Court granted an injunction to restrain the company from retaining possession of the land. Perks v. the Wycombe Rail. Co., 3 Giff. 663.

Where the plans, deposited by a railway company, delineated a field, shewing the line, the limits of deviation and the boundaries on one side of those limits, but leaving the boundaries on the other side undefined, the Court restrained the company from taking the land beyond the limits of deviation on the undefined side, though the name of the owner of the whole field was described in the book of reference. Wrigley v. the Lancashire and Yorkshire Rail. Co., 4 Giff. 352.

In a contract between a railway company and a proprietor of land to be crossed by the line of railway, the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20.) should be expressly referred to if the company intend to claim the benefit of its provisions. Therefore, where a company contracted "to provide and erect a suitable bridge over a street (marked in a plan referred to in the deed) as then planned or intended," and the plan shewed that the street was intended to be forty-two feet wide,—Held, in the absence of any reference in the deed to the act, that the company were not at liberty to narrow the street to the dimensions specified in the 49th section of the act (twenty-five feet), but must make a bridge with an arch of the full width of the street (forty-two feet). Clarke v. the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Rail. Co., 1 Jo. & H. 631.

(c) Traffic Agreements.

There is no principle of public policy which renders void a traffic agreement between two lines of railway for the purpose of avoiding competition. Hare v. the London and North-Western Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 817; 2 Jo. & H. 80.

Though a public company constituted for a particular purpose will not be allowed to apply its funds in a manner not sanctioned by the constitution of the company, the Court will not interfere with a traffic agreement between two lines of railway to divide the net earnings in certain definite proportions. Ibid.

Review of the authorities as to the legality of such an agreement. Ibid.

(d) Borrowing Powers.

The M and M Railway were empowered by their special act to raise a capital of 550,000*l.*, and to raise by mortgage any further sum, not exceeding 180,000*l.*; but no part of such further sum was to be raised until the whole of the capital had been subscribed for and one-half paid up. Part only of the capital was subscribed for; but the company determined to borrow 10,000*l.* to enable them to meet demands made upon them, and to purchase part of the land required by them. The directors applied to a bank, and obtained the sum required on the security of the joint and several promissory note of the plaintiff, the chairman of the company, and of B, one of the directors. B, having been compelled to repay the money, brought an action against the plaintiff. The board of directors resolved that, "in order to discharge the liability of the chairman, on the action of B against him, the secretary be authorized to seal Lloyd's bonds to the extent of," &c. Bonds were accordingly made under the common seal of the company, by each of which the company acknowledge "that they stand indebted to W C in the sum of 1,000*l.* for money due and owing from the company to W C; and the company, for themselves, their successors, and assigns, hereby covenant with W C, his executors and administrators, to pay to him, his executors, administrators and assigns, the said sum of 1,000*l.*," &c. These bonds were delivered to the plaintiff, and he mortgaged them to D, to secure money advanced, and with which money the action brought by B against the plaintiff was settled. Subsequently, the directors resolved that the bonds should be redeemed, and that the expenses incurred by the chairman should be paid by the company out of the first moneys in their hands:—Held, in an action brought by the plaintiff upon one of these bonds, that it was illegal, and that the plaintiff could not recover. Chambers v. the Manchester and Milford Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 268; 5 Best & S. 588.

A railway company, though a corporation, is liable in an action for false imprisonment, if the act be committed by the authority of the company; the authority need not be under seal; but it lies on the plaintiff to give evidence justifying the jury in finding that the company's servants who imprisoned him, or some of them, had authority from the company to do so. Goff v. the Great Northern Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 148; 3 E. & E. 672.

The plaintiff, having taken a return-ticket from the London station of the defendants' railway, at the end of the return journey gave up an old half-ticket, which he had put in his pocket by mistake for the right one, whereupon the ticket-collector took the plaintiff to the ticket-office, where he explained how the mistake had occurred; he then went with the collector to the inspector of police in the defendants' station; and they all went together to the superintendent of the line, who, after hearing the matter, said, "I think you had better take him, but you had better first obtain the concurrence of the secretary"; the inspector then left, and on his return he directed a police constable to take the plaintiff to the public police station, and charge him with having travelled on the defendants' line without having paid his fare, with intent to avoid paying it. The plaintiff was accordingly taken to the station and before a magistrate; and on the hearing the plaintiff's story proved true, and the complaint was dismissed. The police inspector and constable were in the pay of the defendants. The plaintiff having brought an action against the defendants for false imprisonment,—Held, that, inasmuch as the 8 Vict. c. 20. (by ss. 103, 104.) imposes a penalty on any person travelling on a railway without having paid his fare, with intent to avoid the payment thereof, and empowers all officers and servants, on behalf of the company, to apprehend such person until he can conveniently be taken before a Justice, it might reasonably be assumed that a railway company carrying passengers would, in the ordinary course of business, have on the spot officers with authority to determine without delay whether the company's servants should, or should not, on the company's behalf, apprehend a passenger accused of this offence; and that the fact of all the subordinate servants of the company referring to the superintendent of the line as the superior authority, was sufficient evidence that he was an officer having authority from the company to act for them in the matter; and that the defendants were, therefore, liable for the false imprisonment directed by him. Ibid.

A conveyance of a strip of land was made to a railway company in 1834 under an act of parliament, which provided by one section, that all coal or other mineral should be deemed to be excepted out of any purchase of lands by the company and might be worked by the owners and lessees thereof, "so that no damage or obstruction be done or thereby occur to or in such railway or other works"; and in case of damage reparation was to be made by the owners or lessees. And by another section, that whenever the workings should approach within twenty yards of any masonry or building belonging to the company notice thereof should be given to them, and they might deliver a declaration requiring the minerals under such masonry or building to be reserved for their protection, and in that case they should purchase the same, and in case they should not deliver such declaration that the owners or lessees might work the minerals under the said masonry or buildings, in the usual and ordinary manner of working mines, doing no avoidable damage. The land was taken for the purpose of building thereon a bridge of great weight, which was subsequently built by the company. At the time of the purchase there was beneath the land, and a large tract of adjoining land belonging to the vendor, an old mine which had been accidentally flooded and had long previously been full of water. In 1859 a lessee, deriving title under the vendor, threatened to drain the mine and renew the workings:—Held, that in addition to the special protection afforded by the act in respect of workings within twenty yards' distance of any masonry or building, the railway company was entitled, by way of necessary incident to the grant of the land, to such lateral support from the adjacent land of the vendor not situate within the twenty yards as might be necessary to uphold the bridge; and that the lessee was properly restrained from working minerals under the adjacent land not the property of the company, and not within the limits of twenty yards, so as to affect the stability of the bridge. Elliot v. the North-Eastern Rail. Co. (House of Lords), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 402; 10 H.L. Cas. 333.

Held also, that the circumstance that the conveyance of the land was compulsory and not voluntary, could not, in the absence of any special enactment, affect the construction of the conveyance, nor prevent it from passing to the company the necessary right of support as an ordinary legal incident. Ibid.

Held, however, that although the water might afford additional support to the surface, the company had no right to speculate on the continuance of such an accidental circumstance, and that the lessee ought not to be restrained from withdrawing the water from the spaces left in the old workings, if such effect should be produced by working the colliery in a proper manner. Ibid.

In cases like the foregoing, it being impracticable to define beforehand the limits within which the workings ought to be restrained, an injunction is properly expressed in general terms against working so as to produce the particular evil apprehended. Ibid.

A railway company is responsible for injuries sustained by reason of water escaping from a stream in flood-time, or collected from rain falling on the railway, and flowing along a cutting of the railway and percolating through the substratum into mines beneath, although such mines had not been worked at the time of the formation of the railway. Bagnall v. the London and North-Western Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 121; 7 Hurls. & N. 423.

The defendants, under parliamentary powers, purchased the surface of the plaintiffs' colliery, and carried their railway over it by means of a cutting which extended beyond the limits of the colliery. At the time when the railway was made no mines had been worked underneath it. The plaintiffs gave the defendants notice of their works approaching the railway, but the defendants did not treat for the purchase. The original surface of the soil over the railway was impervious to water, but the removal of the clay by the railway cutting exposed a pervious stratum subject to cracks and fissures. In consequence of the cutting, water from a brook crossed by the railway in flood-time flowed along the cutting over the plaintiffs' mines, and the side drains being insufficient to carry it off, the water flowed over the pervious surface and so escaped into and flooded the plaintiffs' mines. The rain water descending upon the railway and the sides of the cutting was in like manner carried along the railway, and over and into the mines. The defendants' works were in conformity with their local act and deposited plans and sections:—Held, that the defendants were liable for the damage occasioned by such flooding of the mines. Ibid.

Held, also, that such damage was the subject of an action, and not the subject of compensation under the compensation clauses of the Railway Act. Ibid.

(C) Shareholders, Liability of.

The charter incorporating a trading company directed that the capital or stock should be divided into shares, and that the proprietors for the time being of stock in the corporation should execute a deed of co-partnership and settlement, whereby the capital should be divided into shares numbered in regular succession, and whereby they should enter into covenant for payment of the amounts subscribed. The promoters of the company previous to the charter being granted put the defendant's name down as an allottee for fifty shares, and sent him an allotment letter informing him thereof, and requiring payment of a deposit, and adding, that on his execution of the deed prepared in conformity with the charter, he would be entitled to fifty certificates for shares. The defendant paid the deposit, and afterwards several calls. The deed, which was executed by many shareholders, but not by the defendant, contained provisions that the shares should be numbered in regular succession, and be each distinguished by a separate number,—that every person who should have subscribed the prescribed sum or upwards to the capital of the corporation, or who should otherwise have become entitled to a share of the same, and whose name should have been entered on the register of shareholders, should be deemed a shareholder: that the corporation should keep a register of shareholders, in which (among other things) should be entered the number of shares each person held, distinguishing each share by its number: that certificates of ownership should be delivered on application to each shareholder, specifying the shares to which he was entitled. A register of shares was kept, in which the defendant was entered as the holder of fifty shares, but the shares were not numbered or specified. The defendant having refused to pay a subsequent call, the company sued him, charging him as a shareholder or holder of fifty shares indebted in respect of calls by virtue of the deed of settlement:—Held (affirming the decision of the Court below, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 114; 1 Best & S. 593), that he was not liable to be so sued, as he had not executed the deed; although probably an action might have been maintained against him framed on his agreement to become a shareholder and execute the deed. The Irish Peat Company v. Phillips (Ex. Ch.), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 363; 1 Best & S. 629.

Quære—Whether the omission in the register to number and specify the shares would have defeated the action had it been otherwise maintainable. Ibid.

(D) By-laws.

By the charter of the Saddlers' Company, the wardens and assistants were empowered to elect assistants from the freemen, and to remove any for ill conduct or other reasonable cause, and to make such by-laws as should seem to them salutary and necessary for the good government of the body in general and its various officers; no qualification for an assistant, beyond that of being a freeman, was imposed by the charter itself, but certain oaths were to be taken after election and before admission, and any election contrary to the directions or restrictions of the charter was declared void. An assistant was eligible to become warden, which was an office of trust, the holder of it having the custody and disposal of the corporate funds. A by-law was duly made, "that no person who has been a bankrupt, or become otherwise insolvent, shall hereafter be admitted a member of the court of assistants, unless it be proved to the satisfaction of the court that such person, after his bankruptcy or insolvency, has paid his creditors in full, or shall have established a fair and honourable character for the seven years subsequent." D, being otherwise qualified, but being in insolvent circumstances, and unable to pay his creditors 20*s.* in the pound, was elected an assistant, and after his election, of which he was not aware, but before his admission, he made to the agent of the wardens and assistants a statement, false to his own knowledge, that he was solvent; he was then admitted, and exercised the office of assistant. D. was afterwards adjudged a bankrupt, and this and his false statement having come to the knowledge of the wardens and assistants, they, at a meeting duly held, but of which D. had no notice or knowledge, expelled him from the office. D, having obtained a mandamus to restore him, the above facts appeared on the record:—Held, on error, by the House of Lords, that the by-law was valid; that its validity depended on the meaning of the words "or become otherwise insolvent," and that these words must be construed to mean notorious or avowed insolvency, such as stopping payment or compounding with creditors, and not a mere inability of a person to pay his debts in full; and also, that as D was admitted to the office of assistant without such fraud as rendered his admission void, he could not be legally removed without being heard in his defence; and that he was entitled to a peremptory mandamus,—affirming the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, and reversing that of the Exchequer Chamber (30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 186; 3 E. & E. 72). R. v. the Saddlers' Co. (House of Lords), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 337; 10 H.L. Cas. 404.

2.—JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.

(A) Memorandum and Articles of Association.

Where the memorandum of association empowered the directors without further authority from the shareholders to pay a specific sum for the costs and expenses of the promoters,—Held, on demurrer, that a payment without taxation was not improper. Croskey v. the Bank of Wales, 4 Giff. 314.

Where the rules of a company provided that any member who should directly or indirectly engage in any merchants' or brokers' work, which was charged to the company, or if it were offered him by the principal or servants, should be fined 50*l.* for such work taken, and that no member should leave without giving the agent six months' notice, the plaintiff, who was a member, gave notice on the 27th of June, 1859, that he should leave on the 30th of June, but before that day entered into an engagement with a merchant, and within six months entered into other agreements,—Held, that the plaintiff was liable to be fined for the engagement made prior to the 30th of June, 1859, but not for those made subsequently. Brancker v. Roberts, 3 Giff. 276.

One clause in the articles of association of a company provided that an extraordinary special meeting might authorize the borrowing of such sum or sums of money on such terms as they might think fit. Another clause authorized the directors to borrow any sum of money not exceeding 10,000*l.* unless authorized to borrow a larger sum by a general meeting:—Held, that the latter clause was not restricted by the former, and that the borrowing of 30,000*l.* by the directors was sufficiently authorized by a resolution of an ordinary general meeting. In re the Strand Music Hall Co. (Lim.), 3 De Gex, J. & S. 147.

The subscribers to the memorandum of association of a joint-stock company (limited), registered according to the requirements of the statute 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, no articles of association being annexed to the memorandum, become under the provisions of the statute, directors of the company till the first general meeting of the shareholders has been held pursuant to the regulations for the management of the company contained in Table B. to that act annexed. Eales v. the Cumberland Black-lead Mining Co. (Lim.), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 141; 6 Hurls. & N. 431.

An appointment by such directors of one of their own number to a salaried office under the company, is valid under the statute, and not void or illegal at common law. Ibid.

The powers of such directors, during their period of office, are in all respects the same as those of directors appointed at a general meeting. Ibid.

Per Bramwell, B.—Though such original directors have power to appoint one of themselves to a salaried office in the company, the appointment may be of a nature to render all the parties to it liable for a breach of trust. Ibid.

The plaintiff, an original subscriber to the memorandum of association, and as such a director of the Cumberland Black-lead Mining Co. (Limited), was appointed by the other subscribers (before the period for holding the first general meeting of shareholders according to the requirements of "the Joint-Stock Companies' Act, 1856," had arrived) the manager of the mine, for the working of which the company had been formed, at a yearly salary, the appointment to continue for a year, subject to the approval of the first general meeting. This appointment was not confirmed at the first general meeting, and the plaintiff afterwards sued the company for his salary up to the time of the action. The jury having found a verdict for him for a year's salary, the Court discharged a rule obtained to set this verdict aside. Ibid.

(B) Powers, Duties, and Liabilities.

A company registered under the Joint-Stock Companies' Act, 1856, was established for the purpose of accepting a transfer of, and carrying into effect, the undertaking of an existing railway company. Under one of the acts of the provincial legislature relating to this company, grants of land were made sufficient for the construction of a portion of the railway, and a power was reserved to the legislature of re-entering into possession of such lands, supposing the railway was not completed within ten years, and a further grant of lands was to be made on completion of the said portion of the railway. By another act grants of land adjoining the railway were authorized to be made to the company to the extent of 10,000 acres for every 10,000*l.* expended by the company in making the railway, and the act was to continue in force for ten years. By another act the provision in the first-mentioned act, as to the completion of the said portion of the railway within ten years, was repealed, and in lieu thereof it was enacted that if the said railway should not be completed within four years from the date of that act, all and every the grants of land conferred by the several acts relating to the company should be null and void, and the lands should revert to, and revest in, Her Majesty as if no grants had been made; and it was further enacted that the several grants made to or for the benefit of the company, were thereby confirmed and declared valid to all intents and purposes. The articles of association of the new company recited the above-mentioned acts, and provided that certain class A shares should be entitled to a certificate for an allotment and appropriation of four acres of the land of the company to each share. The directors in London issued Reports, on the faith of which the respondent applied at the office of the company, and was informed by the secretary that the class A shares were preference shares, entitling the holder to an allotment of four acres of land under the grants from the provincial government. Such Reports also contained statements implying that the company had an indefeasible title to the lands granted. The respondent became the purchaser of a number of the class A shares. He afterwards filed a bill to set aside his contract on the ground that he had been induced by misrepresentations to take the shares, such misrepresentations consisting, amongst others, in the statement that the company had an indefeasible title in the lands granted:—Held (reversing the decision of the Lords Justices), that there were no misrepresentations on the part of the company, and that as to their title to the lands granted to them, such grants of land were made for the encouragement of the company, and therefore, after they had become entitled thereto; that they were made for a consideration, which, in the view of the legislature, must be taken to have been already paid by the company when they had expended so much money upon the works, and that the company had therefore an indefeasible title to the lands granted. The New Brunswick and Canada Rail. and Land Co. (Lim.) v. Conybeare (House of Lords), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 297; 9 H.L. Cas. 711.

If Reports are made to the shareholders of a company by their directors and the Reports are adopted by the shareholders, and afterwards industriously circulated, representations contained in those Reports must be taken to be representations made with the authority of the company, and therefore binding the company. And if those Reports having been industriously circulated be clearly shewn to have been the proximate and immediate cause of shares having been bought from the company, the company cannot be permitted to retain the benefit of the contract and keep the purchase-money that has been paid. Representations made by the secretary to a person in a general conversation, without a view to any definite statement by that person that he wants to purchase shares, are not binding on the company. Ibid.

If, however, an incorporated company acting by an agent induces a person to enter into a contract for the benefit of the company, that company can no more repudiate their fraudulent agent than an individual can repudiate his; consequently the company are bound by the misrepresentations of their agent. Ibid.

Misrepresentation entitling to relief must be a misrepresentation of fact, and not merely a conclusion of opinion. Ibid.

A person having taken shares in a joint-stock company, must be considered to have actually executed the articles of association of such company, and is therefore fixed with notice of its contents. Ibid.

When a case is constituted of fraud, it should be most accurately and fully stated. A mere general charge that something has been done by or obtained from a party under the influence of fraud, is not sufficient: it must be shewn in what it consists, and how it has been effected. Ibid.

When a charge is made involving the imputation of fraudulent misrepresentation or fraudulent concealment, if that charge fails, it ought to fail with the ordinary penalty of the Court, directing the party who makes it without ground, to indemnify his antagonist in costs. Ibid.

A counsel cannot be heard to argue his own case with another counsel: he must either appear in person or by counsel. Ibid.

Certain stock of a railway company was standing in the books of the company in the names of two persons, T and B. B, by a transfer executed by himself, and to which he forged the signature of T, transferred the stock to a third person, whose name was substituted upon the register for the names of B and T. T died soon afterwards:—Held (affirming the decision of the Master of the Rolls), that the personal representative of T had a legal right to call on the company to replace the stock, though the right of action at law was gone. The Midland Rail. Co. v. Taylor (House of Lords), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 336; 8 H.L. Cas. 751.

The defendants proposed turning an inclined road or slipway, leading from the town to the sea-shore, from the north-east to the north-west. It appeared that this, so far from producing an injury, would make a more convenient landing-place:—Held, that, whether the defendants were authorized or not, the Court would not interfere in the matter. The Ryde Commissioners v. the Isle of Wight Ferry Co., 30 Beav. 616.

Money borrowed for a company and bona fide applied for its benefit, held recoverable though the directors had no borrowing powers. Hoare's case, in re the Electric Telegraph Co. of Ireland, 30 Beav. 225.

A policy-holder, by whose policy the funds of a company were made liable to pay the sum insured, and certain shares of profit by way of bonus,—Held, entitled to an injunction to restrain the company from transferring its business and assets to another company, contrary to the provisions of the deed of settlement, and without making provision out of its own assets for payment of the plaintiff's policy. Kearns v. Leaf; Aldebert v. Kearns, 1 Hem. & M. 681.

Where one insurance company, A, transferred all its business, property, effects and liabilities to another company, B, on the terms of A shareholders being indemnified, on a bill by A for specific performance of the agreement, the Court decreed such indemnity, and the other company which was ordered to be wound up, having by its official manager filed a cross-bill alleging fraud and misrepresentation, and that such agreement was ultra vires, the second company, B, having had the benefit of the agreement, was held not to be entitled to object that the agreement was ultra vires and improperly entered into by the managing body, and the cross-bill was dismissed. The Anglo-Australian Life Assur. Co. v. the British Provident Life and Fire Society, 3 Giff. 521.

The rule that notice to one partner in an ordinary trading partnership is notice to all the partners does not apply to a joint-stock company. In re Carew's Estate Act (No. 2), 31 Beav. 39.

By the deed of settlement of a joint-stock company established under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, the directors were empowered to issue bills of exchange and promissory notes, but such bills and notes were only to bind the shareholders to the extent of their interests in the company. The directors, by deed-poll under the common seal of the company, and signed by three directors, appointed an agent in Canada, and empowered him to draw bills of exchange upon the company. To discharge claims against the company in Canada, the agent drew and gave there two bills of exchange, such bills containing no notice of any restricted liability. Upon the company being wound up, the holders of these bills put in claims for the amount, together with interest and damages calculated according to certain statutes of Canada:—Held, that the appointment of the agent was valid, and that the bills in question were well drawn by him so as to bind the company, notwithstanding the 45th section of the act, and notwithstanding also the provisions in the deed of settlement for limiting the liability of the shareholders; and accordingly that the holders of the bills were entitled to prove under the winding-up against the company. In re the State Fire Insur. Co., ex parte Meredith's and Convers's Claims, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 300.

Held, also, that the proof being against the company as the virtual drawers, the claimants were entitled to the interest and damages given by the law of Canada, where the bills were drawn. Ibid.

A joint-stock company, established with limited liability, under the Companies' Act, 1862, may lawfully commence business and exercise their borrowing powers before the whole of the nominal capital has been subscribed; and a representation by prospectus issued on behalf of a company, that the capital consists of a given sum, in shares of a certain amount, does not imply that the whole capital named is to be raised at once, and that the borrowing powers are to be suspended until the whole of such capital has been subscribed. M'Dougall v. the Jersey Imperial Hotel Co. (Lim.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 28; 2 Hem. & M. 528.

The payment to shareholders before any profits have been made of interest on the amount of capital paid up is illegal, and will be restrained by injunction. Ibid.

The enactments of the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, prescribing the mode in which contracts may be entered into on behalf of a company are affirmative only, and do not preclude the enforcement against a company of the ordinary equity based on part performance. Wilson v. the West Hartlepool Harbour and Rail. Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 241; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 475.

A contract made between the projector and the directors of a joint-stock company provisionally registered, but not in terms made conditional on the completion of the company, is not binding upon the subsequently completely registered company, although ratified and confirmed by the deed of settlement. Gunn v. the London and Lancashire Fire Insur. Co., 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 694.

(C) DIRECTORS.

(a) Power to contract.

An agreement was entered into between Pooley and the London and County Company, represented by Betteley, one of their directors, whereby Pooley agreed to sell, and Betteley to purchase, certain bonds in consideration of the sum of 4,000*l.*, and debenture notes of the company for 2,500*l.*, and also 3,500 shares in the company, on which 1*l.* should be considered to have been paid. Betteley then took the bonds at 5,750*l.* (their market value), and, after paying the 4,000*l.* to Pooley, paid over the remainder for the use of the company. Pooley sold his interest in the debenture notes to Wood and Brown, who, upon the winding-up of the company, brought in their claims:—Held, that the whole transaction was invalid and must be set aside, it being neither a borrowing nor a purchasing under the powers given to the directors by their deed of settlement. In re the London and County Assur. Co., Wood's Claim and Brown's Claim, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 373.

Knowledge of a particular fact relating to the accounts by one director of a banking company is not notice to the company where that director had no voice in the management of the accounts, and the money transactions of the company were conducted exclusively by a manager under three directors, of whom the director possessing the knowledge was not one. Carew's Estate Act (No. 2), 31 Beav. 39.

When a director is about to commit a fraud, it is to be presumed that he will not disclose the circumstance to his colleagues. Ibid.

Colonel W fraudulently obtained possession of acceptances of C, and he got them discounted and carried to his account by a banking company, to whom he was greatly indebted, and of which he was a director and local manager:—Held, under the circumstances, that the bank had notice, and could not be considered bona fide owners. Ibid.

The directors of a railway company are not justified in acting on an old resolution, authorizing the issue of shares after the particular purpose for which the authority was given has ceased to be available. Fraser v. Whalley, 2 Hem. & M. 10.

Nor in issuing shares, supposing them to have the power for the express purpose of creating votes, to influence a coming general meeting. Ibid.

And an injunction will be issued to restrain the issue of such shares, it not being a question of the internal management of the company, but an attempt on the part of the directors to prevent such management from being legitimately carried on. Ibid.

A clause in the deed of settlement of a joint-stock company gave power to the directors "generally, where these presents are silent or do not otherwise provide, to act in the direction of the concerns of the society in such manner as at their absolute discretion they shall think most conducive to the interests of the society." Whether under such a clause it is competent to the directors to purchase the business and take the assets and liabilities of another company —quære. The Era Assurance Society's case, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 206; 2 Jo. & H. 400; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 29; 1 Hem. & M. 672.

Where, however, the shareholders had acquiesced in the amalgamation, and the dealings had been such that it was impossible to replace the companies in their original possession, it was held to be too late to disturb the arrangement which had been made, whether within the power of the directors or not. Ibid.

Semble—The Court has power to relieve against mistakes in law, as well as mistakes in fact. Ibid.

The promoters of an assurance company, provisionally registered under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, agreed with the provisional trustees to assign to them a lease of a house, and a Treatise on Life Assurance, in consideration of 750*l.*, and a per-centage on the policy-premiums received. By the deed of settlement, executed shortly afterwards, the promoters were made directors. The company was afterwards completely registered, and the directors passed a resolution adopting the transaction, but it was never sanctioned by any general meeting of shareholders: —Held, that, the promoters not being actually directors at the time of the transaction, the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. s. 29. did not apply, and that the sanction of a general meeting of shareholders was not requisite to give the contract validity. Ex parte Paul and Beresford, in re the Waterloo Life, &c. Assur. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 545; 33 Beav. 204.

The directors of a company borrowed 5,000*l.* from A B under a written agreement, one term of which was that 2,000 mortgage bonds of 50*l.*, each "forming part of 25,000*l.* of mortgage-bonds constituting a first charge on the property of the company," should be deposited with A B as a collateral security for the sum which was secured by two promissory notes of 2,500*l.* each:—Held, that as the directors had power to charge the property of the company and the intention to create a charge appeared from the agreement, a valid charge was created though the mortgage-bonds were invalid through incompleteness. In re the Strand Music Hall Co. (Lim.), 3 De Gex, J. & S. 147.

A director of a joint-stock company, registered under the Joint-Stock Companies' Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 47), cannot make a binding contract for profit to himself in a transaction with the company. Ex parte Hill, in re the Cardiff Preserved Coal and Coke Co. (Lim.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 154.

Where a director had advanced money to the company from time to time under an arrangement for receiving a bonus or commission of 6*d.* per ton on the amount of produce sold by the company, and the account between him and the company as entered in the company's books included this commission, the Court refused to allow it, but directed the account to be taken allowing interest on the advances at 5*l.* per cent. Ibid.

A was nominated a director of a new company by the articles of association, which provided that no person should be eligible as a director unless holding in his own right fifty shares. By the memorandum of association, which he signed, he agreed to take twenty-five shares only. He subsequently signed the articles themselves:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, and, on appeal, by the Lords Justices, that, though a director, he was not liable as a contributory for more than the twenty-five shares which he had agreed to take.—The clause respecting the qualification of directors held, by the Lord Justice Turner, not to apply to directors nominated by the articles of association. Ex parte Stock, in re the Llanharry Hematite Iron Ore Co. (Lim.); ex parte Roney, in re same Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 731.

A joint-stock company, registered under the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, had a fiat in bankruptcy issued against it. One of the Commissioners of Bankruptcy ordered a person who had been a director, but who, before the date of the fiat, had sold all his shares, and so had become disqualified under the deed of settlement to act as director, to file a balance-sheet and accounts of the company as directed by the 12th section of the statute, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111. On appeal, the Lord Justice Knight Bruce considered that it was proved that this person had acted as a director down to the date of the fiat, and therefore the order of the Commissioner was right. The Lord Justice Turner did not concur. Ex parte Strousberg, in re the Mitre General Life Assurance, Annuity and Family Endowment Association, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 13.

The person so held to be a director applied to the Lords Justices for leave, under the provisions of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 18), to appeal to the House of Lords; but their Lordships considered that the question was one of fact and not of law (and, per the Lord Justice Turner, supposing that some question of law was involved, it was not of that difficulty or importance to justify the appeal), and refused the application. Ibid.

One of the directors of a company, established under the Joint-Stock Companies' Act, 1844, and having definite borrowing powers, made advances (not in accordance with the borrowing powers) to meet the necessary expenses of carrying on the concern. Subsequently the company, after being registered as a limited company under the Joint-Stock Companies' Act, 1856, was voluntarily wound up:—Held, that the director was entitled to rank as a creditor of the company, and to receive payment next after the general creditors, in the event of there being then any assets. Lowndes v. the Garnett and Moseley Gold-Mining Co. of America (Lim.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 418.

Assuming that a resolution of a board of directors, signed by the chairman, would be sufficient to revive against a company a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations,—semble, the acknowledgment will be vitiated if the resolution was come to by a board meeting, at which the creditor was himself present in his character of director. Ibid.

The summary power conferred by the 165th section of the Companies' Act, 1862, of ordering directors to repay money misapplied by them, cannot properly be exercised by the Court under the 138th section in the case of a company which is being wound up voluntarily, without making an order for the compulsory winding-up of the company. In re the Bank of Gibraltar and Malta (Lim.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 617.

The Court will not exercise the powers given to it by the 165th section in cases where the question of the liability of the directors is complicated or difficult, but will in such cases require a bill to be filed for the purpose of taking an account against the directors.—See this case on appeal, 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 49. Ibid.

A prohibition in the company's articles against a director voting in respect of any matter in which he has an interest, does not preclude him from voting as a shareholder at a general meeting in respect of any such matter. East Pant Du United Lead Mining Co. v. Merryweather, 2 Hem. & M. 254.

The defendant authorized his name to be inserted as a director in the prospectus of a joint-stock company, limited. The prospectus was sent to the defendant, who suggested alterations in it. The secretary gave orders to the plaintiff to advertise the prospectus, which was done at an expense of 236*l.* The company was never registered:—Held, in an action by the plaintiff against the defendant, to recover the expenses of the advertisements, that the defendant, by consenting to act as a director, had not authorized the secretary of the company to pledge his credit, and that he was not liable to the plaintiff. Burbidge v. Morris, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 131; 3 Hurls. & C. 664.

A prospectus of a projected company for the conveyance of emigrants to British Columbia, contained statements calculated to induce intending emigrants to believe that arrangements had been perfected for the object in view, and inviting them to take tickets for their passage and the public to purchase shares. This prospectus was shewn by the secretary to the defendants, and they were asked to allow their names to be inserted therein as directors, to which they consented on being qualified (that is, presented each with 200 paid-up shares of the nominal value of 10*l.* each) and indemnified. Their names were accordingly inserted and the prospectus published in the Times:—Held, that, from these facts the jury were warranted in inferring that one who contracted with the secretary for a passage and paid his money upon the faith of the representations contained in the prospectus, did so upon the credit of the defendants, and, consequently, that he was entitled to sue them for a breach of the contract. Collingwood v. Berkeley, 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 145.

The defendants and others, as provisional directors of a projected joint-stock company, resolved at a meeting that the company should be advertised in several newspapers, and directed their secretary to take the necessary steps for the purpose. The secretary accordingly applied to an advertising agent, to whom (on his calling at the company's offices to inquire under what authority the secretary was acting) he shewed the prospectus and the above resolutions:—Held, affirming the judgment of the Common Pleas, that there was evidence to go to the jury that the directors were parties to the resolutions, and were responsible for the debt thereby incurred, notwithstanding they had been induced to allow their names to appear as directors upon the faith of the secretary's assurance that all the preliminary expenses would be provided for by him, and that they would incur no liability,—there being nothing to shew that the secretary, in giving the orders, or in communicating to the plaintiffs the resolutions of the directors, had acted beyond the scope of his actual or apparent authority as secretary. Maddick v. Marshall (Ex. Ch.), 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 829.

The directors of the company made an order awarding fees to those of their body who should attend their board-meetings, and afterwards allotted shares to those members who attended, according to the number of their attendances, which shares they deemed to be fully paid-up shares; and, on appeal, it was held, that the Court had no power to alter the agreement which had been come to, and that the shares having been issued as paid-up shares must be so treated. Ex parte Currie, in re the Great Northern and Midland Coal Co. (Lim.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 57.

The promoters of a company agree with their co-directors to surrender the per-centage secured to them under a contract in consideration of receiving fixed annuities; this arrangement was never submitted to a general meeting of shareholders:—Held, that it was invalid, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. s. 29, for want of the sanction of a general meeting. Ex parte Paul and Beresford, in re the Waterloo Life, &c. Assur. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 345; 33 Beav. 204.

The first count of the declaration was for non-payment of a sum of money which the defendants, who were a gas company registered under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, contracted to pay the plaintiff on the completion of certain gasworks, erected for them by the plaintiff. The second count was for a per-centage on outlay and contracts for the defendants, in which the plaintiff should be concerned as engineer of the defendants, which per-centage they had agreed to pay him in consideration of his engineering superintendence; and the third count was for money lent:—Held, that a plea to each of these counts, that the plaintiff was a director of the company at the time of making the contract and was interested therein, was a good answer, as the contract in respect of which the claim in each of such counts was founded was within section 29. of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, and therefore void. Stears v. the South Essex Gaslight Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 49; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 180.

Held, secondly, that a plea to the first count, on equitable grounds, that the company were induced to make the contract on condition that the plaintiff would guarantee to the shareholders a certain dividend in respect of their shares, and that the plaintiff had not given such guarantee, was a bad plea, as the contracts were independent contracts, and the defendants' remedy was only by cross-action. Ibid.

Held, lastly, that the defendants having pleaded a plea of accord and satisfaction, by the delivery to the plaintiff of money and deeds, it was a good equitable replication to so much of the claim as that plea alleged to have been satisfied by the delivery of deeds, to reply that such deeds were never of any value. Ibid.

A joint-stock company, registered under the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47. may, by their articles of association, agree to pay a remuneration to each of their directors, and an action is maintainable on such an agreement. Orton v. Cleveland Fire Brick and Pottery Co. (Lim.), 3 Hurls. & C. 868.

(D) SHARES.

(a) Acceptance of.

In an action for calls made by a company registered under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, it was proved that the defendant had paid the deposit on the shares in advance to the bankers of the company, and had applied for the shares by a letter, which was in a printed form provided by the company and signed by the defendant, in which he requested the directors to allot him twenty shares, and stated that he thereby agreed to accept the same. In compliance with this letter the number of shares applied for were allotted to the defendant, and the company never directed any other form of acceptance of shares:—Held, that as no other form had been directed by the company, the defendant had, by the letter of application, sufficiently testified his acceptance of the shares to satisfy the statute, which provides, in Schedule, Table (B.), that "no person shall be deemed to have accepted any share in the company unless he has testified his acceptance thereof by writing under his hand in such form as the company from time to time direct." The Bog Lead Mining Co. v. Montague, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 380; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 481.

Quære—Whether any acceptance of shares in writing is required where the company has not directed any form of such acceptance whatever. Ibid.

It was provided, by the deed of settlement of a joint-stock company, that no shareholder should be at liberty to transfer his shares except in such a manner as a board of directors should approve. A shareholder contracted to sell his shares:—Held, that he was bound specifically to perform the contract, by the execution of a transfer, though the directors refused to allow it. Poole v. Middleton, 29 Beav. 646.

A banking and loan company was formed in England, for the purpose of carrying on banking business in the colonies, and particularly in Australia. According to a scheme, a prospectus of which was issued in Australia, the company had registered certain shares to be called "Colonial Shares," and also shares for the purpose of being issued to parties desirous of taking them in part payment of any loan which they might contract. These shares were to bear interest at 6*l.* per cent. for two years, and the manager was authorized to give off a limited number of English shares, which were transferable either in the colony or in England. It was conceived that these shares would be an advantageous mode of remitting money to England. Share certificates were accordingly issued by the manager at Sydney, upon which it was stated that "notice of certificates sent to England and the names of parties to whom transmitted must be given to the manager at Sydney." The company also furnished blank powers of attorney for the execution of the deed of settlement in London, in the names of the parties to whom the shares were issued, and also to receive dividends, and sell the shares. M, to whom some of these shares had been issued, sold his certificates to D and executed the powers of attorney. D, in 1841, sold and assigned the shares to H, who had previously been informed at the Sydney office that there would be no difficulty in the sale and transfer of the shares:—Held, that the company could not, as against these shares, assert a lien in respect of a debt due from the person to whom they were originally issued. Hunter v. Stewart, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 346.

In 1848, A transferred some shares in a company to B. In 1851 the company was ordered to be wound up. The Court refused in 1863 to allow the official manager to contest the validity of the transaction, until he had laid a sufficient ground for it, by stating to the Court what information he had received on the subject, and when he had first obtained it. In re the Cameron Coalbrook Co. (Hunt's case), 32 Beav. 387.

A shareholder executed a transfer of his shares, which he took, together with his certificate of shares, to the company's office for registration. He left the transfer, but refused to leave the certificate for the inspection of the directors:—Held, that the Court would not, on motion under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89. s. 35, compel the company to register the transfer, and the Court refused a motion for that object with costs. In re the East Wheal Martha Mining Co., 33 Beav. 119.

The 54th section of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. prohibits the transfer of shares by a shareholder only if he shall not have paid the full amount payable as well as due, in respect of every share held by him. Therefore, in a case governed by that act, non-payment of a call made before, but not payable till after, the execution of a transfer, forms no objection to the validity of the transfer. In re the British Provident Life and Fire Assur. Society (Orpen's case), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 633. (This case was afterwards compromised; see 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 67.)

The non-return of a transfer to the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. s. 13, though leaving the transferor liable for the debts of the company as between himself and the creditors of the company, does not leave him so liable as between himself and the other shareholders; and, consequently, the omission to make such return affords no ground for placing him upon the list of contributories. Ibid.

S, a registered holder of shares in a joint-stock company, in which the shares could only be transferred by deed executed by the transferor and transferee, was induced by O, his broker, to intrust him with some forms of transfer, signed and sealed by S in blank, for the transfer of certain shares in another company, which latter shares S had employed O to sell for him, S intending that the blanks should be filled up by O, and the forms used for the transfer of the last-mentioned shares. O having stolen the certificates of the first-mentioned shares from a box belonging to S, deposited at a bank for safe custody, feloniously filled up the blanks in two of these forms of transfer with the description of the shares in the first-mentioned company, and having forged the attestations delivered the transfers to bona fide purchasers for value; and the company removed the plaintiff's name from the register of shareholders, and placed thereon the names of the purchasers. The plaintiff having brought an action against the company to recover the dividends, and claiming a mandamus commanding the defendants to replace his name on their register as the owner of such shares,—Held, per Pollock, C.B., and Wilde, B., that the defendants were entitled to judgment;—that the forgery by O was the proximate consequence of the plaintiff's own negligence, and that he was therefore estopped from denying that the property in the shares passed by the transfers;—that the doctrine of estoppel by executing instruments in blank is not confined to negotiable instruments. Swan v. the North British Australasian Co. (Lim.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 425; 7 Hurls. & N. 603.

Per Martin, B. and Channell, B., that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment;—that O having no authority under seal from the plaintiff to fill up the blank forms of transfer, these forms were not deeds, and therefore could not operate to deprive the plaintiff of his property in the shares, which could be done only by deed;—that the doctrine of estoppel, by executing instruments in blank, is confined to negotiable instruments. Ibid.

Per totam Curiam, that negligence whereby another is injured, to operate as an estoppel, must be the proximate cause of the injury. Ibid.

A contract to deliver shares in a joint-stock company does not require the actual delivery of scrip certificates, which are the mere indicia of property; but the party contracting to deliver the shares sufficiently performs his engagement when he places the other in the position of being the legal owner of them. Hunt v. Gunn, 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 226.

(c) Creation of Half-Shares.

By the deed of settlement of a joint-stock company it was provided that the capital of the company should consist of 100*l.* shares. The company subsequently, at a general meeting, created half-shares, and the defendant afterwards purchased some of those shares, and received the dividends, and executed the deed of settlement. The company afterwards agreed to dissulve and wind up, under the Joint-Stock Companies' Acts, 1856 and 1857, and the defendant was sued for calls, made by the directors and by the liquidators of the company:—Held, that the defendant was estopped from disputing the validity of the creation of the half-shares. The Hull Flax and Cotton Mill Co. v. Wellesley, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 5; 6 Hurls. & N. 38.

Although debentures issued by a joint-stock company to a director in payment for work contracted to be done by him for the company are invalid in his hands under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. s. 29, their invalidity will not affect a bona fide assignee for valuable consideration without notice, if the company have encouraged him in the belief that they were valid. In re the South Essex Gaslight and Coke Co. (Hulett's case), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 293; 2 Jo. & H. 306.

Under the articles of association of a joint-stock company, the company was empowered at a special meeting to increase the capital of the company by the issue of new shares to be of such nominal value and subject to such conditions as to payment of calls or proportion of profits, as might be determined:—Held, that this did not authorize the issue of preference shares. Moss v. Syers, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 711.

By the memorandum of association of a joint-stock company the amount of capital was fixed at 120,000*l.* in 12,000 shares of 10*l.* each, and by the articles of association the directors were empowered, with the sanction of the company in general meeting, to declare a dividend to be paid to the shareholders in proportion to their shares. About half the shares only were allotted, and at an extraordinary general meeting of the company duly convened, it was resolved that the directors might, if they should think fit, issue the remaining shares with a preferential dividend. Upon a bill by dissentient shareholders to restrain the directors from acting on this resolution,—Held, affirming the decision of one of the Vice Chancellors, that the proposed issue was contrary to the articles of association and ultra vires. Hutton v. the Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co. (Lim.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 643; 2 Dr. & S. 514.

Semble—That the proposed issue was opposed to the memorandum of association, constituting the basis of the company, and therefore could not have been rendered legal by any exercise of the power conferred by the 50th section of the Companies' Act, 1862, to alter the regulations contained in the articles of association. Ibid.

(E) SHAREHOLDERS.

(a) Acquiescence by.

At an extraordinary general meeting of a joint-stock company established for granting assurances on lives, it was resolved to extend the business to marine insurances. The resolutions were afterwards confirmed; a deed embodying them was executed by some, but not all of the shareholders, and in the annual return to the Joint-Stock Companies' Registry Office the business of the company was stated to include marine insurance. The reports of the directors several times alluded to the extension of the business, and on one occasion a report alluding to such extension accompanied the dividend warrant. The business as extended was carried on for a year and a half, when the company was ordered to be wound up:—Held, that the above-mentioned circumstances were not sufficient to bind the general body of shareholders by acquiescence to the extension of business, which could only be effected by a new deed executed by all the shareholders: consequently, holders of marine policies could not come in as creditors of the company in respect of losses upon such policies. In re the Phœnix Life Assur. Co. (Burges and Stock's case), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 749; 2 Jo. & H. 441.

Held, however, that the holders of such policies might claim in respect of the premiums paid. Ibid.

A supplemental deed of settlement is necessary to bind shareholders to a change in the objects of a joint-stock company—semble. Ibid.

Shareholders in a company cannot lie by sanctioning, or by their silence at least acquiescing in, an arrangement, which is ultra vires of the company, watching the results, and if it be favourable and profitable to themselves, to abide by it, and insist on its validity, but, if it prove unfavourable and disastrous, then to institute proceedings to set it aside. Therefore, where shareholders complained of acts ultra vires which they had acquiesced in for six years, relief was refused. Gregory v. Patchett, 33 Beav. 595.

Where an act has been done by a public company, to the legality of which certain formalities are requisite, and the circumstances are such that knowledge and acquiescence may be imputed to every shareholder, the Court will, as against the company, infer that the necessary formalities have been complied with. In re the British Provident Life and Fire Assur. Society (Grady's case), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 326; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 488.

Although it is the undoubted right of every shareholder in a company to prevent the directors from exceeding their powers, still where it appears that the plaintiff is merely a puppet in the hands of others not shareholders in the company who indemnify him against the costs of the suit, the Court will not interfere by interlocutory injunction. Filder v. the London, Brighton, and South Coast Rail. Co.; Barchard v. the Brighton, Uckfield and Tunbridge Wells Rail. Co., 1 Hem. & M. 489.

In matters strictly relating to the internal management of a company, the Court, though it should come to the conclusion that the course adopted is not warranted by the terms of the instrument, will not interfere, even though the minority should have summoned a meeting of all the shareholders, and the majority should have persisted in the course complained of. Gregory v. Patchett, 33 Beav. 595.

But if measures adopted are plainly beyond the powers of the company, and are inconsistent with the objects for which the company was constituted, then the Court will, at the instance of the minority, interpose to prevent the performance of the act complained of, and it will do so, whether an appeal has or has not been made by the minority to the shareholders generally. Ibid.

The Court will interfere to prevent the directors of a railway company, not having powers so to do, from embarking the funds of the company in carrying on a brewery or steamboat company, and from speculating in the purchase or sale of stock, and from transferring their business to another company. But it will not interfere or prevent a call not required, or stop a dividend not justified by the pecuniary condition of the company, though it will prevent the illegal apportionment of the dividends amongst the shareholders. Ibid.

Where the Court interferes by injunction to prevent the performance by the directors of a company of an act ultra vires, it will also to the extent of its power redress the act performed, and give relief to the persons injured thereby; although it is not called upon to dissolve the company or wind up its affairs. Ibid.

The only available property of a company was transferred to two shareholders in lieu of their shares, and the company was thereby practically put an end to, and the debts were thrown on the remaining shareholders. This was sanctioned by a majority of the shareholders at a general meeting:—Held, that the majority could not bind the minority in such a transaction, and it was set aside. Ibid.

Where a plaintiff filed a bill on behalf of himself and all other shareholders except the defendants, against the company and the directors and solicitors, alleging misrepresentation and suppression, and praying for repayment of the deposits, a demurrer was allowed without leave to amend. Croskey v. the Bank of Wales, 4 Giff. 314.

Where shares in a joint-stock company have been issued fraudulently, a bona fide purchaser of these shares in the market before any bill has been filed to impeach the transaction, is entitled, on a winding up of the company, notwithstanding the fraud and notwithstanding that he bought the shares at a very great discount, to prove on equal terms with the other shareholders of the company who bought their shares at par; but this privilege does not extend to any person who purchased his shares after the filing of the bill, unless his vendor was a bona fide holder of the shares before bill filed, and the onus of proof that such was the case is upon him. Barnard v. Bagshaw, in re the Lake Bathurst Australasian Gold Mining Co., 1 Hem. & M. 69.

A shareholder in a company, which is in course of being wound up voluntarily, and of which the business is proposed to be transferred to another company in consideration of shares in such other company, cannot be compelled, under the powers conferred by the 161st section of the Companies' Act, 1862, to take shares in the other company, nor does he by failing to express his dissent in writing from the resolution sanctioning the arrangement within seven days after the meeting at which it was passed forfeit his right to refuse to become such shareholder. In re the Bank of Hindustan, China and Japan (Lim.), ex parte Los, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 609.—See also Higgs's case, 2 Hem. & M. 657; and Martin's case, 2 Hem. & M. 669.

A person, whose name has been improperly placed on the register of members of a company, is entitled, under the 35th section of the Companies' Act, 1862, to have his name erased from the register, although the shares in respect of which it was placed there have been declared forfeited, and the forfeiture has been entered in the register. Ibid.

The plaintiffs issued a prospectus containing, among other things, a statement that the company had succeeded in obtaining from the colonial government the free grant of the unallotted land, ten miles in width, for the whole extent of the Crown territory through which the line would pass, being estimated at upwards of 200,000 acres, and that each holder of shares in classes A and B would be entitled to the land in certain proportions, upon the completion of a specified section of the railway. The defendant, who had signed an agreement to take shares, but had not actually accepted them, discovered that the right to the land was only contingent upon the completion of the line within a limited period. He then declined to accept the shares:—Held, upon bill filed by the company to enforce acceptance of the shares, that although the Court will direct specific performance of a contract to take shares, yet it will not enforce the contract where the prospectus, upon the faith of which the shares were taken, contains misrepresentations of facts, whether intentionally or otherwise. Every fact must be stated with scrupulous accuracy, and no fact must be omitted the existence of which might affect the interests of those who take shares. Bill dismissed, but, in consideration of the defendant's want of caution, without costs. The New Brunswick and Canada Rail. Co. (Lim.) v. Muggeridge, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 242; 1 Dr. & S. 363.

A, in reliance on statements contained in a prospectus issued and forwarded to him by a company which had been formed for the construction of a railway abroad under a concession from a foreign government, took shares in the company. The prospectus, besides minor inaccuracies, contained the following mis-statements: first, that the contractor for the works had guaranteed 2½ per cent. on the paid-up capital during construction, whereas the contractor's liability to pay interest was to cease when the payments in respect thereof should reach a fixed sum; secondly, that by the concession of the foreign government 9*l.* per cent. was guaranteed on the capital subscribed, whereas the guarantee was limited by a stipulation giving it effect only while the line failed to produce that amount without the default of the company. Upon a bill by A against the company seeking to be relieved from his purchase, on the ground of misrepresentation,—Held, by the Lords Justices, reversing a decree made by the Vice Chancellor Stuart, that having regard to the mis-statements above mentioned, the plaintiff was entitled to be relieved, and the purchase was declared void. Kisch v. the Central Rail. Co. of Venezuela (Lim.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 545; 3 De Gex, J. & S. 122.

A person may be a shareholder of a company within the meaning of section 27. of the statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16. without there being a register of shareholders duly authenticated by the seal of the company, provided he is entered in a book analogous to a register, as the holder of shares numbered and specifically appropriated to him. The Wolverhampton New Waterworks Co. v. Hawkesford (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 184; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 456.

S, a holder of shares in a joint-stock company, was induced by O, his broker, to entrust him with deeds of transfer, signed by S in blank; and O, having afterwards stolen from S certain share-certificates, was enabled, by means of the blank transfers, to which he also forged the signature of an attesting witness, to transfer to innocent purchasers for value the share-certificates, and the names of the transferees were in due course entered on the register of the company as shareholders in the place of S. On motion by S, under the Joint-Stock Companies' Acts, to rectify the register,—Held, that the Court ought to decide the title to the shares. Ex parte Swan, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 113.

Held, per Erle, C.J., and Keating, J., that S was estopped by his negligence, in entrusting O with the blank deeds of transfer, from setting up his right against a bona fide purchaser, who had been guilty of no negligence. That the doctrine adopted in Young v. Grote as to the effect of signing negotiable instruments in blank was applicable to instruments under seal. Ibid.

Per Williams, J., and Willes, J., that the right of S to the shares had never been divested, and that he was entitled to have his name restored to the register. And, semble, that the doctrine adopted in Young v. Grote ought not to be extended to conveyances by deed of land or other property. Ibid.

Per Williams, J., that, even assuming the doctrine of Young v. Grote to be extended to this case, S had not been guilty of negligence. Ibid.

Quære, per Williams, J., whether the cases as to the liability of a man who signs a blank bill or note or cheque are founded on the doctrine of estoppel, or on a rule of law-merchant, that an actual authority is thereby conferred on the person in whose hands the instrument is. Ibid.

After the name of a person has been wrongfully placed upon the register of any company, it is not in the power of the directors by simply removing his name from the register effectually to indemnify him against liability arising from such wrongful insertion of his name; if they desire to do so, they must apply to the Court for the purpose, and if they neglect so to do, the shareholder may himself apply, notwithstanding that his name has been in fact removed. In re the Bank of Hindustan, China and Japan (Higgs's case), 2 Hem. & M. 657; and Martin's case, 2 Hem. & M. 669.

The prospectus of a proposed company, described as a "finance bank," stated eight objects, some of which went beyond ordinary banking business. In May S, on the footing of the prospectus, applied for fifty shares, and paid the deposits. On the 1st of June the company was registered with a memorandum of association, which went considerably further in stating its objects than the prospectus. On the same day the directors sent S a letter of allotment of fifty shares. In December of the same year the company failed. S applied to have his name taken off the list of shareholders, on the ground that he never had agreed to become a shareholder in a company with these extended objects. There being no evidence to rebut S's positive oath that until the company failed he never had any notice of the extension of the objects of the company beyond those named in the prospectus,—Held, affirming the decision of the Vice Chancellor Wood, that his name ought to be removed from the list. Ship's case, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 544.

(F) CALLS.

To a declaration by a railway company for calls made pursuant to Colonial acts, which provided that no calls should in any one year exceed a prescribed amount, the defendant pleaded that the directors made more calls for money and to a greater amount than were prescribed by the acts; and that the call sued upon was a call made in excess of the calls by the acts empowered to be made. The plaintiff replied that the calls in the plea mentioned other than the call sued for were not authorized by the acts, and were therefore void; and that the call sued for was not a call made in excess of the calls empowered to be made, if the void calls were not reckoned as calls empowered to be made; and that the defendant did not pay the void calls, or any part thereof, nor were the same, or any part thereof, paid on the shares in respect of which the defendant was sued:—Held, that the replication did not answer the plea, inasmuch as it was consistent with the plea that the company had treated the unauthorized calls as valid, and received the greater part of the money in respect of them. The Welland Rail. Co. v. Berrie, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 163; 6 Hurls. & N. 416.

To an action for calls on shares in a joint-stock company, registered under the Joint-Stock Companies' Act, 1856, and having Table B. as the articles of its association, it is no answer that the shares were taken on the faith of a representation in the memorandum of association that the capital was to be a certain named sum, and that the intended capital was not and could not be raised, and only a small and insignificant number of shares taken, insufficient to carry on the business of the company, and that the defendant never assented to the business being commenced or carried on with the shares taken. The Ornamental Woodwork Co. (Lim.) v. Brown, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 190; 2 Hurls. & C. 63.

Future calls which, under the deed of settlement of a society, are to be made when it shall appear to the directors necessary or expedient, cannot be validly mortgaged under a provision in the deed of settlement, authorizing the directors to borrow on the security of the funds or property of the society, and to cause the funds or property on the security of which any sums shall be so borrowed, to be assigned, transferred, conveyed or surrendered by way of mortgage, to the person from whom such sums shall have been borrowed. In re the British Provident Life and Fire Assur. Soc., ex parte Stanley, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 535.

A company established under the Limited Liability Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 47.) borrowed money upon debentures, which charged the same upon "all the lands, tenements and estate" of the company, and all their "undertaking." Upon the company being wound up voluntarily,—Held, as between the simple contract creditors of the company and the debenture holders, that the debentures did not include arrears of unpaid calls, or moneys to arise from future calls. King v. Marshall, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 163; 33 Beav. 565.

The payment required on allotment is not a call. Croskey v. the Bank of Wales, 4 Giff. 314.

(G) Funds of the Company.

The funds of a joint-stock company established for the purposes of one undertaking cannot be applied to another, and the attempt so to apply them, though sanctioned by all the directors, and by a large majority of the shareholders, is illegal. But where a company was established "for the erection, furnishing, and maintenance of an hotel, the carrying on the usual business of an hotel and tavern therein, and the doing all such things as are incidental or otherwise conducive to the attainment of the above objects"; and the directors, while the hotel was in the course of being built, agreed to let off, for a stipulated period of short duration, a large portion of it to the head of a government department for the business of his office, and evidence was given that such a letting was calculated to be productive of advantage to the company in its intended business, and that a majority of shareholders had sanctioned the act, it was held, that the arrangement was valid within the words of the clause, "all such things as are incidental or otherwise conducive to the attainment" of the objects for which the company was established. Simpson v. the Westminster Palace Hotel Co., 8 H.L. Cas. 712.

The Lords Justices were divided in opinion as to the propriety of the Vice Chancellor's decree, and so no costs were given in this House. Ibid.

3.—DISSOLUTION AND WINDING-UP OF COMPANIES.

(A) Jurisdiction.

A petition for winding up a company was presented before its bankruptcy, but was heard afterwards. There being no application by the assignee to wind it up, the Court held that, notwithstanding the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45. s. 6. (which prevents any other person than the assignee applying for a winding-up after a fiat), it had jurisdiction to make the order, and it made the order accordingly. In re the Mitre General Life Assur. &c. Assoc., 29 Beav. 1.

Where a shareholder in a mining company on the cost-book system in the Stannaries was being sued in London, and the Vice Warden had no power to stay the action,—Held, (the company having ceased to carry on the business), that this was a proper case for a winding-up order in this and not in the Stannaries Court. In re the Wheal Anne Mining Co., 30 Beav. 601.

In winding up the affairs of a company, the Court, notwithstanding the opposition of a large shareholder, has jurisdiction under the Joint-Stock Companies' Acts to direct a compromise of any claim against the company to be carried into effect, if apparently it is for the benefit of the greater number of shareholders. In re the Risca Coal and Iron Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 283; 30 Beav. 528.

The Joint-Stock Companies' Acts, 1856, 1857 and 1858, do not take away from the Court of Chancery the jurisdiction to adjudicate upon a disputed claim against a company which is in course of voluntary winding-up. Lowndes v. the Garnett and Moseley Gold-Mining Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 451; 2 Jo. & H, 282.

The shareholders in a mining company within the jurisdiction of the Stannaries passed a resolution for a voluntary winding-up of the company, and appointed two liquidators. A creditor presented a petition for a compulsory winding-up, upon which the Vice Warden made an order directing the voluntary winding-up to continue under the supervision of the Court, and substituting a new liquidator for one of those appointed by the resolution:—Held, by the Lord Justice Knight Bruce (the Lord Justice Turner doubting), that the Vice Warden had jurisdiction to remove the liquidator appointed by the shareholders. In re the Old Wheal Neptune Mining Co., 2 De Gex, J. & S. 348.

Prior to the Companies' Act, 1862 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 89), a limited company, which was liable to be wound up in the Bankruptcy Court, passed a resolution for winding up voluntarily, but, after the Companies' Act, 1862, had come into operation, a petition was presented for winding it up compulsorily:—Held, that under the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 89. s. 207, the jurisdiction was in Bankruptcy and not in Chancery. In re the West Silver Bank Mining Co., 32 Beav. 226.

A company of unlimited liability registered under the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, after carrying on business, was registered as a limited company under the statute 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, and was afterwards ordered to be wound up. The Court, affirming an order of one of the Commissioners of Bankruptcy, decided that the same must be done under the jurisdiction in Bankruptcy, both as to matters before as well as after registration, under the act of 1856. Ex parte Stevenson, in re the Liverpool Tradesman's Loan Co. (Lim.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 96.

The 32nd section of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 32, extending the jurisdiction of the Stannaries Court over the county of Devon, does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over mines in that county, and therefore it is no objection to a petition for winding-up a joint-stock mining company in that county that the petitioners are not owners of one-tenth in value of the shares, as required by the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108. s. 1. in the case of mining companies formed on the cost-book principle within the jurisdiction of the Court of Stannaries. In re the South Lady Bertha Copper Mining Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 92; 2 Jo. & H. 376.

Leave to present such a petition was held to have been properly granted under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 78. s. 12. on the ground that the Stannaries Court had no jurisdiction to restrain proceedings at law against individual shareholders. Ibid.

A company was formed for the purpose of purchasing and working a mine in Cornwall, and was registered under the Companies' Act, 1862, in the Registry Office of the Stannaries Court, but its registered office was in London, and it never commenced business:—Held, that it was a company "engaged in working" a mine within the meaning of the 81st section of the Companies' Act, 1862, and that the jurisdiction to wind it up was in the Stannaries Court, and not in the Court of Chancery. In re the East Botallack Consolidated Mining Co. (Lim.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 81; 34 Beav. 82.

The test of the Stannary jurisdiction under that clause is not "actual working," but the object for which the company is framed. Ibid.

A Commissioner in Bankruptcy having settled on the list of contributories of a company in course of winding-up the name of a man who died before the date of the winding-up order, has jurisdiction to rehear the case, and to correct the list by striking out the name of the dead man. In re the Southampton, Isle of Wight and Portsmouth Improved Steamboat Co. (Lim.) (Hopkins' case), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 40.

(B) WHAT COMPANIES MAY BE WOUND UP UNDER THE ACTS, AND WHEN.

A company was, in 1852, registered as one of unlimited liability, under the act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. After the passing of the act of 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 47), it was re-registered as one of limited liability. In 1858 one of the Vice Chancellors made an order for winding-up the company, and appointed Mr. R P H official manager, who proceeded in the winding-up. On appeal to the Lords Justices, their Lordships discharged the order for winding-up, and subsequently one of the Commissioners in Bankruptcy made an order for winding-up, and appointed an official liquidator. R P H paid over all the assets in his hands to such official liquidator, and presented a petition to the Commissioner for payment of his costs and expenses as official manager out of the estate of the company, but the petition was dismissed on the ground that there was no jurisdiction to make the order; and, on appeal, the order of the Commissioner was affirmed, but without costs. Ex parte Harding, in re the Plumstead, Woolwich and Charlton Water Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 145.

A company originally constituted under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. neglected to register, as directed by the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89. s. 210. On a petition for winding-up being presented by the company and the chairman jointly,—Held, that the company was precluded from petitioning by reason of its not having registered, and that it could not be permitted to evade the provisions of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89. s. 210. by joining a shareholder as a co-petitioner, and that no order could therefore be made upon the petition. In re the Waterloo Life, Education, Casualty and Self-Relief Assur. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 370; 31 Beav. 586.

A company registered under the act of 1856 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 47), but not under the act of 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), may be wound up voluntarily under a resolution passed after the latter act came into operation. In re the Torquay Bath Co., 32 Beav. 581.

The words "unregistered company" in the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, s. 199 (2), mean a company not registered under any act, and not a company unregistered under that act. Ibid.

A limited company, whose business is being carried on at a loss without any reasonable prospect of ultimate success, may be wound up, on the petition of a shareholder, before the whole of the capital has been called up. In re the Factage Parisien Co. (Lim.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 140.

Where the proceedings in a voluntary winding-up under the act of 1856 were dilatory and unsatisfactory, and had not come to a conclusion at the end of five years, the Court, upon the petition of a shareholder, directed a winding-up under the Court. In re the Fire Annihilator Co., 32 Beav. 561.

The provisions of the Companies' Act, 1862, as to winding-up orders under the Court of Chancery, are not intended to apply to cases where there is a very small body of shareholders and no difficulties in the way of voluntary winding-up exist. In re the Natal, &c., Co., 1 Hem. & M. 639.

To warrant a winding-up order against a company on the ground of neglect for three weeks after demand to pay or secure a debt, the three weeks must have expired before presentation of the petition for winding-up. In re the Catholic Publishing and Bookselling Co. (Lim.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 325; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 116.

Where upon a winding-up of a petition there is a bona fide dispute as to the existence of the debt the non-payment whereof is made the foundation for the petition, the convenient and proper course is, not to try the question of debt upon the petition, but to adjourn the hearing of the petition under section 86. of the Companies' Act, 1862, until the debt has been established at law.—[Per the Lord Justice Turner, differing from the Master of the Rolls, who had held that he was bound under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42. to decide the legal question of debt.] Ibid.

The 8th part of the Companies' Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89.) includes and applies to all companies which had been registered other than (as well as) companies registered under that act itself. "Registered companies" there means registered under that act itself; "unregistered companies," all those which had been registered under other acts antecedently to its passing. Therefore, an insurance company which was formed in 1852, and registered under the act of 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 110), and which ceased to carry on business in 1855, was held to be capable of being made the subject of a winding-up order under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89. Bowes v. the Directors, &c. of the Hope Life Insurance and Guarantee Co., 11 H.L. Cas. 389.

Ordinarily speaking, it is not under the provisions of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89. s. 199. a discretionary matter with the Court, when a debt, due by a registered company, has been established and remains unsatisfied, to refuse to the creditor an order for winding up the company. But (per Lord Cranworth) it is possible that a case might occur in which the Court could refuse such an order. Ibid.

H, an insurance company, registered under the Joint-Stock Companies' Act, 1844, granted a policy on a life. H transferred its business and its liabilities to another company, M. The life fell; an action was brought against the H company. Several pleas were pleaded: a director and agent of the M company entered into a negotiation with the plaintiff and got the policy transferred to himself; the pleas were then withdrawn, and judgment entered against the H company. The director then assigned the policy and judgment to B as trustee for another person. Execution was issued, and a return of nulla bona made. B then presented a petition for a winding-up order against the H company. The Master of the Rolls granted the order. The Lords Justices offered to B the opportunity of going into evidence in support of his claim, which was alleged by the H company to be collusive; but he refused to do so, insisting that that company could not impeach it, except by filing a bill to stay the judgment. On this refusal the Lords Justices discharged the order of the Master of the Rolls:—Held, that the order of the Master of the Rolls could not be sustained, the H company being entitled to file a bill to impeach the judgment. But the petitioner was not bound, as a preliminary to his right to the order, to go into further evidence in support of his claim, for, there being a judgment in his favour, the burden of impeaching it lay on the company. The order of the Lords Justices was therefore reversed, and the petition was ordered to stand over until a fixed day, on the respondents undertaking to file a bill to impeach the judgment. The costs of the appeals to the Lords Justices and to the House were ordered to be costs in the cause. Ibid.

(C) Petition and Order for Winding-up.

A petition was presented by a shareholder to wind up a company, after a petition to make the company bankrupt had been presented, but before any adjudication:—Held irregular, and dismissed with costs. In re the Mitre General Life Assur., &c. Association, 29 Beav. 1.

An order having been made for winding up a company by consent between the solicitors for the official liquidators and the petitioners, two contributories, who were not before the Court when the order was made, applied, after the expiration of twenty-one days from the date of the order, praying that such order might be discharged or varied, or the petition itself re-heard:—Held, first, that although the order might have been made by consent, that did not preclude the contributories who were not before the Court from making this application; secondly, that their not being parties to the order formed no objection; thirdly, that the period of twenty-one days did not apply to applications to discharge or vary a winding-up order; and fourthly, that leave was not required for an application to re-hear, vary, or discharge an order of this nature. In re the Anglo-Californian Gold Mining Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 238; 1 Dr. & S. 628.

Shareholders in a company who have either sold or forfeited their shares may apply for a winding-up order against the company when it has ceased to carry on business and is winding up its affairs privately, if they claim to be contributories, and have been sued, and made liable as such. In re the Times Fire Assur. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 478; 30 Beav. 596.

A creditor of a limited company petitioned for a compulsory winding-up order. This was objected to by the company and by a considerable body of creditors, who supported a voluntary winding-up:—Held, that the petitioners were entitled to a compulsory order. In re the General Rolling Stock Co., 34 Beav. 314.

Principles on which this Court proceeds in such cases stated. Ibid.

The Court will not, except under special circumstances, order a limited company to be wound up on the petition of a shareholder whose shares are fully paid up. In re the Patent Artificial Stone Co. (Lim.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 330; 34 Beav. 185.

The holder of paid-up shares in a limited company is not ipso facto disqualified from presenting a petition for the winding-up of the company; but to obtain a winding-up order he must satisfy the Court that the company has ceased to carry on its business, and that the assets of the company are sufficient after payment of the debts of the company to produce a surplus for division among the shareholders. In re the Lancashire Brick and Tile Co. (Lim.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 331; 34 Beav. 330.

Upon a petition by an unregistered transferee of scrip certificates in a limited company, an order was made by the Master of the Rolls, and, on appeal, affirmed (but dissentiente the Lord Justice Turner), for winding up the company, on the petitioner admitting his liability as a contributory, and undertaking to do all necessary acts for making himself a legal shareholder. In re the Littlehampton, Havre and Honfleur Steamship Co. (Lim.), ex parte Ellis, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 237; 34 Beav. 256; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 521.

Notwithstanding a company is in course of being wound up voluntarily with the assent of a large majority of its creditors, an order for winding-up by the Court will be directed where there is danger of want of efficient supervision under the voluntary winding-up. Ibid.

The creditors of an insolvent company are entitled to a winding-up order, even though there may, by reason of prior claims, be no assets coming to them, on the principle that the concern is virtually theirs, and that they ought to have the control of the management. In re the Isle of Wight Ferry Co., 2 Hem. & M. 597.

On a petition to wind up a company within the Stannaries, a creditor is not entitled to appear and oppose. In re the Tretoil and Messer Mining Co., 2 Jo. & H. 421.

(D) Official Manager, Official Liquidator, and Creditors' Representative.

Notice was given by advertisement that it was intended voluntarily to wind up a company which had adopted the regulations contained in 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, Table B, by a meeting to be held on a day and at an hour named. The meeting took place. It was resolved to have a voluntary winding-up, and an official liquidator was appointed, who sold property of the company by auction. On motion by the official liquidator to restrain a creditor from attaching the proceeds in the auctioneer's hands,—Held, that the advertisement, not having stated that an official liquidator was to be appointed, his appointment was invalid, and the motion must be refused, with costs. In re the Stearic Acid Co., 32 Law J. The deed of settlement of a registered joint-stock company provided that every general meeting, whether ordinary or extraordinary, should be called by advertisement, and that such advertisement should express the object of such meeting or the business proposed to be transacted thereat, and that no other business should be transacted at an extraordinary general meeting than the business for which it should have been expressly called. The deed did not contain any provisions for the winding up of the company:—Held, that liquidators for the winding up of the company, under the statutes 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47. and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 14. could not be appointed at a meeting convened for the purpose of proposing a resolution to wind up the company voluntarily; and that it was immaterial that the company was established before the passing of the Winding-up Acts. The Anglo-Californian Gold Mining Co. v. Lewis, 30 Law J. (E) Contributories; Persons liable to be made Contributories, and Extent of their Liability.

The defendant, being a shareholder in a company conducted on the cost-book principle, in October, 1861, sold and transferred all his shares; in the November following, the company was registered under the Joint-Stock Companies' Acts, 1856, 1857; in April, 1862, an order of the Vice Warden of the Stannaries was made for winding up the company; and under that order, in April, 1863, the defendant's name was put on the list of contributories to the company. In March, 1863, an action was commenced, by the plaintiff against the defendant, for goods supplied to the company between 1859 and 1861, while he held shares. On an application for a stay of proceedings, on the ground that the action could not be brought without leave of the Court pursuant to the 6th section of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 60,—Held, that the defendant was not within the protection of that section: for that neither was he nor had he been a member of the registered company, nor was the debt a debt of that company; and that the fact of the Vice Warden having put the defendant on the list of contributories made no difference, as the act was ultra vires. Lanyon v. Smith, 32 Law J. S, the local manager of a company, was asked by the general manager to become a director, the qualification for which was the holding 500 shares. 500 shares held by the manager as a trustee for the company were transferred to S by deed, which S also executed. He acted as director, but he was not registered as a shareholder, never received any notice of dividends, continued to be local manager, and never paid the price which was expressed in the deed of transfer to be paid for the shares, nor appeared to have been treated as a shareholder; and the Court was satisfied on the evidence that he had never agreed to purchase the shares, but that they were transferred to him by order of the directors merely to qualify him for the directorship:—Held, that if the company, which could not be bound by the transaction, elected to affirm it, S was only a trustee for the company, and so not a contributory: and that if they elected to disaffirm it, then, it not appearing that S was privy to the breach of duty on the part of the directors, it must be rescinded altogether, and that S therefore was not a contributory. In re the Waterloo Life, &c. Assur. Co. (Saunders's case), 2 De Gex, J. & S. 101.

On application by the official manager of a company ordered to be wound up, the Court refused to put in the list of contributories or to declare liable to contribute to the debts of the company a provisional director and allottee of fifty shares, who had attended meetings and taken part in the proceedings, but had never signed the subscription contract. In re the Hereford and Merthyr Tydvil Rail. Co. (Maitland's case), 3 Giff. 29.

The deed of settlement of a joint-stock company provided for the division of the persons concerned in it into three classes: (1.) Those interested in the Mutual Investment or Depositors' Fund; (2.) Those interested in the Mutual Assurance Fund; (3.) Those interested in the General Fund. The deed also provided that the depositors or holders of the investment stock (1.) were to have such interest not exceeding 5*l.* per cent. as should be determined by the directors of the association; and it gave the depositors any surplus profits on that stock. The depositors or holders of that mutual investment stock (1.) paid their money over the counter of the company, and received in return certificates of acknowledgment referring to the deed of settlement, and stating that the interest was payable half-yearly on the deposits so made. The prospectuses of the association, and an almanac issued by the directors also, referred to the rate of interest payable to the depositors, and spoke of the profits to be realized by them on their deposits. Upon the question whether the depositors were to be put upon the list of contributories to the association, the Master of the Rolls decided that, as they were affected with notice of the contents of the deed, and entitled to receive interest on their deposits according to the profits of the concern, they were partners in it, and as such to be put on the list of contributories, but without prejudice to any ulterior questions of liability inter se; also, that as to one of the depositors (Mrs. Davies) who had obtained a judgment in an action against the association, execution in the action must be stayed; also, that if a person authorizes a director of a company to apply to the board of it to elect him as a director, he must be taken to authorize the directors who elect him to do all that is legal and necessary to constitute him a director of the company, and he cannot afterwards be heard effectually to say that he did not authorize them to take the proper course for the purpose. The Marquis of A was therefore a contributory, though the extent of his liability was not determined. On appeal by Mrs. Davies and the Marquis of A respectively from the above decisions, the Lords Justices held, reversing the order of the Master of the Rolls, that (as to Mrs. Davies) the prospectus contained nothing to shew that the "investment" contemplated was anything more than an ordinary deposit with the bank, and could not give the depositor any claim to a share of the profits, and her name must be removed from the list; and further, that the fact that the prospectus which was in Mrs. D's hands mentioned the special act of parliament of the company, which act referred to the deed of settlement, was not notice to her of the contents of the deed. She must also be allowed to proceed with her action against the company. Their Lordships (as to the case of the Marquis of A) considered that his consent to become a director was not a consent to accept the necessary qualification for that office under the deed; that there was no implied agreement by him to become the holder of the stock; that, as he had no actual notice of the deed, so he could not, under the circumstances, be taken to have had constructive notice thereof, and that the consent to become a director did not impose upon him the obligation of accepting any stock; and, generally, that the mere fact of filling the office of a director did not make such director a contributory; and their Lordships decided, upon the same grounds as governed Mrs. D's case, that the Marquis of A was not a contributory in respect of the 105*l.* investment stock, and his name was accordingly removed from the list. *In re the National Assur. and Investment Assoc. A company was in process of being wound up. By the deed of settlement of the company it was provided that no person should be or continue a director unless he was the holder of a particular amount of stock. The company was managed by a board of directors at the chief office in London, and by boards in various towns, in the latter of which local agents or deputies, called provincial directors, had conferred upon them limited authority. C was one of these provincial directors, but held no shares in the company, and, on a question of his liability to be placed upon the list of contributories,—Held, that the clause requiring the qualification for directors did not apply to those who held the office of provincial directors, and that C was not liable to be placed on the list of contributories. Ex parte Cotterell, in re the National Assur. and Investment Assoc. (the Bank of Deposit), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 66.

On the 10th of August, 1860, at a meeting of five persons, held before the formation of and for the purpose of forming a joint-stock company, this resolution was passed: "Each of the gentlemen present agrees to hold 100 shares in the company, and also to execute the articles and memorandum of association when ready, and act as directors of the company." At a meeting held on the 14th of August the draft articles of association were submitted to the five gentlemen and approved, and ordered to be engrossed for execution at the next meeting. On the 25th they all signed the memorandum of association for twenty-one shares each, and executed the articles of association. By one of the articles the qualification of directors was fixed at 100 shares, and by another, it was provided that until directors were appointed, the subscribers thereto should be deemed to be directors. The company was afterwards wound up in Bankruptcy:—Held (affirming a decision of one of the Commissioners), per the Lord Justice Turner, that by the resolution of the 10th of August and the articles of association taken together, and per the Lord Justice Knight Bruce, that by the effect of the resolution and articles and of the proceedings in January, 1861, reported 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. pages 57, 58, the five gentlemen were contributories in respect of 100 shares each, in which number the twenty-one shares for which they had subscribed the memorandum of association should be included. *Ex parte Currie and others, in re the Great Northern and Midland Coal Co. (b) Registered Shareholders.

A person's name having been improperly placed on the register of shareholders in a public company was, on the winding-up of the company, placed by the Commissioner on the list of contributories. On appeal,—Held, that the name being on the register, the Commissioner could not do otherwise than place it on the list of contributories. *Ex parte Fox, in re the Moseley Green Coal and Coke Co. (c) Holders of Paid-up Shares.

Shares in a projected company, with limited liability, were allotted in payment of the purchase-money of property on which the intended company was about to carry on its business, and were accepted and treated by the vendor of such property as paid-up shares, and he afterwards transferred to each of the directors of the company 100 of them. One of the Commissioners of Bankruptcy in winding-up the company placed the names of each of these directors on the list of contributories, and made a call upon them. On appeal, it was held, that, as the shares had been allotted to a stranger as paid-up shares, they must be so considered, and the directors' names be removed from the list in respect to them. Ex parte Currie and others, in re the Great Northern and Midland Coal Co. (Lim.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 57.

A party who applies for shares and says, "which I hereby accept," and pays the deposit, if he writes before the allotment is made, saying he withdraws, and desires to cancel his application, is not a contributory. *Ex parte Graham, in re the Cardiff and Caerphilly Iron Co. A filled up a blank form of application, by which he agreed to accept a certain number of shares in a company, or any less number which might be allotted to him, and he paid a deposit, for which he received a banker's receipt. No shares were ever allotted; but he never made any formal claim for repayment of his deposit, which the company used. The company was wound up before it had commenced its intended operations, and A was placed by the Master of the Rolls on the list of contributories. But, on appeal,—Held, by the Lords Justices, that the contract was only to accept shares when an allotment of them should have been made, and that until allotment there was no complete contract, and consequently that A was not a contributory. In re the Adelphi Hotel Co. (Lim.), (Best's case), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 523; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 650.

A B agreed, verbally, to take 100 shares in a limited company, paying 1*l.* per share as deposit, and stipulating for the return of the 100*l.* if he did not get the shares in a few days. By the terms of the prospectus for launching the company, 2*l.* per share was payable upon allotment, in addition to the deposit. The shares were allotted in a few days, but no notice of allotment was given to A B, who, on his part, did not apply for the shares. Shortly after the company became defunct:—Held, affirming a decision of the Master of the Rolls (the Lord Justice Knight Bruce hæsitante), that the contract to accept the shares became complete on allotment; that it was the duty of A B to have applied for the shares and paid the 2*l.* per share; that neither his default in this respect, nor the omission by the company to give notice of the allotment, exonerated him; and, consequently, that A B was liable as a contributory. *Ex parte Bloxam, in re the New Theatre Co. A B, who was a shareholder in and director of a company, signed an undertaking to take fifty additional shares in the company, intending at the time

(but not so stating) to take them on behalf of a landowner for whom he was agent, and who was largely interested in the operations of the company. The landowner subsequently took 100 additional shares in his own name, and, as A B contended, in satisfaction of the fifty shares agreed to be taken by him. The company was afterwards wound up:—Held, that in the absence of notice given by A B, at the time of signature, that he signed the undertaking as agent only, he must remain on the list of contributories in respect of the fifty shares. (e) Persons who have taken Shares upon Conditions.

C executed the deed of settlement of a company which provided that no person should be entitled to the rights of a proprietor who should not have been previously accepted as such by the directors; that no persons purchasing shares from the directors should be considered approved by the board as a proprietor until he should have paid down the price, and that upon his making such payment the board should cause his name to be entered in the register of shareholders as a proprietor; that every person who should subscribe for or take or purchase or acquire any shares should, from the time of the entry or alteration in the register as a proprietor, be so considered; that every entry or alteration in the register should, as between the company and the last proprietor, be binding; and that the register should, as between the company and every person claiming to be a proprietor, be conclusive evidence on behalf of the company to shew whether he was a proprietor. On an application of C to be removed from the list of contributories, it appeared that the managing director, S, had induced C to execute the deed on an agreement that he should be appointed one of the medical officers, and should not be removed except for misconduct. It further appeared that after a correspondence as to this stipulation, C insisted that his name should be erased from the list of shareholders and his subscription cancelled. S finally engaged that the shares should be treated as forfeited, and assured C that the company would treat his signature to a deed of settlement as a nullity. No entry relating to this transaction appeared in the company's books, except an entry in the minutes of a meeting of the directors after the execution of the deed to the effect that 300 shares were allotted to C; who, however, never made, nor was required to make, any payment in respect of deposit or otherwise, nor received any communication whatever from the company until after an order had been made for winding it up:—Held, first, that the contract made between S and C, even if binding in equity, which (semble) it was not, was not within the powers of the directors under the deed of settlement; secondly, that C, notwithstanding his execution of the deed, never was a shareholder, nor had entered into a binding contract to become one; thirdly, that if C was a shareholder, it was competent to an extraordinary board of directors to declare his shares forfeited; and (semble) that that course would, under the circumstances of the case, have been assumed by the Court to have been taken, if it had been clear that C had ever become a shareholder under the deed. In re the British Provident Assur. Soc. (Coleman's case), 1 De Gex, J. & S. 495.

A, upon his appointment as agent to a limited assurance company, agreed to take shares upon the terms that the payment for them should be deducted from his commission as agent, and no deposit was ever paid by him upon them, but he was registered as the holder of the shares. The company, very soon after his appointment, dismissed him; but, as he contended, wrongfully. On the winding up of the company,—Held, by the Lords Justices, reversing a decision of the Master of the Rolls to the contrary effect, that the company's cancellation of A's appointment as agent, whether justifiable or not, could not operate as a cancellation of A's agreement to become a shareholder, and that (subject to any question of account as to payment for the shares) A was liable as a contributory. In re the Life Assoc. of England (Lim.) (Thomson's case), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 525.

If a person be induced, by the false representations of a company, to take shares, he cannot be rendered liable as a contributory; but the representations must come from an actual report put forward by the authority of the company, and not from the statements of directors' clerks or others. In re the Royal British Bank (Frowd's case), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 322.

The brokers, at Bristol, of a recently formed company sent to B, who resided in that neighbourhood, a prospectus of the company, and told him that the London share list was closed, but that they had some shares of the company to dispose of, and that the shares were quoted in the market at a premium. The statement as to the closing of the share list was made on the authority of the secretary of the company; that as to the shares being at a premium, agreed with certain reports in the newspapers, of which the authorship was not traced. Both statements were untrue. B agreed to take 150 shares, paid the deposit, and received a scrip certificate; but having discovered that three persons named as directors in the prospectus had no shares, that the London share list was not closed, and that there had been no sales of shares, he repudiated his shares and claimed a return of the deposit. The directors repaid the deposit and struck B's name off the share-register. By the articles of association, the cancellation of shares by the directors required the sanction of a general meeting; but no meeting was held. B was never asked to pay any calls, and did not execute the deed of settlement. Six months after the repayment of the deposit to B the company was voluntarily wound up:—Held, that B could not be made a contributory. In re the Life Assoc. of England (Lim.), ex parte Blake, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 278; 34 Beav. 634.

A company may be treated as having, qua company, been guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation. Ibid.

Certain reserved shares in a banking company were, in June, 1864, offered by the directors to the existing shareholders, on the terms that the price of the shares was to be paid on the 1st of October then next, and that the shares would then be entitled to one quarter's dividend at the end of the year, but that, if paid before that time, interest at 5*l.* per cent. would be allowed. A, a shareholder, agreed in July, 1864, to take certain of the reserved shares; and in August he paid for them in advance. The manager informed him that a certificate would be given for the shares on the 1st of October; but, on the 19th of September the bank stopped payment. It was admitted that the directors had gravely misrepresented the financial position of the company in their annual report, adopted by a general meeting in February:—Held, affirming a decision of Vice Chancellor Kindersley (but dissentiente the Lord Justice Knight Bruce), that the contract was to take the shares in præsenti, and that A was a contributory in respect of the reserved shares agreed to be taken by him. In re the Leeds Banking Co., ex parte Barrett, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 558; 2 Dr. & S. 415; 3 De Gex, J. & S. 30.

Held, also (per Vice Chancellor Kindersley), that A could not be relieved on account of misrepresentations to which he was, as a shareholder, himself constructively a party; and (per Lord Justice Turner), that having regard to the lapse of time between the date of the report and the taking of the shares, the misrepresentations in the report could not be regarded as the proximate cause of A taking the shares. Ibid.

J C took 300 shares in a cost-book mining company, and in order to increase the apparent number of shareholders, and thereby cause the mining scheme to be more favourably regarded in the share-market, caused 100 of them to be transferred into the name of A, and 100 to be transferred into the name of B, who, notwithstanding the transfers, neither attended meetings nor paid calls, nor took any part in the affairs of the company:—Held, that having regard to the absence of any bona fide trusteeship on the part of A and B, and to the extended definition of the word "contributory" in the 200th section of the Companies' Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), J C was properly inserted on the list of contributories in respect of the whole 300 shares. *The Wheal Emily Mining Co. B being applied to by C to allow shares in a joint-stock company to be taken in his name, consented on condition that he should not be liable to any demands in respect thereof, and this arrangement was known to the directors, who were well aware that the deposit had been paid by C, and always treated C as the real owner of the shares. By a subsequent arrangement between the directors and C, but which was not within the powers of the directors, nor confirmed by the company, it was agreed that these shares should be transferred into C's name, and, accordingly, the secretary was instructed to substitute the name of C for that of B as the holder of the shares. The secretary made the alteration in the share-ledger, but B's name was not removed from the register of shareholders. The company was afterwards ordered to be wound up in Bankruptcy, and B's name was inserted in the list of contributories. Upon an application by B in Chancery that his name might be removed from the register of shareholders, coupled with an appeal from the order placing him on the list of contributories,—Held, by the Lord Chancellor, that whatever might be the equities as between B and C, the company had a right to retain B as a contributory, and the application and appeal were dismissed, notwithstanding the submission of C to have his own name substituted for that of B. Ex parte Barrett, in re the Moseley Green Coal and Coke Co., 33 Law J. The deed of settlement of the company provided that executors, legatees, &c., should become shareholders and receive dividends only upon executing a deed, making themselves personally liable. A B, without executing any deed, received six dividends, and, with the exception of the two last, signed the receipts as executrix. The company, without the knowledge of A B, returned her name to the Stamp Office as a shareholder, and about four years after the testatrix's death entered it on the dividend list in lieu of that of the testatrix. By the rules of a mutual guarantee society notice of the withdrawal of any of the members was required to be given, but no particular form of notice was required, nor was it stated to whom the notice should be given:—Held, that parol notice of withdrawal given by a member to the agent through whom the original contract with the society was made was sufficient. *In re the Solvency Mutual Guarantee Soc. A shareholder withdrew from a company in pursuance of various resolutions passed at several general and special meetings; he paid what was required of him, and the company was subsequently remodelled. Twelve years and five months afterwards the company was wound up under an order of this Court:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, and affirmed, on appeal, by the Lords Justices, that the lapse of time and the subsequent acts of the company prevented any inquiry into the validity of the transaction, and that the retiring shareholder could not be placed on the list of contributories. *Ex parte Brotherhood, in re the Agricultural Cattle Insur. The directors of a company made arrangements with S, a shareholder who was dissatisfied with its management and desirous of obtaining a winding-up order, for enabling him to retire from the company by a forfeiture of his shares for non-payment of calls upon the terms of the shareholder paying a sum of money to the directors. The stipulated sum of money was paid; a resolution of the board of directors was passed declaring the shares forfeited for non-payment of calls, and the forfeiture registered at the office for the registration of joint-stock companies; and from that time the name of S was omitted from the list of shareholders in the share-register book, and in the next balance-sheet the shares were entered as cancelled; but no other notice of the transaction was given to the other shareholders, and no notice of any of the transactions of the company was given to S after the registration of his forfeiture. Twelve years afterwards the company was ordered to be wound up, and three years later an application was made by the official manager to add the name of S to the list of contributories:—Held, reversing the decision of the Master of the Rolls, that the transaction was collusive between S and the directors, and was not cured by lapse of time; and the name of S was ordered to be added to the list of contributories. *In re the Agriculturist Cattle Insur. In October, 1846, A, in the belief that he must take shares in order to qualify for the office of director which he had accepted in an insurance company, applied for, and had certain shares allotted to him. Understanding shortly afterwards that no qualification was necessary, he thenceforward repudiated the shares, refusing to execute the deed of settlement, or to pay calls. No dividend was ever received by him. In 1855, after intermediate communications, he offered to pay a specified sum on being released from all further liability, and the directors, who were empowered by the deed of settlement to compromise disputed claims, passed a resolution accepting his proposal. This resolution was confirmed at a general meeting of shareholders, but no notice had been given of the intention to confirm the arrangement or of its terms, nor were the terms stated in the circular subsequently sent to the shareholders, containing the directors' report, and the resolutions passed by the meeting. A's name had been originally put upon the register of shareholders, and was never removed. In the year 1861 the company was wound up. The Master of the Rolls, on the authority of the decision on appeal in Spackman's case (34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 321), put A on the list of contributories; but the order was, on appeal, discharged by the Lords Justices, their Lordships holding (there being no ground for imputing fraud, collusion, suppression, or concealment) that whether A was originally liable as a shareholder or not, the arrangement under which he had been released must stand as a bona fide compromise. In re the Agriculturist Cattle Insur. Co. (Lord Belhaven's case), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 503; 3 De Gex, J. & S. 41.

M applied for 200 10*l.* shares in a company, and paid 500*l.*, being the amount of a call of 2*l.* 10*s.* per share. Before any registration or allotment he expressed a wish that the number of shares should be reduced, and that the 500*l.* should be applied to pay for fifty shares in full. The directors of the company thereupon passed a resolution accepting the 500*l.* as in respect of full payment on fifty shares, and treating the matter of the remaining 150 shares as remaining in abeyance, and sent M certificates for fifty shares paid for in full. M having afterwards discovered that his name had been entered on the register for 200 shares, he complained, and requested that the entry might be altered so as to represent him as a holder of fifty paid-up shares, and he received the copy of a resolution that the 150 shares had been forfeited as no calls had been paid. Upon the winding-up of the company,—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, and, on appeal, by the Lords Justices, that M had a right to modify his acceptance of the 200 shares before he became absolute owner by allotment and registration of any shares, and that he was not a contributory in respect of the 150 shares. *Ex parte Miles; In re the Exhall Coal Mining Co. ### (k) Transferor of Shares.

A joint-stock company, the shares in which passed by delivery, was ordered to be wound up. After this a shareholder sold them at a nominal price, through a broker, to his (the shareholder's) own father, who was a needy man, and supported by others. The shareholder admitted that he parted with the shares to avoid liability. The Master of the Rolls placed the name of the shareholder on the list of contributories, instead of that of his father; and, on appeal, the Lords Justices held, that the transaction was not bona fide, but colourable merely, and that the name of the son must be retained. Ex parte Costello, in re the Mexican and South American Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 113.

The holder of a large number of shares in a joint-stock company, for which he had executed the deed, transferred them, in consideration of a small sum of money, to his bailiff, a man without property, and who earned wages of a guinea a week. The consideration-money was not paid. The company was ordered to be wound up, and the name of the transferee was placed upon the list of contributories; but upon appeal, the Master of the Rolls ordered the name to be removed, and that of the original holder of the shares to be placed thereon, his Honour considering the transaction to be merely colourable; and the Lords Justices affirmed the decision. Ex parte Budd, in re the Electric Telegraph Co. of Ireland, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 4; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 297.

In order to constitute a valid sale of shares, so as to entitle the vendor to have his name excluded from the list of contributories, though it is not necessary that the purchaser should be a person capable of meeting all demands that may be made upon him in respect of the shares, yet the transaction must be bona fide as between the vendor and purchaser. In re the Phœnix Life Assur. Co., ex parte Hatton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 341.

A shareholder in a joint-stock company, to avoid payment of a call, procured a person of no means to accept a transfer of his shares for a nominal consideration, and agreed to indemnify him against all liability. The directors refused to register the transfer until the call should have been paid. Afterwards, upon the winding up of the company, the original shareholder's name was placed upon the list of contributories. Upon his application to have it removed, it was held, that there was no bona fide transfer of the shares, and the name was retained upon the list. Ibid.

If the directors of a company take a transfer of the shares of a shareholder to a nominee to prevent an exposure of its affairs and the prosecution of a petition to wind up the company, it will not relieve the shareholder from his liabilities to the company, or prevent him on a winding-up order being obtained from being put upon the list of contributories to the company in respect of his shares. Ex parte Eyre, in re the Mitre Assur. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 640; 31 Beav. 177.

Upon the compromise of an action brought by G against a company in which he was a shareholder, it was arranged that G should transfer his shares to S, who was the managing director, and should receive from the company a sum of money as the price of his shares and in satisfaction of his claim. Accordingly, the money was paid, the shares were transferred, and the transfer registered. Two years afterwards the company was ordered to be wound up, and the official manager placed G's name on the list of contributories, on the ground that the transfer was invalid, S being a trustee for the company, and the assent of the shareholders to the transaction not having been obtained. The Court, under the circumstances, declined to impute to G knowledge that S was a trustee for the company; but independently of this it was held, that the transaction having been acquiesced in by the shareholders for two years, their consent must be presumed as against the company, and accordingly G's name was ordered to be taken off the list. In re the British Provident Life and Fire Assur. Soc. (Dr. Grady's case), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 326; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 488.

A shareholder in a joint-stock company was chosen director, and acted as such, but, wishing to get rid of his shares, applied to the managing director and entered into an arrangement that if the latter would find a purchaser for the shares he (the managing director) should have 10*l.* per cent. commission on the transaction. Subsequently the shareholder transferred direct to the company, the purchase-money for the shares being taken in part payment for annuities granted by the company to the shareholder, and paid the managing director the balance of the consideration for the annuities, and the 10*l.* per cent. The deed of settlement authorized the purchase of shares by the company, provided that it should not be lawful for the directors to purchase any shares without the authority and sanction of a general meeting of proprietors previously in that behalf obtained. The only notice of the transaction at any general meeting appeared to be an obscure reference to it in a balance-sheet presented at a subsequent meeting; but the minutes of what took place at the meetings of the company were generally inaccurate, and the company exercised acts of ownership over the shares so transferred. Five years elapsed, and the company was ordered to be wound up:—Held, that it was not necessary that the sanction of a general meeting should be obtained previously to any treaty for the purchase of the shares, but only previously to the contract becoming finally binding, and that under the circumstances it must be assumed as against the company that the transaction was properly submitted to a meeting and sanctioned; and consequently (reversing the decision of one of the Vice Chancellors) that the transfer was valid, and the transferor must be struck off the list of contributories. In re the British Provident Life and Fire Assur. Soc. (Lane's case), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 84; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 504.

Held, also, that the stipulation for the allowance of commission did not affect the transaction as between the transferor and the company. Ibid.

A shareholder in a company, in respect of which a winding-up order was made, applied for his discharge in India under the India Insolvent Act, but did not name the company in his schedule as creditors. After he had obtained his discharge his name was placed on the list of contributories, and a call was made:—Held, reversing the decision of one of the Vice Chancellors, that his name must be removed from the list of contributories, and that he was not liable to the call. *Ex parte Parbury, in re the Warwick and Worcester Rail. (m) Extent of Liability.

A joint-stock company purchased mines, subject to an existing mortgage debt, for payment of which B was a surety for the original mortgagor, and in pursuance of arrangements entered into they gave to the mortgagee their promissory note for the money due on the mortgage, and to the vendor several promissory notes for the payment of the rest of the purchase-money by instalments. Before the notes became due the company was ordered to be wound up, and B, who was also a shareholder, was placed upon the list of contributories. B then took from the mortgagee a transfer of the mortgage securities, (including the promissory note for the mortgage-money,) and from the vendor an assignment of two of the other promissory notes, and claimed to set off the amounts so due against the amount of his call pro tanto:—Held, that he was entitled to such set-off in respect of the mortgage-money, on the principle that a surety paying off his principal's debt is entitled to the benefit of all the securities held by the creditor, but that he was not entitled to set off the amount due upon the other two promissory notes. Ex parte Barrett, in re the Moseley Green Coal and Coke Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 41.

A creditor of a company which was in the course of being wound up established his debt against the official manager. The Court refused to allow the creditor to proceed directly against the contributories to recover the amount under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45. s. 56, thinking that the proper course was to pay the debt by means of a call. In re the Cameron Coalbrook Co., 30 Beav. 216.

On the 6th of October, a petition was presented, under the Companies' Act, 1862, for the winding-up of the company; and on the 9th of October an order was made by the Master of the Rolls ex parte, to restrain the sale by the sheriff of the property seized, his Honour being of opinion that the object of the act was to secure equal distribution amongst all creditors. On appeal, it was held, that the creditor ought not, under the circumstances, to be restrained from reaping the fruits of his action by sale of the property taken in execution. *Ex parte Parry, in re the Great Ship Co. (c) Payment of Debts.

The S company agreed, in writing, to purchase the business of the T company. Part of the consideration was to consist of a sum of money payable by instalments at fixed times. In 1861 an order was made for winding up the S company. At that time all the instalments of the consideration-money had become due, but none had been paid, and the T company claimed to be entitled to interest on the unpaid instalments from the respective times when they became due to the date of the winding-up order. The agreement contained no provision as to the payment of interest:—Held, that the T company was entitled to interest at 5*l.* per cent., and that the Court of Chancery had jurisdiction, under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45. s. 83, to make calls to raise the amount of such interest. *In re the State Fire Insur. Under a winding-up subsequent to the Winding-up Amendment Act, 1857, and prior to the Companies' Act, 1862,—Held, that on the company being found to be insolvent, an annuitant was entitled to prove under the winding-up for the estimated value of the annuity without taking any preliminary proceedings to establish the amount as a debt. *In re the English and Irish Church and University Assur. (G) CALLS.

A winding-up order having been made in 1849 under the Winding-up Act, 1848, in 1862, an order for a call was made in the usual manner, and a circular notice of such order was sent by post, prepaid, to one of the contributories, and the circular notice so sent was not returned. At the expiration of three weeks a balance or four-day order was made, and as it was found impossible to effect personal service, an order for substituted service was obtained, which immediately reached the party, and he took out a summons to discharge the balance order and the order for substituted service:—Held, that both orders were regular, and that the summons must be dismissed, with costs. *In re the Warwick and Worcester Rail. (H) PRACTICE.

Where the Court of Chancery has made an order in a winding-up case for the further proceedings to be taken in a particular Court of Bankruptcy, that Court has jurisdiction to commit persons disobeying its order in such further proceedings. Ex parte Hirtzel, in re the United General Bread and Flour Co. for Plymouth, Devonport and Stonehouse, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 38.

An unincorporated joint-stock company of more than seven members, having a private act of parliament enabling it to sue and be sued, and regulated by a deed of settlement which contained a clause for the transfer of stock of members becoming insolvent, and stipulated that the assignees of such insolvent members should not be members in respect of such stock, was ordered to be wound up by the Master of the Rolls, under the Joint-Stock Companies' Winding-up Acts. This order was made after one of the members of such company had become insolvent. The defendant, who had been also a member of such company, but had transferred his shares in it previously to the making of such order, compromised his liability as contributory by payment of a sum of money to the official manager, with the consent of the Master of the Rolls, after creditors' representatives had been duly advertised for and chosen pursuant to the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 78. The plaintiff proved against the company in the winding-up proceedings for a debt due to her from the company, and afterwards brought an action against the defendant for such debt without the leave of the Master of the Rolls:—Held, that this Court, being the Court in which the action was brought, had authority under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 78. s. 7. to stay proceedings in such action. —Held, also, that the company was within the Winding-up Acts, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45. and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108. and that the Master of the Rolls had jurisdiction to make the winding-up order, and that the company was not dissolved by the said insolvency of one of its members so as to prevent the application of the Winding-up Acts. Thomas v. Wells, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 211; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 508.

Where a person's name had been improperly placed upon the register of shareholders of a company, the proper course was considered to be to apply, under the special statutory jurisdiction (see 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47. s. 25. and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89. s. 35), to remove the name from the register of shareholders, and not to oppose the placing his name upon the list of contributories. In re the Moseley Green Coal Co., ex parte Fox, 32 Law J. But where there are a number of persons in a similar situation and the official liquidator has taken proper steps for having the question adjudicated upon once for all so as to rule all the cases, the Court will not entertain a separate application on the part of one of such persons, but will adjourn the motion to come on with the other similar cases. The Court will not grant a rule under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16. s. 36, for a scire facias against a party as a shareholder in a joint-stock company upon a judgment obtained against the company, unless the affidavits disclose reasonable grounds for believing that the party sought to be charged is a shareholder. ## COMPROMISE.

A decree was made in a suit for taking and adjusting a complicated series of accounts. The decree was, in the opinion of the Court, in effect for a general account; but it was considered by the parties to be merely for an account from 1825, all earlier accounts being supposed at the time of taking the decree to be correct. The suit was then compromised by the payment of 22,000*l.* Subsequently to the compromise, it was discovered that there were claims arising out of accounts prior to 1825. The Master of the Rolls considered that the whole accounts must now be taken and the compromise set aside. The Lords Justices, on appeal, held, that the compromise was binding from 1825; and the defendants electing to so consider it, their Lordships varied the order of the Master of the Rolls, by directing the accounts prior to 1825 only to be taken. Stainton v. the Carron Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 713.

Parties entered into an agreement for compromising a suit, and infants being interested, a reference was made to chambers to ascertain whether it was for their benefit. Pending the reference, one of the adult parties became bankrupt, and afterwards the Court approved of the compromise:—Held, that the compromise was binding on the bankrupt from that date, subject to the confirmation by the Court, and that the assignees could not recede from it. Bousfield v. Bousfield, 31 Beav. 591.

In order that a transaction not otherwise valid may be supported upon the ground of its being a family arrangement, there must be a full and fair communication of all material circumstances affecting the subject-matter of the agreement which are within the knowledge of the several parties, whether such information be asked for by the other parties or not. Greenwood v. Greenwood, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 28.

A compromise sanctioned by the Court of Chancery, on behalf of persons under disability, is liable to be set aside on the ground of fraud, or of suppression of material facts, which amounts, in the eye of the Court, to fraud; but, per the Master of the Rolls, not on the ground of error of judgment on the part of the Court in sanctioning the compromise; and, per the Lord Justice Turner, not on any other ground than fraud, or conduct amounting thereto. Brooke v. Lord Mostyn, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 65; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 373.

An infant and a married woman were interested in a legacy, which was secured by a term of 500 years, created, by will, in real estates, to raise a fund, in aid of the personal estate, for payment of debts and legacies. It was represented by, or on behalf of, the tenant for life of the estates, that both funds were deficient, but he offered to give his personal covenant for the payment of the legacy within a limited time, if the estates were released. A suit was accordingly instituted by the parties entitled to the legacy; and upon a reference to the Master, the latter relying upon evidence which represented the property to be much less valuable than it really was, reported in favour of the compromise, which was accordingly carried into effect with the sanction of the Court. A great part of the estates was afterwards sold in fee simple for sums which far exceeded those named as the value of the estates if sold for the term of 500 years. In the mean time the interest of the tenant for life in the estates was sold by his mortgagees to his son, who was tenant in tail, and the tenant for life became bankrupt. Upon a bill, on behalf of the infant, to set aside the compromise and obtain payment of the legacy,—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, (he being of opinion that the evidence before the Master, though erroneous, had been given bona fide,) that the compromise must stand, although in the events which had happened, the covenant given by the tenant for life was wholly unavailable and worthless. But, on appeal, it appearing that material information which might possibly have led the Master to a conclusion adverse to the proposed compromise was in the possession of the tenant for life or his advisers, and not of the plaintiff or his advisers, and had been withheld from the Master,—Held, by the Lords Justices (reversing the decision of the Master of the Rolls), that the withholding of such information from the Master amounted to fraud; and that, consequently, the plaintiff was entitled to be relieved against the compromise. Ibid.

Suits were compromised with the sanction of the Court (infants being interested), and it was agreed that the estate should be sold by auction for the purpose of division, and that A B should have the conduct of the sale. At the auction, the property could not be sold, and it was afterwards sold by private contract at the reserved bidding:—Held, that this was a valid sale, and the purchaser was decreed specifically to perform his contract. Bousfield v. Hodges, 33 Beav. 90.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

The owners of a British ship mortgaged her in England, and she afterwards was taken by the mortgagors to New Orleans, where she was attached by creditors, who took proceedings in the Courts there for the purpose of making her available for their demands. The English mortgagees intervened in these proceedings for the purpose of asserting their rights; but their claim was wholly disregarded, the law of New Orleans not recognizing a mortgage of chattels; and, under an order of the Court, the ship was sold to a British subject. The ship having afterwards returned to England with a cargo, the mortgagees filed a bill to enforce their claim:—Held, that the judgment of a foreign Court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive inter partes on the merits of the matter in dispute, but may be reviewed by the Courts in England if any error appears on the face of the record. Simpson v. Fogo, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 249; 1 Hem. & M. 195.

A testator domiciled in England made his will there, whereby he left a legacy to the children of his nephew C. At the date of the will and death of the testator, C was residing abroad, but his domicil was English. C subsequently acquired a French domicil, and became the father of an illegitimate child by a French lady. He afterwards married this lady, and the child was legitimated under the French law:—Held, that the will must be construed according to the English law; and that the legitimated child of C was not entitled to the legacy. Ibid.

Under a bequest to the children of L S, who had three children born to him in England, while domiciled there, by a woman with whom he had cohabited, and with whom he removed to Holland, and while domiciled in Holland had another child born to him by the same woman, whom he afterwards married in Holland,—Held, that the law of the country of the domicil at the time of the birth and of the marriage must prevail, and that the child born in Holland was entitled to share equally with another child, born there after the marriage; but the three children born in England, being illegitimate according to the law of England, were excluded. Goodman v. Goodman, 3 Giff. 643.

By a deed executed and registered in the manner required by the law of Ceylon, certain estates there were mortgaged to a banking company, to secure the payment of bills of exchange which had been discounted by the bank, and, subject to this mortgage, the same estates were, by another deed also duly executed and registered, mortgaged to R & Co., and by a deed, not executed as required by the law of Ceylon, the banking company covenanted on payment of the bills to transfer the mortgage securities to R & Co. The bills were paid at maturity by R & Co., the necessary funds being advanced by S upon an agreement that the mortgage securities should be transferred to him, and accordingly R & Co. by letter directed the banking company to transfer the mortgage securities to S; but afterwards R & Co. themselves demanded and obtained possession thereof as being the next registered incumbrancers. S then filed a bill against the banking company and others, alleging that the deed of covenant and the letter of R & Co. constituted the banking company trustees for him, and that in delivering the securities to R & Co. they had committed a breach of trust, and praying consequential relief:—Held, (affirming the decision of one of the Vice Chancellors,) that although the transactions would by the law of this country constitute the plaintiff equitable assignee of the securities, yet as it appeared by the evidence that they were insufficient for that purpose according to the law of Ceylon, and that according to that law the banking company had no legal defence against the demand of R & Co., the bill must be dismissed with costs as against the banking company. Sichel v. Raphael, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 106.

A contract by written correspondence between three brothers, British subjects, two of whom resided in England, and one in Chili without having acquired a domicil there, held, though relating to land in Chili, to be governed by English law. Cood v. Cood, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 273; 33 Beav. 314.

In the year 1825, G C died at Arequipa, intestate, leaving a large real and personal estate at Valparaiso, in Chili. His mother and his three brothers, B, T and H, survived him. They all resided in England, except H, who at the time of the death of G C was in Peru, and who for many years subsequently resided either in Peru or in Chili, but without acquiring a foreign domicil. In 1831 their mother died, having bequeathed all her property to her sons B, T and H, equally. In 1832 T offered his share of G C's estate to H for 1,000*l.*; H, in reply, intimated that with a view to save the expense of rendering formal accounts of G C's estate, he was willing to buy the shares of both B and T, which led to a long correspondence. In 1833, B wrote to H offering his share for 1,100*l.*, to be paid in part out of the mother's estate, but by a given date, and T wrote to H at the same time, saying whatever B determined would meet with his approval. The condition as to payment by the given time was not fulfilled; but in the subsequent correspondence between B and H the arrangement was treated as binding between them, and was never repudiated by T, nor were any accounts of G C's estate applied for until after B's death, which occurred in 1849. In 1850, T sent an agent to Valparaiso, who, on behalf of T and the representatives of B, took proceedings in the Courts in Chili, and, in 1858, by a decree made in the Court at Santiago, it was decided that the letters between the brothers amounted to an agreement which bound B, but not T; and H was directed to account to T for one-third of G C's estate. But upon a bill in this Court by H, and the assignee under his insolvency,—Held, that having regard to H's avowed object in purchasing both shares, and to T's acquiescence from 1833 to 1849, T was bound equally with B; and a decree was made restraining T from further proceedings in Chili to compel an account, and declaring him a trustee of his share in the estate of G C for the plaintiffs. Ibid.

CONTINGENT REMAINDER.

A testator devised freeholds, copyholds and leaseholds for lives to T W for life, with divers contingent remainders over, with an ultimate remainder to the right heirs of the testator. There being no limitation to support contingent remainders, T W, who was also the heir-at-law of the testator, executed a release by which he granted and released the freeholds, copyholds and leaseholds to W B, to the intent that they should be discharged from the limitations declared by the testator, and he resettled the estates. Upon a bill by the party first entitled in remainder under the will,—Held, that the release destroyed the contingent remainders created in the freeholds.—Held, also, that the contingent remainders in the copyholds were supported by the estate in the lord of the manor, and that they were not destroyed.—Held, further, that the contingent remainders in the leaseholds for lives were not destroyed, as upon the death of the tenant for life the possible estate of the heir or executor, as special occupant, was not of sufficient capacity to merge the estate of the tenant for life. Pickersgill v. Grey, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 394; 30 Beav. 352.

(A) WHAT AMOUNTS TO A CONTRACT.

The plaintiff, having had no previous dealings with the firm, and knowing them only by reputation, applied at the place of business of "Gandell & Co." for orders for goods: the firm then consisting of Thomas Gandell only, and being managed by Edward Gandell, a clerk. On the plaintiff asking to see Messrs. Gandell, Edward Gandell presented himself, and so conducted himself as to lead the plaintiff to suppose that he was one of the firm of Gandell & Co. and had authority to order goods on their behalf (which was not the fact). The plaintiff sent goods, according to Edward Gandell's order, to the place of business of Gandell & Co., an invoice being made out, by Edward Gandell's direction, to the name of "Edward Gandell & Co." Edward Gandell, unknown to the plaintiff, carried on business with one Todd at another place; and the goods were, within three or four days of their delivery, pledged with the defendant, with a power of sale, to secure advances bona fide made by him to Gandell & Todd, and he sold them under the power without notice from the plaintiff:—Held, that there was no contract of sale, inasmuch as the plaintiff intended to contract with Gandell & Co., and not with Edward Gandell personally, and Gandell & Co. were not contracting parties; that no property therefore passed, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover the value of the goods from the defendant. Hardman v. Booth, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 105; 1 Hurls. & C. 803.

A legal contract may be made with a fluctuating body, such as a volunteer rifle corps, to supply certain of its members with uniforms under which each individual member of the corps will be liable for the price of all the uniforms. Therefore, where the plaintiff, a tailor, supplied uniforms to certain members of the C Rifle Corps, and brought an action against one of the members for the price, entries in the plaintiff's book (made evidence by the defendant) headed "Dr., C Rifle Corps," is some evidence from which a jury may be justified in finding that the contract was made with the C Rifle Corps. Cross v. Williams, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 145; 7 Hurls. & N. 675.

The plaintiff, a tailor, brought an action against the defendant, the captain and a member of the committee of management of a company of volunteer rifles called "The C Volunteer Rifle Corps," for the price of uniforms supplied to members of the corps, as the plaintiff alleged, by the defendant's order. The defendant pleaded the general issue, and put in evidence entries in the plaintiff's books headed "C Rifle Corps, Dr. 28 suits for the supply of the following gentlemen, at 3*l.*," followed by the names of the members of the corps to whom the suits had been supplied. The Judge, at Nisi Prius, left to the jury—1st. Did they believe that the understanding between the parties was that the defendant was to be paymaster? 2nd. Did they believe that the contract was with the defendant jointly with the committee? 3rd. Did they believe that the contract was with the defendant jointly with the whole corps? 4th. Did they believe that the plaintiff looked to each member to pay for his own uniform? And he directed them that, if they found the affirmative on the 1st, 2nd and 3rd questions, inasmuch as the defendant had not pleaded in abatement the non-joinder of the other members of the committee and of the corps, that the defendant would be liable in this action; that if they found the affirmative on the 4th question, the defendant would not be liable. And, that the entries in the plaintiff's books headed "C Rifle Corps" were some evidence from which they might infer that the contract had been with the whole corps. The jury having found a verdict generally for the plaintiff,—Held, discharging a rule to set aside this verdict on the ground of misdirection, that there was no misdirection,—inasmuch as there was some evidence on which the jury might have found their verdict on any one of the questions left to them; that, although it might be very improbable that a contract such as that stated in the 3rd question had been made in fact, yet such a contract could be made in law; and, per Channell, B.—that although, looking at the entries in the plaintiff's books, it could not be said there was no evidence, or not a scintilla of evidence, of the contract stated in the 3rd question, and that, therefore, the Judge was warranted in leaving the 3rd question to the jury, yet the evidence was wholly unsatisfactory and insufficient to establish such a contract. Ibid.

A proposal to receive tenders for certain things to be sold (specifying no limitation or qualification) and an acceptance (also specifying no limitation or qualification) is a contract for the whole. Thorn v. the Commissioners of Public Works, 32 Beav. 490.

The defendants advertised that offers would be received for old Portland stone of Westminster Bridge. The plaintiff made an offer for the stone of a particular quality which was accepted:—Held, that this was a contract for the purchase of all the stone of that quality. Ibid.

The plaintiff insured his ship by becoming a member of an association for marine assurance, and signed an undertaking to be bound by the rules of the association; but although he applied for a copy of the rules, he was not furnished with one, and although he mentioned that his ship was mortgaged, he was not told that there was a rule that no member should recover any money on his assurance whose ship was mortgaged, unless the mortgagee had, previously to the loss, covenanted by deed to pay all sums which might become due from the mortgagor to the association. Demurrer to the bill filed, alleging the loss and to recover the sum insured, on the ground that the mortgagee had not executed such a deed—overruled. Turnbull v. Woolfe, 3 Giff. 91.

The assent which is so necessary to the validity of an agreement in this Court, must be an assent uninfluenced by any power which the one party may have of operating on the fears of the other; therefore, where an agreement was executed by the one party, the plaintiff, under a threat by the other that the plaintiff's son would otherwise be indicted for forgery, it was set aside with costs. Bayley v. Williams, 4 Giff. 638.

Where the plaintiff's main and influencing purpose for entering into the agreement was to relieve his son from exposure, disgrace and ruin, the intervention of other circumstances or collateral advantages to himself are not enough to sustain the agreement in this Court. Ibid.

A father, in contemplation of the marriage of his daughter, wrote to her intended husband, saying "that she should be entitled to her share in whatever property he (the father) might die possessed of." The father by his will gave to his daughter only a life interest in a portion of his property, and died, leaving real and personal estate. Upon a bill by the husband and wife,—Held, that the letter did not affect the real estate, but that it bound the father to leave his daughter a legal share of the personalty equal to what she would have taken if he had died intestate. Laver v. Fielder, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 365; 32 Beav. 1.

The defendant, by letter, offered to sell a piece of land to the plaintiff at a certain price. The letter concluded, "There will be the usual clauses in a contract and some limitations as to the length of title to be shewn and other minor details":—Held, that this offer, with the acceptance in writing, did not constitute a contract which the Court could enforce, owing to the uncertainty as to the clauses to be inserted and as to the title to be shewn. Rummens v. Robins, 3 De Gex, J. & S. 88.

A railway company who were promoting a bill for a new line, entered into an agreement with a landowner that if the act passed they would pay him a fixed sum for so much land as they should require, and would, for the convenience of his estate, make such crossings as his surveyor should, within a month after their taking possession, notify to their engineer:—Held, that this could not be construed as a contract to make all necessary and proper crossings, with a superadded direction as to the mode of ascertaining them, so as to enable the Court to ascertain them if not ascertained in that particular mode; and as no notification was given within the time, there was no contract which the Court could enforce. The Earl of Darnley v. the London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co., 3 De Gex, J. & S. 24.

(B) When Valid or Illegal.

(a) Consideration to support.

After a marriage between the plaintiff and the daughter of W G, the father of the plaintiff and W G, in order to provide a marriage portion, agreed respectively to pay two sums of money to the plaintiff, and they also agreed that the plaintiff should have full power to sue for the said sums of money. The plaintiff was not a party to the agreement. After the deaths of the father of the plaintiff and W G, the plaintiff brought an action upon the agreement, against the executor of W G, to recover the sum which W G had agreed to pay to him:—Held, that he could not recover, notwithstanding his near relationship, as he was not a party to the agreement, and no consideration ran from him. Tweddle v. Atkinson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 265; 1 Best & S. 393.

C, the testator, wrote the following letter to L, his nephew: "I am glad to hear of your intended marriage with E, and, as I promised to assist you at starting, I am happy to tell you that I will pay to you 150*l.* yearly during my life, and until your annual income, derived from your profession of a Chancery barrister, shall amount to 600 guineas, of which your own admission will be the only evidence that I shall receive or require." L having afterwards married E, sued C's executors for arrears of the annuity accrued due during C's lifetime:—Held, per Erle, C.J. and Keating, J., that the above letter contained a good consideration for C's promise to pay the annuity; the consideration pleaded being, that L would marry E, and his subsequent marriage. Per Byles, J., that the letter was a mere letter of kindness, and created no legal obligation. Shadwell v. Shadwell, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 145; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 159.

Held, per Erle, C.J., Byles, J. and Keating, J., that L's continuance at the bar was not a condition precedent to his right to the annuity. Ibid.

An agreement not to call for the performance of a deed, and to substitute certain other terms for some of the matters provided for by the deed is a good consideration for a promise to perform such substituted contract, even although the deed be not thereby released. Nash v. Armstrong, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 286; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 259.

Semble, per Willes, J., such agreement would be an answer to an action on the deed by way of equitable plea. Ibid.

The delivery of goods by A to B is a good consideration for a promise by B, although A had already contracted with C to deliver the goods to his order, and C has ordered him to deliver to B. Scotson v. Pegg, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 225; 6 Hurls. & N. 295.

To a declaration, alleging that in consideration that the plaintiffs would deliver to the defendant a cargo of coals, then on board the plaintiff's ship, the defendant promised to unload the coals in a certain time, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiffs had previously contracted to deliver the coals to the order of other persons, who had ordered the plaintiffs to deliver to the defendant, and that there was no other consideration for the defendant's promise:—Held, that the plea was no answer to the action. Ibid.

B and the defendant, being joint-owners of a horse and a mare, agreed that the defendant should sell them and pay one moiety of the proceeds to the plaintiff, as the agent of B, who was abroad. The defendant accordingly sold the horse to C for 600*l.* and the mare for 300*l.*, but did not receive the price of the horse, but took a promissory note for 300*l.* for the price of the mare, and indorsed the note to the plaintiff, as B's agent, and the plaintiff received the amount as such agent. The defendant afterwards requested the plaintiff, on his own responsibility, to pay him a moiety of the 300*l.*, in the plaintiff's hands as such agent, and the plaintiff agreed to do so provided the defendant would undertake either to deliver to the plaintiff a bill of exchange at two months, accepted by C, for 233*l.*, B's moiety of the horse (after certain deductions), or would pay to the plaintiff that amount in cash within two weeks. The defendant, thereupon, gave the plaintiff the following undertaking:—"In consideration of your having paid me a sum of 150*l.* on account of my share of the mare, I hereby undertake to deliver to you a bill for 233*l.*, drawn by me upon and accepted by C, at two months, or the above sum in cash within two weeks from this date":—Held, that a declaration alleging the above facts disclosed a good consideration for the defendant's promise. Surtees v. Lister, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 369; 7 Hurls. & N. 1.

Communications took place between a bachelor and his kept mistress as to a discontinuance of the cohabitation, and in the course of these communications the woman uniformly asserted that he had promised to marry her, which assertions there appeared to be a fair prospect of her being able to substantiate. Ultimately, the man proposed by letter that they should separate, he allowing her an annuity, which offer she accepted:—Held, that this was a contract for valuable consideration, which could be enforced against the man. Keenan v. Handley, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 283.

A suit was instituted by A against B, founded on an alleged agreement signed by B's testator. A being ordered to produce on oath all documents in his possession, and being unable to find the agreement, induced B, without stating this inability, and in the absence of his solicitor, to compromise the suit. B filed a bill to set aside the compromise, and A, being still unable to produce the alleged agreement, and there being no secondary proof of its ever having existed, except the testimony of A and his wife, the Court set aside the compromise. Cooke v. Greves, 30 Beav. 378.

A banker required security from his customer for an overdrawn account. The customer, by letter, promised to hypothecate certain goods, but upon being asked for the delivery warrants, he refused to carry out his promise. Upon bill filed to enforce the promise, and demurrer thereto by the defendant,—Held, that from the nature of the transaction, some forbearance to sue on the part of the creditor must be assumed to have taken place, and that this was sufficient to prevent the promise to hypothecate from being nudum pactum. The Alliance Bank v. Broom, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 256; 2 Dr. & S. 289.

S, being an executor of G, and devisee of his real estate in trust for his children, induced the children to concur in the sale and conveyance of G's real estate to his own brother and partner, he himself being interested in the purchase, by a verbal promise to leave them by his will as much as or more than they would get under the will of G:—Held, that the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds did not apply, the promise being one which might possibly be performed within twelve months; that although the sale was necessary for payment of debts, and the full value was given, there was a sufficient consideration for the promise; and that the estate of S was bound to pay the children of G a sum equal in amount to the clear residue of G's estate. Ridley v. Ridley, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 462; 34 Beav. 478.

An obligor bound himself to pay an annuity to an unmarried woman by whom he had had several children, on condition that she should not require the custody or management of the said children:—Held, that there was a sufficiently valuable consideration to support the bond as a specialty debt.

In re Plaskett's Estate, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 606.

(b) Founded on Mistake.

The defendant by letter offered to sell some property to the plaintiff for 1,250*l.*; the plaintiff by letter accepted the offer. The defendant had by mistake inserted 1,250*l.* instead of 2,250*l.* in his letter, and he immediately gave notice of the error. The Court refused to enforce the contract. Webster v. Cecil, 30 Beav. 62.

(c) Contrary to Statute or Public Policy.

To a declaration for the price of certain volunteers' uniforms, the defendant pleaded that the contract was corruptly entered into (in violation of the 49 Geo. 3. c. 126), with the intent that the defendant might have a certain military commission:—Held, that the plea disclosed no illegality within the statute. Eicke v. Jones, 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 631.

A contract for the payment of money in consideration of the resignation of a majority in the service of the East India Company, is illegal by the 49 Geo. 3. c. 126. Eyre v. Forbes, 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 191.

A B, being requested by C D (in consequence of reports that he was paying improper attentions to a daughter of the latter) to discontinue visiting at his house, in order to lay C D under obligation to him, and so, by obtaining permission to continue his intercourse with C D's family, to gain free access to the daughter, whom he had in fact secretly seduced, advanced to C D a sum of money on mortgage. Upon bill by A B to foreclose and by C D to set aside the deed,—Held, that, notwithstanding the pecuniary consideration, the immoral purpose vitiated the whole deed; and a decree was made for its cancellation, leaving A B to sue at law, if he thought fit, for the money lent. Willyams v. Bullmore, Bullmore v. Willyams, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 574; sub nom. W—— v. B——, 32 Beav. 574.

A bank agreed to advance a sum of money on behalf of a company for the deposit required by the Houses of Parliament from the promoters, upon an agreement that unless the money was previously repaid, the bill should not be read a third time in the House of Lords. The money was accordingly deposited in the Court of Chancery on behalf of two persons, one of whom was named by the bank, and the other by the promoters. Afterwards the bank, without receiving the money, consented to the third reading of the bill in the House of Lords, upon an understanding that the directors of the railway company would as soon as practicable procure a bond (upon the execution of which the deposit was by the special Railway Act made returnable) to be given to the Lords of the Treasury, and that the nominee of the company should then concur in such acts as would be requisite to obtain a return to the bank of the deposit. The act passed, and a bond was executed to the Lords of the Treasury; but the nominee of the railway company refused his consent to any application to obtain a return of the deposit. Upon a bill by the bank against the two nominees and the railway company,—Held, on demurrer, by the Master of the Rolls, and on appeal by the Lords Justices, that the case was properly one for a bill in equity; that the agreement was neither illegal nor against public policy; and that the directors of the railway company were not necessary parties in their individual capacity. Scott v. Oakeley, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 612; 33 Beav. 501.

The mere fact of the deposit being with the Accountant General of the Court of Chancery was sufficient to attract the jurisdiction of that Court—per the Master of the Rolls. Ibid.

It is not an offence against the law of nations, or the law of this country, for the subject of a neutral state to supply contraband of war to a belligerent power; and the right of the other belligerent to seize such contraband of war in transitu is merely a co-existent conflicting right, which exposes the neutral merchant to the risk of confiscation, but does not render illegal a contract between him and another neutral subject for a joint adventure for the supply of such contraband goods. Ex parte Chavasse, in re Grazebrook, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 17.

Nor is such a contract rendered void by the Foreign Enlistment Act, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, or the Royal Proclamation of the 13th of May 1861. Ibid.

(d) In Restraint of Trade.

Upon the sale by the defendant to the plaintiffs of a business of a horsehair manufacturer the defendant by written contract agreed not to buy, sell, manufacture, or directly or indirectly interfere in the trade or business of a horsehair manufacturer, except for the benefit of the plaintiffs; and subsequently in a deed of assignment (executed in pursuance of the previous contract) the defendant covenanted that he would not, directly or indirectly, carry on the business of a horsehair manufacturer within 200 miles from B, without the consent in writing of the plaintiffs, except for their benefit and at their request. The defendant, besides being a manufacturer of horsehair, was, at the time of the sale, a general dealer in unmanufactured horsehair; he also purchased and sold manufactured horsehair, which was usual both with dealers and manufacturers:—Held, upon evidence as to the mode of carrying on the business, that the limit of 200 miles was reasonable; and held also, that the defendant had sold so much of the business as belonged to that of a horsehair manufacturer, though forming part also of the business of a horsehair dealer; and that he must be restrained from the purchase and sale of manufactured horsehair. Harms v. Parsons, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 247; 32 Beav. 328.

R, being in difficulties, and the defendant being desirous to assist him, the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, accepted a bill drawn upon him by R. The defendant, at the same time, entered into the following agreement with the plaintiff, dated the 24th of October: "You having lent your name to R on a bill for 110*l.*, payable three months from this date, I undertake to share with you any loss or liability you may incur in respect of such bill." The bill was dated the 25th of October, and not the 24th, and was payable three months after date. It was not paid at maturity, and after being several times renewed, was at length paid by the plaintiff. In an action brought on the above agreement, it was proved that in a schedule of R's debts made shortly before, a debt owing to the plaintiff by R of 2,000*l.* had been intentionally omitted for a purpose not connected with this transaction. The plaintiff was a party to the making of this omission, and he knew that the schedule had been communicated to the defendant without the omission having been supplied, but nothing was said by the plaintiff to the defendant on the subject either way. The jury found that there was no actual fraud on the part of the plaintiff, and the Court held, that under these circumstances the defendant was not entitled to the verdict; that the contract was one of indemnity, and not one of suretyship; and that, the transaction having originated with the defendant, the mere concealment by the plaintiff of the existence of the debt from the defendant was not sufficient to avoid the contract. Way v. Hearne, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 34; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 292.

Held, also, that though dated the 25th of October, the bill was sufficiently described as a bill "payable at three months from this date," in an agreement made on the 24th. Ibid.

Held, also, that the plaintiff's loss or liability was incurred and the defendant's liability attached, as soon as the first bill came to maturity and was not paid by R; and that there was nothing in the plaintiff's subsequent conduct, in renewing the bill from time to time, to deprive him of his right to recover from the defendant half the sum he ultimately was called on to pay. Ibid.

(C) CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACTS.

By an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, in consideration of the plaintiff forbearing to prosecute a Chancery suit, the defendant promised that he would, out of the first moneys he might receive from W in respect of the defendant's claim on him, arising out of a certain railway contract, hand to the plaintiff 500*l.*; and out of any further moneys he might receive from W in respect of the same contract 10*l.* per cent. upon the net amount which he might so from time to time receive, until such per-centage to the plaintiff should amount to 1,300*l.*, when all further payments by the defendant were to cease, it being agreed that the defendant would not compromise with W without providing for the plaintiff the 1,300*l.*, or so much of it as might remain due to him. No more than one instalment having been received by the defendant from W in respect of the said railway contract, the plaintiff was held to be not entitled to any per-centage ultra the 500*l.* due on that instalment, although such instalment exceeded 500*l.* Cochrane v. Green, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 97; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 448.

A judgment debt recovered in the name of a trustee, which if recovered in the name of the cestui que trust would have been a good set-off in law against the plaintiff's demand, may be pleaded by way of equitable set-off in answer to the demand. Ibid.

It is no answer to an action for a debt of 300*l.* to plead that the plaintiff was indebted to one S in 300*l.*, and that the defendant, at the request of the plaintiff, agreed with S to pay S the 300*l.*, and S agreed to accept the defendant as his debtor, instead of the plaintiff, for the 300*l.*, and that the defendant was still liable to pay the same to S, as such plea does not shew any discharge of the plaintiff's debt to S. Ibid.

The defendants, a public company, employed the plaintiff, a broker, to dispose of their shares on the terms that he should be paid 100*l.* down, and 400*l.* in addition, upon the allotment of the whole of the shares of the company. The plaintiff disposed of a considerable number of shares, when the defendants wound up the company:—Held, by the Court, which had power to draw inferences of fact, that the plaintiff was prevented earning the 400*l.* by the act of the company, and was therefore entitled to recover a proportion of the 400*l.* Inchbald v. the Western Neilgherry Coffee Co. (Lim.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 15; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 733.

A contracted to supply to B 1,000 tons of coals, delivered at Rangoon alongside craft, &c., as might be directed by B; the price to be 45*s.* per ton, delivered at Rangoon; payment, one-half of invoice value by bill at three months on handing bills of lading and policy of insurance to cover the amount, or in cash at 5*l.* per cent. discount, at A's option; and the balance in cash on right delivery at Rangoon. A chartered a ship in pursuance of his contract, and shipped on board 1,166 tons of coal, and delivered to B the bill of lading and a policy covering half the invoice price, and B paid the half invoice price. On the voyage the ship became disabled, and the master chartered another vessel and trans-shipped 850 tons of the coal on board her at 45*s.* per ton freight to Rangoon. On arrival at Rangoon the master of this latter vessel offered the coals to B's agent on payment of the 45*s.* freight; this offer was refused, and the coals were afterwards put up for sale by auction by direction of the master, and were bona fide purchased by B's agent for B at 25*s.* per ton, that being the best price that could be obtained for them there:—Held, by Cockburn, C.J., and Wightman, J., that by the contract, though the property in the coals passed to B on the shipment and delivery of the shipping documents, A was bound to deliver them at Rangoon, and not having delivered any (as the purchase by B's agent was no delivery under the contract) he was liable to refund to B the half which he had received of the purchase-money, and for any damages arising from the non-delivery. By Blackburn, J., and Mellor, J., that the property in the coals passed to B, the right of A to the second half of the price being contingent on the right delivery at Rangoon; and that therefore, under the circumstances that had occurred, neither party had any right of action against the other. The Calcutta and Burmah Steam Navigation Co. (Lim.) v. De Mattos, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 322.

Plaintiffs bought of the defendant "300 tons old bridge rails at 5*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.* per ton delivered at Hamburgh, cost, freight and insurance, payment by net cash in London, less freight, upon handing bill of lading and policy of insurance; a dock company's weight-note or captain's signature for weight to be taken by buyers as a voucher for the quantity shipped:—Held, in the Court of Exchequer (and affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber), that according to the true construction of the contract, the defendant did not undertake to deliver the iron at Ham-burgh, but that when he put it on board a ship bound for that place and handed to the plaintiffs the policy of insurance and other documents, his liability ceased and the goods were at the risk of the purchasers. Tregelles v. Sewell, 7 Hurls. & N. 574.

A, a clerical agent, was employed to sell an advowson for B, upon the terms contained in a circular in which it was stipulated that the commission should become payable upon the adjustment of terms between the contracting parties in every instance in which any information had been derived from, or any particulars had been given by, or any communication whatsoever had been made from A's office, however and by whomsoever the negotiation might have been conducted, and notwithstanding the business might have been subsequently taken off the books, or the negotiation might have been concluded in consequence of communications previously made from other agencies, or on information otherwise derived, or the principals might have made themselves liable to pay commission to other agents; and that no accommodation that might be afforded as to time of payment or advance should retard the payment of commission. A contract of sale having been arranged through A's agency, and duly executed, and a deposit paid on the 14th of October, 1862, the residue of the purchase-money being payable on the 31st of December,—Held, that A was entitled to his commission at all events on the 31st of December, although the full purchase-money had not, for some unexplained reason, then been paid. Lara v. Hill, 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 45.

A father by agreement took all his son's property, undertaking to pay his debts:—Held, that in the absence of proof to the contrary, the son was entitled to the surplus, if any. May v. May, 33 Beav. 81.

The trustees of a deed of composition executed by a debtor for the benefit of his creditors, under section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and duly registered,—Held, not to be entitled to claim to complete a building contract entered into by the debtor, prior to the date of such deed, where the debtor only contracted that he, "his executors and administrators" (omitting "assigns"), would execute the works, the subject of the contract. Knight v. Burgess, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 727.

(b) Particular Words.

(1) "Forthwith."

By indenture of the 15th of May, the plaintiff covenanted with the defendant to procure a ship, to stow on board a certain telegraphic cable then lying at M Wharf, to provision and rig the vessel, to provide and pay the crew and workmen, &c., to lay down the cable; and that he, the plaintiff, would perform the several acts aforesaid and have the ship ready equipped for sea at the Nore on or before the 15th of July, and would proceed forthwith to T and lay down the cable; and if the plaintiff made default in having the ship ready with the cable on board at the Nore by the 15th of July, the defendant might deduct and retain as liquidated damages 20*l.* a week. The defendant covenanted, subject to his right to deduct and retain as liquidated damages, to pay the plaintiff 5,000*l.*, by instalments, that is to say, 1,000*l.*, part thereof, on or before the expiration of seven days after the arrival of the ship at M Wharf; 2,000*l.*, further part, on or before twenty-one days after the arrival of the ship at the wharf; the remainder when the ship should put to sea from the Nore. And it was by the same indenture agreed and declared, that for the true performance of the covenants by the plaintiff thereinbefore contained, and for securing the penalties which he might incur under these presents, the plaintiff and two responsible sureties should, within ten days of the execution of these presents, give and execute to the defendant, his executors and administrators, a bond in the penal sum of 5,000*l.*; and for the due performance of the covenants on the part of the defendant thereinbefore contained, the defendant and two responsible sureties should, within ten days from the execution of these presents, give and execute to the plaintiff, his executors and administrators, a bond in the penal sum of 5,000*l.*—It was held, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, that the giving of the bond with sureties by the plaintiff to the defendant was a condition precedent to his right to recover against the defendant for not performing his part of the contract with relation to stowing the cable and paying the money; and this decision was affirmed by the House of Lords, on appeal, and it was also held, that the plaintiff was not released from his obligation to give a bond by reason of the defendant not having given a bond. Roberts v. Brett (House of Lords), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 241.

"Forthwith" held not to mean "immediately." Ibid.

(2) "Russian black."

By an agreement between A and B, it was stipulated that A should receive half the profits arising from the sales of an article called "Russian black," manufactured by him from the produce of certain quarries of B:—Held, that A was not entitled to claim anything in respect of "Russian black" not sold as such, but used by B, in the proportion of about one-third, mixed with cement manufactured and sold by him. Fullwood v. Akerman, 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 737.

(3) "Ship."

The plaintiffs were owners of ship W and one M of ship G, which was insured in two companies, one of which was represented by the defendants, the other by M himself. The G ran into the W, and was arrested in the Admiralty Court; and an agreement was entered into by the plaintiffs, M, and the insurers, that the plaintiffs should release the ship, and the other parties should pay "the amount of damage which the ship W had received from the collision," and that in case of dispute about "the amount of damages claimed by Heard Brothers (the plaintiffs) by reason of the collision," the matter should be referred:—Held, that "ship" in the first clause must be read "owner of ship," and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover for loss of profits as they would have done in the Admiralty Court. Heard v. Holman, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 239; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 1.

(4) "Three months' bill."

Goods were sold upon the following terms:—"2*l.* 10*s.* per cent., or three months' bill," which was explained to mean cash at the expiration of the month succeeding the current month, deducting a discount of 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent., or, at the buyer's option, a bill at three months from the same period.

The buyer having refused to accept a bill at the end of the second month,—Held, that the seller might at once sue him for goods sold and delivered (concessit solvere in the Mayor's Court, London), and was not bound to wait the additional three months. Rugg v. Weir, 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 471.

(c) Promise implied by Law.

The plaintiff agreed to let, and the defendants to take, for one year, at a stipulated yearly rental, certain works and buildings, and the plaintiff further agreed to supply to the defendants the whole of the chlorine still-waste as it came from the still, neither adding to nor taking anything from the same, at the rate of 2*s.* 6*d.* for every 21 cwt. of waste so supplied, with the understanding that the defendants were to have the option of taking a lease for seven or fourteen years at the same rent, if they should feel disposed so to do, within three months from the date of the agreement; and the plaintiff agreed not to use or injure or part with any of the still-waste except to the defendants so long as they should hold the said works, the defendants to satisfy the plaintiff as to the payment of the rent, and account for still-waste previously to entering upon operations:—Held, that under this agreement the defendants were bound to take the whole of the chlorine still-waste during the year, and that it was no answer to an action for not accepting it, that the manufacture in which it was used failed and was discontinued, and the chlorine still-waste proved useless, and was no longer necessary for the manufacture. Bealey v. Stuart, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 281; 7 Hurls. & N. 753.

The plaintiffs—who had contracted with the East India Company to carry out some troops for them in their ship to Bombay, and to supply the troops with provisions and stores to be used and consumed during the voyage—entered into a contract with the defendant, a provision-dealer, by which the defendant engaged to supply the plaintiffs' ship with troop stores "guaranteed to pass survey of the East India Company's officers":—Held, that this express guarantee did not exclude the guarantee which, in the absence of an express stipulation, would have been implied by law on a contract to supply, that the stores should be reasonably fit for the purpose of being used and consumed by the troops during the voyage. Bigge v. Parkinson (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 301; 7 Hurls. & N. 955.

By a written agreement the defendant and B, who were in partnership as stone-merchants, appointed the plaintiff their sole London agent for a period of four years and a half, and the plaintiff agreed to undertake the appointment and duty upon the terms that B and the defendant should pay the plaintiff 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent. on all accounts received by them for stone sold by the plaintiff or supplied by B and the defendant, to any person originally introduced to them by the plaintiff; that the plaintiff should pay his travelling expenses, and attend upon any business in London of B and the defendant, when required by them, in writing; that B and the defendant should furnish the plaintiff with invoices for stone shipped by them, and should balance all business transactions with the plaintiff, and pay his commission every half year:—Held, by Channell, B., and Wilde, B., (Martin, B., dubitante), that the contract was subject to the condition that all the parties so long lived, and that the agreement did not contemplate the continuance of the agency by the executor after the death of the agent, or by the surviving partner after the death of either member of the firm, and therefore that a declaration on this agreement, alleging as a breach that the defendant would not employ the plaintiff as his sole agent for the whole period of four years and a half, and would not execute orders for stone procured by the plaintiff as agent, did not disclose any cause of action. Tasker v. Shepherd, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 207; 6 Hurls. & N. 575.

By an agreement between the plaintiffs, a Solvency Guarantee Company, and the defendants, in consideration of a certain sum, it was agreed that the funds of the company should be subject and liable to make good to the defendants the loss occasioned to them during the term of two years by reason of any of the purchasers of their goods becoming bankrupt, &c., within such time, and during any future period in respect whereof the company should consent to receive further payments, but subject to certain conditions indorsed on the instrument. One of the conditions indorsed was, that all guaranties, whatever might be the original term, should, from the expiration of such original term, be treated as a renewed contract of the like nature and conditions, unless either the member interested therein or the board of directors should give two calendar months' notice of an intention not to renew the same:—Held, that the renewed contract was not itself to be deemed to contain this particular condition as to renewal, and that therefore, even in the absence of notice, the contract did not extend beyond one renewal. The Solvency Mutual Guarantee Company v. Froane, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 193; 7 Hurls. & N. 5.

The agreement was signed by three directors, on behalf of the company, and by the defendants, and also sealed with the company's seal:—Held, that the seal was only a statutory authentication of the contract, and that the instrument declared on was therefore not a deed, and that consequently the agreement might be rescinded by parol. Ibid.

By the conditions attached to a contract of indemnity against losses in trade, the guarantie became void on the death or retirement from trade of the person guaranteed:—Held, that this condition applied to the death or retirement of one of two partners guaranteed; and therefore that a plea alleging such death of the partner was an answer to an action against the co-partner by the guarantors for the subscription or annual payments agreed to be paid by the assured. The Solvency Mutual Guarantee Co. v. Freeman, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 197; 7 Hurls. & N. 17.

The defendant pleaded, on equitable grounds, to an action for such payments, and also for a certain increased premium, that by certain printed rules and regulations delivered to him as the rules and regulations under and subject to which the agreement for guarantie was to be made, the amount of subscription payable by the assured was to be increased at a certain specified per-centage rate, according to the amount of admitted claims in the previous year, and that the defendant entered into the contract upon the basis and faith of such rules and regulations; but that the contract did not contain them, and other and much less advantageous rules, with other rates, were substituted, of which the defendant had no notice:—Held, that the plea was bad, as the facts stated would not relieve the defendant from the performance of the contract, but would only entitle him to have it reformed. Ibid.

With a view to the transfer to the defendant of all the interest in the business of a loan and discount society, by an agreement made in 1856, between the defendant and the plaintiff and W, in consideration of 877*l.* 14*s.*, to be paid by the defendant on the 1st of July, 1860, viz., to the plaintiff 69*l.* 14*s.* for cash advanced to the society; 480*l.* for sixty shares held by him, and 40*l.* for five shares belonging to him, originally held by one T; to W 160*l.* for twenty shares; and to G 120*l.* for fifteen shares, with interest half-yearly, the plaintiff and W agreed that the entire property of the society, and all moneys standing to the credit of the society should, from the date of the agreement, be vested in and belong to and be held by the defendant, and all securities given up to him on the signing of the agreement. With the exception of shares already held by the defendant, the above were all the shares in the society. The five shares originally held by T, and the fifteen shares held by G, were never vested in the defendant, T and G repudiating the contract:—Held, that the defendant, having accepted performance of the rest of the contract, could not set up the non-delivery of T and G's shares as an answer to an action by the plaintiff for his part of the 877*l.* 14*s.*; and, therefore, to a declaration by the plaintiff setting out the agreement and averring performance of conditions precedent, a plea that the defendant entered into the contract on the faith and in consideration of all the shares in the society being vested in him, and that neither the plaintiff nor W were ready or willing or able to vest T and G's shares, and T and G repudiated the contract, whereby the consideration for the defendant's entering into the contract failed, was held bad. White v. Beeton, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 373; 7 Hurls. & N. 42.

Where a sum of money is agreed to be paid for work and materials upon the certificate of a third person, if such third person in collusion with and by the procurement of the person who has agreed to pay improperly neglects to certify, an action at law may be maintained against the latter for the agreed sum, notwithstanding the certificate was made a condition precedent to the payment of the money. Batterbury v. Vyse, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 177; 2 Hurls. & C. 42.

A declaration, after setting out a contract by which the plaintiff, a builder, agreed with the defendant to do work to the satisfaction of the architect and to receive payment upon the certificate of the architect, no payment to be considered due unless upon production of the architect's certificate, averred performance by the plaintiff of all things to entitle him to the certificate, and that he had completed the work to the satisfaction of the architect; and alleged as a breach that the architect unfairly and improperly neglected to certify, and so neglected in collusion with the defendant and by his procurement, by means of which the plaintiff had been unable to obtain payment of a balance due to him:—Held, that the words "collusion" and "procurement" imported fraud, and that the declaration disclosed a good cause of action. Ibid.

By a building contract the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff, a builder, a specified sum for certain works, provided the defendant's architect should before such payment certify that the works had been carried out to his satisfaction:—Held, that to entitle the plaintiff to payment it was not necessary that the architect should certify in writing; but it was sufficient if he did so verbally. Roberts v. Watkins, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 291; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 592.

By an agreement between the plaintiffs, described as the engineer and solicitors of an intended company to be incorporated by act of parliament, of the one part, and the defendants, as contractors, of the other, it was agreed that, provided the act was obtained, the defendants should carry out the works at a certain price, and that in the event of the act not being obtained, the defendants should psy a sum, not exceeding 300*l.*, towards the expenses in endeavouring to obtain the act. The plaintiffs expended 300*l.* in endeavouring to obtain the act, but then abandoned the prosecution of the bill on the ground that no one would supply them with funds. The defendants thereupon employed other solicitors, and expended above 300*l.* in trying to get the act passed, but ultimately failed. In an action by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendants the 300*l.*,—Held, that it was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to recover, that they should have used every reasonable exertion to obtain the act; and that having stopped merely from want of funds, they had no claim on the defendants. Leakey v. Lucas (Ex. Ch.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 289; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 491.

A declaration, after setting out an agreement by which the plaintiffs contracted with the defendants to do certain works for a certain sum to be paid them by the defendants on production by the plaintiffs of the certificate of the surveyor of the defendants that the works had been efficiently performed to his satisfaction, averred that, although all things had been done by the plaintiffs to entitle them to such certificate, yet the said surveyor had not given such certificate, but had wrongfully and improperly neglected and refused so to do, and the defendants had not paid the money payable on such certificate:—Held, on demurrer, bad as not disclosing any cause of action against the defendants. Clarke v. Watson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 148; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 278.

In a contract to sell "500 bales of cotton to arrive in Liverpool per ship or ships from Calcutta," there was the following stipulation: "the cotton to be taken from the quay; customary allowances of tare and draft, and the invoice to be dated from date of delivery of last bale":—Held, that the stipulation, "the cotton to be taken from the quay," was an independent stipulation for the seller's benefit, and not a condition precedent, which the purchaser had a right to insist on being performed. Neill v. Whitworth, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 155; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 435.

A lease for years contained a covenant on the part of the lessor, that if the lessee should be desirous at the expiration of the term of purchasing the premises, and should give to the lessor six calendar months' notice in writing of such desire, and should pay to him 2,000*l.*, the lessor would sell and convey the premises to the lessee; the expense of the preparation and verification of the abstract to be borne by the lessee, he expressly accepting the title. The lessee gave notice, but did not pay the 2,000*l.*:—Held, reversing a decree of the Master of the Rolls for specific performance, that the payment of the 2,000*l.* was a condition precedent to the right of purchase, and that the money not having been paid, no binding contract arose. Weston v. Collins, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 353.

T by deed covenanted to pay a composition of 6*s.* 8*d.* in the pound to all the creditors of his father and grandfather who should execute the deed within a given time, and charged certain estates with the amount of the composition. The deed contained a special provision that no creditor not executing within the prescribed time should be admitted to the benefit thereof. After the death of T, a bill was filed, by the trustees of the deed, praying that the trusts might be carried into execution by the Court. Various creditors who had not executed the deed within the given time, claimed to be entitled to the benefit of it:—Held, that in the absence of fraud, creditors who had executed the deed within the time prescribed were alone entitled to the benefit of it; that creditors were not entitled to any notice of the deed; that time was of the essence of the contract; and that as against creditors who had executed the deed neither T nor the trustees could waive actual execution of the deed within the prescribed period, and that any claim founded on allegation of fraud must be asserted by a distinct suit. Williams v. Mostyn, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 54.

By an agreement entered into between the plaintiff, a landowner, and the defendants, a railway company, the defendants were to take portions of the plaintiff's lands, and it was agreed that they should make and maintain, for the convenience of the plaintiff, so many crossings, and of such kinds, as C, the plaintiff's surveyor, should direct and notify in writing "within one month after the company's obtaining possession of the land." In December 1858 the company entered into possession, but no award or notification of the works required was made until March following. In the mean time the company had made considerable progress in constructing their line, and they resisted the plaintiff's demand for the works notified. The plaintiff thereupon filed his bill claiming to have the notified works executed and performed. It was proved that in settling the terms of the agreement, the company had stipulated for a reduction from two months, the period originally proposed, to one month of the time within which C should notify:—Held, that the stipulation as to time must be regarded as of the essence of the contract; and the Court considering that there was no sufficient evidence of any agreement to enlarge the time, specific performance of the works mentioned in the award or notification was refused. The Earl of Darnley v. the London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 9; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 204.

The bill prayed specific performance of the agreement generally, but the case put forward by the plaintiff rested simply upon the award. At the bar the plaintiff claimed relief upon the footing of tha agreement independently of the award:—Held, that no such relief could be granted, since the defendants must necessarily have been led to suppose that the plaintiff relied upon the award only; but leave was given to amend. Ibid.

Goods were put on board a ship consigned for Calcutta at 39*s.* per ton, "payable in London":—Held, that it was for the jury to say from the surrounding circumstances whether the contract was a contract for "freight," contingent on the ship's arrival at her destination, or for a sum payable on the receipt of the goods on board her. Lidgett v. Perrin, 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 362.

By a contract for the purchase of a cargo of wheat afloat, to be supplied at 50*s.* per quarter, including freight and insurance, payment was to be made by "cash in London in exchange for shipping documents." The seller delivered to the purchaser, with other shipping documents, a provisional invoice which estimated the cargo of wheat, calculated at 50*s.* a quarter, at 4,626*l.*; the freight at 1,001*l.* He also delivered a policy of insurance on the same cargo of wheat, but valued at 3,600*l.* only. In an action by the purchaser to recover the price agreed to be paid, the defence was, that the policy was of an insufficient amount and was not a sufficient shipping document:—Held, that it was not a question of law, but a question of fact for the jury, whether, under all the circumstances, the policy was a sufficient shipping document within the meaning of the contract. Tanvaco v. Lucas (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 296; 3 Best & S. 89.

The plaintiff had contracted with the defendant, who was the agent of the Portuguese government, within a certain time to build a ship complete and ready for sea in accordance with the regulations at Lloyd's; and the ship was to be built and constructed with the best materials of all kinds, and as prescribed by Table A of Lloyd's Register of ships of the class A 1. thirteen years, for which class the ship was to be constructed as to materials. And further, the ship was to be fitted, formed and equipped in manner similar in all respects to that which is practised with ships of the same class in Her Majesty's Navy under contracts with the Admiralty. And it was agreed that the purchase-money or contract price therein named should be inclusive of all charges for the said ship, finished and fitted perfectly in every respect, and that no charges should be demanded for extras, but any additions which might be made by order in writing of the defendant's agent should be paid for at a price to be previously agreed upon in writing. During the progress of the building of the ship various additions and alterations in the details of construction were made by the direction of the defendant's agent, but no written order for them was given, as required by the contract. When the ship was nearly completed, the defendant's agent gave notice to the plaintiff that he should require him to supply a quantity of articles for the use of the ship, which the plaintiff considered he was not, under the contract, bound to do. These articles consisted of an additional quantity of spare as well as standing rigging, spare masts, yards, sails, sailing and other gear, spare anchors, cables, cordage and other articles, with all of which similar vessels in Her Majesty's Navy are usually supplied when commissioned for active service. With respect to vessels built for Her Majesty's Navy by private ship-builders under contract with the Admiralty, the invariable course of proceeding is for the shipbuilder to build and deliver the hull only, with certain hull fittings and fixtures, but all the rigging, masts, cables, boats and other movable things are furnished under Admiralty warrants from the government stores. The Portuguese government being very anxious that the ship should be delivered as soon as possible, the defendant's agent requested that all the articles usually supplied to ships of the same class as that now building under Admiralty warrants should be supplied by the plaintiff, without prejudice to the question whether the plaintiff was bound to supply them under his contract or not. The plaintiff accordingly supplied these articles:—Held, that for alterations and additions during the performance of the contract the plaintiff could not recover, not being able to shew written orders for the same in accordance with the provisions of the contract; but that as between the plaintiff and the defendant, so far as related to the articles which the plaintiff disputed his liability to supply, and which were supplied by him without prejudice to the question of his liability, they must be taken to have been supplied after the contract was completed and the vessel delivered, and that for these, therefore, the defendant had incurred a liability wholly independent of the contract. Russell v. Bandeira, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 68; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 149.

Held, also, per Byles, J. that these disputed articles were so entirely dehors the contract, that the plaintiff might recover for them, even if they were to be considered as delivered during the execution of the contract. Ibid.

By the contract for building the vessel it was provided that if the said ship should not be delivered complete on a certain day, a penalty of 5*l.* a day should be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant as liquidated damages; but that if the ship should not be so delivered for any cause not under the control of the plaintiff, the same to be proved to the satisfaction of the defendant's agent, and to be certified by him in writing, then the said penalty should not be enforced for such number of days or for such time as the defendant's agent should in such certificate name. The ship was not delivered till long after the time appointed, but a large portion of that delay was occasioned by the interference of the defendant or his agents in the course of the performance of the contract:—Held, that, under these circumstances, no penalties were recoverable by the defendant, and that therefore none could be set off against the plaintiff's claim. Ibid.

A agreed to do for B & Co. all the woodwork on an iron ship which B & Co. were building for M & Co., according to a certain tender, the whole to be completed for 3,800*l.* The contract, or tender, contained the following clause,—"Any important work not mentioned in this tender that may be required to be done by the owners, to be paid for by them in addition to the amount herein specified." The work was undertaken by A for B & Co. upon the faith of guarantee by C, as follows:—"In consideration of your contracting with Messrs. B & Co. for the woodwork of an iron ship now building by them for Messrs. M & Co., we hereby guarantee the payment to you according to the contract." The word "important" in the contract was inserted by A, with the consent of B & Co., after the guarantie was signed by C.:—Held, that the contract bound B & Co. for extra work done, they being the persons referred to therein as "the owners"; and that the insertion of the word "important" had no material effect upon the liability of C under the guarantie. Affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber. Andrews v. Lawrence, 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 768.

(D) RESCISSION, DETERMINATION, AND ABANDONMENT OF CONTRACTS.

The defendants agreed to sell and the plaintiffs agreed to purchase certain land, the defendants to deliver an abstract of the title, and the plaintiffs within twenty-one days of the delivery thereof to return their objections to and requisitions on the title; in case of any objections or requisitions being delivered with which they were unable or unwilling to comply, the defendants to have the option to rescind the contract and return the deposit-money without interest, cost or other compensation, "notwithstanding any attempt made to remove or comply with any such objection or requisition." The sum of 285*l.* was deposited by the plaintiffs in the hands of a third person as a security for the contract being performed on their part, and the day named for the completion of the purchase was the 29th of October. The defendants delivered a proper abstract on the 6th of September, and on the 22nd of September the plaintiffs delivered their objections and requisitions. The replies of the defendants were delivered on the 4th of November. On the 29th of November the plaintiffs claimed and received the deposit from the person by whom it was held. On the 11th of December the defendants delivered to the plaintiffs a notice of their intention to rescind the contract, upon which the plaintiffs brought this action against the defendants for not completing their agreement:—Held, that the defendants had a right to rescind the contract, and that they were not bound to do so before the 29th of October. The Vestry of Shoreditch v. Hughes, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 349; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 137.

The plaintiff agreed with the defendant to empty a mill-pool for 5*d.* a cubic yard of mud, the admeasurement of the mud removed to be settled by N, and if any dispute arose, the dispute to be referred to N, to be by him decided:—Held, that although the former part of the agreement was not revocable, the latter part was revocable. Mills v. Bayley, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 179; 2 Hurls. & C. 36.

The declaration, after setting out the above agreement, stated that the plaintiff afterwards alleged that he had removed a part of the mud, and that while proceeding with the removal of the remainder, the defendant wrongfully caused water to flow into the pool, and a dispute having arisen between the plaintiff and the defendant touching those allegations, the plaintiff required N, pursuant to the agreement, to determine their truth, and if he should find them proved, to determine further the admeasurement of the mud and the damage sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the committal by the defendant of such aforesaid grievance. Averment, that N awarded and adjudged that the plaintiff had removed a part of the mud, and that the defendant should pay the plaintiff 8*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* in respect of it, and further that N awarded and adjudged that the defendant wrongfully caused water to flow into the pool, and that in respect of the damage so occasioned to the plaintiff the defendant should pay the plaintiff 10*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*, and alleged as a breach the non-payment. The defendant pleaded that before the making of the award he revoked the submission and reference to arbitration and the authority of N as arbitrator:—Held, that the plea was an answer to the action. Ibid.

A contracted to sell to B a specific cargo of wheat, described in the bought and sold note as "shipped per D M, as per bill of lading dated September or October," and which was all on board at the date of the contract:—Held, that this did not necessarily entitle the buyer to rescind the contract on its turning out that all the wheat was not shipped before the bill of lading was given. Gattorno v. Adams, 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 560.

By a contract of work, as to certain excavations to be done at so much per cubic foot by the plaintiff for the defendants, the plaintiff agreed to execute the work to the satisfaction of the defendants or their agent, provided that if the works should not proceed as rapidly and satisfactorily as required by the defendants or their agent, they should have full power to enter upon and take possession of the works, and pay whatever number of men should be left unpaid by the plaintiff, and might set to work whatever number of men they might consider necessary; and the amount so paid, and the costs of the men so set to work, should be deducted from whatever money should be due to the plaintiff. To a declaration for work and labour, the defendants pleaded that the work had not proceeded as rapidly and satisfactorily as they and their agent required, and that they had therefore acted on the proviso, claiming to deduct the costs so incurred from the plaintiff's demand; to which the plaintiff replied that the works did proceed as rapidly and satisfactorily as the defendants reasonably and properly could require, and that the defendants and their agent unreasonably, improperly and capriciously required the work to proceed as in the plea alleged:—Held, that the intention to be collected from the agreement was, that the defendants, if dissatisfied, whether with or without sufficient reason, should have the absolute power to put on additional hands and get the work done, and deduct the cost from the contract price payable to the plaintiff; and, therefore, that so long as the defendants were acting bona fide under an honest sense of dissatisfaction they were entitled to insist on the proviso; and consequently that the replication, which only alleged that the dissatisfaction was unreasonable and capricious, and did not allege mala fides, was no answer to the plea. Stadhard v. Lee, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 75; 3 Best & S. 364.

A contract was made, on the 9th of July, by the agents of A and B, for the carriage of A's goods by B's vessel from London to Kustendjie, the shipment of which goods was to commence on the 1st of August. On the 21st of July B denied the authority of his agent to make such contract, whereupon A's attorneys gave B a written formal notice that A was ready to perform his part of the contract, and that he would hold B responsible if he refused to perform his part. In reply to this B wrote, denying the existence of such contract and tendering another contract for the acceptance of A. This was answered on the 24th of July by a letter from A's attorneys, stating that A declined to sign any other contract than the one concluded by the agents, and that he held B responsible for the consequences. Between the said 24th of July and 1st of August A entered into a treaty with C to take A's goods to Kustendjie in one of C's vessels; but the contract, which was the result of such treaty, was only finally concluded between A and C on the 2nd of August, and on the 1st of August B informed A that he was ready to receive the goods on board his vessel:—Held, that there had been an express renunciation of the contract by B; and that, upon the above facts, A was entitled to sue B for not receiving the goods according to the contract. The Danube and Black Sea Rail. Co. v. Xenos, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 84; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 152.

Held, also, that A. was not liable in a cross-action by B for damages for not shipping the goods on board B's vessel; and that a plea, in such last action, of discharge by B, was proved by the above evidence of B's renunciation of the contract. Ibid.

P agreed to purchase from K a patent for purifying paraffine, and to work it during fourteen years, "in case it could be so long worked, at a profit," and to pay a royalty of one-third of the difference between the market price of crude paraffine and the price it sold at. It turned out, that although it could be worked at a profit, yet, deducting the royalty reserved, there would be a loss:—Held, that the agreement was at an end. Kernot v. Potter; Potter v. Kernot, 30 Beav. 343.

(E) BREACH OF CONTRACT.

It is no answer to an action for breach of an agreement to enter into partnership with the plaintiff that, after the agreement, and before breach, the defendant discovered that the plaintiff had, before the making of the agreement, acted with fraud and dishonesty towards a former partner in the conduct of a partnership business, and that such fraudulent and dishonest acts were unknown to the defendant at the time of his entering into the said agreement. Andrewes v. Garstin, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 15; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 444.

On the 9th of July B, by his agent, contracted to carry goods for A by his ship, the shipment to commence on the 1st of August. On the 21st of July B wrote to A denying the authority of his agent to make the contract. A answered that he should hold B responsible for breach of contract, and that if he did not next day withdraw his letter A would make other arrangements for carrying the goods. B reiterated that there was no contract made, and proposed another contract, and stated that if that was not acceded to he should send his ship on another voyage. On this A made arrangements with C to carry his goods, but did not sign any contract with C until the 2nd of August. On the 1st of August B wrote to A stating that the ship was ready to receive A's goods, but A declined then to send them:—Held, that B having absolutely refused to perform the contract before the time for performance came, it was at the option of A to treat that refusal as a breach of contract; that A might sue B for the damage received by such breach; and that B had no cause of action against A for the refusal to send the goods by B's ship. The Danube and Black Sea Rail., &c. Co. v. Xenos (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 284; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 825.

The defendants agreed to let certain gardens and music-hall to the plaintiff, on four specified days to come, for the purpose of giving a series of concerts, at and for a specified rent for each of the said days. The defendants were to provide a band of music and certain specified entertainments, and to issue advertisements of the entertainments. The plaintiffs were to pay 100*l.* in the evening of each of the said days, to receive and take all the money paid by persons entering the gardens, and to provide the necessary artistes for the entertainments. After the agreement was entered into, and before the day arrived for the first concert, the music-hall was accidentally destroyed by fire:—Held, that as the existence of the hall was necessary for the performance of the contract, the defendants were excused from liability in respect of its non-performance, and that no action would lie against them. Taylor v. Caldwell, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 164; 3 Best & S. 826.

An instrument is not a demise, although it contain the usual words, if its contents shew that the parties did not intend it to operate as a demise. Ibid.

Declaration on a contract, by which the plaintiff agreed to sell and the defendant to purchase as many of the plaintiff's gas coals equal to sample as could be carried from S to L in one steam-vessel during nine months, the vessel to be sent by the defendant. Breach, that the defendant did not and would not send a vessel, and would not accept the cargoes of coals as he ought. Pleas, first, that before any breach by the defendant, the plaintiff broke his contract by delivering coal which was no part of it gas coal equal to sample; upon which the defendant refused to fetch or accept any more. Secondly, that before any breach by the defendant, the plaintiff broke his contract by detaining the defendant's vessel an undue and unreasonable time; upon which the defendant refused to fetch or receive any more of the coal:—Held, that neither of the pleas was an answer to the declaration. Jonassohn v. Young, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 385; 4 Best & S. 296.

An action will lie for the breach of a written contract, by which A, for a valuable consideration, agrees with B that B may dig and carry away cinders from a cinder-tip forming part of A's land, though the contract is not under seal. Smart v. Jones and others, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 154; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 717.

A contract for the sale of cotton of a given quality is not performed on the part of the seller by a tender of a larger quantity, out of which the buyer is required to select those bales which answer the description of the cotton contracted for. Rylands v. Kreitman, 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 351.

The defendants being employed as agents for the plaintiffs (a foreign company) to negotiate sales of candles for them in this country, conveyed to them an order from one S for 2,500 cases, to be delivered in London "free on board export ship: 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent. discount against bill at three days' sight, goods, invoice, and draft for acceptance to be sent to us." The plaintiffs did not in terms accept this proposal, but wrote to the defendants, on the 19th of June, as follows:—"Les informations sur S sont telles que nous ne pouvons lui livrer les 2,800 caisses que contre connaissement. Si vous voulez, nous vous enverrons les connaissements, et vous ne les lui délivrerez que contre payement." The defendants informed S that the plaintiffs accepted the order on condition that he handed them (the defendants) a cheque in exchange for the bill of lading; and to this S assented, provided he was allowed a discount of 3*l.* per cent. instead of 2*l.* 10*s.*, to which the plaintiffs agreed. On the arrival of the goods in London, the defendants caused them to be transhipped on board a vessel called the Laurel (named by S), bound for Melbourne, taking the mate's receipt in their own names. They afterwards tendered that document to S and demanded payment, which he promised to make on the following Saturday. S, however, failed to pay according to his promise, and the Laurel sailed to Melbourne with the goods on board. Under the instruction of the Judge, the jury found that the meaning of the plaintiff's letter of the 19th of June was, that the defendants were not to part with the goods out of their possession or control until they had received the price thereof from S:—Held, that the conduct of the defendants amounted to a breach of their contract with the plaintiffs; that there was no misdirection; and that the proper measure of damages was the value of the goods. The Stearine Co. v. Heintzmann, 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 86.

It is not competent to a witness who is called to interpret a foreign document to give an opinion as to its construction; that is for the Court. Ibid.

(F) EVIDENCE TO EXPLAIN OR VARY.

The defendant, at the request of M, signed the following order, which M also signed:—"Insert my advertisements for one year in Hotson's (the plaintiff's) local time-tables, 'The Great Northern,' (and six others, naming them). Charge per insertion to be ten shillings each monthly book." The plaintiff's time-tables consisted of separate books, published monthly, one for each of the seven railways. M was not employed by the plaintiff to obtain orders for him, but upon such orders as he obtained, provided they were approved of by the plaintiff and the advertisements inserted, the latter allowed him a commission. M brought the defendant's order to the plaintiff, who approved of it, and allowed M his commission, and, having inserted the advertisements for one year in each of the seven books, brought his action to recover from the defendant 70*s.* per month. At the trial it was proposed to ask the defendant what representations M had made to him to induce him to enter into the written contract; the defence being that the defendant was liable only for 10*s.* per month as for one advertisement in one book, and not for 70*s.* as for seven advertisements in seven books:—Held, that the order having been adopted in terms by the plaintiff, the effect of the evidence was to vary a written contract, and was inadmissible. Hotson v. Browne, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 106; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 442.

Held, also, that if the issue had been whether the defendant was induced to sign the contract by the fraud of the plaintiff's agent (assuming M to have been the plaintiff's agent) the evidence would have been admissible. Ibid.

The declaration alleged a contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, that the defendants would tow the plaintiff's smack for reward, to be paid by the plaintiff, and that by the defendants' negligence the plaintiff's smack was damaged. In support of this contract, the plaintiff's evidence was, that he had engaged the master of a steam-tug belonging to the defendants to tow his smack out of harbour to sea; that the master took the smack in tow, but before getting clear of the harbour cast off the tow-rope, as the plaintiff alleged negligently, and the smack was stranded and damaged; that he (the plaintiff) had on previous occasions employed the defendants' tug in the same way, and when paying for the services then rendered, had been furnished by the defendants with receipts, on the backs of which were printed notices to the effect that the defendants would not be liable for any loss or damage arising from any supposed negligence of their servants, &c. The plaintiff, on cross-examination, admitted having had these receipts, but denied having read the notices on the backs, or that the effect of such notices had come to his knowledge in any way. On these facts, the Judge nonsuited the plaintiff on the ground that the plaintiff must be taken to have contracted on the terms contained in these printed notices, the defendants' servants having no authority to bind them by a contract on any other terms:—Held, making absolute a rule for a new trial, that the nonsuit was wrong, for that it was a question for the jury, and ought to have been left to them to say what was the contract between the parties, and whether a knowledge of these notices had been brought home to the plaintiff. Symonds v. Pain, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 256; 6 Hurls. & N. 709.

To a declaration, alleging that by an agreement, dated the 21st of July, 1857, the defendants bought of the plaintiff certain bark at 6*l.* per ton, and alleging the delivery of the bark and non-payment of the price, the defendants pleaded, as an equitable plea, that the plaintiff was employed to sell, and did sell the bark as agent of C, and on his behalf, at the prices which had been paid in the preceding year for bark, with an additional sum equal to the expenses of carting and ricking the bark in the then present year; and the plaintiff then represented that the expenses of carting and ricking could not then be correctly ascertained, but that the expenses, added to the price, averaged between 5*l.* and 6*l.* per ton, and upon such representation, and upon the plaintiff agreeing that the defendants should be liable to pay only such prices and expenses when they were ascertained, the defendants were induced to and did make the agreement, and they were then requested by the plaintiff to pay the prices and expenses to C. The plea then alleged that the said expenses, added to the said price, averaged only 5*l.* 2*s.*, and that the defendants, before action, paid to C, who then had notice of the premises, the whole amount due, at the said prices, together with the expenses, and C accepted the sum in full discharge and satisfaction of the same and of all liability of the defendants for and in respect of the said bark and expenses, of all which the plaintiff had notice before action:—Held, that the plea was an answer to the action, and that parol evidence was admissible to support it. Rogers v. Hadley, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 241; 2 Hurls. & C. 227.

Semble—The facts alleged in the plea shewed that no such contract as alleged in the declaration was made by the defendants. Ibid.

To a count for not accepting goods described in the contract as "to arrive ex Peerless from Bombay," a plea that the defendants meant another ship of the same name, which sailed from Bombay two months earlier, and that the plaintiff was not ready to deliver any goods which arrived by that ship, was held on demurrer to be a good answer. Raffles v. Wichelhaus, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 160; 2 Hurls. & C. 906.

A contract made by the defendants, who were brokers, in their own name, for the purchase of iron for the plaintiffs, was contained in bought and sold notes. The notes differed only in these particulars, that while the bought-note delivered by the brokers to the plaintiffs had the words "Deposit 5*s.* per ton, brokerage 0 per cent.," the sold-note contained the words "Deposit (blank); brokerage 10*s.* per cent.":—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to shew an arrangement between the brokers and the plaintiffs, by which they required the latter to pay a deposit of 5*s.* per ton, and that the apparent variance between the notes, so explained by the usage of the parties, was not material. Kempson v. Boyle, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 191; 3 Hurls. & C. 763.

Where parol evidence has been improperly received to explain a supposed latent ambiguity in a written document, the Court will decide upon the construction of the instrument without regard to the finding of the jury upon such evidence. The plaintiff, an engineer, had been professionally concerned in promoting a scheme for converting the Chard Canal into a railway, and three successive acts were obtained for carrying it into effect, but were allowed to expire. The defendant, also an engineer, being desirous of constructing a railway over the same line of country, entered into a negotiation with the plaintiff, the result of which was reduced into writing and signed by the defendant, as follows:—"Chard Canal and Railway Company.—In consideration of your transferring all the interest you may have in this company, and handing me all the plans, papers and documents in your possession, I hereby undertake to pay you the sum of 600*l.*, provided my friends succeed in carrying out the undertaking. The amount, 600*l.*, is to be paid as follows: 300*l.* on the first portion of the land required for the railway being acquired by the company, and the balance out of the three first payments received by me on the foot of construction account." On the following day the defendant wrote upon the document (signing it), at the plaintiff's suggestion, the following: "It is understood that the 600*l.* herein is to become payable on the obtaining of the act,—one moiety in six months, and the residue in three annual instalments":—Held, that the two writings together formed the agreement, and that the defendant's liability to pay the 600*l.* was contingent upon "the undertaking" (whatever that might mean) being carried out by his friends, so that he might be employed as the engineer in the construction of the line. Bruff v. Conybeare, 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 263.

Where a contract is to be made out partly by written documents and partly by parol evidence, the whole becomes a question for the jury. A having entered into a contract for the supply of iron rails for Vera Cruz, applied to B & Co., shipowners and brokers, to procure vessels to carry it thither; whereupon B & Co., on the 19th of November wrote to A,—"We hereby engage to find tonnage for about 5,000 tons of rail to load at M for Vera Cruz, subject to the following conditions, viz., 1,000 tons to be delivered at Vera Cruz in three months from this time, and 1,000 tons per month afterwards," &c. After a long correspondence and several interviews as to the class of vessels to be chartered, and the flag, B & Co., on the 11th of December, wrote to A as follows: "Our eogagement to procure tonnage for Vera Cruz is the letter addressed to your Mr. B on the 19th of November, and, in accordance therewith, we are arranging to take up vessels for the first shipment of 1,000 tons. We cannot restrict ourselves to vessels of any particular flag or class, but will of course give a preference to neutral ships of high class." On the 15th of December B & Co. wrote to A saying that they would prefer abandoning the contract altogether. And afterwards, on the same day, A wrote: "We accept your offer of the 19th of November last, coupled with the initialed offer of the 18th. Messrs. E hold us to our contract, and therefore we must hold you to yours and cannot consent to your abandoning it as intimated:"—Held, that these letters did not constitute a complete contract, but that recourse must be had to parol evidence, and consequently that it was properly left to the jury to say whether or not a binding contract, as alleged in the declaration, was to be inferred from the whole. Bolckow v. Seymour, 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 107.

CONVERSION OF ESTATE.

(A) What amounts to a Conversion.
(B) Extent of its Operation.

(A) What amounts to a Conversion.

[See Waste.]

A testator gave to his children, in succession, the option of purchasing his real estate, and in the meanwhile the rents were to be divided equally between them. Before an option had been exercised, and while some of the children were still infants, a corporation purchased part of the property for public improvements, under compulsory parliamentary powers:—Held, that the shares of children who had died infants remained real estate until the option had been exercised, and that in the meanwhile the income of the purchase-money belonged to their heir-at-law. The City of London Improvement Act, ex parte Hardy, 30 Beav. 206.

A testator devised several freehold houses to his children specifically, and bequeathed the residue to other parties. After the date of his will a notice was served upon him by a railway company to treat for the purchase of the houses under their act of parliament, but no step was taken under the notice during his lifetime:—Held, that the notice to treat did not entitle the company to specific performance and did not operate as a conversion of the freehold houses into personalty. Haynes v. Haynes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 578; 1 Dr. & S. 426.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to persons whom be appointed his executors, in trust in the first place to sell an advowson, and apply the proceeds in discharge of his debts and legacies, and if they should be insufficient then to cut timber to the value of 500*l.*, and if that should not be sufficient then to raise the deficiency by sale or mortgage of his real estate; and the testator directed his executors to retain their expenses, but he did not expressly declare any trust of his personal estate. A suit was instituted, in which it was decided that the personal estate was primarily liable to the payment of the testator's debts and legacies, and it was now held, upon petition in that suit, that the money raised by sale of the advowson and timber constituted personal and not real estate. Bowra v. Rhodes, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 676.

A B being tenant for life of real estate under a marriage settlement and ultimate owner in fee, subject to intervening interests, contracted to sell the estate to a railway company absolutely. A B by his will, made previously to the contract, had specifically devised this estate, and there was no general devise in the will. No conveyance having been executed to the company, they paid interest upon the money to the tenant for life; and upon his death, and failure of all the intervening interests, the company paid the principal and arrears of interest into court under their special act, the clauses of which corresponded with the Lands Clauses Act:—Held, that there was no conversion of the real estate; that the specific devise failed; and that the purchase-money descended to the heir of A B; and the devisees under the will of the heir were now entitled. In re Bagot's Settlement, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 772.

A B entered into a verbal agreement to sell certain real estate, but died intestate as to his real estate before the agreement was carried into effect. His heir-at-law took out letters of administration, and upon the request of the purchaser executed a conveyance of the estate, which recited the parol contract and the desire of the purchaser to have it completed, and the consent of the heir to do so. Upon passing the residuary accounts of A B's estate the heir, as administrator, gave credit for the sale moneys as "produce of property contracted to be sold in A B's lifetime, and purchase completed after his death." The heir subsequently claimed the proceeds of the sale as arising from property coming to him as heir-at-law:—Held, that although the heir might have repudiated the verbal contract, and claimed the lands as heir and sold them himself in that character, yet as he had in fact adopted and carried out the contract of A B the land must be considered as retrospectively well converted into personal estate, and that the proceeds of sale belonged to the next-of-kin. Frayne v. Taylor, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 228.

Commissioners having compulsory powers to purchase lands, gave notice to an owoer of freeholds of taking them and to treat. He, in reply, stated the price he was willing to take, but he died before the acceptance of the offer. The purchase was afterwards completed at that price:—Held, that the real estate had not been converted into personalty at the death of the owner, and that the purchase-money belonged to his heir-at-law. In re the Battersea Park Acts, in re Arnold, 32 Beav. 591.

Freeholds in which a lunatic was interested were taken compulsorily by a company, and the purchase-moneys, which under the act of parliament were liable to be invested in land, were paid into court, and laid out in government funds. The existence of the fund was overlooked, and it went on accumulating. A B, who became tenant in tail in possession, with immediate remainder to her in fee, by her will devised her real estate and bequeathed "all such capital stock and moneys as she should be possessed of or interested in, at her death, in the public government or parliamentary funds," but she expressed no further intention as to conversion:—Held, that the principal fund passed as real estate, and the accumulations as personal estate. Dixie v. Wright, 32 Beav. 662.

Real estate was settled by a marriage settlement, not comprising any personal estate. The tenant for life sold part of the land to a company under the powers of their act, and the proceeds were paid into court. Afterwards the tenant for life, under power in the settlement, appointed by will to his son the whole estate and the purchase-money of the part which had been sold. The son by will disposed of his residuary personal estate, including "all moneys to which I may be entitled under the marriage settlement of my father and mother," and he declared that he did not intend by his will to dispose of any real estate. The widow of the tenant for life, who was entitled to a jointure, was still living:—Held (dubitante the Lord Justice Knight Bruce), that the will did not dispose of the fund in court. In re Skegg's Settlement, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 533.

(B) Extent of its Operation.

Land which, from being impressed with an absolute trust for sale, is personal estate in equity, cannot be re-converted into real estate by persons having only a defeasible title to the proceeds of sale. To effect a re-conversion, there must be the concurrence of the absolute owners. Sisson v. Giles, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 606.

A testator devised and bequeathed real and personal estate to trustees upon the usual trusts for sale and conversion, and directed them to hold the proceeds in trust for A (a married woman) and B, as tenants in common; and declared that, if either died without leaving issue, the share of the one dying should go to the survivor; and that, if both died without leaving issue, the property should go to the testator's next-of-kin. The testator died in 1839. In 1851 A and her husband and B executed a deed (not acknowledged by A), by which they professed to discharge the trustees from the trusts of the will, without prejudice to their right to require a conveyance of the real estate. The rents of the property were received by A and B in moieties until the death of B. B died in 1858 leaving issue. At B's death A was still a married woman:—Held, that there had been no re-conversion, and that the real estate had still the character of money, and was subject to the trusts for sale contained in the will. Ibid.

A real estate was devised to two trustees, to sell and divide the produce between A, B, and C. The trustees being dead, A entered into possession, and received the rents for three and a half years, accounting to B and C for their shares. A then died, and at his death the estate remained unsold:—Held, that there had been no re-conversion, but that the estate in equity retained its character of personalty. Brown v. Brown, 33 Beav. 399.

CONVICTION.

(A) Under one Statute on a Summons under another.

On a summons under the Municipal Corporation Act, for assaulting a constable in the execution of his duty, the accused cannot be convicted of a common assault under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 42. R. v. Brickhall, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 156.

(B) Proof of Scienter.

A conviction against a person found in possession of naval stores marked with the broad arrow cannot be sustained, when the jury say that they have not sufficient evidence before them to shew that the prisoner knew that the stores were so marked, though he had reasonable means of knowledge. R. v. Sleep, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 170; 1 L. & C. 44.

Semble—If he wilfully shut his eyes to the fact of their being marked, the case might be different. Ibid.

(C) For Offence on a Day not named in the Information.

Where an information charged the defendant with having on the 5th of October, and on divers other days and times between the said 5th of October and the laying the information (16th of November), being then the occupier of a certain house in the said city, knowingly and wilfully kept and used the same for the purpose of his betting with persons resorting thereto; a conviction for so keeping and using the house on the 8th of November was held good and valid. Onley v. Gee, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 222.

(D) Single Offence: several Oaths.

Under the 19 Geo. 2. c. 21. a conviction that, "A B did, on the —— day of ——, profanely curse one profane curse," setting it out, "twenty several times repeated," and adjudging him to pay "for such his offence the penalty of 2*l.*,"—being a cumulative penalty at the rate of 2*s.* for each repetition,—is good. R. v. Scott, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 15; 4 Best & S. 368.

The using several oaths on one and the same occasion, is one offence only; and Jervis's Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 10, therefore, does not apply. Ibid.

(E) By Interested Justice.

A prosecution under the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 109), having been instituted and conducted by the agents of an association for the preservation of salmon, and a conviction obtained before Justices who were active members of the association,—the Court quashed the conviction, on the ground of the Justices' interest. R. v. Allen, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 98; 4 Best & S. 915.

(F) Certiorari to remove.

Saturday, the 22nd of August, being the last day of the six months for obtaining a certiorari to remove a conviction, notice of the intention to apply to a Judge on that day was duly served on the convicting Justices. The vacation Judge being only at chambers on Tuesdays and Fridays, on Friday the 21st of August the defendant's agent left affidavits at the Judge's chambers to be laid before the Judge, with an intimation of the nature of the application, and called again on the Saturday, when the Judge had not returned the affidavits; and on his next attendance, on Tuesday the 25th of August, all the parties went before him:—Held, that the application was made within the meaning of the 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. s. 5. on the Saturday, and that the certiorari ought to issue. R. v. Allen, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 98; 4 Best & S. 915.

COPYHOLD.

A custom in a manor that copyholders of inheritance may break the surface and dig and get clay, without stint, out of their copyhold tenements, for the purpose of making bricks, to be sold off the manor, is good in law (dubitante Lord Wensleydale). So held by the House of Lords, affirming the decision below, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 3; 6 Hurls. & N. 123. The Marquis of Salisbury v. Gladstone (House of Lords), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 222.

A custom for copyhold tenants to fell timber or other trees upon their customary lands, and to retain the same for their own use, without licence from the lord, although such timber may not be felled for necessary repairs, is not unreasonable. And such a custom is not the less admissible in evidence, because it also professes to entitle the customary tenants to plough up meadow land and to suffer their houses to decay, which might be a bad custom, if pleaded. Where the customary tenants hold under a corn rent, or an annual sum of money in lieu thereof, in the absence of a custom to the contrary, the election is with the tenant to pay either in money or in corn. Where, therefore, the Assistant Commissioner, under the Copyhold Acts, upon evidence that for sixty years past the payments had invariably been made in money, decided that the election was with the tenant,—the Court, upon a case stated by way of appeal, affirmed his decision. Bleuett v. Jenkins, 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 16.

The 1st section of the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 71.) applies only to cases where a person claims by custom, prescription, or grant, a profit or benefit from the land of another, and has no application to the case of a right claimed by a copyholder on his own tenement according to the custom of the manor. Consequently, where copyholders claimed a customary right to dig and carry away sand from their tenements, and the evidence was such that an inference of the existence of the custom might be readily drawn therefrom, it was held, reversing the decision of one of the Vice Chancellors, that it was not necessary to prove that the right had been enjoyed for the period of thirty years. Hanmer v. Chance, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 413.

Semble—Where a custom has been enjoyed for a shorter period than is required by the act for its establishment, the 6th section of the act does not preclude the Court from taking the fact of such enjoyment into consideration along with other circumstances as evidence of the existence of the custom. Ibid.

If a lessee of a manor demises lands otherwise than by custom, his right to grant lands by the custom will be extinguished during the continuance of his interest. But on the determination of the interest of the lessee, the lord of the fee may re-grant the lands according to the custom of the manor, and a re-demise by the lord of the fee to the lessee or to a stranger will resuscitate the right of re-granting the lands according to the custom of the manor. But if the lord of the fee demises lands otherwise than by custom, the right to re-grant according to the custom is extinguished wholly and for ever. Ex parte Lord Henley, in re the London and South-Western Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 54; 29 Beav. 311.

If a lessee of a manor assigns his legal interest therein to a mortgagee, the estate of the mortgagee will preserve to the mortgagor his right to re-grant lands according to the custom, though he has let them some on lease and some from year to year, in contravention of the custom. Ibid.

(B) Surrender and Admittance.

(a) Of Purchaser.

By will a testator authorized, empowered and directed his executors to sell and dispose of his copyhold estate, and to convey and assure such copyhold hereditaments unto the purchaser or purchasers thereof. The executors put up the estate at auction and sold it to C, conveying it to him by bargain and sale:—Held, that C had a right to be admitted as tenant of the copyhold, without any previous admittance of either the heir or the executors. R. v. Wilson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 9; 3 Best & S. 201.

(b) Upon Grant of a Lord Farmer to himself.

Three successive Dukes of Buckingham had been for many years lessees of the manor of M, of which the plaintiffs were owners in fee. The lessee for the time being had, by custom, as lord farmer, the right of making grants for three lives of certain copyholds within the manor, and renewing these lives as they dropped; but the lease contained a proviso against alienation without the lessor's licence. In the year 1833, the then Duke, lessee of the manor, assigned, together with other real and personal property, in general terms, his "manors," &c., whether freehold or leasehold, to trustees, upon trust to sell the same, and in the mean time to manage the property; but this deed was never acted on. Shortly after this deed of assignment, the lease of the manor of M was renewed for twenty-one years by the plaintiffs to the then Duke. He died in the year 1839, leaving his son his successor and universal devisee and legatee. In the year 1842 the lease of the manor of M was again renewed for twenty-one years by the plaintiffs to the late Duke. The plaintiffs had no notice of the existence of the assignment of 1833, until after the year 1863. In the year 1840, certain copyholds of the manor held by one H were surrendered to the use of the late Duke, the then lord farmer, for a valuable consideration, and the late Duke was admitted to these copyholds for his own life and that of two other persons. In 1845, one of these lives dropped, and the late Duke then granted these copyholds to himself for the life of his son, the defendant, and was himself admitted to these copyholds accordingly. In the year 1849 the persons for whose lives certain other copyholds of the manor had been granted were all dead, and thereupon the then lord farmer granted these copyholds to himself, for three lives, and was admitted to these copyholds accordingly. In the year 1811, the then Duke, as lord farmer, granted certain copyholds of the manor to himself for the lives of himself and two other persons. After his death in 1839, the late Duke, as lord farmer, on two occasions, granted the same copyholds to himself for the life of another, in order to fill up the lives as they dropped. The late Duke died in 1861, and all his interest in this property vested in the defendant:—Held, that these grants, as being made by the lord to himself, were all void, and that there could be no presumption that the grants since 1833 were made by the lord as agent of the trustees under the deed of that year. Christchurch, Oxford, v. the Duke of Buckingham, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 322; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 391.

The co-heiresses of a copyhold tenant, being trustees of the tenements for R, surrendered to C, a trustee for and nominated by R. The solicitor for R and the surrenderors sent the surrender to the steward as instructions for the admission of C, and thereupon the steward, according to the custom, delivered the rod to a person nominated by him to receive admission for C. At the time of taking the admission, the steward also, according to the custom, made an entry or minute of the admission according to the surrender, from which the court-rolls were afterwards made up. A draft admission was prepared, and a stamped copy sent for C, but which was returned to the steward, as it contained a different description of the land to that in the surrender. No entry was made in the court books until after action brought. By the custom of the manor an arbitrary fine was payable on admission, and the steward demanded 122*l.* 10*s.* from the co-heiresses for a fine on surrender without admission, and 70*l.* from C as a fine upon admission. Actions being brought by the lord to recover these fines, the claim indorsed on one will being 120*l.* and on the other 70*l.*, the facts were turned into a special case, with power to the Court to draw inferences of fact; it being agreed that if the plaintiff recovered any fine, the amount should be 60*l.* from the surrenderors and 60*l.* from C. The Court having found that the fines assessed and demanded were unreasonable,—Held, that the actions were not maintainable, and that the lord could not recover the agreed sum as on a quantum meruit, the alterations in the rules of pleading not affecting the necessity for an assessment and demand of a sum certain. Hayward v. Raw; and Hayward v. Cruden, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 178; 6 Hurls. & N. 308.

Quære—Whether the entry of admission made by the steward at the time could be treated, as between the lord and the tenant, as evidence of a complete admission on the court-rolls. Ibid.

A being the trustee of copyhold estates was admitted tenant on the roll, and died leaving B his heir. B was never admitted, and devised his trust estates to C; and C was accordingly admitted. During the life of A the cestui que trust for life voluntarily came in and was admitted on behalf of himself and the cestui que trust in remainder, and paid the fine as on an admittance in fee; the cestui que trust in remainder survived B:—Held, that the lord was entitled to a double fine on the admittance of C, viz., the fine that would have been paid had B been admitted, as well as the fine payable on the admittance of C himself. Londesborough v. Foster, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 225; 3 Best & S. 805.

Held, also, that the lord was not estopped from claiming on the ground that the property was held on trust, and that he had admitted some of the cestuis que trust on payment of the fines. Ibid.

W R, a testator, devised copyholds to his son absolutely, subject to an executory devise over in case of his death without issue living at his death. The son paid a fine, was admitted, and died without issue. On the son's death (a receiver having been previously appointed by the Court of Chancery) the lord of the manor of which the copyholds were holden presented a petition in the cause, praying that he might be at liberty (notwithstanding the order for the appointment of the receiver) to receive the rents of the estate until further order, that is, to seize quousque the executory devisees should claim admission and pay the proper fine:—the Vice Chancellor Kindersley decided that the admission of the primary devisee was the admission of the executory devisees, and that the lord had no right to a further fine, and that the Court ought not to leave him to his legal remedy, but to decide the point at once: and His Honour dismissed the petition with costs. On appeal, a custom of the manor was proved to exist for devisees in remainder to come in and be admitted and pay a full fine on admission, and thereupon it was held by the Lords Justices that on the custom the lord of the manor was entitled to a fine from the executory devisee under W R's will, and must be left at liberty to seize quousque, and they ordered all costs of the petition both in the court below and on the appeal to be paid out of a fund in court paid in by the receiver, without prejudice to any question, and discharged the order of the Vice Chancellor. Randfield v. Randfield, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 113; 1 Dr. & S. 310.

A custom that the lord of a manor, in assessing the fine upon admittance of one not being a copyhold tenant on the court-rolls (except a customary heir claiming admittance as such), if not restricted in amount to any number of years' value of the tenement to which such admittance is made, is unreasonable and bad. Douglas v. Dysant, 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 688.

(E) Assignment of.

(A) Proprietorship of.

The right of the author of an article in a periodical under the 18th section of the act to prevent a separate publication is not copyright, within the meaning of the 24th section, and it is no objection to a motion for injunction in such a case that the author has not entered his work at Stationers' Hall. Mayhew v. Maxwell, 1 Jo. & H. 312.

By the effect of section 18. of the Copyright Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), the proprietor of a periodical is precluded from republishing without the consent of the author articles written by the latter for and published in such periodical in any other form than as reprints of the entire numbers of the periodical in which those articles appeared. Smith v. Johnson, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 137; 4 Giff. 632.

A republication in supplemental numbers of a selection of various tales previously published in a periodical, is a separate publication within the section. Ibid.

Where the solicitor of a company writes a letter, apparently on behalf of the company, he has no such property in it as to entitle him to prevent its publication, although he swears that it was written in his private capacity. Howard v. Gunn, 32 Beav. 462.

(B) International Copyright.

A foreign author, who first publishes within the British dominions, being at the time resident within any part of the British dominions (whether the place of publication or not), acquires a general copyright throughout the whole of those dominions. Low v. Routledge, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 717.

Semble—That a foreign author, who first publishes here, though while resident in foreign parts, is entitled to copyright under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. Ibid.

Errors in the registry of proprietorship under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, as to the date of first publication and name of publisher, held to invalidate a subsequent assignment under the act. Ibid.

By the International Copyright Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 12. s. 19), a British subject, who first publishes abroad, is, equally with a foreigner, deprived of any copyright save such as he may acquire under that act; and if there be no treaty in force giving effect to the act in his particular case, he has no copyright in this country; and in reference to the right of dramatic representation, first representation abroad is a first publication abroad within the meaning of section 19. of the act. Boucicault v. Delafield, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 38; 1 Hem. & M. 597.

B, a British subject, brought out a drama in New York; he afterwards represented it in this country, having duly registered it. There being no arrangement in force between this country and the United States as to international copyright,—Held, that B had no exclusive right to perform his drama in this country. Ibid.

(C) Copyright of Designs.

[See (D) Piracy and Infringement of.]

The 5th section of the "Copyright of Designs Act, 1858," provides, that the registration of any pattern or portion of an article of manufacture to which a design is applied, instead or in lieu of a copy, drawing, &c., shall be as valid and effectual as if such copy, drawing, &c. had been furnished to the registrar under the "Copyright of Designs Act":—Held, that this enactment authorizes the simple registration of a pattern of an article of manufacture, where the design claimed is a new combination the parts of which are not new, in like manner as if the whole design were new. M'Crea v. Holdsworth, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 329; 5 Best & S. 495.

The proprietor of a design duly registered under the Acts for the Copyright of Designs, whether he be a British subject or a foreigner, forfeits the benefits of the acts unless the proper registration marks are attached to all articles and substances to which the design is applied, whether the same are sold abroad or in the British dominions. Sarazin v. Hamel, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 380; 32 Beav. 151.

The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65. applies only to new designs having reference to some purpose of utility; and in order to obtain the benefit of the act, the purpose must be specified in the description supplied for registration. Windover v. Smith, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 561; 32 Beav. 200.

A coachmaker caused to be registered, under 6 & Vict. c. 65. a design for a dog-cart, specifying as the purpose of utility that "higher front wheels could be used or closer coupling effected." The design consisted of parts 1, 2, 3, 4, of which 1, 2, and 3. had nothing to do with front wheels or closer coupling, and No. 4. was not new:—Held, that no exclusive privilege was gained by registration. Ibid.

(D) PIRACY AND INFRINGEMENT OF.

(a) Descriptive Catalogue of Books.

A bookseller, H, wrote and published a descriptive catalogue of books; another bookseller, A, published a descriptive catalogue in which many of the descriptions were copied verbatim from H's catalogue:—Held, that such copying was an infringement of H's copyright. Hotten v. Arthur, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 771; 1 Hem. & M. 603.

(b) Photographic Copies of Engravings.

If a print, the copyright of which is conferred on the engraver or publisher by the Engraving Copyright Acts, 8 Geo. 2. c. 13. and 7 Geo. 3. c. 38, be copied by the process of photography, this is a copying for which an action may be maintained under the 17 Geo. 3. c. 57. Gambart v. Ball, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 166; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 306.

Quære—Whether single copies by hand, or a transfer of the design to an article of manufacture, would be within the 17 Geo. 3. c. 57. Ibid.

Semble—per Willes, J., that this statute only applies to a production of copies by some process capable of multiplying the number of copies indefinitely. Ibid.

(c) Dramatic Compositions and Pieces.

Copyright or protection to works of literature, after they have been published, exists only by statute. Reade v. Conquest, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 209; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 755.

Representing the incidents of a published novel in a dramatic form upon the stage, although done publicly and for profit, is not an infringement of copyright in the novel. Ibid.

The declaration stated that the plaintiff was the registered proprietor of copyright in a certain registered book, viz., a novel, entitled 'It is never too late to Mend,' and that the defendant, after the passing of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, without the consent of the plaintiff, dramatized the said book, and publicly represented it as a drama at a theatre for profit, whereby the sale of the book was injured, &c.:—Held, on demurrer, that the declaration disclosed no cause of action, either at common law or under the statute, for infringement of the plaintiff's copyright. Ibid.

The plaintiff, who was the author of a drama, published a novel founded thereon, containing in substance the same incidents, characters and language. The defendant's son dramatized the novel, and in so doing took many of the characters and incidents and much of the language of the novel, and, consequently, much which was the same as in the drama, but without having seen or in any way known of the drama; and the defendant then represented what his son had so dramatized at his theatre:—Held, that such representation was an infringement of the plaintiff's stage copyright in his drama, as the defendant's son was not the author in respect of such parts of his drama copied from the novel which were the same as the corresponding parts of the drama. Reade v. Conquest, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S). C.P. 153; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 479.

Quære—Whether a publication by the defendant's son of his drama would have been an infringement of the plaintiff's book copyright in his novel or drama. Ibid.

Whether it is an infringement of the copyright in a novel to dramatize it—quære. But it is an infringement of the copyright in a play by the same author on which such novel was founded, notwithstanding the passages complained of may have been taken from the novel, and not directly from the play. Reade v. Lacy, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 655; 1 Jo. & H. 524.

Thus, where the owner of copyright in a play wrote a novel founded upon it, to which he transferred several scenes from the play, and afterwards another person dramatized the novel, taking the same scenes from the novel, this was held to be an infringement of the copyright in the play. Ibid.

Certain novels, the copyright in which belonged to T, were dramatized and the dramas, containing some of the most important scenes and incidents of the novels, copied verbatim, were printed and published by L. On an application, by T, for an injunction to restrain the sale of the dramas,—Held, that printing and selling the dramas was an infringement of T's copyright. Tinsley v. Lacy, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 535; 1 Hem. & M. 747.

If a plaintiff shews that his copyright has been infringed, the Court will grant an injunction without proof of actual damage. Ibid.

The statute 3 & 4 Vict. c. 15. s. 2. imposes a penalty upon any person who, during the continuance of the sole liberty which another person has of representing a dramatic piece or entertainment, represents or causes it to be represented without the consent in writing of, &c. The defendant, the proprietor of a theatre, allowed D to have the use of it for the purpose of dramatic entertainments. The defendant provided the band, the scene-shifters, the supernumeraries, the money-takers, and paid for printing and advertisements. D employed his own company of actors and actresses, and selected the pieces which were to be represented, free from any control by the defendant. It was arranged that the money taken at the doors should be divided equally between the defendant and D. During the period of such occupation of the theatre by D certain pieces were performed which the plaintiff had the sole liberty of representing or causing to be represented:—Held, in an action to recover the penalties imposed by the above section, that the plaintiff could not recover, inasmuch as under the above circumstances the defendant was not shewn to have represented or caused to be represented the said dramatic pieces. Lyon v. Knowles, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 71; 2 Best & S. 556.

The defendant, who was proprietor of a theatre, let the use of the same with his company of actors and actresses, lights, scenery and properties, to his son, the stage-manager, for a benefit night, who paid the defendant a fixed sum for the letting, and took all the profits of such night, and selected what pieces should be performed. A dramatic piece having been performed on such occasion by the defendant's company without the consent of the author,—Held, that the defendant caused such piece to be represented, and was liable therefore to the penalty for doing so, under the 3 & 4 Will. 4.

c. 15. s. 2. Marsh v. Conquest, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 1; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 418, 432.

The author of a dramatic piece may assign the sole right of representing the same, without such assignment being by deed, or registered according to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, so as to enable the assignee to sue for the penalty payable under 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 15. s. 2, for a representation without his consent. Ibid.

Where by the same deed the administrator of the author assigned to the plaintiff, after the passing of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, the copyright and acting-right in a dramatic piece first published after the passing of the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 15, the plaintiff can maintain an action for penalties under the latter act against the defendant for performing the piece without his licence, within twenty-eight years of its publication, although the deed has not been registered; as the plaintiff's right is under the act 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 15, and there is nothing in the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. which renders registration necessary in the case of an assignment of such a right of representation. Lacy v. Rhys, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 157; 4 Best & S. 873.

Quære—Whether registration would have been necessary if the piece had been published more than twenty-eight years. Ibid.

Held, also, that the admissibility of the letters of administration in evidence could not be objected to on the ground that they had not been stamped within six months of the discovery of the mistake in omitting to get them stamped. Ibid.

K, the licensed proprietor of a theatre, under the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, entered into an arrangement with D, whereby D had the use of the theatre for dramatic entertainments. D provided the company, had the selection of the pieces to be represented, together with the entire management of their representation, and exclusive control over the persons employed in the theatre. K, on his part, paid for printing and advertising, furnished the lighting, doorkeepers, scene-shifters, and supernumeraries; and hired the band, music being a necessary part of the performance. The money taken at the doors was taken by servants of K, who retained one-half of the gross receipts as his remuneration for the use of the theatre, and handed the other half to D. Among the pieces represented were two which L had the sole liberty of representing or causing to be represented, &c., as assignee of the author, under the Dramatic Literary Property Acts, 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 15. and the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45:—Held (by the Exchequer Chamber), affirming the judgment of the Queen's Bench, that no action under those statutes was maintainable by L against K, as the above facts did not shew that those pieces had been represented, &c. by him, or that there was a partnership between D and him so as to render him liable for the representation of them by D. Lyon v. Knowles, 5 Best & S. 751.

(E) Assignment of.

An assignment of a copyright, made after the 54 Geo. 3. c. 156. and before the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, need not be attested,—So held, by the Exchequer Chamber, reversing the decision below, 31 Law J. Rep. ## CORONER.

Powers and Privileges.

If a coroner's inquest on a dead body be adjourned, and on the day appointed the Court be not formally opened and further adjourned, the proceedings drop and the Court is dissolved, and everything else done in the matter of the inquest is coram non judice; and this is the case, even where the adjournment takes place only for the purpose of drawing up a formal inquisition after the jury have, in substance, agreed upon their verdict. R. v. Payn, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 59.

Semble—That no action is maintainable against a coroner for anything said by him while he is acting as coroner, and addressing a jury impannelled before him, although he uses defamatory language falsely and maliciously; and held that, at any rate, a declaration is insufficient which does not aver that the words were spoken without reasonable and probable cause. Thomas v. Chirton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 139; 2 Best & S. 475.

Inquisition.

By the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 6, it shall not be necessary in any "indictment" for murder or manslaughter to set forth the manner in which, or the means by which, the death of the deceased was caused:—Held, that the word "indictment" comprehends inquisitions taken before coroners, and therefore that such an inquisition was not bad by reason of its not setting forth the manner or means of the death. R. v. Ingham, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 183; 5 Best & S. 257.

Held, also, that the omission to state the time at which the offence was committed was cured by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83. s. 2. Ibid.

Held, also, that it is not necessary that the jury should all be sworn at the same time, or that they should be sworn super visum corporis, or that they should all view the body at one and the same time. Ibid.

Misbehaviour in Office.

A sudden death having occurred in a coroner's district he summoned a jury, but on the day appointed he attended in a state of intoxication, and without swearing the jury dismissed them for no adequate reason. On petition to the Lord Chancellor, under the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 116, the coroner was ordered to be removed on the ground of "misbehaviour in his office." In re Ward, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 775.

The practice of issuing the writs De coronatore exonerando and De coronatore eligendo at the same time continued. Ibid.

COSTS, AT LAW.

[See Quo Warranto.]

[The provisions of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 90. as to the payment of costs to and by the Crown, extended to the Isle of Man by 25 Vict. c. 14.]

(A) PLAINTIFF'S RIGHT TO.

Where a defendant withdraws his former pleas, and pleads a matter of defence which arises after such former pleading, and the plaintiff confesses the plea, he is entitled to his costs up to the pleading of such plea, under 23 Reg. Gen. Trin. Term, 1853, although the plea contains no allegation that the matter of defence arose after the last pleading. Howarth v. Brown, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 99; 1 Hurls. & C. 694.

The bringing an action on a judgment under 20*l.* with the object of obtaining a judgment above 20*l.*, and issuing execution thereon against the person, is an evasion of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. s. 57, and the Court, in the exercise of their discretion under the 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. s. 4, will not allow the plaintiff his costs. Adams v. Ready, 6 Hurls. & N. 261.

(1) For Costs, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24. s. 2.

In an action for slander, imputing felony to the plaintiff, the jury found for the plaintiff, damages 1*s.* The Judge certified under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24. s. 2:—Held, that the effect of the certificate was to take the case out of the enacting part of the 2nd section of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, and to remit the plaintiff to his rights as to costs under 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, which entitles him to only so much costs as damages. Evans v. Rees, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 16.

(2) To deprive Plaintiff of Costs, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126. s. 34.

Plaintiff, in an action for false imprisonment and slander, had a verdict for 40*s.* damages; the Judge at Nisi Prius, on the application of the defendant, under section 36. of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, certified, inter alia, that the trespass and grievance in respect of which the action had been brought, was not malicious (omitting the words "wilful and"), and that the action ought not to have been brought:—Held, that the certificate was sufficient to deprive the plaintiff of his costs. Saunders v. Kirwan, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 351; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 514.

The Common Law Procedure Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 126), s. 34, which enacts, that when the plaintiff in any action for an alleged wrong in any of the superior Courts recovers by the verdict of a jury less than 5*l.*, he shall not be entitled to any costs in case the Judge certifies that the action was not really brought to try a right, &c., applies to actions tried after although commenced before that act came into operation. Wright v. Hale, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 40; 6 Hurls. & N. 227.

The certificate to deprive the plaintiff of costs, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126. c. 34, where, in an action for a wrong, he recovers less than 5*l.*, must negative not only the trespass being wilful and malicious, but also that the action was brought to try a right, and that it was not fit to be brought. Gooding v. Britnall, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 5; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 148.

The plaintiff sued in debt and detinue; on the count in debt the defendant paid 162*l.* into court, and to the count in detinue he pleaded a return of the goods with payment into court of damages, 1*s.*, and also non detinet. On the issue on non detinet the plaintiff had a verdict, with damages, 1*s.*:—Held, that the Judge had no power to grant a certificate, under the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126. s. 34, as detinue was clearly "an action brought to try a right besides the mere right to recover damages." Danby v. Lamb, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 17; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 423.

(3) That Refusal to admit was reasonable; Time of granting.

The plaintiff, after notice, refused to admit a document purporting to be a receipt for cash and for a promissory note. The jury found that the receipt was valid as to the cash, but not as to the promissory note. The Court, on the ground that the document was not proved, refused to set aside a certificate that the refusal to admit was reasonable, granted by the Judge four months after the trial and after the taxation of costs by the Master. Day v. Vinson, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 171.

The Court will not in any such case interfere till an application has been made to the Judge himself to reconsider the matter. Ibid.

(c) Operation of County Courts Acts and London Small Debts Acts.

(1) Concurrent Jurisdiction with the Superior Courts.

A body corporate may "dwell" within the meaning of the County Courts Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. s. 128, which gives concurrent jurisdiction to the superior Courts, when the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant. Adams v. the Great Western Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 124; 6 Hurls. & N. 404.

A railway company is to be deemed to dwell at the principal office, and not at every station on the line. Ibid.

Therefore, in an action against the Great Western Railway Company, where the plaintiff dwelt more than twenty miles from Paddington, the principal office of the company, the plaintiff was held to be entitled to an order for costs under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54. s. 4. Ibid.

A registered joint-stock company for the manufacture and sale of goods, dwells and carries on business, within section 128. of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, at the place of manufacture and sale, and not at the registered office of the company. The Keynsham Blue Lias Lime Co. (Lim.) v. Baker, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 41; 2 Hurls. & C. 729.

A registered joint-stock company, established for quarrying and calcining limestone and making and selling lime, and carrying on the business of a lime, cement, brick and manure company and the purchasing land in Somerset or elsewhere, incidental to those objects, sold and delivered goods to the defendant; the works of the company and the order, sale and delivery of the goods, and the defendant's dwelling and place of business being within the jurisdiction of the Bristol County Court. The registered office of the company under the memorandum of association, and where the meetings of the directors were held and all their business transacted, was in London. The company being wound up, the official liquidator, who dwelt and carried on business in London, sued the defendant in the superior Courts, and the defendant having suffered judgment by default for an amount under 20*l.*,—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to costs. Ibid.

The superior Courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the County Court if one of several plaintiffs dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant. Hickie v. Salamo confirmed. Bennett v. Benham, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 153; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 616.

The defendant had two residences, one in London, which was within, and the other in the country, which was more than twenty miles from the plaintiff's residence. At the time the action was brought, the defendant was at his London house, but two days before he had written to the plaintiff's attorney from his house in the country:—Held, that the superior Court had concurrent jurisdiction with the County Court within the meaning of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. s. 128. Pigrim v. Knatchbull, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 257; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 798.

Where a registered joint-stock company sells goods through an agent who sells them in his own name at his place of business within twenty miles of the defendant's residence, the company are nevertheless entitled to costs under the County Courts Acts if their place of business is more than twenty miles from the defendant. The Oldham Building and Manufacturing Co. (Lim.) v. Heald, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 236; 3 Hurls. & C. 132.

The plaintiff had supplied grocery continuously to the defendant in the usual course of business, for which one account was sent in. To this account was added the balance of an old account for salt which had always been kept separate, and upon which payments had been separately made from time to time. The cause of action as to the salt arose within the jurisdiction of the County Court within which the defendant dwelt; but as to the grocery, it did not arise wholly or in any material point within that jurisdiction:—Held, on the authority of Wood v. Perry, that the whole claim, including the balance of the old account, formed one cause of action; and that, inasmuch as one item arose within the jurisdiction of the defendant's County Court, it was not a case in which the cause of action "did not arise in some material point within the jurisdiction of the Court"; that a superior Court, therefore, had not concurrent jurisdiction under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. s. 128, and that the plaintiff, having brought his action in a superior Court, and recovered less than 20*l.*, was deprived of his costs by section 129. Copeman v. Hart, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 107; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 731.

The defendant, within the district of the county court of B, agreed with A to give C a mortgage security for a debt then due to C from the defendant, and A afterwards, at a place beyond the district of such county court, retained the plaintiff, a solicitor, to prepare such mortgage deed. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for his charges of preparing such deed, and obtained a verdict for less than 20*l.*:—Held, that the cause of action arose in a material point within the jurisdiction of the County Court of B, and therefore, as the superior Courts had not concurrent jurisdiction with the County Court, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover his costs. Jackson v. Grimley, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 238; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 380.

On an application by the plaintiff, in an action for goods sold and delivered, for costs, under the County Courts Act, on the ground that the cause of action did not wholly, or in a material part, arise within the jurisdiction of the County Court in the district of which the defendant resided, it appearing, by the affidavit of the defendant, as to the principal parcel of goods, that they were delivered there by a carrier, who was to be paid by the plaintiff, and (there being on the part of the plaintiff no positive affidavit as to the disputed facts, but only an affidavit of "information and belief,") it was held, that the delivery must be deemed to have been in that district in which the defendant resided, and, therefore, that the plaintiff was not entitled to costs. Arndt v. Porter, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 19.

And, semble, that in such a case an affidavit of mere "information and belief" as to the facts on which the jurisdiction depends, is not sufficient or admissible. Ibid.

(2) Judgment by Default.

Under the 30th section of the County Courts Amendment Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 108), a plaintiff in an action of contract who obtains judgment by default for a sum not exceeding 20*l.*, is entitled to an order for costs under the same circumstances as would have entitled him to costs under the early County Courts Act where he had recovered the like amount by a trial and verdict. Baddeley v. Bernard, 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 421.

The application should be made at chambers. Ibid.

(3) Where Plaintiff sues in the Superior Court and recovers a Sum not exceeding 20*l.* or 50*l.*

If a plaintiff applies for costs to a Judge at chambers, under section 4. of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, and is refused, he cannot afterwards apply to the Court as having an independent jurisdiction to grant costs, but must come by way of appeal from the Judge's decision; and in such case must apply in a reasonable time, and draw up his rule on reading the affidavits used at chambers. Warman v. Halahan, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 48.

Where the Judge's refusal was on the 24th of May, semble, that a rule to review that decision, moved for in Michaelmas Term, is too late. Ibid.

Where a plaintiff in an action in a superior Court proves a debt for a sum exceeding 20*l.*, and the defendant proves a set-off for a less amount, leaving a balance not exceeding 20*l.*, the plaintiff "recovers" the balance only within the meaning of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 62. s. 11; and he is therefore deprived of all costs by that section. So held, in accordance with Ascroft v. Foulkes, and on this point overruling Tonye v. Chadwick. Beard v. Perry, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 180; 2 Best & S. 493.

The usual compulsory order of reference to the Master, made under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, by which the costs of the cause are to "abide the event," does not prevent the operation of the London Small Debts Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. lxxvii.), s. 120, from disentitling the plaintiff to costs; and a plaintiff in an action of contract who has awarded to him on such reference an amount not exceeding 20*l.* is a plaintiff who "recovers a sum not exceeding 20*l.*" within the meaning of that statute, and as such may be thereby deprived of his costs. Robertson v. Sterne, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 362; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 248.

By 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61. s. 11, if in any action commenced after the passing of that act in a superior Court, in covenant, debt, detinue or assumpsit, &c., the plaintiff shall recover a sum not exceeding 20*l.*, &c., he shall have judgment to recover that sum only and no costs:—Held, that this enactment applies to a case where such an action is brought, and the defendant pays into court a sum not exceeding 20*l.*, which the plaintiff accepts in satisfaction of the action, and therefore that the plaintiff in such case cannot recover costs. Boulding v. Tyler, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 85; 3 Best & S. 472.

Where money is paid into court and the plaintiff accepts it in satisfaction of his claim, he "recovers" the amount within the meaning of the statute 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61. s. 11, which deprives a plaintiff of costs where he "shall recover a sum not exceeding 20*l.*" Chambers v. Wiles overruled. Parr v. Lillicrap, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 150; 1 Hurls. & C. 615.

In an action of debt, a verdict was entered for the plaintiff, damages 13*l.*, subject to the award of an arbitrator, who, by the order of reference, which was in terms drawn up by consent, was to have the powers of a Judge at Nisi Prius as to certifying, and to enter the verdict as he thought fit; the costs of the cause to abide the event of the award. The arbitrator awarded that the verdict should be vacated, and that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff 2*l.* 16*s.* 1½*d.*, but did not certify:—Held, that the plaintiff had recovered less than 20*l.* within the meaning of the 11th section of the County Courts Act, and was therefore deprived of his costs by that section. Smith v. Edge, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 9; 2 Hurls. & C. 659.

An application to amend the postea should be made to the Judge who presided at Nisi Prius, and not to the Court. Ibid.

Where a cause is referred to arbitration, by consent of the parties, after issue joined, the costs of the cause to abide the event of the award, and the arbitrator finds all the issues for the plaintiff, and awards that a sum not exceeding 20*l.* is due from the defendant to the plaintiff in respect of the breaches of contract alleged in the declaration, the plaintiff "recovers" that sum within the meaning of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61. s. 11, and is deprived of costs by that section. So held by the Court of Queen's Bench after conference with the Judges of the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer. Cowell v. the Amman Colliery Co. (Lim.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 161; 6 Best & S. 333.

Where an action of detinue is brought for the detention of goods exceeding the value of 50*l.*, the jurisdiction of the County Court is ousted, and the plaintiff is entitled to his costs under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54. s. 4, although, in consequence of the goods being returned in the course of the cause, he obtains a verdict for only nominal damages. Leader v. Rhys, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 345; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 369.

Where a plaintiff recovers by verdict a sum not exceeding 20*l.* in contract, or 5*l.* in tort, and the Judge who tried the cause refuses to certify, under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61. s. 12, that it appeared to him at the trial there was sufficient reason for bringing the action in the superior Court, the Court will not, upon the same facts, interfere with the opinion of the Judge, by exercising the power given by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54. s. 4, to direct that the plaintiff shall recover his costs. To induce the Court to interfere, it must appear that the facts relied upon were not disclosed before the Judge at the trial, or that the Judge had adopted some erroneous view, in point of law affecting his decision, in refusing the application. Hatch v. Lewis, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 26; 7 Hurls. & N. 367.

In an action against attorneys for negligence in defence of the plaintiff on a criminal charge, the plaintiff recovered 40*s.* damages, and the Judge refused to certify. The Court discharged a rule for costs obtained on an affidavit of the nature of the action, and that the damages were laid at 5,000*l.*; and that the action was brought, not merely to recover damages, but to re-establish the plaintiff's character; that the Judge and counsel treated it as an important case, and of the first impression; that it lasted four days, and short-hand notes were taken at the Judge's request; and that it was made a special jury cause by the defendants, who had also changed the venue to Middlesex, on an affidavit that Judges and barristers would be called as witnesses. Ibid.

In an action brought to recover a sum beyond the jurisdiction of the County Court, the defendant paid into court a sum under 20*l.*, which the plaintiff accepted in satisfaction and discharge of his claim:—Held, that the 43 Eliz. c. 6. s. 2. did not apply, and that the plaintiff was entitled to his costs under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54. s. 4. Wayleti v. Windham, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 172; 2 Hurls. & C. 982.

In an action commenced under the Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act, 1852, if the plaintiff has a verdict for an amount not more than 50*l.*, and the action be one for which a plaint might have been entered in the London Small Debts Court, he will not be entitled to his costs. Harris v. Swinburn, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 313; 5 Best & S. 370.

The statutes which give plaintiffs in the superior Courts a right to their costs in cases "for which no plaint could have been entered" in the inferior Courts, apply to those cases for which no plaint can be legally entered, and not to actions which, although legally brought, cannot be successfully maintained in the inferior Courts. Noble v. the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 81; 2 Hurls. & C. 355.

To an action against the Bank of England on a 10*l.* note, the defendants pleaded that the note was lost. Upon the plaintiff giving an indemnity under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), s. 87, the plea was set aside, and the defendants thereupon paid the amount of the note into court. The parties being resident, and the cause of action arising, within the jurisdiction of the Sheriff's Court of the city of London (15 & 16 Vict. c. lxxvii.), —Held (Martin, B. doubting), that the plaintiff was not entitled to costs. Ibid.

In an action by a husband and his wife, the first count was for a trespass by the defendant in breaking and entering the husband's house. The second count was for an assault on the wife. The defendant, as to the trespass, denied the plaintiff's title to the house, and as to the assault, alleged that the wife was unlawfully within a certain dwelling-house of the defendant, and that the assault was committed in an effort to remove her. To this plea the plaintiffs new assigned. At the trial of the cause, the jury found for the plaintiffs upon the new assignment only, with 40*s.* damages:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a certificate under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61. s. 12. or the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54. s. 4, that the cause of action was one for which a plaint could not be entered in the county court, the plaintiffs not having succeeded in establishing any cause of action in respect of the title to land. Blackmore v. Higgs, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 157; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 790.

The 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. s. 4,—which enacts that in all actions which shall be brought upon any judgment, the plaintiff in such action on the judgment shall not be entitled to any costs of suit, unless the Court or a Judge otherwise order,—applies only to an action on a judgment alone, and not to an action on a judgment and also on a distinct cause of action; and in the latter case if a plaintiff succeed on both causes of action, he is entitled to the whole costs of suit without any order. Jackson v. Everett, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 59; 1 Best & S. 857.

In an action upon a judgment, the Court in which the action is brought, or a Judge thereof, have a discretion vested in them, by the 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. s. 4, as to whether the plaintiff shall have his costs of the action or not; and that discretion is not taken away by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. s. 57, by reason of the sum recovered in the original action not exceeding the sum of 20*l.* Dickinson v. Angell, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 183; 3 Best & S. 840.

Where the plaintiff in an action for a nuisance, under section 82. of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, obtained an order for an injunction, ex parte, which was silent as to costs, and the writ issued to restrain the nuisance, and also, under section 32. of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860, for the payment of the costs,—Held, that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to proceed to recover the costs of the injunction before the trial. Grindley v. Booth, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 135; 3 Hurls. & C. 669.

(f) Rule to deprive Plaintiff of Costs under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 86.

Where an action has been removed from an inferior Court, by the defendant, by certiorari, the provision in the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 86), for depriving the plaintiff of his costs in case he shall not recover the full amount of the sum for which he shall have filed an affidavit of debt, does not apply. Woodhall v. Voight, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 31; 6 Hurls. & N. 153.

(g) Order of the Court for Costs under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54. s. 4.

Although the Court is not bound by the exercise of discretion by the Judge who tries the cause, in refusing to certify for costs where the verdict is under the limit, yet it will not upon light grounds interfere. Courtenay v. Wagstaff, 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 110.

In an action for wrongfully dismissing the plaintiff from his employment as a parliamentary reporter for a newspaper, and also for work and labour, it was sought to fix the defendant with liability as a partner, upon the ground that he had advanced money for starting the paper, under a written agreement with one H, containing very stringent stipulations shewing that the defendant was to have unlimited control nver the publication, with the option of declaring himself a partner at any time within twelve months, and to trust solely to the profits for the repayment of his advance, with interest, and by parol evidence of personal interference in the management. At the trial, it was assumed that the agreement alone did not constitute a partnership between the defendant and H; and the jury, having found that the plaintiff's engagement was not for the session, but a weekly engagement only, and negatived that the defendant had prior to the plaintiff's engagement allowed himself to be held out as a partner, but affirmed that he had done so since,—returned a verdict for the plaintiff for 15*l.* 15*s.*, and the Judge, though he certified for a special jury, refused to certify under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61. s. 12, that there was a sufficient reason for bringing the action in the superior Court. The Court, considering that the plaintiff was justified in resorting to the superior Court, made an order for costs under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54. s. 4. Ibid.

(B) DEFENDANT'S RIGHT TO.

(a) Upon Affidavit under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 86.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for an alleged balance of 178*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.* for work and labour and money paid; and he also filed an affidavit in bankruptcy in which he alleged that the defendant was indebted to him in that sum for work and labour and money paid. At the trial, the jury found a verdict for 100*l.* only:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to costs under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 86, there being no reasonable or probable cause for swearing to that as a debt which, as to a part at least, was only a claim for unliquidated damsges. Pratt v. Goswell, 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 710.

(b) On Nonsuit.

The 4 Jac. 1. c. 3. enacts, that in any action of trespass, or ejectione firmæ, or any action whatsoever, wherein the plaintiff might have costs in case judgment should be given for him, if the plaintiff be nonsuited, the defendant shall have judgment to recover his costs. A mortgagee of turnpike tolls brought ejectment to recover the toll-gates, &c., and one of the trustees of the road was admitted to defend as landlord. The plaintiff having been nonsuited, the defendant signed judgment for costs:—Held, that the judgment was right: for that, assuming the statute to make it a condition to the defendant's right to costs that the plaintiff would have had his costs if he had succeeded in the particular action, still the case was within the statute, inasmuch as the plaintiff might have had his costs, even if the defendant, as a trustee of the road, were protected from personal liability by section 74. of the Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. Cobbett v. Wheeler, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 64; 3 E. & E. 358.

Quære, whether the 4 Jac. 1. c. 3. does more than define the classes of action, giving costs to the defendants in those classes of action in which plaintiffs in general would have costs. Ibid.

Quære, also, whether the 74th section of the 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. would have protected the defendant trustee from personal liability. Ibid.

Wormwell v. Hailstone questioned. Ibid.

(c) Costs of the Day.

A cause having been entered for the first sittings in Middlesex during term, was during the sittings made a remanet to the third sittings, on the application of the defendant, on the ground of the absence of a material witness. More than four days before the third sittings the plaintiff countermanded the notice of trial:—Held, that the plaintiff was in the same position as if his notice of trial had originally been for the third sittings, and the countermand was therefore in time; and the defendant was not entitled to the costs of the day. Sully v. Noble, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 145; 1 Hurls. & C. 809.

If, when a cause is called on for trial, the plaintiff does not appear, the defendant, to secure the costs of the day, must have the jury sworn, and claim a nonsuit. If the defendant, though present in court, allows the cause to be simply struck out, he will not, under ordinary circumstances, be entitled to the costs of the day. Smith v. Marshall, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 332.

(d) From Person for whose Benefit Action is brought.

In an action of ejectment the Court has power to order a person at whose instance and for whose benefit the action was brought, though not a claimant named in the writ, to pay costs to a successful defendant. Mobbs v. Vandenbrande, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 177; 4 Best & S. 904.

(C) SECURITY FOR COSTS.

(a) Foreign Plaintiff.

Plaintiff, a foreigner, master of a foreign vessel, having no permanent residence in this country, being here when action brought, but having since left with his vessel on a voyage to a foreign port, was ordered to give security for costs. Nelson v. Ogle commented on. Nylander v. Barnes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 151; 6 Hurls. & N. 509.

(b) Increasing.

A rule of court having been made, directing that legal proceedings might be taken in the name of a corporation against certain commissioners by certain ratepayers interested in the matter, on their giving security to indemnify the corporation against costs, two of the ratepayers entered into a bond in the usual amount of 200*l.*; a mandamus having accordingly issued against the commissioners, and the case having been taken by writ of error to the House of Lords, and the bond of indemnity being therefore of insufficient amount to cover the expenses incurred, the Court made absolute a rule to increase the amount to such sum as the coroner and attorney of the court should think reasonable. R. v. the Southampton Harbour Commissioners, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 164; 6 Best & S. 407.

(D) TAXATION OF COSTS.

(a) Scale of Taxation.

In cross-actions by C against R, to recover the amount of a surgeon's bill, where the writ was indorsed for more than 20*l.*, and by R against C, for damages for negligence, the parties, before trial, agreed in writing as follows:—"Taxed costs of C to be paid in both actions; C to be paid 15*l.* in addition to what is paid into court (2*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*); R to withdraw in writing the letter offensive to C." A Judge's order was thereupon obtained by C, and drawn up in the following terms: "Upon hearing, &c., I do order that upon payment of 15*l.* beyond the amount paid into court, for which this action was brought, together with costs to be taxed, and paid forthwith, all further proceedings in this cause to be stayed":—Held, that whatever might have been the intention of the parties to the agreement, the Master, on taxation of costs, could only act on the Judge's order, which brought the case within section 7. of the "Directions to the Masters of Hilary Term, 1853," and that in the first action the plaintiff's costs against the defendant should have been taxed on the lower scale. Cream v. Ray; Ray v. Cream, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 110.

An action on contract was removed from the county court into the superior court, at the instance of the defendant, and the plaintiff obtained a verdict for less than 20*l.*:—Held, that as there was no indorsement on a writ of summons, and therefore no writ of trial could be issued, rule 7. of the Directions to the Taxing Masters, Hilary Term, 1853, did not apply, and the plaintiff was entitled to have his costs taxed on the higher scale. Perry v. Bennett, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 45; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 402.

Where in an action of contract the plaintiff does not claim more than 20*l.*. and the cause is sent to be tried before the sheriff, under 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 42. s. 17, the defendant, if he succeeds, is only entitled to have his costs taxed on the lower scale. Copley v. Hemingway, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 152; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 447.

(b) Plaintiff's Costs on Judgment by Default and no Notice of Trial.

When judgment is signed for want of a plea, and no notice of trial has been given, the plaintiff is not entitled to the costs of preparing for trial, although the defendant by obtaining orders for time to plead has so prolonged the period as to necessitate such preparations being made by the plaintiff before issue joined in order to be able to try the cause at the assizes. Freeman v. Springham, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 249; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 197.

Where under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, s. 37, the name of one of two defendants is struck out of the record, at the trial, on the terms of the plaintiff paying the costs of such defendant, and the plaintiff obtains the verdict against the other defendant, the defendant whose name has been so struck out is entitled, in the absence of special circumstances, to a moiety of the joint costs of both defendants, although they both appeared and pleaded jointly by the same attorney. Redway v. Webber, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 84; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 254.

In an action upon a policy of insurance effected upon an electric telegraph cable, the declaration alleged that the cable was totally lost by the perils of the sea. The defendant pleaded that the subject-matter of the said insurance was not, nor was any part thereof lost as alleged. It turned out that only 373 miles of the cable had been lost by the perils of the sea:—Held, that the plea ought to be construed distributively, and that the defendant was entitled to have the verdict entered for him upon the issue joined on the above plea in respect of the whole claim, except as to the 373 miles of cable. Anderson v. Chapman observed upon. Paterson v. Harris, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 277; 2 Best & S. 814.

In an action for the infringement of a patent an order was made giving further time for pleading, the defendant to take short notice of trial, and the plaintiff to be at liberty at once to set the cause down for trial by a special jury. Pleas were afterwards delivered in the action; but issue was never joined. A special jury was nominated by the plaintiff, but it was not struck. The plaintiff, having obtained a rule to discontinue without ever having given notice of trial,—Held, that the Master was right in refusing to allow the defendant any of the costs of preparing for trial. Curtis v. Platt, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 255; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 465.

Semble, per Willes, J., that the costs of inquiries as to the novelty of an invention, in an action for the infringement of a patent, cannot be allowed as between party and party. Ibid.

(f) Shorthand Writer's Notes.

Costs of a shorthand writer's notes of the opening statement of the defendant's counsel, cannot be allowed to the plaintiff. The Duke of Beaufort v. the Earl of Ashburnham, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 97.

(g) Witnesses.

A professional witness is entitled to his expenses on the scale allowed to persons of his profession, although he is not called to give professional evidence. Parkinson v. Atkinson, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 199.

Fees of an antiquary for searches after and translations of ancient documents having reference to the subject in dispute are proper to be allowed. The Duke of Beaufort v. the Earl of Ashburnham, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 97.

If a witness be so old and infirm that it is a prudent course to take his examination under 1 Will. 4. c. 22. s. 4, but he is afterwards able to attend the trial, the plaintiff may be allowed the costs of the commission as well as the costs of the witness's attendance at the trial. Ibid.

The costs of taking the evidence of a witness under the 1 Will. 4. c. 22. s. 4. cannot be allowed to the party taking it as costs in the cause under section 9, unless the deposition has been used at the trial by the party taking it. Ridley v. Sutton, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 122; 1 Hurls. & C. 741.

In an action against the lessee of a colliery two breaches of covenant were assigned: first, non-payment of a sleeping rent; and secondly, not properly working the mine. The defendant allowed judgment to go by default, and a writ of inquiry was issued. The jury found that the plaintiffs had sustained damages to the amount of 50*l.*, but that they were entitled to no damages in respect of dilapidations through the mine not having been properly worked:—Held, notwithstanding, that the Master was right in allowing to the plaintiffs, on taxation, the full costs of witnesses summoned by the plaintiffs to prove default in properly working the mine. Dods v. Evans, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 146; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 621.

In an action by an engineer against an Indian railway company for wrongfully dismissing him from their service without notice, the defendants at the trial consented to a verdict being entered for the plaintiff for 350*l.*, being 200*l.* for a quarter's salary, and 150*l.* for the plaintiff's passage home to England; and, on taxing his costs, the Master allowed the plaintiff (who was a material and necessary witness) subsistence-money during his stay in England waiting for the trial (a year and a half), at the rate of 300*l.* a year, and also 150*l.* for his passage out to India,—it appearing that the company justified their dismissal of the plaintiff on the ground of alleged improper conduct, and that the trial had been delayed for twelve months in consequence of the defendants having obtained a commission for the examination of witnesses at Lahore, the execution of which had been unreasonably delayed; and the plaintiff swearing that he was going back to India, where he had left his wife and family:—Held, that the allowances were not excessive. Calvert v. the Scinde Rail. Co., 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 306.

(h) Set-off of Costs.

Two causes, one in this court, and the other in a county court, between the same parties, together with all matters in reference, were referred to an arbitrator, the costs of the causes respectively and of a rule in the cause in this court to abide the event; costs of the reference and of the award to be in the discretion of the arbitrator. The arbitrator made his award, as to the cause in this court, in favour of the defendant. As to the cause in the county court, he found for the plaintiff, with damages 45*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*, and gave the plaintiff the costs of the reference, and divided the costs of the award:—Held, that by Rule 93. Hilary Term, 2 Will. 4, the costs of the cause in this court and of the rule could not be set off against the money and costs payable to the plaintiff in the other action, so as to exclude the lien of the plaintiff's attorney. Little v. Philpotts, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 125; 2 Best & S. 383.

(i) Other Matters.

In an action against a railway company for an injury resulting from the negligence of their servants, the Court directed that the costs of copying into the plaintiff's briefs the evidence given at an inquest held upon the bodies of other persons who had been killed on the same occasion should be disallowed. The number of counsel to be allowed, and the amount of their fees, is in the (almost uncontrolled) discretion of the Master. Lockstone v. the London and Brighton Rail. Co., 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 243.

(A) In general.

In contentious cases the costs of the litigation should, as a general rule, follow the result of it. Bartlett v. Wood, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 614.

A defendant having, during the suit, offered to pay all that was ultimately found due from him, the plaintiff was ordered, by the Master of the Rolls, to pay all the subsequent costs of the suit. On appeal, it was decided that costs being in the discretion of the Judge, the Court of Appeal would not vary the order of the Master of the Rolls as to them, on the mere ground that if the case had originally been before this Court, it might have arrived at a different result as to the costs. Remnant v. Hood, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 71.

As to costs, a letter was referred to which had been written by the defendant's solicitor, offering a compromise, "without prejudice," on the terms decreed in this suit:—Held, that the letter might be used in evidence by the defendant, and the plaintiff must pay the costs. Williams v. Thomas, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 674; 2 Dr. & S. 29.

The expression "costs following the event" refers to an event produced by the decision of the Court, and not to one arising from a compromise between the parties. Straker v. Ewing, 34 Beav. 147.

On a defendant submitting to a plaintiff's demands, the plaintiff ought not to bring the cause to a hearing without first applying for defendant's consent to have the costs disposed of on motion. But if the defendant objects to that course, a motion that the defendant may pay the costs of the suit will be refused. Morgan v. the Great Eastern Rail. Co., 1 Hem. & M. 78.

A plaintiff who was only entitled to an injunction and costs, insisted also on an account. The defendant offered to submit to the injunction without costs. The plaintiff having brought his cause to a hearing, the Court held both parties in the wrong, and gave no costs to either side. Moet v. Couston, 33 Beav. 578.

A bill was filed for an account. In his answer the defendant, throwing upon the plaintiff part of the blame of the circumstances which led to the institution of the suit, paid the amount due from him as agreed by the parties, and the plaintiff accepted the amount without prejudice to his rights to the costs of the suit. Afterwards the plaintiff moved to stay all proceedings, and that the defendant might be ordered to pay the costs of the suit; and one of the Vice Chancellors made the order as prayed; but, on appeal, the Lords Justices held, that the question of costs would depend upon the merits of the case, the time for deciding which had not arrived, when the proceedings were ordered to be stayed; and they, therefore, discharged the order of the Vice Chancellor, but expressed a doubt whether the plaintiff's right to costs was wholly gone by reason of his agreement to settle the dispute. Wilde v. Wilde, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 558.

A vendor resisted a bill for specific performance. He became bankrupt, and his assignee afterwards continued the resistance, but failed at the hearing:—Held, that the assignee must pay the plaintiff's costs of suit incurred subsequent to bankruptcy. Foxwell v. Greatorex; Foxwell v. Turner, 33 Beav. 345.

Where a security is set aside on the ground of undervalue, costs are not given against the mortgagee; otherwise, where there has been misconduct. Tottenham v. Green, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 201.

A demand for certain rentcharges having been made before the bill was filed, and the defendants having made no offer to submit to payment, the decree was made with costs. The Attorney General v. Naylor, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) 151; 1 Hem. & M. 809.

Where a bill is dismissed on a ground of defence that might have been taken by demurrer, the defendant will be allowed such costs only as if he had demurred. Godfrey v. Tucker, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 559; 33 Beav. 280.

In a bill by one shareholder on behalf of himself and all others except the defendant to restrain the directors from improper dealings with the company's funds, such funds do not belong to the plaintiff as cestui que trust thereof, so as to entitle him in the event of success to his costs thereout as between solicitor and client. Morgan v. the Great Eastern Rail. Co., 1 Hem. & M. 560.

An order having directed payment of separate sets of costs to two executors, A and B, from whom a balance was found due in respect of their joint receipts, and it being probable that A would have to pay the whole amount,—Held, that the costs payable to B must, in the event of A's discharging the whole balance, be carried over to a separate account, with liberty for A to apply. Birks v. Micklethwait, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 510; 33 Beav. 409. (see as to this order 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 362.)

In a suit for partition of property in which an infant was interested, the estate was sold:—Held, that the costs, subsequent to the first decree, ought to be borne by the aggregate amount of the purchase-moneys. Coventry v. Coventry, 34 Beav. 572.

An executor may be deprived of his costs of suit upon a decree made on an administration summons and without a bill charging him with misconduct. In re King; Gilbert v. Lee, 34 Beav. 574.

(B) On Appeal.

The judgment of the Court below being affirmed on different grounds from those proceeded on by the Vice Chancellor, no costs of the appeal were given. The Oriental Inland Steam Co. v. Briggs, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 241.

The Court of Appeal will in its discretion give to a successful appellant his costs of appeal. Baring v. Harris, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 105.

The general rule of the Court is that there cannot be a rehearing for costs alone unless some principle is involved in the mode of the dealing with them; and it is only in extreme cases that the Court will rehear the merits on the question of costs. Chappell v. Gregory, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 111.

(C) Motions.

A defendant knowing that the plaintiff has used due diligence, is liable to pay the costs of his motion to dismiss for want of prosecution. Ingle v. Partridge, 33 Beav. 287.

(D) Petitions.

[See Trust and Trustee; Trustee Act, and Trustee Relief Act.]

Where a tenant for life petitions the Court under the Trustees' Relief Act, the costs of the petitioner ought to be borne by himself, and those of the trustees by the corpus of the fund. It is not necessary in such a case to serve the remainderman. In re Whitling's Settlement, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 862.

Costs of a petition by a tenant for life, to obtain the income of a fund paid into court under the Trustees' Relief Act, ordered to be paid out of the corpus. In re Leake's Trusts, 32 Beav. 135.

Upon a petition in a suit for payment of the income of a fund in court to the petitioner, the costs must be borne by the applicant. Eady v. Watson, 33 Beav. 481.

Where two petitions, with the same object, are bona fide prepared by different parties, the costs of both will be allowed; but where solicitors were aware that a petition had been presented and nevertheless persisted in presenting another for the same object, no costs were allowed on the second petition. In re Chaplin's Trusts, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 183.

(E) Disclaiming Defendant.

A devisee, being made a defendant, by his answer said that he had never claimed the gift, and always disclaimed and did disclaim it, and he offered to be dismissed without costs. He was brought to the hearing:—Held, that he was not entitled to his costs. Furber v. Furber, 30 Beav. 523.

A defendant disclaiming, but not stating that he never did claim any interest, is not entitled to his costs on having the bill dismissed. Durham v. Crackles, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 111.

A judgment creditor whose debt had been satisfied, but who had not entered satisfaction on the rolls, was made a defendant to a foreclosure suit. He disclaimed:—Held, that he was not entitled to his costs, in consequence of his negligence in not entering up satisfaction of his judgment. Thompson v. Hudson, 34 Beav. 107.

(F) Exceptions.

Costs of exceptions allowed, and of those disallowed apportioned and set off. Dally v. Worham, 32 Beav. 69.

(G) Administration Suits.

In administration suits no costs ought to be given out of the estate, except for those proceedings which are in their origin reasonably directed for the benefit of the estate, or which have in their result conduced to that benefit.. Bartlett v. Wood, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 614.

An administration suit was proceeding in one branch of the Court, while a society, in respect of which the estate then in course of administration had been declared a contributory, was being wound up in another. In an order made in the administration suit, refusing a motion by the official manager of the society, words were inserted, that the Court was of opinion that the official manager ought not to be allowed his costs of the motion out of the society's estate:—Held, that whether this expression of opinion was to be regarded as judicial or extra-judicial, the question as to the allowance of the costs was exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Judge in whose branch of the Court the society was being wound up; and that the words referred to must be struck out of the order. Jones v. Jones, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 11; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 294.

Under an order in an administration suit to tax the costs of executors, including any costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by them as executors not being costs in the cause, costs incurred by them in their fiduciary character, of litigation, though unsuccessful, in other suits, may be allowed; and the omission of any directions in those other suits respecting the executors' costs is not equivalent to a refusal of them out of their testator's estate. Graham v. Wickham, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 220; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 497.

After the ordinary decree in a creditors' suit had been made at the Rolls against executors, a bill was filed, in the Court of one of the Vice Chancellors, against the executors, and against a former partner of their testator, to establish a claim arising out of a misrepresentation made by the testator and his co-partner, in respect of which the plaintiff had already recovered at law against the surviving partner. The executors, without applying for directions in the administration suit, defended this new suit, and a decree for an account, without costs, was ultimately made against their testator's estate:—Held, that having regard to the previous proceedings at law, the executors ought not to be allowed the costs of defending the second suit down to the hearing; but held, also, it appearing that a claim had been carried in, in the first suit, by the plaintiff in the second suit, but adjourned until after the decision in the second suit, that they ought to be allowed their costs of the second suit subsequent to the decree. Ibid.

In a bill by a legatee for the administration of an estate, it was probable that the assets would not even be sufficient to pay the costs:—Held, that the costs were payable in the following order: First, the costs of the legal personal representative, as between solicitor and client; secondly, the costs and expenses of the plaintiff in selling and getting in the estate, and the costs of the heir in executing deeds; and, thirdly, the other costs of all parties as between party and party pari passu. Wetenhall v. Dennis, 33 Beav. 285.

Where a suit was for general administration, but there being no personal estate and no debts, the only questions decided were as between the devisees inter se and between the devisees and heir-at-law or his representatives,—Held, that the costs of the suit must be borne by the devised estates and descended estates pro rata. Bagot v. Legge, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 156; 2 Dr. & S. 259.

(H) HEIR-AT-LAW.

Where, in an administration suit, the whole of the intestate's real estate is found to belong to the creditors, the heir-at-law is entitled to his costs out of the estate as between solicitor and client. Tardrew v. Howell; Parry v. Howell, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 191.

The heir-at-law of a vendor, who refused to convey to the purchaser an estate sold by his ancestor, was ordered to pay the costs of a suit to compel him. Haddel v. Pugh, 33 Beav. 489.

(I) INFANTS' SUITS.

Where a bill to administer an estate was filed by a next friend, on behalf of an infant, against persons who, as defendants in a suit previously instituted, had rendered sufficient accounts in reference to such estate; and the chief clerk, in answer to an inquiry directed by the Court at the same time that it made the usual administration decree, certified that no benefit had accrued to the infant from the institution of the suit, one of the Vice Chancellors refused to allow the next friend his costs. On appeal, the Lords Justices, considering the inquiry directed to be made unusual and inconsistent with directions for taking the accounts and making inquiries in the ordinary way, ordered that inquiry to be struck out, and the certificate thereupon became a nullity. Inasmuch as the next friend had not, as he should have done, moved to discharge the part of the original decree directing the special inquiry, he could not be allowed any costs of a motion to vary the certificate; but he was allowed his costs from the time of the original decree, though not before; and not any costs of the inquiry or of the appeal. Clayton v. Clarke, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 657.

(J) UPON WHAT FUND CHARGEABLE.

A bill was filed by an administrator against the solicitor of the intestate, who claimed a mortgage on his estate and against others, for administration and to ascertain the mortgage. The solicitor claimed 1,492*l.*, but his mortgage debt was ascertained to be 924*l.* only. The assets consisted for the most part of the produce of the mortgaged estate:—Held, that the costs of the suit were first payable out of that fund. White v. Gudgeon, 30 Beav. 545.

An executor, C D, died indebted to the estate of testator A B, and a suit was afterwards instituted by the administrator de bonis non of A B against the representatives of C D to administer his estate and to ascertain and recover the amount due in the estate of A B:—Held, that the costs must fall on the estate of C D. Hyatt v. Hyatt, 30 Beav. 630.

A suit by the heiress of a person interested under a will in which it was prayed that, if necessary, the personal estate might be administered and the debts paid, the sole contest being as to the construction of the effect of a devise,—Held, to be within the general rule throwing the costs on the personal residue. Maddison v. Chapman, 1 Jo. & H. 470.

Costs incurred in selling real estate in an administration suit before decree charged on such real estate, and not on the personal estate. Barnwell v. Iremonger, 1 Dr. & S. 255.

Where it is ordered that real estates which are charged with incumbrances shall contribute rateably to the payment of costs, such estates must be valued for the purposes of such contribution at the net value, after payment of incumbrances. Ibid.

An estate was devised for sale, and a portion undisposed of descended on the heir:—Held, that the costs of a suit to administer the real estate fell on the devisees and heir pari passu. Maddison v. Pye, 32 Beav. 658.

Except in those cases where a general conversion of real and personal estate is directed so as to form a mixed fund, the whole costs of construing the will of a testator, as well in reference to the devises of real estate as to the bequests of personalty therein contained, are primarily payable out of the personal estate in exoneration of the real. Randfield v. Randfield, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 668.

Where costs are ordered to be paid out of a particular fund, that does not determine that that fund is ultimately to bear them. Sheppard v. Sheppard, 33 Beav. 129.

Costs had been ordered to be paid out of income, instead of out of corpus:—Held, that this did not preclude the matter being afterwards set right. Ibid.

But an order to pay over a fund to persons, by name, is, incidentally, a determination that other persons who are not named, are not entitled. Ibid.

(K) Taxation.

(a) General Practice as to.

At the hearing a decree was made in favour of the plaintiff, with costs. Upon taxation of the costs as between party and party, the expense of bringing the defendant's witnesses to London to be cross-examined in court, though plaintiff's counsel, in the exercise of their discretion, did not think fit to cross-examine them, and the costs of a shorthand writer for taking notes of the examination, were allowed, but those of taking notes of the judgment were disallowed. Clark v. Malpas, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 313; 31 Beav. 554.

The expenses and costs of attendance in court of the country solicitor, whose agent had conducted the cause, and the costs of enrolling the decree made in the cause, were not allowed. Ibid.

The fee of 2*d.* per folio for revising the print of a defendant's answer can be allowed only in those cases where the defendant swears to and files a printed answer. The Attorney General v. Etheridge, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 706.

The sums paid for office copies of answers at 4*d.* per folio, and for ordinary printed copies at ½*d.* per folio, are payable to the defendant, and when received by his solicitor must be applied in reduction of the cost of printing the answer. Ibid.

Costs of preparing interrogatories which were not used owing to admissions being put in, were allowed as between party and party. The 17th Rule of the 4th Consolidated Order empowering the Taxing Master to consider whether he will allow an affidavit to be settled by counsel, does not take the question of the costs of the affidavit out of the discretion of the Court. Davies v. Marshall, 1 Dr. & S. 564.

Costs of settling affidavit (which was an echo of the bill) by counsel, were allowed. Ibid.

Costs of drawing observations for counsel, when cause stood over, allowed. Ibid.

Term fee allowed, where the only proceeding was leaving copy of decree and bill of costs before Taxing Master. Ibid.

The Taxing Masters do not act under the 40th Consolidated Order, Rule 9, in relation to the unnecessary length of the pleadings, &c., unless directed by an order of reference. In re Farington, 33 Beav. 346.

Upon the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client, the costs of a consultation with Queen's counsel as to the frame of the bill were allowed, though the particular part of the bill, in reference to which the advice was sought, was struck out. Forster v. Davies, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 185; 32 Beav. 624.

In the taxation of costs as between party and party the Taxing Master has a discretion to allow the expense of employing an interpreter to assist a defendant who is a foreigner in preparing instructions for his answer, but such allowance ought not to include the tavern or travelling expenses of an interpreter brought to this country for the special purpose. The Earl of Shrewsbury v. Trappes, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 680.

In the absence of special arrangement, or of circumstances of special difficulty (as in winding up cases), the Court of Chancery will in the taxation of accountants' charges, adopt the scale fixed by the General Order of the Court of Bankruptcy of the 19th of May, 1855. Meymott v. Meymott, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 686; 33 Beav. 590.

Biddings were opened upon an advanced price on payment by the applicant of the costs properly incurred of the purchaser:—Held, that the costs of perusing the abstract and of the examination of the title prior to the first purchase being confirmed ought not to be allowed on taxation. Raymond v. Lakeman, 34 Beav. 584.

A company who employed standing solicitors at a fixed salary, became the purchaser under the Court. The biddings were opened on payment by the applicant of the costs of the company:—Held, the applicant was not on the taxation entitled to the benefit of the private arrangement between the company and their solicitors. Ibid.

(b) Scale.

The lower scale of costs directed by the General Orders of the Court must govern the taxation, where a sum exceeding 1,000*l.* has been reduced below that amount by payments before suit. Judd v. Plumm, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 94; 29 Beav. 21.

COUNSEL.

Authority of Counsel to bind their Clients.

Counsel have no authority to bind their clients in the suit to the terms of a compromise made out of court. Such compromise, if enforceable at all, must be the subject of a separate suit for specific performance. Green v. Crockett; Crockett v. Green, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 609.

Incapacity to contract for Services as Counsel.

A promise by a client to pay money to a barrister for his advocacy has no binding effect. Therefore requests to a barrister for exertions as an advocate and promises by a client to remunerate the barrister for such exertions, though followed by his services as an advocate, will create no obligation, and cannot be relied on in support of a count upon an account stated. Kennedy v. Brown, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 137; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 677.

(D) BREACH OF COVENANT; ANSWER TO.

(A) CONSTRUCTION OF COVENANTS.

(a) In Restraint of Trade.

A covenant not to be engaged in a specific trade, "or in any matter or thing whatsoever in anywise relating thereto" within a given district, does not prevent the covenantor from lending money to a person engaged in such trade within the said limits upon mortgage of his trade premises, although he may know that the mortgagor has not means of paying the debt, except out of the profits of the business. Bird v. Lake; Bird v. Turner, 1 Hem. & M. 338.

Semble—A mortgage expressly charging the debt upon such profits would be a breach of the covenant. Ibid.

Semble, also—There is nothing in such a covenant to prevent the covenantor from buying any number of houses within the district, fitting them up and selling them for the purpose of the trade in question, provided he has no direct interest in the businesses carried on in them after such sales respectively. Ibid.

(b) Controlled by Recitals.

Where a deed contains an absolute covenant not to do an act, such covenant will not, in the absence of a bill to rectify the deed, be controlled by a recital in the deed, from which it appears that the parties intended that such act might be done on payment of a fixed sum for liquidated damages Bird v. Lake, 1 Hem. & M. 111.

A covenant in a deed if ambiguous will be controlled by the recitals. Selby v. the Crystal Palace District Gas Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 595; 30 Beav. 606.

(B) COVENANTS RUNNING WITH THE LAND.

By a deed made in 1770, between the East India Company and Robert Lord Clive, after reciting that in 1766 five lacs of rupees, bequeathed to Lord Clive by a former Nabob of Bengal, and in 1767 three lacs of rupees, the gift of the then Nabob of Bengal, had been paid to the East India Company, and cash notes given to Lord Clive for the amount, and that in pursuance of a scheme therein recited for making a provision for officers and privates in the Company's service who might be disabled by age, war or disease, Lord Clive had delivered up the cash notes to be cancelled; it was agreed between Lord Clive and the Company that the eight lacs of rupees should remain in the hands of the Company, and that the Company should allow yearly a sum equivalent to 8*l.* per cent. thereon, and that the Company and their successors should be perpetual trustees, subject to the proviso therein contained, of the said fund of eight lacs of rupees for the due application and appropriation of the interest and produce thereof, for the relief of invalid and superannuated officers and soldiers in their military service, and upon the Company ceasing to employ a military force then for the relief of invalid and superannuated officers and seamen in their marine service; and the deed contained a covenant by the Company for repayment to Lord Clive, his executors, administrators or assigns, of the full sum of five lacs of rupees, subject to a due proportion of existing charges, in case it should happen that the Company should cease to employ a military force in their actual pay and service, and also ships for carrying on their trade. In 1834 the Company ceased to employ ships for carrying on their trade. In 1858 the property (except only the capital stock), liabilities and military forces of the Company were transferred to the Crown:—Held (reversing the decision of the Master of the Rolls), that the covenant was not to be regarded as a stipulation for the restoration of a trust fund, but as a covenant in gross, and that upon the true construction of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106. (the act transferring to the Crown the property and liabilities of the Company) five lacs of rupees were payable by the Secretary of State for India to the representative of Lord Clive; subject to the existing charges properly attributable to and payable out of the interest thereof. Walsh v. the Secretary of State for India (House of Lords), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 585; 10 H.L. Cas. 367.

The conveyance of an estate to a purchaser and his heirs to the use that certain specified trades should not be carried on upon the premises,—Held, to be a stipulation in the nature of a covenant running with the land; but that the owner of the estate could alone be restrained from carrying on the trades, as his tenant was no party to the suit. Hodgson v. Coppard, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 20; 29 Beav. 4.

Where there was a covenant by a purchaser of land not naming assigns that no building on the land should be used for the sale of beer,—Held, not to run with the land. Wilson v. Hart, 2 Hem. & M. 551.

An incoming tenant from year to year was told that the house could not be used as a butcher's shop:—Held, sufficient to affect him with notice of a covenant against its use for the sale of beer, and injunction granted accordingly. Ibid.

A mining licence was granted by deed to three persons as joint tenants, and the licensees covenanted jointly and severally to pay compensation in respect of damage to the surface. Two out of the three licensees assigned over. Damage having been done, —Held, that the covenant was one running with the subject-matter of the grant, and that the assignee from the two licensees was liable under the covenant for the whole compensation due to the grantor. Norval v. Pascoe, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 82.

(C) COVENANTS RUNNING WITH THE REVERSION.

By a lease some print-works and certain articles, matters, and things on the premises were demised, with power to the tenant to replace any of the articles, matters, and things when worn out, and to add new ones and additional ones, and to add improvements on the premises, and it was covenanted that at the end of the term a valuation of the articles, matters, and things, and of the improvements, should be made, and if they exceeded a certain sum the landlord should pay the tenant the difference:—Held, in an action by the tenant against the executor of the landlord to recover the excess, that as this was a covenant relating to chattels it did not run with the reversion, and that the executor was only liable on it in his representative character; and that as it appeared on the record that he was executor, the judgment should be that the plaintiff do recover the debt and costs de bonis testatoris, if the defendant have so much; and if not, then as to the costs, de bonis propriis. Garton v. Gregory (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 302; 3 Best & S. 90.

(D) BREACH OF COVENANT; ANSWER TO.

The defendant covenanted with the plaintiff to use his best endeavours and all due diligence to forward certain works, so that the same works should be completed in as short a time as practicable. To a declaration alleging as a breach that the defendant did not nor would use his best endeavours or due or any diligence to forward the works, so that the same might be completed in as short a time as practicable, the defendant pleaded that he did use his best endeavours and all due diligence to forward the works, so that the same might be completed in as short a time as practicable, but by causes wholly beyond his control, and without any default on his part, he was hindered and prevented from forwarding the works:—Held, on demurrer, that the plea was good as a traverse of the breach. Vickers v. Overend, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 388; 7 Hurls. & N. 92.

(E) DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF.

J, by his will, bequeathed to B's children, on her death, a legacy of 400*l.*, to be paid at the age of twenty-one, the shares of children dying under that age to be paid to the survivors and the executors and administrators of any brother or sister who attained that age; and the testator devised part of his real estate, subject to and charged with the legacy, in moieties to his two daughters. The plaintiff, as heir-at-law of one of the testator's daughters, effected a partition of the real estate with the other daughter, each covenanting with the other to pay one moiety of the legacy. The plaintiff subsequently sold his part to the defendant, subject to the payment by the defendant of one moiety of the legacy to P, the only surviving child of B (who was dead), on his attaining the age of twenty-one, or to his personal representative in case of his death under age, and the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff to pay the moiety of the legacy accordingly, and to indemnify the plaintiff against all liability consequent on the non-payment thereof. P died under twenty-one, and his administrator claimed a moiety of the legacy, and filed a bill against the plaintiff, who having been advised that on P's death under twenty-one the legacy was no longer a charge on the estate, refused to pay and himself claimed payment of 200*l.* from the defendant and gave him notice not to pay P's administrator. The Chancery suit was decided in favour of the plaintiff, the bill being dismissed with costs, but the plaintiff had to pay some costs as between attorney and client. The plaintiff having brought an action on the covenant, alleging as breaches the non-payment of the moiety to P's personal representative, and non-indemnity of the plaintiff, whereby the plaintiff incurred costs, —Held, that the plaintiff was entitled, not merely to nominal damages for the non-payment, but to 200*l.*, and that the facts afforded no answer to the breach for not indemnifying. Hodgson v. Wood, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 76; 2 Hurls. & C. 649.

(A) Validity and Nature of.

To a declaration for having so wrongfully, negligently and improperly, and without leaving any proper or sufficient support, worked mines under the plaintiff's land, that great part of it fell in, the defendants pleaded, as to the working the mines without leaving any proper or sufficient support, that the lord of the manor of W, being entitled to the mines under the wastes of the manor, and certain persons being entitled to the right of common over the wastes, an Inclosure Act was passed, with the assent of the lord, under which the wastes were inclosed and allotted to the different owners of tenements within the manor in respect of which they had had rights of common; and that by the act all the previous rights of the lord were reserved, and the lord was to enjoy the mines under the wastes allotted, together with all necessary ways, &c., and liberty of working as fully as before the act, without making any satisfaction for so doing; and satisfaction was to be made for any damage to any particular allotment by the occupiers of the other allotments in the same township according to the direction of a Justice of the Peace. That from time immemorial up to the passing of the act, the lord and his assigns had been used and accustomed as of right to search for, win and work the mines under the waste lands without leaving any support for the lands under which the mines were situate, and without making any satisfaction for any injury caused by such working; that the locus in quo was part of such inclosed wastes, and the damage complained of was done by the defendants as lessees of the mines from the lord:—Held, that the plea was bad, as the alleged custom was void, on the authority of Hilton v. Earl Granville. Blackett v. Bradley, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 65; 1 Best & S. 940.

The defendants also pleaded, as to the working the mines without leaving proper and sufficient support, that the lord of the manor of W was seised in fee of the mines within the manor, and that for the period of forty years next before action brought the lord and his tenants had been used and accustomed of right to work the mines without leaving any support for the lands under which the mines were situate, and justifying, as tenants of mines to the lord, in the exercise of the above customary right. The defendants also pleaded a similar plea, alleging the custom for twenty years:—Held, that the pleas were bad, as they did not shew any acts done on the plaintiff's land; and acts done under the land of another, although done as of right for twenty or forty years, could not affect the plaintiff's rights. Ibid.

A custom, for all the freemen and citizens of a neighbouring city to hold horse-races over the close of M on Ascension Day in every year is good; and in pleading such custom, it being claimed for a day certain, it need not be alleged that the day is a seasonable day. Mounsey v. Ismay, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 94; 1 Hurls. & C. 729.

A claim, by custom, for all the freemen and citizens of a neighbouring city to run horse-races over certain land on Ascension Day in every year, is not a claim to an easement within the meaning of the 2nd section of the Prescription Act. Mounsey v. Ismay, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 52; 3 Hurls. & C. 486.

(B) Mercantile Usage.

There was a custom at Liverpool of allowing a discount of three months on freights payable on all bills of lading from ports in North America; when Texas was annexed to America, in 1846, the custom was in practice extended to ports in that territory:—Held, that this was evidence from which a jury might infer that the custom extended to ports in California after that country was also annexed. Falkner v. Earle, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 124; 3 Best & S. 360.

(C) When admissible to affect Written Contract.

F, a broker in mining shares, sold L, also a like broker, some shares in a mine. The sold note ran thus: "June 18, 1859. Sold L 250 5120th shares in Wheal Charlotte, at 2*l.* 5*s.* per share, 562*l.* 10*s.*, for payment half in two, half in four months." The bought note was in similar terms:—Held, in an action by F against L for not accepting and paying for the shares, that evidence was admissible of a usage among brokers in mining shares that on contracts for the sale and purchase of such shares, the delivery of the shares should take place concurrently with and at the time agreed upon for the payment; and that the purchaser was not at liberty to demand the delivery of them before the time of payment. Field v. Lelean (Ex. #### (a) In general.

The defendants, a corporation, were empowered by a local act of parliament, to construct a reservoir for public purposes, and to divert to it the waters of certain rivers and streams, and were required (under penalties) to discharge from the reservoir a certain specified quantity of water per second, for the use of mills on the river E. The act provided that the defendants should not divert any of the waters of the river E until the reservoir should be completed and filled, and water discharged therefrom in the quantity provided, and that, except as provided for, the rights of mill-owners should not be prejudiced. The defendants diverted a part of the waters of the river E, but from engineering difficulties the reservoir was not completed so as to be capable of being filled with water:—Held, that the mill-owners on the river E could not maintain an action for the non-supply of the statutable amount of water from the reservoir, but were confined to an action for damages occasioned by the wrongful diversion of the natural supply before the completion of the reservoir. Waller v. the Mayor, &c. of Manchester, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 293; 6 Hurls. & N. 667.

The plaintiff, being in treaty with C for the purchase of the goodwill of a business, was referred to B for the particulars of the business. The defendant, whom the plaintiff sent to B for particulars, represented to the plaintiff that B had told him that the returns were of a certain value, whereupon the plaintiff concluded his purchase. The value being afterwards found to be much less than had been so represented, the plaintiff, without further inquiry, sued C for a false representation, but failed in such action, on the ground that no such representation had, in fact, been made by either B or C. In an action against the defendant for so falsely representing what B had told him,—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover as damages the costs of the action against C, as such were not the natural and proximate consequence of such false representation by the defendant. Richardson v. Dunn, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 44; 8 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 655.

In an action for false imprisonment the plaintiff tendered, as evidence of special damage, that he had lost a situation which he should otherwise have got. The defendant imprisoned the plaintiff at half-past one and detained him till past two o'clock. The evidence tendered was, that if the plaintiff had appeared at a certain place at two o'clock he would have obtained a situation. When the plaintiff got out of prison, he did not go to seek for the situation, but went home instead, and did not make any application till the following day, when it was too late:—Held, that the damage was not the natural result of the unlawful act of the defendant, as it might not have happened at all if the plaintiff had gone to seek for the situation as soon as he got out, or if the intended employer had not engaged another person. Hoey v. Felton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 105; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 142.

The plaintiffs were owners of a vessel chartered as a general ship from London to Valparaiso, with liberty to touch at the Falkland Islands. She had on board goods consigned to the defendants at the Falkland Islands, and 400 barrels of gunpowder for Valparaiso. When she arrived at the Falkland Islands it was necessary for her to unload her gunpowder before she could enter the harbour. The defendants accordingly lent the captain a vessel in which temporarily to stow the powder. Subsequently, the defendants removed the powder into another vessel, which was not a proper one for the purpose, and the latter vessel went down with the powder on board. The captain went on to Valparaiso, and not having delivered the gunpowder or otherwise satisfied the consignees, he was sued by them. The captain defended the action and was defeated, incurring considerable costs in so doing:—Held, that, though the defendants were liable to the plaintiffs for the value of the gunpowder, they were not liable for the costs incurred in defending the action at Valparaiso.—(It is difficult to say whether the ratio decidendi in this case was, that the conduct of the captain in defending the action at Valparaiso was imprudent, or that the costs incurred in that action were too remote to be given as damages. Each ratio is sufficient, and each is referred to.) Ronneberg v. the Falkland Islands Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 34; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 1.

Where goods seized by the sheriff under a fi. fa. are claimed and subsequently sold under an interpleader order (which does not restrain any action except against the sheriff), the execution creditor is not liable to the claimant (who, having succeeded in the interpleader issue, sues the execution creditor in trespass) for damages sustained subsequent to the order. Walker v. Olding, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 142; 1 Hurls. & C. 621.

(b) In Actions for Breach of Contract.

By an agreement in writing the defendant agreed to serve the plaintiff as his assistant as a surgeon and apothecary for one month, and so on from month to month, until determined by one month's notice, at a certain salary, the plaintiff in addition thereto to provide for the defendant a dwelling-house at C to reside in; and in consideration of the premises and of the agreement for hiring the defendant promised and agreed that he should not nor would practise within the distance of five miles from C without the consent of the plaintiff, under the penalty or penal sum of 100*l.*, to be recoverable as liquidated damages, the said sum having been specified by the parties as the amount to be paid and recoverable by the plaintiff for the breach or non-observance by the defendant of the last-mentioned clause:—Held, that the providing the dwelling-house was not a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to sue for the breach of the agreement not to practise at C, and that such agreement not to practise was not put an end to by a month's notice to determine the engagement. Carnes v. Nisbett, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 273; 7 Hurls. & N. 778.

Held, also, that the agreement was not void as being in restraint of trade, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the full sum of 100*l.* for a breach, but was not also entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant from in future practising at C. Ibid.

(c) In Actions for Accidental Death under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93.

P, having an estate of 4,000*l.* a year, was killed by the negligence of the servants of a railway company. On his death, his widow received, pursuant to a settlement, a jointure of 1,000*l.* a year for her life, charged on the estate; 800*l.* a year, the interest of a charge, went to the eight younger children. The estate, subject to these burdens, passed to the eldest son:—Held (affirming the decision below, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 249; 2 Best & S. 759), that an action lay, under the statute 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, against the company in respect of the death, although there was no loss of income occasioned thereby, and the deceased, if only injured and not killed, could not have claimed damage for any pecuniary loss. Pym v. the Great Northern Rail. Co. (Ex. Ch.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 377; 4 Best & S. 396.

Held, further, that, though the estate survived for the benefit of the family as a whole, yet that the jury had to look separately to the interests of the respective members of the family; and that, if the death occasioned the loss to any one of them of the reasonable expectation of future pecuniary benefit, the jury were bound to consider such loss, and award damages accordingly. Ibid.

(B) NOMINAL DAMAGES.

In an action for an excessive distress the plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages, although he proves no actual damage. Chandler v. Doulton, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 89; 3 Hurls. & C. 553.

(C) ASSESSMENT OF, IN EQUITY.

Damages in equity for loss occasioned by pulling up a railway will be computed upon a general view of the whole case, and an estimate and allowance will be made of such a sum as may be considered a recompense for the loss sustained. Mold v. Wheatcroft, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 598.

Parties who make a claim for damages in equity must by evidence establish the facts on which they base their claim. Ibid.

(D) CRITERION AND MEASURE OF.

In an action by a cap-manufacturer against a carrier for damages for the loss sustained by delay in the delivery of cloth, by which the plaintiff had lost the season for making it into caps, and so disposing of it,—Held, that, although in accordance with the principle laid down in Hadley v. Baxendale, the jury, in estimating the damages, could not give the plaintiff the loss of profits he might have made by the manufacture of the cloth into caps, yet they were justified in taking into their consideration the deterioration in the marketable value of the cloth by reason of the season having passed for making caps which the plaintiff might then have sold. Wilson v. the Lancashire and Yorkshire Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 232; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 632.

The defendant having obtained a rule to reduce the damages from 80*l.* to a nominal sum, the Court proposed to make the rule absolute for a new trial, unless the plaintiff assented to a reduction to 40*l.*:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the rule, though he consented to the reduction. Ibid.

The plaintiffs caused to be delivered to the defendants, a railway company, some bales of cotton to be carried from Liverpool to Oldham. Instead of being delivered the following morning, which was the usual time occupied, the cotton was not delivered for four days. The plaintiffs made inquiry for it at the Oldham station, before and after the actual delivery of the cotton to the defendants, and told the defendants' manager that the plaintiffs' mill was at a stand-still on account of the non-delivery of the cotton, and that they would look to the company for compensation for the loss sustained; but the fact of the mill being at a stand-still was not communicated by the plaintiffs to the defendants or their agents at Liverpool at the time the cotton was delivered to them to be carried. In consequence of the delay, a new mill of the plaintiffs was prevented from being worked for two days and a half; and workpeople were kept idle, to whom the plaintiffs had to pay 7*l.* wages for the time. The plaintiffs also claimed 7*l.* 10*s.* for the profits they would have made by working their mill for the time in question. The Judge directed the jury that the plaintiffs had a right to charge as legal damage such loss as naturally and immediately arose from the stoppage of their mill; that the question was what had been the actual loss and actual detriment that the plaintiffs had suffered by the non-arrival, in due course, of the cotton; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the money they had actually paid as wages, and that the profit they would have made was a fair subject of calculation:—Held, that this was a misdirection, the wages and loss of profit not being the legal measure of damages. Gee v. the Lancashire and Yorkshire Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 11; 6 Hurls & N. 211.

The case of Hadley v. Baxendale commented upon. Ibid.

In an action for a wrong, whether arising out of trespass or a negligent act, the jury, in estimating the damages, may take into consideration all the circumstances attending the committal of the wrong. Emblen v. Myers, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 71; 6 Hurls. & N. 54.

In an action for wrongfully and injuriously pulling down a building adjoining the plaintiff's stable in a negligent and improper manner, and with such a want of proper care that by reason thereof a piece of timber fell upon the plaintiff's stable and destroyed the roof, and by reason of the defendant's negligence, carelessness and unskilfulness, part of the building fell upon and injured the plaintiff's horse, evidence was given shewing that the defendant had acted wilfully and with the object of forcing the plaintiff to give up possession of the stable:—Held, that the jury were properly directed that if they thought the defendant had acted with a high hand, wilfully, and with the object of getting the plaintiff out of possession, the damages might be higher than if the injury was the result of pure negligence. Ibid.

The defendant, on the 26th of July, sold, by sample, to the plaintiff 3,000 gallons of naphtha, at 2*s.* 2*d.* per gallon, to be delivered 1,000 gallons on the 30th of July, 1,000 on the 8th of August, 1,000 on the 15th of August; the plaintiff, on the 27th of July, re-sold same naphtha, by sample, to H, at 2*s.* 6*d.* per gallon, to be delivered on the same days. The defendant having failed to deliver any of the naphtha to the plaintiff, the plaintiff could not deliver it to H, and, according to the evidence for the plaintiff, a rise to 5*s.* 9*d.* a gallon in the market price of naphtha occurring about the end of July, the plaintiff was unable to deliver to H naphtha of an equal quality to that which defendant had contracted to sell, except at the enhanced price of 5*s.* 9*d.* a gallon. On a writ of inquiry, to assess the damages, the jury, under the direction of the presiding officer, gave the plaintiff the difference of the price of the 3,000 gallons at 2*s.* 6*d.* a gallon and 2*s.* 2*d.* a gallon, and also the difference of the price of 3,000 gallons at 2*s.* 6*d.* a gallon and 5*s.* 9*d.* a gallon, amounting together to 537*l.* 10s., as damages:—Held, on making absolute a rule for a new writ of inquiry, obtained on the ground that the enhanced value set upon the naphtha ought not to have been taken into consideration in estimating the damages, per Bramwell, B., Channell, B. and Wilde, B., that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff in damages for non-delivery of the naphtha, and that the measure of damages would be the sum of the differences between the contract price and the market price (when ascertained) of 1,000 gallons of naphtha of equal quality with that contracted to be delivered on the 30th of July, the 8th of August and the 15th of August respectively. Per Martin, B., that the plaintiff being liable to H on his contract, the defendant was liable to the plaintiff, although H had not recovered against the plaintiff, according to the rule in Randall v. Roper; and that the damages the plaintiff would be entitled to recover in the present action would be the difference between the contract price of 3,000 gallons and the price of the same quantity of equal quality at 5*s.* 9*d.* per gallon (assuming 5*s.* 9*d.* to have been the market price per gallon) when the plaintiff's contract with H was broken. Josling v. Irvine, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 78; 6 Hurls. & N. 512.

In consequence of a railway embankment the flood waters of a river were pent back and flowed over land of the plaintiff, doing injury to a certain amount; had the embankment not been constructed the waters would have flowed a different way, but would have reached the plaintiff's land, and would have done damage to a lesser amount:—Held, that the measure of damages recoverable by the plaintiff against the railway company was the difference only between the two amounts. Workman v. the Great Northern Rail. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 274.

The defendant having assigned to the plaintiffs a policy of insurance on his own life, and covenanted to pay the annual premium and not to do anything by which the policy should be forfeited, caused a forfeiture of it by going beyond the limits of Europe without the licence of the assurers, contrary to a condition in the policy:—Held, that the measure of damages for such a breach of covenant is the present value of the policy at the time of forfeiture, taking into consideration that the defendant had covenanted to pay and would have paid the annual premium. Hawkins v. Cbulthurst, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 192; 5 Best & S. 343.

Plaintiffs bought caustic soda of the defendant, part to be shipped in June, part in July, and the rest in August. The defendant knew at the time of the sale that the plaintiffs bought to sell again on the Continent, and that it was to be shipped from Hull, but not that it was for Russia, although he learned this also before the end of August. The defendant neglected to deliver any such soda during the time contracted for, but he delivered a portion in September and October. There was no market for caustic soda, and the plaintiffs, who had contracted for the re-sale of the soda to H, a merchant in Russia, lost the profit on such re-sale in respect of the soda which was not delivered at all, and, by reason of the approach of winter in the Baltic, were obliged to pay an increased rate of freight and insurance on the shipment of the soda which was delivered in September and October:—Held, that the damages which the plaintiffs were entitled to recover for the defendant's breach of contract were the loss of profit on the sale to H, and also the cost of such increased rate of freight and insurance, but not the damages the plaintiffs paid H in respect of a sub-sale made by him to a consumer of the article. Borries v. Hutchinson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 169; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 445.

(E) Excessive Damages.

The jury having found a verdict for five guineas in an action for a trifling assault, evidently acting upon information given to them by the plaintiff's counsel that a verdict for less would not give the plaintiff her costs,—the Court granted a new trial without imposing any terms. Poole v. Whitcomb, 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 770.

An infant under the age of seven years cannot incur the guilt of felony. The defendant caught a child in the act of stealing a piece of wood from his premises, and gave him into custody. The child was discharged by the magistrate on the ground that he was under the age of responsibility, and he afterwards, by his next friend, brought an action against the defendant for false imprisonment:—Held, that a plea of felony was no answer, and that the Court would not interfere on the ground of 20*l.* damages being excessive. Marsh v. Loader, 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 535.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

(A) Rights of the Creditor.

Where default has been made in performance of a covenant to pay a sum of money, the Court will allow interest at 5*l.* per cent. Knapp v. Burnaby, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 844.

A creditor cannot have a decree for the administration of real estate, unless he sues on behalf of all creditors. Ponsford v. Hartley, 2 Jo. & H. 736.

A tradesman mortgaged a freehold house in which he carried on his trade, being his only real estate, to secure an existing debt of 1,100*l.*, for which he was liable—a sum which exceeded the value of the mortgaged property. His other property was of very trifling amount. He was at the time liable as surety on a promissory note for 2,000*l.*, and afterwards the other makers having become insolvent, he was called upon for payment, and became bankrupt:—Held, that the mortgage was void as against the assignees in bankruptcy, as being an assignment made to defeat or delay creditors. Goodricke v. Taylor, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 135.

A non-professional person, in the absence of a specific agreement, will not be placed in a better position than attorneys and solicitors. Where, therefore, a military outfitter alleged services performed in passing an act of parliament,—Held, that he must prove the services, and proof failing, that he was not entitled to a sum of 3,850*l.* secured by a judgment given to him by a young and inexperienced man. Ex parte Isaac, in re Carew's Estate Act, 1857, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 214; 30 Beav. 274.

A creditor obtained a judgment against the executor, and, on the same day, a decree was made for the administration of the estate:—Held, that the judgment creditor had obtained no priority. Parker v. Ringham, 33 Beav. 535.

Where a debtor gave authority by parol to his creditor to take certain goods, passing by delivery, and sell them, and out of the proceeds to retain his debt,—Held, that the creditor against the administrator of the debtor had a lien on such goods to the extent of his claim. Gurnell v. Gardner, 4 Giff. 626.

An executor, who was the obligor of a bond for 2,000*l.* found in the testator's possession at his death, charged with the whole sum notwithstanding his oath that he had only received 1,500*l.*, it appearing that shortly before his death he had paid interest on the 2,000*l.*, and that the testator in a letter tied up with the will mentioned the bond as a part of his assets. Inskip's case, 3 Giff. 352.

A judgment creditor, who has sued out an elegit without effect, is entitled (independently of the statute of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.) to equitable relief, though the year from entering up the judgment has not expired. But whether he is entitled to relief under the statute as regards the leaseholds of the judgment debtor, which are wearing out, quære. But the Court will within the twelve months interfere and protect the property charged by a judgment from destruction. Partridge v. Foster, 34 Beav. 1.

The defendant borrowed money of the plaintiff, and he gave his promissory note for the amount with interest at 60*l.* per cent., together with an equitable charge on copyholds, as a collateral security for the note. The plaintiff sued at law on the note, and by mistake he claimed and recovered interest at 5*l.* instead of 60*l.* per cent., which was paid:—Held, that the plaintiff could not afterwards sue in this Court upon the mortgage to recover the deficiency, and his bill for that purpose was dismissed with costs. Darlow v. Cooper, 34 Beav. 281.

(B) ASSIGNMENT OF DEBTS.

P owed a sum to C, which, under a letter of licence, was payable by instalments, subject to a proviso enabling C to sue for the whole sum at once on failure in punctual payment of any instalment. C assigned this debt to A, who afterwards gave notice to P and called upon him to pay the instalments to him. C thereupon told P that the assignment was invalid, and that if P did not continue to pay to C he would, under the proviso, determine the letter of licence:—Held, that P was justified in continuing to pay C until A had obtained an injunction. Aplin v. Cates, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 6.

(C) DISCHARGE OF DEBTS.

(a) By Appropriation of Payment.

Under a will of which some of the partners of a bank were executors the estate was made liable for the debt of a customer of the bank due at the testatrix's death up to a specified fixed amount. The account was continued in the ordinary form of banking accounts, charging the customer with the whole debt from time to time in the half-yearly balances; but it appeared that the parties were ignorant of the fact that the legal rule of appropriation would carry subsequent payments to the discharge of the earlier guaranteed debt. At a later period one of the executors, also a partner in the bank, wrote a letter to the customer amounting to a representation that the payments into his account were appropriated to the latter (unsecured) items of debt:—Held, that the ignorance of the parties did not prevent the operation of the rule in Clayton's case. Merriman v. Ward, 1 Jo. & H. 371.

Held, also, that an appropriation of part-payments could not be made by an executor so as to revive a lapsed liability of his estate and that the letter had no retrospective operation. Ibid.

Held, also, that the subsequent payments by the creditor, made on the faith of the representations in the letter must be appropriated to the later items of debt. Ibid.

A B & C jointly incurred a debt; after the death of A the account was continued by B & C and further debt incurred. Leave had been given to prove the whole debt against each of the estates of B & C and the earlier debt against the estate of A, and dividends were received from all three estates to an amount exceeding in the aggregate the debt proved against A's estates. No special appropriation was made on the receipt of these dividends:—Held, that A's estate had no right to have the dividends from the estates of B & C wholly or rateably appropriated to the earlier debt, and that the creditors were at liberty to avail themselves of the proof against A's estate until either the whole debt was paid or A's estate had contributed the full amount of the proof against it. Denison v. Avison, 2 Hem. & M. 647.

H, a commission agent, being employed by B to effect sales of goods at B's risk, had certain goods consigned to him by B to be forwarded to W. H fraudulently sent these goods to R on his own account, and afterwards assigned his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. A balance was due from R to H; and it was held (affirming the decision of one of the Vice Chancellors), that B was entitled to the balance due from R, in part discharge of the amount due to him (B) from H, and to prove under the assignment for the balance. Broadbent v. Barlow, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 569; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 570.

(b) By Set-off.

A tenant having obtained judgment and issued execution against his landlord, afterwards became indebted to him for arrears of rent and dilapidations: —Held, that the landlord was not entitled, by injunction, to restrain proceedings upon the ground of set-off. Maw v. Ulyatt, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 33.

A cestui que trust, under a will, being indebted to a debtor of the testator's estate, is not bound to pay off his debt before claiming under the will. Avison v. Holmes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 564; 1 Jo. & H. 530.

(c) By Appointment in Satisfaction.

J W, by the settlement made on the marriage of his son C., covenanted with trustees to bequeath by his will to his son, if living, or to his then intended wife if he were dead, a legacy or sum of not less than 2,500*l.* to be held upon the trusts of the marriage settlement. By his will, J W, after reciting a power of appointment he had over a sum of 10,000*l.* comprised in his own marriage settlement in favour of his children (which sum, in default of appointment, was settled upon the children in equal shares), appointed to C 2,500*l.* in full discharge of his (the testator's) covenant for payment or bequest of that sum contained in the settlement: —Held, first, that the appointment made by the testator in exercise of the power contained in his own settlement could not operate as a satisfaction of the personal liability created by his covenant; and, secondly, that the covenant did not merely confer a right to receive a legacy of the amount named after payment of simple contract debts, but created a specialty debt in favour of those claiming under the settlement. Graham v. Wickham, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 639; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 474; 31 Beav. 447.

(D) Deed of Inspectorship.

[See post, (G), Hartley v. Mare.]

J M, a trader, executed a deed of inspectorship, and directed the inspectors to manage and get in his estate and divide the same by instalments for the benefit of his creditors. It recited that J M owed W & Co. on a bill of exchange 1,218*l.*, and that they had taken proceedings in bankruptcy, but that the same had been abandoned on the guarantee of some of the persons who were appointed inspectors to pay the amount found due on the bill by arbitration. Among his creditors were W & Co. for 3,336*l.* for a trade debt. The deed provided, among many other things, that the inspectors might do all necessary acts for carrying into effect the arrangement respecting the 1,218*l.* bill, and should pay W & Co. whatever might be found due; there were also provisions for the indemnity of the inspectors and for contributions by the creditors for the same. W & Co. executed the deed for the debt of 3,336*l.* only. Before the estate was wholly realized the first instalment became due, and an award was made in favour of W & Co. for the amount claimed on the bill of exchange. The inspectors not having money in hand borrowed money on their own responsibility, and paid the whole 1,218*l.* awarded. The estate turned out to be insufficient, and the inspectors filed a bill against the creditors who had executed the deed for contribution. A decree was made at the Rolls in the plaintiffs' favour, and an account was directed against the several defendants in respect of their several debts in the pleadings mentioned. W & Co. appealed; and, on appeal,—Held (by declaration), that W & Co. stood, in respect to the bill of exchange, as mere strangers to the deed, and that they were liable to contribute in respect of the debt of 3,336*l.* only. Cheesebrough v. Wright, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 226.

A deed of inspectorship is not bad merely because it contains such provisions as the following, no one of which is unreasonable:—(1) That the proceeds of the debtor's estate be first applied to the payment of all costs, &c. incurred, or to be incurred, in or relating to his suspension of payment, &c., the costs of the deed, and of carrying the same into effect. (2) That every creditor, before being entitled to a dividend, shall, if required by the inspectors, deliver a statement in writing of his claim, with all the particulars usual in a proof in bankruptcy. (3) That when any dividends shall be made before all the creditors have executed or assented to the deed, a sufficient sum shall be set apart for paying the dividends of such creditors, and also the dividends of creditors whose debts have not been ascertained; and that, if no such sum be set apart, then such creditors shall receive dividends out of the first moneys applicable thereto, not disturbing former dividends. (4) That the deed shall be binding on creditors executing, assenting to or approving of it, though it cannot operate as a deed of inspectorship under the statute. (5) That the estate and effects of the debtor shall be administered on the principles of the Bankruptcy Laws, and the rights of the creditors dealt with and regulated on the same principles; and that anything in the deed to the contrary may be treated as expunged. Strick v. De Mattos, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 276; 3 Hurls. & C. 22.

The creditors, parties to an inspectorship deed, severally covenanted to indemnify, to a certain extent, the inspectors against liabilities incurred in carrying on the business of the debtor, which they were empowered to do. One of the creditors who had executed the deed, and to whom the inspectors had incurred a large debt for goods supplied and advances made for the purpose of the business, filed a bill against the inspectors, the debtor and all the other acceding creditors, to have the inspectorship wound up and the accounts taken, and to have the assets applied in payment of his claim, and the deficiency made good by rateable contributions of all the acceding creditors (including the plaintiff) in proportion to their debts:—Held, there was no right to contribution, and a decree for accounts having been made in a previous suit the bill was dismissed. Selwyn v. Harrison, 2 Jo. & H. 334.

Inspectors acting under the provisions of an ordinary deed of inspectorship are accountable as trustees to the creditors. Coppard v. Allen, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 475; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 173.

(E) Trust and Composition Deeds.

(a) General Points.

Trustees of a composition deed, before they allow a creditor to sign, are bound to ascertain the validity of his claim, as by signing he becomes a cestui que trust, and the trustees, except in case of fraud, cannot refuse to pay such dividends as may be declared. Lancaster v. Elce, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 789; 31 Beav. 325.

J L, by a deed, conveyed to a trustee all his real and personal estate, upon trust for conversion, and to divide the net proceeds rateably amongst all the creditors of the said J L who should execute or accede to the deed within three calendar months after the date thereof. The plaintiffs were creditors, but never executed the deed; they however had, within the three months, joined with other creditors in giving J L a letter of licence to come and go for three months, without molestation, for the purpose of giving his assistance in explaining the state of his affairs; but they did not in any other way accede to the deed. Five years after the date of the deed they filed a bill, claiming to be entitled to the benefit thereof:—Held, by one of the Vice Chancellors, and affirmed on appeal, that, never having done anything contrary to the deed, they were not precluded from claiming the benefit of it in this Court, though the three months had long since expired. Whitmore v. Turquand, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 345; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 107; 1 Jo. & H. 444.

Held, also, that the joining in the letter of licence was not an accession to the deed. The authorities upon the subject have determined, first, that the mere standing by, or doing of any act which does not preclude a creditor from afterwards acting in opposition to the deed, is not accession; secondly, if the time has arrived when it is too late for the debtor to have the benefit of the deed, it is too late for a creditor to accede to it. Ibid.

The distinction in reference to letting in creditors after the prescribed time, between a deed by which a third party covenants to pay a certain composition to the creditors of A B, and a conveyance by A B of property upon trust for his own creditors, pointed out and explained. Williams v. Mostyn, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 54.

The means of knowledge by which any person is to be affected with notice, must be means of knowledge which are practically within reach, and of which a prudent man might have been expected to avail himself. Broadbent v. Barlow, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 569; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 570.

A debtor conveyed property to a trustee upon trust to sell and pay to the incumbrancers (who were parties), and to the creditors, parties thereto of the twelfth part, the sum due to them, but so that the trustees might apply the moneys from time to time in paying wholly or partially any one or more of the creditors in preference to any others; and it was declared that nothing contained in the deed should charge the property with any of the debts the psyment of which was thereby intended to be provided for, or give to the creditors (other than the incumbrancers) any right of action or suit, lien, charge or demand on account of any such debt upon or against the property, the debtor, or the trustee. C, a creditor who was not an incumbrancer, executed the deed and received under it a payment on account of his debt:—Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that C could maintain a suit for the execution of the trusts of the deed. Cosser v. Radford, 1 De Gex, J. & S. 585.

(b) Form and Requisites of.

A debtor assigned by deed all his effects to trustees, upon trust for all his creditors, parties to the assignment, who should assent thereto within three months from its date. The execution of the assignment by the debtor and the trustees was attested by a solicitor, as required by the 68th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, and notice of it was given in the London Gazette and otherwise, as required by that section:—Held, that the assignment was within the provisions of the above-named section, and therefore valid. Harris v. Pettit, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 552.

In order that a trust deed for the benefit of creditors may be a protection against proceedings in Bankruptcy, all the conditions of the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, must be complied with, and it must be registered and advertised under that and the 193rd section, and a deed registered under the 194th section does not confer the same protection. Ex parte Morgan, in re Woodhouse, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 15; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 288.

A deed not registered under the 192nd section is not binding upon creditors who are not parties to it. Ibid.

The 192nd section is applicable only to deeds which contain provisions for the benefit of all the creditors; therefore a trust deed for the benefit of those creditors only who shall execute the same within twenty-eight days is not within that section, and cannot be registered except under section 194, and dissenting creditors are entitled to treat such a deed as an act of bankruptcy. Ibid.

It is not, however, required by the 192nd section that a deed for the benefit of creditors should comprise the whole of a debtor's property—Tetley v. Taylor (1 El. & B. 521; s. c. 21 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 346) disapproved of. Ibid.

A creditor having commenced proceedings in Bankruptcy against his debtor by trader-debtor summons, under which the debtor signed an admission of the debt, and four days after executed a composition deed, which was afterwards duly registered, it was held by one of the Commissioners, that such debtor was not protected by the certificate of registration from an adjudication of bankruptcy, upon the petition of the creditor, the act of bankruptcy being non-payment of the debt within the time limited by the act of 1849. On appeal to the Lords Justices, it was held, that the certificate of registration of a composition deed by a trader is not conclusive evidence that all the conditions of section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, have been complied with; and on a question arising whether the necessary assents of creditors had been actually given, these assents were ordered to be produced; and as it then appeared that they were in part conditional and not absolute, and that on the condition not being fulfilled the necessary proportion of creditors would not have assented, the deed was held to be not a valid ground for annulling an adjudication subsequent to the date of the deed; and that the bankrupt seeking to annul the adjudication may adduce further evidence; and (per the Lord Justice Turner) the 192nd section extends to deeds of composition, although they neither contain, nor are accompanied by, any cessio bonorum; but the words

"between a debtor and his creditors" in that section refer to all the creditors, and not some of them only. The appeal was therefore dismissed. Ex parte Rawlings, in re Rawlings, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 27; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 225.

A deed executed between the debtor of the one part, and the several other persons whose names and seals were subscribed and set, being severally creditors of the debtor, of the other part, whereby a composition was paid in cash to the creditors upon their executing the deed, was declared by one of the Commissioners to be within the 192nd section of the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134; and was also declared, upon being duly registered and the certificate of registration obtained, to be a protection to the debtor within the 198th section of the same act. After certificate of registration, the amount of composition was tendered to the only dissenting creditors and to their solicitors, and refused; and those creditors (knowing of the deed and of its registration) having, without the leave required by that section, arrested the debtor upon a judgment before obtained, the same Commissioner ordered his release:—Held, upon appeal to the Lords Justices, that the Commissioner had jurisdiction to order the debtor's release; but that the word "creditors," in the first condition to the 192nd section, comprised the secured as well as the unsecured creditors; and it appearing that the necessary proportion in value of creditors had not assented to the arrangement, and that the deed would enure to the benefit of those creditors only who executed it (the true interpretation of the act being that the deed should be for the benefit of all the creditors), the order of release was discharged. Ex parte Godden, in re Shettle, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 37; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 260.

A power in a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors enabling the trustees to make such arrangements with the creditors whose debts are under 10*l.* as they may deem expedient, is inconsistent with the provisions in the Bankruptcy Act, 1861; but where the deed shewed a clear intention that the estate should be administered as in Bankruptcy,—Held, that the particular power might be rejected as repugnant to the general tenor of the deed, and that its existence formed no objection to the validity of the deed nor to the capacity of registering it under the statute. Ex parte Spyer, in re Josephs, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 62; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 318.

Secured creditors under such a deed rank for the amount remaining after the deduction of the value of their securities. Ibid.

The words in the 197th section, "except where the deed shall expressly provide otherwise," refer to the insertion in the deed of a proviso for questions being settled by arbitration, or for the adoption of some different rule of administration from that in Bankruptcy; as, for example, with respect to joint and separate creditors. Ibid.

A and B, after trading as co-partners, dissolved partnership, and subsequently executed separate deeds of composition:—Held, that joint creditors of the partnership could not (in the absence of proof of the existence of joint estate) object to the deeds as not binding on them, on the ground of their not being executed by a proper majority of joint creditors. Ex parte Cockburn, in re Smith and Laxton, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 17.

An assignment or surrender of the debtor's estate is not necessary for the validity of a deed of composition or release, under the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, but to render such a deed binding on the minority of creditors, who have not executed or assented to or approved of it, it is necessary that they should stand under the deed in the same situation and with the same advantages as the creditors forming the majority. Ibid.

A deed of composition was made between a debtor of the first part, the creditors executing the deed of the second part, and all other the creditors (if any) of the debtor of the third part, whereby the parties of the second part, in consideration of the payment of 3*d.* in the pound on their debts, released the same, and the debtor covenanted with the parties of the second and third parts to pay to all his creditors the like composition:—Held, that there was an inequality between the positions of the executing and non-executing creditors which was fatal to the validity of the deed, under the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. Ibid.

M, the alleged bankrupt, had contracted with H & B for the purchase of a quantity of wine, subject to a stipulation that H & B were not to be obliged to deliver it before payment of a bill of exchange held by them, unless they chose so to do, or unless M absolutely required the wine for the purposes of his business. M afterwards executed a deed of composition under the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861; and in the schedule filed in pursuance of the General Order of May 1862, the debt set opposite the names of H & B, who were assenting creditors, included the price of the wine which was not yet delivered:—Held, that if the right to retain the wine was to be regarded as a security, it was a security for the payment of the bill and not for the price of the wine, and consequently that H & B were entitled to sign the deed as creditors for the full amount of the unpaid purchase-money. Ex parte Middleton, in re Middleton, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 36.

In estimating whether the deed has been assented to by the proper majority in number and value of the creditors, all the creditors and debts returned in the schedule must be taken into consideration, whether such debts are disputed or not. Ibid.

The certificate of registration under section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, is only prima facie evidence of the fulfilment of the requisites of that section. Ex parte Page, 1 De Gex, J. & S. 283.

The execution, by a debtor resident abroad, of a trust deed, by attorney, the execution of the power of attorney by the debtor, and of the deed itself by the attorney, being both attested as required by the Bankruptcy Act, 1861,—Held, to be sufficient. Ex parte Bell, in re Bell, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 36.

A deed of arrangement, under the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, must comply strictly with the conditions of that section, and the Court has no jurisdiction to dispense with the execution by one of several trustees. Ex parte King, in re King, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 20.

The Court has no jurisdiction to extend the time for registration of a trust deed for the benefit of creditors executed under the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. In re Skinner, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 9.

The appointment of a trustee is not necessary to the validity of a composition deed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. Dewhurst v. Jones, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 294; 3 Hurls. & C. 60.

By a composition deed made between the debtors (by name) and J, and the several persons who were creditors of the debtor,—reciting that it had been agreed that the debtors should pay to their creditors a composition of 6*s*. 8*d*. in the pound by two instalments, at three and six months, secured by promissory notes of the debtors and their surety, J, and reciting that the promissory notes had been delivered to the creditors,—the debtors assigned to J all their goods and chattels absolutely, J covenanting with the creditors to pay the composition in manner and by the instalments thereinbefore mentioned, the creditors covenanting that the composition should be, and that the same was, thereby accepted in full satisfaction and discharge of their debts and demands, and absolutely releasing the debtors:—Held, that the deed was a valid deed binding on non-executing creditors; and that the recital that the notes had been delivered to the creditors would not estop non-executing creditors from enforcing the covenant which included the making and delivery of the notes as well as their payment. Ibid.

It is not essential to the validity of a deed of composition under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, that it should contain a schedule of creditors. Stone v. Jellicoe, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 11; 3 Hurls. & C. 263.

A deed of composition may be valid although the only effect of non-payment of the composition money be to remit the creditors to their original demand. Ibid.

By a deed of arrangement between a trader and his creditors, and which was signed by six-sevenths in number and value of such creditors, all the estate and effects of the trader (except certain specified leasehold premises, which were stated in the deed to be held at a rack-rent, and to be of no value, and which the trader covenanted to assign to the trustees under the deed when required by them to do so, and except also the necessary wearing apparel of the trader and his family,) were assigned to trustees, in trust to pay thereout the costs of the trustees or trader in preparing and executing the deed, including all costs about the negotiations for the arrangement or matters in reference to the winding-up of the estate and attending the execution of the trusts or incident thereto, and afterwards to apply the residue to the payment of the debts owing to the creditors of the trader rateably; and the deed contained a release by the several persons creditors of the said trader whose names and addresses were set forth in the schedule to the said deed:—Held, that it was a valid deed of arrangement under section 224. of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, and binding on a creditor who had not signed it. Spitzer v. Choffers, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 7; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 686.

By a deed intended to be a deed of arrangement under the 224th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, which provided for the distribution of a trader's estate under the inspection of certain of the creditors, the estate (with the exception of such allowances and payments or effects or moneys of the debtor as the inspectors might in their discretion authorize, but not exceeding in quantity or amount the allowances which might have been made to him out of his estate and effects, under the statutes relating to bankrupts, in case a petition had been filed on the day when the debtor and certain of his creditors had agreed to draw up the deed, and he had been thereupon adjudicated a bankrupt) was to be administered, as nearly as circumstances would admit, having regard to the provisions of the deed, upon the principle and according to the rules and practice of the Bankrupt Law, and as if such petition had been filed and adjudication had been made:—Held, that the deed was void as a deed of arrangement under the act; as the allowances to the bankrupt in the discretion of the inspectors prevented the distribution of the whole estate: affirming Snodin v. Boyce. Dunlop v. Crüger (Ex. Ch.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 42; nom. Gruger v. Dunlop, 7 Hurls. & N. 525.

A composition deed was made between certain persons, whose names were subscribed and seals affixed in the schedule thereunder written, on behalf of themselves and all and every other the creditors of the defendant of the first part, and the defendant of the second part, which, after reciting that the defendant was indebted to the said persons parties thereto of the first part in the several sums set opposite to their respective names in the said schedule thereunder written, and was also indebted to other persons in divers sums of money, and being unable to discharge his said debts in full, had agreed to pay a composition of 5*s*. in the pound, such payment or composition to be made and paid to all and every the creditors of the defendant, whether executing the deed or not, to be paid and payable on the 22nd of September 1865, and to be in full discharge of all and every the debts due and owing at the time of the executing of the said deed, provided that the said parties of the first part thereby did accept the said composition and release the debts:—Held, that the non-assenting creditors were not bound, as the release was absolute, and the deed did not provide any means by which these creditors could obtain their composition. Gurrin v. Ropera, or Kopera, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 128; 3 Hurls. & C. 694.

A deed of composition and inspection entered into by the defendants and their creditors, and purporting to be made under section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, shewed that there were joint and separate creditors and joint and separate estates of the compounding debtors, and that both classes of creditors were to receive a uniform composition of 18*s*. in the pound:—Held, that, although the deed placed the joint and separate creditors on the same footing, it was a valid deed, under sections 192. and 197. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. Walker v. Nevill, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 73; 3 Hurls. & C. 403.

Quære—Whether the deed would have been valid if it had been a deed of assignment, and for a distribution of the debtors' estate. Ibid.

A plea of an arrangement by deed, under section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, between the defendants and their creditors, shewing that there were joint and separate creditors and joint and separate estates, averred that "a majority in number, representing three-fourths in value of the said creditors of the defendants, and each of them, &c. executed the indenture":—Held, that it was sufficiently averred in the plea, that the requisite majority of each class of creditors had assented to the deed, so as to make the deed binding on non-assenting creditors. Ibid.

A deed of composition and inspection contained a covenant, on the part of the creditors, not to sue within a time limited, viz. before the 20th of May 1865, accompanied by the following stipulation: "That these presents shall and may be pleaded and allowed in any court of law or equity as a bar, or in discharge of all and every action or actions, suit or suits, or other proceedings, judgments and executions which shall or may be brought, commenced, sued, prosecuted, or taken against the debtors, or either of them, or their, or either of their, goods or estates by the said several creditors, or any of them . . . . contrary to the true intent and meaning of these presents":—Held, that although a covenant not to sue for a limited time cannot be pleaded in bar, yet such a covenant accompanied by an express provision that during the limited time it may be so pleaded can be pleaded in bar. Ibid.

The affidavit required by the fifth condition of section 192. to be delivered to the chief Registrar, stating a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the creditors of the debtors . . . . have in writing assented to or approved of such deed, and also stating the amount in value of the property and credits of the debtors comprised in such deed, need not distinguish the joint from the separate debts of the debtors. Ibid.

A deed for the benefit of creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134. s. 192), to be binding on a non-executing party, must appear on its face to be a deed for the benefit of all the creditors. Walter v. Adcock, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 380; 7 Hurls. & N. 541.

To an action of covenant the defendant pleaded that, by a deed, dated the 12th of December, 1861, between the defendant of the first part, and the several other persons whose names and seals were thereunto subscribed and set of the second part,—reciting that the defendant had carried on business as a pork-pie maker, and in the course of such business had become indebted to the said several parties thereto of the second part in the several sums of money set opposite to their names, and that the defendant, being unable to pay the said sums of money in full, had proposed to pay to his said creditors a composition of 5*s.* in the pound, in full discharge of their said several debts, by one instalment, on the 1st of March next, which the said creditors had agreed to accept,—the defendant covenanted with the parties thereto of the second part that he would pay to each of the parties thereto of the second part the said composition on the day mentioned, and in consideration of the covenant the creditors, parties thereto of the second part, released the defendant from the debts set opposite to their names. The plea set out the memorandum of registration of the deed in the Bankruptcy Court, and averred that the creditors who executed the deed were a majority in number, representing three-fourths in value of all the creditors whose debts amounted to 10*l.* and upwards, and that all the conditions required by the Bankruptcy Act were complied with. A co-defendant pleaded a similar deed, only alleging payment of the composition, and the acceptance of the payment in satisfaction, and the release in consideration of the payment:—Held, on demurrer, that the pleas were no answer to the action, and by Pollock, C.B., that a deed to be valid under the act must assign the property of the debtor for the benefit of his creditors. Ibid.

To an action for goods sold and delivered, &c., the defendant pleaded that after the accruing of the causes of action, &c., a certain deed was made between the creditors of the defendant of the one part, and the defendant of the other part, which deed was in the words and figures following, that is to say: "This indenture, made the 18th of April, 1863, between all and every the creditors and creditor (hereinafter called the creditors) of the defendant, &c. of the one part, and the defendant of the other part." The deed then recited that the defendant being embarrassed and unable to discharge in full the debts owing from him to the creditors, they had agreed to accept a composition at the rate of 12*s.* in the pound, to be paid by instalments and to be secured by promissory notes of the defendant, and an instalment of 2*s.* in the pound in cash, at or immediately before the execution of the deed, and that the creditors should execute such a release to the defendant as should be valid and binding on all the creditors pursuant to the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. The deed then witnessed, that in consideration of the premises and the delivery to the creditors of the said promissory notes, and of the payment by the defendant to the creditors on their execution thereof of 2*s.* in the pound, the balance of the said composition, they, the creditors, for themselves, &c., did release to the defendant all actions, &c., which they had against the defendant, save and except the said promissory notes. The deed also contained a covenant to pay the sum intended to be secured by the promissory notes. The plea then alleged that a majority in number, representing three-fourths in value of the creditors whose debts respectively amounted to 10*l.* and upwards, did in writing assent to and approve of the said deed, and that the plaintiff was a creditor and became bound by the deed as if he had been a party thereto; that the defendant tendered to the plaintiff the promissory notes and the 2*s.* in the pound cash, and that the plaintiff refused to receive them; that the instalment of 2*s.* in the pound was paid into court, and that the defendant was ready to deliver the promissory notes to the plaintiff:—Held (by Cockburn, C.J., and Crompton, J.), that the deed was invalid, and was not binding upon those creditors who did not execute it, as the promissory notes and the 2*s.* in the pound mentioned therein were only secured to those creditors who did execute it. Held (by Blackburn, J. and Mellor, J.), that the deed was valid and binding upon all the creditors, and that its effect was not to exclude from the benefit of it those creditors who did not execute it. Dingwell v. Edwards, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 161; 4 Best & S. 738.

A deed of arrangement professed to be made between the defendant (a debtor) of the first part, E H (one of his creditors) of the second part, L J (a trustee) of the third part, E H and those other creditors of the defendant who sealed or assented to the deed of the fourth part, and the non-assenting creditors of the fifth part; it contained covenants by the defendant and E H with L J to pay him, on registration of the deed, 7*s.* 6*d.* in the pound on all the debts, and before the expiration of twelve months from the date of the deed 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound on all the debts but that of E H; a covenant by the defendant with E H to pay him, on the said registration and on or before the expiration of the said twelve months, the said dividends in respect of his debt; an undertaking by L J to stand possessed of the money so paid to him in trust after the said registration of the deed and demand in writing by E H and the other creditors to pay the first dividend, and after the expiration of the said twelve months and such a demand to pay the several creditors the second dividend; and a release by E H and the parties of the fourth part:—Held, that there was no such inequality in favour of E H as to avoid the deed, and that it was pleadable in bar as a release in an action brought by a non-assenting creditor. Wells v. Hacon, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 204; 5 Best & S. 196.

A deed of composition made between J B (the debtor) of the first part, J K and B B (two sureties for securing the composition) of the second part, and the several other persons whose names are hereunto subscribed and seals affixed, of the third part, after reciting that the parties of the second and third parts, creditors of J B, had agreed to accept a composition of 3*s.* in the pound, on having the same secured by the joint and several promissory notes of J B, J K and B B, payable in two equal instalments on the 20th of August and the 20th of September, and that J B, J K and B B had made and delivered to each of the parties of the third part, their joint and several promissory notes, contained the following covenant and release: "J B, J K and B B do and each of them doth covenant with the parties of the third part, and with each and every of them, that they, J B, J K and B B, or one of them, shall pay the several promissory notes as they shall respectively become due, and shall also make and deliver to all the other creditors of the said J B like joint and several promissory notes, payable at the several times and in manner aforesaid, for the like composition of 3*s.* in the pound upon their respective debts, and shall pay such composition to each of the last-mentioned creditors at the several times and in manner aforesaid, and the several parties of the third part and J K and B B do and each of them doth covenant with J B that they and each of them have accepted and will accept the said promissory notes by way of composition and payment of 3*s.* in the pound upon the amount of their several debts in full discharge of their debts, and that upon the payment of the said promissory notes they and each of them will execute to J B a general release and discharge from their debts." Three-fourths in value of J B's creditors had in writing assented to and approved of the deed, but the only parties who had executed the deed were the debtor and the two sureties:—Held, that as the assenting creditors had not executed the deed, and the non-assenting creditors were not parties to it, neither class of creditors could sue on the deed, and that both classes were on an equality, and that the deed was valid. Scott v. Berry, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 193; 3 Hurls. & C. 966.

A deed of inspectorship, purporting to be made under section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, contained the following clause: "Provided always, that in case any dividend shall be declared before all the creditors shall have executed or assented to these presents, or before the amount of dividends payable on all their respective debts shall have been ascertained, the said inspectors shall retain sufficient sums for the purpose of paying a like rateable dividend to any creditor or creditors who shall not have assented to or executed the same, or the amount of dividend payable on whose debts shall not have been ascertained, and shall afterwards pay or cause to be paid such dividend to such creditor or creditors, upon his or their request in writing," &c. By the deed the dividends were made payable unconditionally, and no necessity was imposed upon assenting creditors of making a demand in writing for the payment of their dividends:—Held, that no such inequality was created by the above clause between the two classes of creditors, as would make the deed invalid. Hernulewicz v. Jay, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 201; 6 Best & S. 697.

The plaintiffs were trustees under a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors, which purported to be made under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and was in the form given in Schedule D of that act. The deed was duly executed, attested, stamped and registered, according to the provisions of section 192, but was not assented to by the requisite majority of creditors. The defendants were assignees of the estate of certain bankrupt creditors of the debtor, and a fi. fa. having been issued against his property by the defendants, an interpleader issue was directed:—Held, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, that the deed was valid to pass the property, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the verdict. Symons v. George (Ex. Ch.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 187; 3 Hurls. & C. 996.

A composition deed, made between the defendant of the first part and the undersigned J F, one of the creditors of the defendant, and also all the other undersigned creditors of the defendant of the second part, after reciting that the defendant was unable to pay his several creditors the full sum of 20*s.* in the pound, but was able and willing to pay each and all of them, on signing the deed, the composition of 5*s.* in the pound, and that the defendant had applied to the several parties of the second part to receive and take the composition of 5*s.* in the pound, payable on signing the deed, in full satisfaction and discharge of their several respective debts, which the parties of the second part had agreed to accept in full satisfaction and discharge, proceeded in consideration thereof to release the debts:—Held, that the deed was invalid, and not binding on the non-assenting creditors, as by the terms of the deed the composition was to be paid only to the creditors who signed, therefore those who assented were in a better position than those who dissented. Martin v. Gribble, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 108; 3 Hurls. & C. 631.

To an action on a promissory note, the defendant pleaded, by way of equitable defence, that, after the accruing of the plaintiff's claim, he was indebted to the plaintiff and divers other persons, and that a deed was made and entered into by and between the defendant of the one part, and the several persons being creditors of the defendant who should execute the same of the other part, relating to the debts and liabilities of the defendant and his release therefrom. The deed was set out in the plea, and after reciting that the defendant, being unable to pay his debts in full, had applied to his said several creditors to receive a composition of 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, it went on as follows: "which we, the several creditors signing these presents, have agreed to do, and being a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the creditors of the said (defendant) whose debts respectively amount to 10*l.* and upwards, have agreed to accept such composition as aforesaid, and in consideration thereof, and on payment thereof, or whenever thereafter called upon for the purpose, hereby severally undertake and agree to execute to the said (defendant) a good and sufficient release in the law of our several and respective claims and demands upon him." The plea then averred that a majority representing three-fourths in value of the creditors of the defendant, whose debts respectively amounted to 10*l.* and upwards, did in writing assent to and approve of the execution of the said deed; that the deed was duly registered, and that the plaintiff was bound thereby as if he had been a party thereto, and had duly executed the same:—Held (affirming the judgment below, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 81), that the plaintiff, though a non-assenting creditor, was barred by the deed from maintaining his action; that the deed was a valid deed within section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, as it sufficiently shewed that it was intended to be an arrangement between the debtor and the whole body of his creditors, as all had the option of coming in and signing it; that it was not unequal, although there was no compulsory clause directing the debtor to pay the composition; and that it was not necessary to the validity of a composition deed that there should be any cessio bonorum. Clapham v. Atkinson (Ex. Ch.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 49; 4 Best & S. 730.

A composition deed, expressed to be made between the debtor of the first part, and the several persons creditors of the said debtor, whose names and seals were thereto affixed, of the second part, witnessed that the said several creditors parties of the second part covenanted that if the debtor paid to each of the said several creditors parties of the second part a composition of 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, the same should operate as a release and discharge in full from all the debts due to the said creditors parties thereto:—Held, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber (Blackburn, J. dubitante), that the deed was not a valid deed within section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, so as to bind a creditor who had not executed it, since it did not provide for all the debts and liabilities of the debtor, or for paying a composition to all the creditors, but only to those who executed the deed. Ilderton v. Jewell (Ex. Ch.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 148; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 142: and in the Court below, nom. Ilderton v. Castrique, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 206; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 99.

The deed of arrangement contemplated by the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, is one which is made for the benefit of all the creditors of the debtor, and to which all may become parties. A deed, therefore, which in terms excludes all creditors who do not execute within a given time, affords no defence to an action by a creditor not a party thereto. Berridge v. Abbott, 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 507.

In estimating the number and value of the assenting creditors to a deed under the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, secured as well as unsecured creditors are to be taken into account. King v. Randall, 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 721.

A composition deed under the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134. s. 192, and fulfilling its requirements, made between the debtor of the one part, and the creditors whose names are subscribed of the other part, by which each of the said creditors covenanting for his own acts only, covenants with the debtor at all times to indemnify him from and against every bill of exchange, promissory note and other negotiable instrument on which the debtor may have incurred any liability, or which may have been indorsed or put into circulation by any or either of the said creditors, is not binding on a creditor who has not assented to or executed the deed, since such a covenant is wholly unreasonable, and the deed containing it is not such a deed as is contemplated by the statute. Woods v. Foote (Ex. Ch.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 199; 1 Hurls. & C. 841.

A deed, by which a debtor assigned all his estate to trustees for the benefit of creditors, and otherwise satisfying the conditions of the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, contained a clause, "that all creditors to whom bills or other negotiable instruments might have been given by the debtor for debts due to such creditors, should indemnify the debtor and his estate against all claims or demands by other persons than themselves in respect of such bills or instruments, and all losses, damages and costs by reason or in respect thereof; and should if any such bills had been indorsed or transferred to any other persons take the same up and retire the same before or when they should become due, and so as to prevent any claim or demand in respect thereof being made upon the debtor or his estate":—Held, that this was an unreasonable clause, and not binding upon a non-assenting creditor, and therefore that the deed was void and of no effect as a deed under the 192nd section. Balden v. Pell, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 200; 5 Best & S. 213.

Quære—Whether it was objectionable that the powers of the trustee should be continued to his executors and administrators? Ibid.

A deed of assignment of a debtor's property to a trustee for the benefit of creditors, which was registered under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, contained a clause empowering the trustees to require the amount of any debt to be verified by declaration, or in such other manner as to such trustee should seem expedient, and in the event of any creditor refusing or failing so to verify his debt, such creditor was to lose all benefit under the deed. It also contained a covenant by the creditors not to sue the debtor, and if any creditor should do so that then the debtor should be discharged from all debts and demands of the creditor by whom he should be so sued, and that the deed might be pleaded in bar as a release for that purpose; and it further contained a proviso empowering the trustee to pay in full those creditors whose debts were under 10*l.*, or to make such arrangement with them as might be deemed expedient:—Held, that the above clause and covenant were each unreasonable, and that the proviso provided for an unequal distribution of the property amongst all the creditors, and that these vitiated the whole deed as against a non-executing creditor. Leigh v. Pendlebury, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 172; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 815.

By a composition deed between a debtor of the first part, his surety of the second part, and the several persons, creditors, whose names and seals were set and affixed to the schedule, and all other the creditors of the debtor, of the third part,—reciting that the creditors, parties to the deed of the third part, did approve of the debtor's proposal to pay his creditors a composition of 7*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, by two instalments, secured by the surety, and that bills of exchange drawn by the surety upon and accepted by the debtor had been delivered to the creditors,—it was witnessed that the creditors, parties thereto of the third part, covenanted with the debtor that unless and until default should be made in meeting the said bills the said creditors would not sue or molest the debtor; and further, that if any of them, the said creditors, should break or contravene the said covenant, then the debtor and his estate and effects should be thenceforth absolutely released and discharged from all and singular the debts, claims and demands of the creditor, and the deed should operate as a defeasance pleadable in bar, or might be otherwise set up as a defence, to any action theretofore or thereafter brought by such creditor:—Held, that the last-mentioned covenant vitiated the deed; and that, therefore, although the deed was executed and registered in conformity with the Bankruptcy Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134), it was no answer to an action by a non-executing creditor for the amount of his debt. Dell v. King, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 47; 2 Hurls. & C. 84.

A clause in a deed of assignment, registered under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, by which the trustee is empowered to require any creditor of the debtor to verify the nature and amount of his debt, with full particulars, by statutory declaration proved before the Commissioners of Bankruptcy, "or otherwise as the trustee may think fit," is unreasonable, and a deed with such a clause is not binding on a non-assenting creditor. Coles v. Turner, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 198; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 736.

By a composition deed made between an insolvent, the defendants as sureties, the plaintiff as trustee, and the body of creditors, the defendants covenanted to pay to the plaintiff certain instalments; and it was provide dthat, as between them and the creditors, the defendants should be deemed principal debtors, also that on non-payment of the instalments, adjudication of bankruptcy against the insolvent, or any different arrangement by him with his creditors, the release, the deed, and all its clauses and provisions should be at an end and void. After payment of the first instalment the insolvent was adjudicated bankrupt on his own petition. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants for the second instalment,—Held, that "void" meant "voidable" at election, and that the defendants were liable. Hughes v. Palmer, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 279; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 393.

By a composition deed between a debtor of the one part, and the several creditors who signed the deed respectively of the other part, after reciting that the debtor was unable to pay his debts in full, the latter covenanted with the several persons, parties thereto of the second part, to pay to all his present creditors a composition of 5*s.* in the pound on their respective debts:—Held, that the deed was not valid, since the non-assenting creditors were not in an equally advantageous position with the executing creditors, for the deed gave to each individual creditor who had executed the deed the right of action for the composition on his individual debt, while a non-assenting creditor had no power of suing either personally or by means of any one as trustee on his behalf. Benham v. Broadhurst (Ex. Ch.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 61; 3 Hurls. & C. 472.

A deed of composition was made between certain persons, whose names and seals were subscribed and affixed in the schedule thereunder written, being creditors in their own right solely, or in co-partnership with others, of the debtor, of the first part; the debtor of the second part; and two sureties for securing the composition of the third part; and in which the parties of the second and third parts covenanted with the parties of the first part, and with all the other creditors of the debtor, to pay them a composition of 10*s.* in the pound on their respective debts:—Held, that as the non-assenting creditors were not parties to the deed, but only covenantees, they could not sue for the composition, and had not an equal advantage with the assenting and executing creditors, and that, therefore, the deed was not valid. The Chesterfield and Midland Silkstone Colliery Co. (Lim.) v. Hawkins, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 121; 3 Hurls. & C. 667.

By a composition deed purporting to be made under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, section 192, it was covenanted that "no creditor who shall have executed or otherwise assented to these presents shall negotiate any bills of exchange, or other negotiable instrument on which the debtor is liable, without having first indorsed thereon a memorandum of the execution of or other accession to these presents by such creditor." A second covenant was in these terms:—"And in consideration of the premises, it is hereby declared and agreed (but each of the creditors who shall have executed or otherwise acceded to or be bound by these presents, agreeing and declaring for himself and his partners, and his and their respective heirs, executors and administrators, and so far as relates to his and their respective acts and defaults), that if the said trustees shall, within the time aforesaid, certify under their hands to the effect hereinbefore mentioned, the creditors of the debtor who shall have executed or acceded to or be bound by these presents shall not, nor shall any of them, nor shall their respective heirs, executors or administrators, or partners or assignees, at any time (except in respect of the covenant or agreements herein contained, or any of them, or in respect of the aforesaid promissory notes, or except so far as may be necessary in order to enforce any mortgage, lien or security, or any rights or remedies against any persons other than the debtor) commence or prosecute any action or suit at law or in equity, or other proceeding, or obtain any act or adjudication of bankruptcy against the debtor or his heirs, executors or administrators, or make or sue out any attachment or requisition of or upon him or them, or his or their property, credits or effects, for or on account of all or any part of the debts now due from the debtor to the said creditors who shall have executed or otherwise acceded to or be bound by these presents, or any of such creditors, or for or on account of all or any claim of such creditors provable under these presents, and that this present agreement may be pleaded to any action brought contrary to this agreement as if the same were an actual release":—Held, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, reversing the judgment of the Court of Exchequer (33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 273; 3 Hurls. & C. 361), that the first covenant was valid, as it applied to and bound those creditors only who assented to it by executing or assenting to the deed, and did not bind non-assenting creditors. Held, further, that the second covenant was a reasonable and proper covenant. Hidson v. Barclay (Ex. Ch.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 217; 3 Hurls. & C. 361.

A deed of composition, which purported to be made between the debtor and the several persons, creditors whose names and seals were subscribed and affixed thereto, contained the following covenant:—"And each of them the said creditors parties hereto doth hereby for himself, his executors, &c., covenant with the debtor, his executors, &c., to retire and deliver up to him and them, cancelled and discharged, all bills of exchange or promissory notes given to the said creditors or any or either of them before the date hereof for any debt due to him or them from the said debtor, or for which he is liable, and to hold him and them harmless against all costs, charges, damages, and expenses to which they or he may be put in consequence of or in default of the non-retirement of the same":—Held, not a valid deed within the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134. Inglebach v. Nichols, 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 85.

A stipulation in a composition deed under the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, that it shall be lawful for the trustees to require any person or persons claiming to be a creditor or creditors of the debtor to verify the nature and amount of such debt or claim, with full particulars shewing the consideration thereof, by statutory declaration before the Commissioners of Bankruptcy, or otherwise, as the said trustee or trustees may think fit,—is unreasonable, and renders the deed inoperative as against a non-assenting creditor. The Brompton Waterworks Co. v. Jennings, 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 149.

To an action, by the indorsee, against the acceptor of five bills of exchange, the defendant pleaded, inter alia, a release by deed; and in support of the plea tendered as evidence an indenture made between G W (the defendant) of the one part, and certain other creditors of the said G W of the other part; and which (after reciting that the said parties thereto of the second part, being or representing at the least three-fourths in value of the creditors of the said G W, had agreed to take the sum of 6*s*. in the pound in full satisfaction and discharge of all their respective debts), witnessed that they, the said parties, in pursuance of the said agreement, and in consideration of the said sum which the said G W covenanted to pay by two instalments of 3*s*. each, on the 3rd of May and the 7th of July then next ensuing the date of the said deed, did each of them acquit, release and discharge the said G W from all liability with respect to their respective debts, and accepted the said sum of 6*s*. for every pound in full discharge of their respective debts and claims. The deed was executed by the defendant G W, the plaintiff and thirteen other creditors; but it did not appear whether they were in fact a majority in number, or all the creditors, or three-fourths in value. The deed was not registered under sections 192-194. of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134:—Held (1), that the deed being unregistered was not admissible in evidence; (2), that the deed was intended to be a deed binding on the whole of the defendant's creditors under section 192, and, as such, required registration under section 194; (3), that section 194. applies to all deeds whatsoever, which are, or profess to be, or are obviously on the face of them intended to be, deeds of arrangement between a debtor and the whole body of his creditors; (4), that the scope of the act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, is to subject all deeds of arrangement between a debtor and his creditors to the operation (to some extent at least) of the Bankrupt Laws, leaving it open to the parties, by express provision in their deeds, to qualify and restrain the application of such laws. Hodgson v. Wightman, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 147; 1 Hurls. & C. 810.

The power given to the Court of Bankruptcy for enlarging the time for registration, under the 194th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134),—which enacts, that every deed of assignment, &c., shall within twenty-eight days after the execution thereof by the debtor, or within such further time as the Court shall allow, be registered in the Court of Bankruptcy, and in default thereof shall not be received in evidence,—may be exercised after the twenty-eight days have elapsed, and after a prior application for extension of time has been refused; and a deed registered within the time so enlarged is admissible in evidence. Wishart v. Fowler, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 125; 4 Best & S. 674.

A debtor resident abroad executed a power of attorney authorizing a person in this country to execute a deed of composition with his creditors. The execution of the power of attorney by the debtor and of the composition deed by the attorney was attested by solicitors:—Held, that the terms of the 3rd rule of the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, had been sufficiently complied with, and that the deed ought to be registered. In re Bell, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 672.

(1) Rights and Liabilities of the Parties.

The 197th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, gives to the trustees and creditors under a trust deed, duly registered, the same powers, rights and privileges as are possessed by assignees and creditors under a fiat:—Held, therefore, that such a trustee is entitled as a matter of course to summon as a witness any person whom he suspects to have property of the bankrupt in his possession, or supposes to be indebted to the bankrupt. Ex parte Alexander, in re Thinn and Flett, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 55; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 311.

The powers given by this section are, however, to be exercised with judicial discretion, and not merely in a ministerial way. Ibid.

After the execution and registration of a statutory composition deed, all creditors, whether assenting or not, are placed in the same position as creditors who have proved under a bankruptcy, and they are entitled to examine the debtor, though the object of the examination may be to invalidate the deed. But, semble, where a creditor holds the debtor in prison or seeks to withdraw property, or to withhold property that is claimed, from the influence of the trust deed, he ought not to be allowed to examine the debtor without submitting himself to the jurisdiction of the Court. Ex parte Brooks, in re Brooks, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 41.

Where a debtor had no assets and executed a statutory composition deed for the mere purpose of defeating a creditor who had recovered judgment against him, the Court, acting under the 198th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, gave leave to the creditor to issue execution on his judgment notwithstanding the deed. Ex parte Morrison, in re Clunn, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 47.

A debtor who has executed a trust-deed for the benefit of his creditors is not, in the absence of express stipulation, entitled to receive the allowances directed to be made to bankrupts by the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, in the event of their estates realizing certain dividends. Ex parte Gibbins, in re Gibbins, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 39.

An assignment by an executor of the testator's effects for the benefit of creditors, is valid as between the assignee and a judgment creditor. The Wolverhampton and Staffordshire Banking Co. v. Marston, executrix, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 402; 7 Hurls. & N. 148.

In reckoning the proportion of assenting creditors required, by section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, to a composition deed under that section, debts due to secured as well as to unsecured creditors must be taken into account.—So held, in accordance with the decision of the Lords Justices in Ex parte Godden, in re Shettle. Turquand v. Moss, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 355; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 15, 24: affirmed in Ex. Ch. by Whittaker v. Lowe, 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 46.

S & Co., in business as iron-masters, being in embarrassed circumstances, assigned to trustees all their stock, &c., the deed containing powers for the trustees to carry on the business, under the name of a company, until the debts of the firm were paid. The deed was made for the benefit of creditors and with their assent, and contained clauses authorizing the creditors to accept the resignation of the trustees, to appoint new trustees and to alter the trusts, or direct the works to be discontinued. All the trustees were creditors of S & Co. The trustees who acted did carry on the business, and in the course of it their agents accepted bills in this form: "Per pro. S. Iron Co.":—Held, reversing the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, that the creditors through these acts of the trustees were not liable as partners in the company upon such bills given to those who supplied the company with goods. Cox v. Hickman (House of Lords), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 125; 8 H. L. Cas. 268.

K, being indebted to M, to the defendant, and to other creditors, executed a bill of sale which recited the debt to M, and that he had applied to him for goods, which M had agreed to supply upon having the payment for the same secured in manner thereinafter mentioned. The bill of sale then assigned to M the whole of the household furniture, stock-in-trade, goods and effects upon the premises occupied by K, with a provision that if K should, upon demand in writing, fail to pay the amount already due and that which was then advanced, it should be lawful for M to take possession of and to sell the effects comprised in the deed. No advances of money were made, nor were any goods supplied at the time of the execution of the bill of sale. Three days afterwards the defendant called upon K, and, after some conversation about the bill of sale, prevailed on K to give him some of the goods out of the shop. Another creditor afterwards petitioned for an adjudication of bankruptcy against K, when M (who had seized the goods assigned to him by the bill of sale, and sold them) agreed to give up his claim under the security, and the creditors agreed, in order to avoid expense, that the bankruptcy should be annulled, K agreeing to execute a deed of assignment of all his property according to the provisions of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134. s. 192, in trust for the benefit of his creditors:—Held, that the execution of the bill of sale was an act of bankruptcy, and that the defendant had notice of it when he received the goods; and, secondly, that, having regard to the special circumstances that the trust-deed had been executed to avoid the cost of a bankruptcy, preserving to the creditors the same rights which they would have had under a bankruptcy, that it contained an assignment of all the debtor's property, and that as the debt of the petitioning creditor was in existence at the time of the giving up the bill of sale, the trustees were entitled to the same rights as if they had been assignees of a bankrupt, and to recover from the defendant in an action of trover the value of the goods of which he had possessed himself. Topping v. Keysell, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 225; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 258.

(2) In Answer to Actions by non-assenting Creditors.

To a declaration, delivered the 9th of August, 1861, the defendant pleaded that, by a deed since the commencement of the action, and since the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, between the defendant, his sureties, and his creditors, reciting a meeting and resolution of creditors to accept a composition of 12*s.* 6*d.* in the pound by certain instalments guaranteed by third persons, the several persons creditors parties to the deed, granted to the defendant absolute liberty and licence to conduct and manage his business and affairs for the period of fifteen months, determinable as thereinafter mentioned, and that they would not, during the said period, sue, arrest, prosecute, impede, or molest the defendant, or seize, or intermeddle with his goods, &c., for or in respect of the debts then due to them, and that in case any of the creditors should act contrary to the agreement, the defendant should be thenceforth and for ever acquitted and discharged from the debts due to the person acting contrary to the agreement, and all actions to be had or taken, for or in respect of the same, and that the agreement might be pleaded in release and in bar to all such debts, actions, &c., as effectually as if a release had been given under the hand and seal of the person who should act contrary to the agreement, and that in case the composition of 12*s.* 6*d.* should be paid by the instalments agreed upon, the deed should operate, and might be pleaded as a release; proviso, that the release and restraint on the creditors should be void in case of default or breach of agreement by the defendant. Averment, that the defendant and the other parties to the deed executed it on the 12th of October 1861, and that a majority in number, representing three-fourths in value of all the creditors whose debts amounted to 10*l.*, did, before the execution thereof by the defendant, in writing assent to and approve of the said deed, and averring the due attestation and registration of the deed in bankruptcy:—Held, on demurrer, that the plea was bad;—semble, because the action was brought before the date of the deed and before the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and no step had been taken by the plaintiffs after the deed which could operate as a breach of the stipulations contained in it so as to make the deed pleadable as a release. Oppenheimer v. Grieves, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 375; 7 Hurls. & N. 533.

To a declaration upon a bill of exchange, the defendant pleaded a composition deed executed by himself and three-fourths in value of his creditors whose debts amounted to 10*l.* and upwards. By the deed, set out in the plea, the defendant agreed to set apart half his income until a composition of 5*s.* in the pound should be paid to all the creditors respectively. The creditors who executed the deed agreed thereby to accept "these presents in full discharge and satisfaction of their respective debts, claims and demands," against the defendant; and they, by the deed, released the defendant from all their debts and claims against him, and agreed that the deed might "operate as a defeasance pleadable in bar to or be otherwise set up as a defence to any action," &c. The deed also contained a proviso that it should not operate to prevent any of the creditors from claiming or realizing any security held by them, or from suing any person, other than the said debtor, liable for payment of such security, nor in any way prejudice or affect the rights or remedies of any such creditors, except as against the said debtor (the defendant). The plea then alleged performance of the several requirements of section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861:—Held, that the plea disclosed a good defence to the action. Keyes v. Elkins, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 25; 5 Best & S. 240.

The plaintiff accepted a bill of exchange for the accommodation of the defendant. While the bill was running the defendant executed a deed of arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134. The plaintiff having afterwards taken up and paid the bill, brought an action against the defendant to recover the amount:—Held, that the deed was no answer to the action. Mare v. Underhill, 4 Best & S. 566.

A deed, under section 192, and in the form given in Schedule D. of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, by which the debtor assigned all his estate and effects to trustees for the benefit of creditors, if it contain no release, cannot be pleaded in bar to an action by a creditor. Jones v. Morris, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 90; 6 Best & S. 198.

A composition deed, made between the defendant, a debtor, of the first part, certain trustees of the second part, and the creditors whose names were thereunto subscribed in the schedule of the third part, contained a clause, whereby the parties of the third part covenanted with the defendant that they would not sue, &c. him, and that if they did, the defendant should be discharged from all actions, suits, debts and demands of those by whom he was so sued, &c., and the deed be pleaded in bar:—Held, that if, on the true construction of the deed, this clause applied to non-assenting creditors, it was unreasonable, and that if it did not, there was no release by non-assenting creditors; and that in either view it was not pleadable in bar of an action by a non-assenting creditor. Lyne v. Wyatt, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 179; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 593.

The mere agreement to accept a composition, under section 230. of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106), without the payment or tender of the amount, does not release the bankrupt from liability. Hazard v. Mare, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 97; 6 Hurls. & N. 434.

To an action for goods sold, the defendant pleaded his bankruptcy, on his own petition, under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, and the offer, under section 230, by him and one R of a composition of 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, to be paid in fourteen days after the second sitting appointed under that section, and the agreement, by nine-tenths of his creditors, to accept such composition, and the subsequent dismissal of the petition, and order to annul the bankruptcy; and that the offer of composition was made in consideration of the defendant having agreed to convey all the estate to R, and that the same was accordingly conveyed to him, with an averment that the defendant and R paid the composition to the other creditors, and had always been ready to pay the plaintiff; and payment into court of the sum:—Held, that the plea was no answer to the action. Ibid.

To a declaration for a debt due on a foreign contract entered into with the plaintiff abroad, a plea of a composition deed made and registered under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, whilst the plaintiff resided abroad, by which the defendant covenanted to pay a certain composition in the pound to his creditors on a day since passed, must shew that the defendant paid or tendered such composition to the plaintiff, notwithstanding the plaintiff was abroad when it became payable. Fessard v. Mugnier, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 126; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 286.

The want of an averment in such plea of payment or tender of the composition was held to be not cured by an averment that the defendant was always ready and willing to pay to the plaintiff the said composition according to the provisions of the deed, and that all conditions having been performed and all things having happened necessary in that behalf, the plaintiff became bound by the deed, as if he had executed the same. Ibid.

To a declaration by indorsee against drawer and indorser of a bill of exchange, the defendant pleaded a plea setting out a composition deed, whereby a majority in number and three-fourths in value of his creditors, in consideration of the payment of the composition agreed upon before the 10th of April then next, agreed to accept a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound in discharge of their respective debts, so far as they were able to do so without the consent or permission of, and without prejudice to the rights of third parties or sureties, but no further. The plea also alleged compliance with the requisitions of the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and a tender to the plaintiff of the composition in respect of his debt:—Held, on demurrer, that this deed, although containing no actual release in terms, was good under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, so as to bind the plaintiff, as if he had executed it; and that the plea alleging a tender of the composition shewed a good defence to the action. Garrod v. Simpson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 70; 3 Hurls. & C. 395.

A trust deed for the benefit of creditors, executed in the form given in Schedule D. of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, cannot, without the addition of a clause of release, be pleaded by the bankrupt in bar to an action against him by a creditor. Eyre v. Archer, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 296; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 638.

A deed of arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, not on its face purporting to release the debts, cannot be pleaded in bar to an action. The Ipstones Park Iron Ore Co. (Lim.) v. Pattinson, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 193; 2 Hurls. & C. 829.

To an action on a promissory note, the defendant pleaded that by a deed between the defendant of the one part and S P, on behalf of and with the assent of the undersigned creditors of the defendant, of the other part, the defendant conveyed all his estate and effects to S P absolutely, to be applied and administered for the benefit of the creditors of the defendant, in like manner as if he had been duly adjudged bankrupt, and the creditors assenting thereto being satisfied that his estate would not realize more than 5s. in the pound, agreed to accept that sum in discharge of their respective debts, to be paid within twelve months from the date of the deed:—Held, that the plea was no answer to the action, and that the defendant could only avail himself of the deed by an application to the Court of Bankruptcy, or, after judgment, to a Court of law to stay execution. Ibid.

Semble—The deed was a valid deed of arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act, and, the requisites of the act having been complied with, was binding on non-executing creditors. Ibid.

A deed of composition by a debtor with his creditors under section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, containing a release of the debtor by each of the creditors from all debts due from him to them respectively, cannot be pleaded in bar by a joint debtor to an action by a non-assenting creditor; for it extends to joint debts so as to release a joint debtor, it is bad, and not binding on non-assenting creditors. Andrew v. Macklin, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 89; 6 Best & S. 201.

By a deed of composition registered under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, the creditors agreed to accept payment of their debts by certain instalments, and they covenanted, "while the said instalments were duly and regularly paid by the debtor, not to sue the said debtor or enforce any judgment or other proceeding against him or his estate":—Held, that the deed could not, in the absence of any express stipulation to that effect, be pleaded as a bar to an action. Ray v. Jones, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 306; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 416.

A plea of a composition deed within the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, made between the defendant and his creditors, relating to his debts and liabilities, and his release therefrom, is pleadable in bar to an action by a non-assenting creditor. Such a plea need not set out the deed. Whitehead v. Porter, 5 Best & S. 193.

A deed was executed by a debtor for the benefit of his creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. The deed did not contain a clause of release:—Held (affirming the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 60; 3 Hurls. & C. 508), that such a deed cannot be pleaded in bar to an action. Clarke v. Williams (Ex. Ch.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 188; 3 Hurls. & C. 1001.

(3) As a Protection to the Debtor from Process.

A deed of composition and assignment between a debtor and his creditors, in order to be valid under the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, must be for the benefit of all creditors, and must not exclude such creditors as shall not execute it within a certain time; and the certificate of registration is no protection under section 198, unless the deed itself be valid. Dewhurst v. Kershaw, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 146; 1 Hurls. & C. 726.

A debtor, arrested on a ca. sa., after executing a good deed of arrangement under section 192. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, is, according to section 198, entitled to his discharge from custody on the deed being duly registered. Baerselman v. Langlands, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 3; 3 Hurls. & C. 433.

The certificate of the Registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy that a composition deed has been filed and registered is not available to the debtor for the purpose of protecting him from arrest, unless the deed of composition is a valid one; and a certificate founded on an invalid deed may be treated as void, without taking proceedings to set it aside. Ilderton v. Jewell, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 256; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 665.

Quære, per Williams, J., and Willes, J. whether, even if the certificate were founded on a valid deed of composition, the defendant in an action on a recognizance of bail could avail himself thereof. Ibid.

If a valid deed of composition be executed and registered as required by the Bankruptcy Act, a writ of fi. fa. issued by a non-assenting creditor after notice of the deed will be set aside. Stone v. Jellicoe, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 11; 3 Hurls. & C. 263.

A defendant, who did not plead a composition deed, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, when he had the opportunity, will not be allowed afterwards to avail himself of it for the purpose of defeating execution. Whitmore v. Wakerley, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 83; 3 Hurls. & C. 538.

(F) FRAUDULENT PREFERENCE.

Where a bankrupt trader compounded with his general creditors for 4s. in the pound, but gave as security to one creditor his I O U for the whole debt, in order to induce him to concur in annulling the bankruptcy, and afterwards, in consideration of a loan, exchanged the I O U for bills which he accepted, the Court, at the instance of the trader, declared the bills to be invalid, but without costs. Mare v. Warner, 3 Giff. 100; Mare v. Erle, Ibid. 108.

W B, on the 3rd of December, 1862, in pursuance of a resolution passed on the 25th of November, 1862, at a meeting of his creditors, executed an assignment of the whole of his property to the plaintiffs, as trustees, to pay and discharge rateably all the debts due and owing from W B to his creditors (being such persons as would have been entitled to rank as creditors in bankruptcy if the said W B had been adjudged bankrupt upon a petition for that purpose filed on the 25th of November, 1862):—Held, that the deed was not void and fraudulent as against creditors within 13 Eliz. c. 5. Evans v. Jones, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 25; 3 Hurls. & C. 423.

(G) JURISDICTION OF THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

A trust deed in the form given in Schedule D. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and registered, &c. according to section 192, though not assented to by the prescribed majority of creditors, is (by virtue of the 194th and 197th sections) subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy. Symons v. George, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 231; 3 Hurls. & C. 68.

Section 198. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, provides that, after notice of the filing and registration of a deed of composition, process shall not issue against the person or property of the bankrupt "without leave of the Court":—Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy is the Court here referred to. Skelton v. Symonds, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 151; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 418.

After action commenced and before judgment a deed of inspectorship, executed by the defendant, was duly filed and registered, and a certificate thereof obtained; judgment was signed and the defendant's goods taken under a fi. fa. On an interpleader summons the sheriff was ordered to withdraw on the payment into court by the inspectors of a certain sum of money. The plaintiffs obtained a rule to shew cause why part of this money should not be paid to them in satisfaction of their judgment, on the ground that the deed ought to have been pleaded:—Held, that without leave of the Court of Bankruptcy they could not make their execution available, and that the inspectors were entitled to the money. Whitmore v. Wakerley distinguished. Hartley v. Mare, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 187; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 85.

DEED.

(A) EXECUTION.

(a) When void.

F signed the memorandum and articles of association of a company. After signature but before registration a sheet of articles was taken out and a new sheet substituted for it without his privity, but with the approbation of the persons when managing the company. There was a conflict of evidence as to whether the contents of the substituted sheet were identical with those of the old one, and whether there was not a material alteration:—Held, that the articles were not binding upon F, that the articles and memorandum must be taken as together constituting one instrument, and that F was not a contributory. In re the United Kingdom Ship-owning Co., Felgate's case, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 456.

Per Turner, L.J.—If the substitution of a sheet in a deed after execution does not ipso facto, without reference to the question whether there is any variation in the contents, make the deed void (as to which quære), at all events, it makes the deed void, unless it is most clearly proved that the contents of the old and substituted sheet are identical, or at least that there is no material difference between them. Ibid.

A mortgagor executed a mortgage-deed to A B, the solicitor who prepared it. On the following morning A B filled in the date, the names of the tenants, and the date of the proviso for redemption:—Held, that this did not render the deed void. Adsetts v. Hives, 33 Beav. 52.

(1) What amounts to a Delivery.

In an action on a covenant which had been entered into by certain creditors of C (of which the defendant was one) with the plaintiffs, who were trustees for such creditors, there was an issue taken on a plea of non est factum. At the trial, there was evidence that the deed had been signed for the defendant by his son; and that on its being afterwards shewn to the defendant, he was asked if the son had authority to execute it for him, when he stated his son had authority, and that he adopted it. It was also shewn that the defendant had subsequently confirmed the proceedings which had been taken by the plaintiffs as trustees under the deed:—Held, that there was evidence of a delivery of the deed by the defendant, sufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiffs, notwithstanding the absence of proof of the son having been authorized to execute the deed by an instrument under seal. Tupper v. Foulkes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 214; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 797.

(2) Complete Delivery; Escrow.

A deed (which by arrangement was to be executed in duplicate, one to be prepared by each party and to be interchanged between them), was executed by the grantee, but not attested, and was by him sent to the solicitor of the grantors to procure their execution; and they accordingly signed, sealed and delivered it:—Held, that this was a complete delivery, whereby the estate passed; and that the above arrangement did not render the deed an escrow until the duplicates were interchanged. Kidner v. Keith, 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 35.

(B) VALIDITY OF.

(a) Incorrect Statement of Consideration.

A deed which incorrectly recites the consideration of a contract on which a conveyance was executed, does not thereby warrant a suit to set aside the contract, but only to reform the conveyance. Harrison v. Guest, 8 H.L. Cas. 481.

Where no fiduciary relation exists between two parties dealing for the sale and purchase of an estate, mere inadequacy of consideration or irregularity in the statement of it in the deed of conveyance is not sufficient to impeach the contract. Ibid.

A was the possessor of a small property in land. B, a neighbouring landowner, had formerly offered to purchase the property, but his offer had been refused. A grew old, and became ill: he proposed some arrangement; and the land was conveyed to B. The deed of conveyance truly recited an advance of money to pay off a mortgage on the land, and then it recited other money considerations. Instead of these money considerations, the real agreement was that B should allow A to live in a certain cottage, occupied by one of B's tenants, providing him there a bedroom and sitting-room and attendance, and supplying him with food from B's table. This deed was prepared by B's solicitor: it was sworn in evidence that A had refused to have another solicitor called in, and that the statements of the latter class of money considerations in the deed were only made as a security to A in case the board and lodging, &c. should not be properly provided. In a suit by persons whom many years before he had made his devisees to set aside this deed of conveyance,—Held, that there being no actual fraud proved (though it was charged), the irregularities in the statement contained in the deed were not sufficient to make a Court of equity set aside the transaction. Ibid.

Observations on the framing of deeds in such cases. Ibid.

(b) Family Arrangement.

Two sisters joined their two brothers in executing a deed to secure during their respective lives an annuity of 200*l.* a year from each for S, another brother, his wife and children, in the same manner and under restrictions similar to those contained in their father's will respecting a legacy given to S, his wife and children. The annuities were regularly paid, and S died upwards of fourteen years after the date of the deed. Upon a bill filed by the two sisters, alleging a recent discovery that the annuities were to be continued to the wife and children, and that the intention was that they should be payable only during the respective lives of each donor and S, and asking that the deed might be altered,—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, and affirmed by the Lords Justices, on appeal, that in the absence of fraud and undue influence, and notwithstanding the absence of advice from a separate solicitor, the future operation of the deed could not be restrained after it had been made known to the donors, and acted upon for a long period of years, when the mistake insisted upon was supported only by the evidence of the parties interested in setting the deed aside. Bentley v. Mackay, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 697; 31 Beav. 143.

A mutual agreement by several to grant an annuity to a third party may be a consideration sufficient to support the grant. Ibid.

(c) Voluntary and Fraudulent Conveyance.

The statute of 13 Eliz. c. 5. extends to future as well as existing debts, and a deed, having for its object to defraud future creditors, is void under that statute. Barling v. Bishopp, 29 Beav. 417.

After notice of trial in an action of trespass, the defendant executed a voluntary conveyance of real estate to his daughter. The verdict went against him, and he afterwards took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act:—Held, that the conveyance was void under the 13 Eliz. c. 5, it being intended to defeat the plaintiff in the action. Ibid.

A debtor, during his last illness, assigned two policies of assurance on his life, for 500*l.* and 300*l.*, to a creditor, in consideration of a debt of 174*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* He died within a month afterwards, intestate. The policies were paid to the assignee. Upon a bill by the administrator of the intestate for the administration of the estate,—Held, that policies of assurance were securities for money, within the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. s. 12; that the assignment was voluntary and void under the 13 Eliz. c. 5; and that the deed could only stand as a security for the debt due to the party who obtained the assignment. Stokoe v. Cowan, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 882; 29 Beav. 637.

(C) CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF.

(a) What Property passes.

When a close of land adjoins a highway the presumption of law is, that half of such highway, usque ad medium filum, passes with the conveyance of the close; and such presumption is not rebutted by the fact that the close is separated from the highway by a fence, and is defined in the conveyance by admeasurement and reference to a plan which did not include such highway. Berridge v. Ward, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 218; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 400.

Leaseholds which were not specified in a deed, held not to pass by the general words all other "property and effects." Hopkinson v. Lusk, 34 Beav. 215.

By a deed executed by a trustee of a banking company on his retiring, he assigned three specified policies held for securing debts due to the bank and the debts themselves. He also assigned leaseholds mortgaged to him for securing a debt due to the bank, "and all other moneys, securities, property and effects" vested in him and four others as trustees for the company:—Held, the leaseholds Y, belonging to the bank absolutely, and vested in the retiring trustee and the same other four trustees, but which were not referred to in the deed, did not pass under the above general words. Ibid.

(b) Merger of Simple Contract Debt.

The plaintiffs lent M 650*l.* on the security of a mortgage of certain property, with a covenant by M to repay the 650*l.*, with interest at 5*l.* per cent., on the 22nd of June, 1864; and as the mortgage was not a sufficient security for more than 500*l.*, the loan was made on the further security of the promissory note of M and two sureties for 150*l.*, payable on demand, with interest at 4*l.* 10*s.* per cent. The promissory note, which it was agreed between the plaintiffs and M should be a collateral security to the mortgage-deed, was made and given to the plaintiffs on the 7th of December, 1863, when 150*l.*, part of the loan, was advanced to M; but the mortgage-deed was not executed until the 22nd of December, 1863. The deed contained no reference to the note, and the sureties who signed the note were not parties to the deed:—Held, that the debt secured by the note did not merge in the deed, and that, though the remedy on the covenant could not be enforced before the 22nd of June, 1864, time was not given to M so as to discharge the liability of the sureties on the note. Boaler v. Mayor, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 230; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 76.

(D) Reforming for Mistake.

A deed can only be rectified on the ground of mistake when the mistake is common to all parties. Bentley v. Mackay, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 697; 31 Beav. 143.

DEFAMATION.

[See Libel—Slander.]

DEFENCE ACT.

Applications relating to moneys paid into court under the Defence Acts must be made by summons at chambers. In re Defence Act, 1842, and Ordnance Board Transfer Act, 1855, and Maynard's Trusts, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 344.

Under the Defence Act, 1860, certain lands were taken absolutely by the Secretary of State for War, and other lands were required to be kept free from buildings. The amount of compensation for both classes of land was agreed upon; and the plaintiffs, by their bill, claimed interest at 5*l.* per cent. on the amount paid as compensation for the lands required to be kept free from buildings from the date of the agreement to the time of payment:—Held, on demurrer, that the compensation paid for lands required to be kept clear of buildings was only a payment for damage, and did not carry interest. The Earl of Suffolk v. Lewis, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 232; 1 Hem. & M. 369.

Upon a petition to obtain out of court the purchase-money for lands taken under the Defence Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 112), it is not necessary to serve the Secretary of State who paid it in. A fund, paid into court for the purchase, under the Defence Act, of lands, which were subject to contingent charges, was ordered to be paid out to the trustees, they having powers to sell the lands and to give discharges for the purchase-money. Ex parte Morshead, in re Defence Act, 33 Beav. 254.

DEMANDING MONEY WITH MENACES.

[See Threats.]

DEPOSITIONS.

[See Evidence.]

DESCENT.

Where under a devise the whole fee is not exhausted, the reversion results to the testator as part of his old estate, and the heir takes it by descent and not by purchase. Therefore, under the law of inheritance as it existed prior to the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 106, if the heir has died intestate without being seised of such resulting interest, the descent must be traced from the ancestor. Buchanan v. Harrison, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 74; 1 Jo. & H. 662.

The Court will not allow any legal interest existing in the heir to prevent the devolution of the equitable interest in the course in which it would pass if the legal interest were separate. Therefore, where the heir was seised of the legal estate as trustee under his ancestor's will, and the ultimate trusts in the fee failed for remoteness, it was held, that his legal estate did not so unite with his beneficial interest as to constitute a seisin of the latter. Ibid.

There may, however, be a possessio fratris of an equitable as well as of a legal estate, and any dealing by the heir with his beneficial interest in the reversion will be sufficient to constitute a seisin, so that on his death intestate a sister of the whole blood will be entitled, to the exclusion of a brother of the half-blood. Ibid.

DETINUE.

(A) When maintainable.
- (a) For Title-Deeds.
- (b) For Letters.
- (c) For Grant of Arms by Heralds' College.

(B) Action claiming Writ of Injunction.

(A) When maintainable.

(a) For Title-Deeds.

Declaration for detaining title-deeds of the plaintiff's property, whereby he was prevented from selling or mortgaging it. Plea, that the deeds were entrusted to the defendant by one G, since deceased; that the plaintiff claims the right to the deeds as devisee under G's will, and never had any other interest in them; that the deeds were lost by the defendant before G's death, and the defendant never had possession of them since the death:—Held, by Wightman, J., that the plea was bad: inasmuch as the plaintiff was entitled to maintain detinue for the deeds, and, as on the pleadings they must be taken to be in existence and ought to be in the defendant's possession, it was no answer to say that they had been lost without shewing that it was not by the defendant's default; by Blackburn, J., that the plea was good, as it must be taken that the defendant never had any control over the deeds after the plaintiff acquired any property in them. Goodman v. Boycott, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 69; 2 Best & S. 1.

He who has the present legal estate for life can maintain an action to recover the title-deeds against one who is a contingent remainderman in fee. Allwood v. Heywood, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 153; 1 Hurls. & C. 745.

On the death of a tenant for life, who had granted a lease under a power in a will, the reversioners were held entitled to recover the title-deeds from an assignee of the lease, with whom they had been deposited as security for money advanced to the tenant for life and the lessee. Easton v. London, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 34.

(b) For Letters.

The receiver of letters has such a property in the paper on which they are written that he may maintain an action of detinue against the sender, if by any means the letters get back into the possession of the latter. Oliver v. Oliver, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 4; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 139.

(c) For Grant of Arms by Heralds' College.

A obtained from the Heralds' College a grant of arms, to be borne by him and his descendants and the descendants of his brother. He died without issue, leaving two nephews, the sons of his brother:—Held, that the nephews had not such an exclusive interest in the exemplification or instrument issued to A by the College as to entitle them to maintain an action of detinue against his widow, who retained possession of it, and to whom all the household effects were bequeathed. Stubs v. Stubs, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 510; 1 Hurls. & C. 257.

One of the nephews and another person were appointed joint executors of A's will:—Held, by Bramwell, B., that even assuming the executors could claim the document by action, the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860, section 19, by which judgment may be given in favour of the plaintiffs by whom the action is brought, or of one or more of them, did not apply to this case, where the two nephews were the plaintiffs, so as to enable the nephew, executor, to recover. Ibid.

(B) Action claiming Writ of Injunction.

The plaintiff, a photographic artist, lent to T, the publisher of an illustrated newspaper, certain photographic portraits to be engraved and published in T's newspaper. T having executed an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the newspaper and plant were sold by auction, and some of the original negatives and photographic portraits lent to him by the plaintiff were, among the other effects on the premises, sold by public auction and bought by the defendant, who made reduced copies, which he published and sold without the permission of the plaintiff. The plaintiff declared in trespass for taking the portraits, claiming damages from the defendant for making and selling reduced and other copies of the same, and also in detinue for the portraits and negatives, and claimed a writ of injunction to restrain the defendant from continuing to make and sell such reduced and other copies. The plaintiff had a verdict for 40*s.* on the first count, and for 25*l.* on the second count:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to retain the verdict on both counts, and to the writ of injunction as claimed. Mayall v. Higbey, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 329; 1 Hurls. & C. 148.

DEVISE.

[See Legacy—Way—Will.]

---

(A) Construction of, in general.

(a) General Limitations of Estates.

A testator gave, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to a trustee upon trust for

A B and his assigns, so that he should be entitled to the rents and profits thereof for life, and after his decease upon trust for the heir or heiress-at-law of A B, his or her heir and assigns for ever:—Held, that A B was only entitled to an estate for life, with a limitation in fee simple by way of purchase to the person who at his death should answer the description of his heir or heiress-at-law. Greaves v. Simpson, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 641.

Held, adhering to Eddels v. Johnson (27 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 302; 1 Giff. 22), and dissenting from Dady v. Hartridge (1 Dr. & S. 236) and Rotheram v. Rotheram (26 Beav. 465), that every devise of lands, whether in particular or general terms, is equally, where contained in a will governed by the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), as where contained in a will governed by the old law, specific; and therefore, that, under the new law as well as the old, realty included in a general or residuary devise is not liable to the payment of the testator's debts in priority to realty included in a specific devise, but the two classes of estate are liable pari passu to the payment of such debts. Clark v. Clark, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 477.

A gift by will dated in 1838 to J M "of the house she lives in, and grass for a cow in G field," part of another estate, passes an estate in fee in the house, but it will not create a permanent interest in the land of the other estate. Reay v. Rawlinson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 330; 29 Beav. 88.

Upon a gift, after the failure of a previous devise "of all my sister A's family, with a gift to J R of the D estate, and the rest to be sold and divided equally,"—Held, that J R, one of A's family, took the D estate in fee; but that it did not deprive him of his right to participate with the other members of the family in the proceeds to arise from the sale of the other estates. Ibid.

A testatrix devised to trustees all her real estates at Anglesey, and all other real estates which she might have at her decease, or had power to dispose of by will, upon certain trusts therein mentioned. The will contained powers for the trustees to lease and sell the estates, and to pay off incumbrances. There were then four legacies given, amounting to 400*l*., which were charged upon her real estates, in discharge of her personal property, thereby or by any codicil thereto, specifically bequeathed; and there followed a bequest of plate, furniture, and other effects, discharged from payment of debts, funeral or testamentary expenses, which she charged upon her real estates, in case her other property should be insufficient. By a codicil dated on the same day as the will, the testatrix devised two other real estates to certain persons named therein, without the intervention of trustees. The personal estate was insufficient for payment of debts, and a bill was filed to administer the estate, and to have a declaration as to the liabilities of the real estate to payment of debts and legacies:—Held, that since the Wills Act, a residuary devise of real estate is not specific; that the estate devised by the will, and the two estates devised by the codicil, were specifically devised, and must contribute rateably to the payment of both the debts and legacies, and each of the mortgaged estates must bear its own burden. Barnewell v. Iremonger, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 13; 1 Dr. & S. 242.

An issue was directed to try whether a particular devise formed part of the will of a testator; but upon appeal this order was discharged, and liberty was given to the heir-at-law to bring an ejectment. Taylor v. Brown; Arnold v. Brown, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 453.

By his will a testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees, on trusts for his sister. By a codicil he gave a legacy to his eldest nephew, whom he called his "heir-at-law," and he directed that the codicil should not give to his trustees, for the benefit of his sister, any after-acquired freeholds or copyholds; but that the same as to freeholds should descend to his heir-at-law, and as to customary estates to his customary heir. At the testator's death his sister was his heiress-at-law and customary heir:—Held, that she was not excluded from taking by descent the after-acquired copyholds. Gould v. Gould, 32 Beav. 391.

A testator made a codicil to his will in these words:—"I acknowledge T N, my second cousin, to be my next-of-kin and heir-at-law to all my real and personal property situate in the parish of M":—Held, a good devise to T N of property in the parish of M. Parker v. Nickson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 397; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 177.

A codicil contained the following expression:—"T N, my second cousin, is my next-of-kin and heir-at-law, as my brother J is dead and has left no issue." Held, that it could not be inferred from this that the testator was ignorant of the state of the family of another brother, who had left issue. Ibid.

Where a will contained a devise of hereditaments "in the county of Hants," described as "my Tedworth Estate," and it was proved that the testatrix had an estate at Tedworth extending into two counties, Hants and Wilts, but which had been dealt with without regard to the county division, and the will contained various indications derived from the limitations of the estate and the value of the Hants and Wilts portions of it tending to shew that the testatrix must have intended to deal with the whole estate:—Held, that, although no one of these circumstances alone would have controlled the words of the devise, their cumulative force was sufficient to justify the rejection of the words in the "county of Hants" as falsa demonstratio. Ibid.

Devise of real and leasehold estates together to A for life and after his decease to the male issue of the body of A in equal shares and proportions, the leaseholds being the bulk of the property:—Held, that A took an estate tail in the freeholds and an estate for life only in the leaseholds. Jackson v. Calvert, 1 Jo. & H. 235.

In construing a will of real estate the Court will look at the nature and circumstances of the property, and at the value of the subjects of the various devises; and if the whole will, read by the light of such circumstances, discloses an intention inconsistent with restrictive words in the description of the subject of the devise, those restrictive words may, as matter of construction, be rejected as falsa demonstratio. Stanley v. Stanley, 2 Jo. & H. 491.

Evidence of the intention of a testator or of mistake in the preparation of his will, is not admissible, and an issue will not be directed on this ground to try whether particular restrictive words were or were not part of the will. Ibid.

Leaseholds were, by deed, conveyed to trustees in trust for the settlor for life, and after her decease, in trust to assign them to T, his executors, &c., absolutely. But if T should die without leaving any child living at the time of his decease, then in trust to assign to P, &c.:—Held, on the context, that the death referred to was not confined to a death in the life of the tenant for life, and that T did not, upon the death of the settlor, become absolutely entitled to the leaseholds. Milner v. Milner, 33 Beav. 276.

(b) Condition.

W O devised an estate to his son H O in fee simple, and declared that it was his "earnest hope," and he "particularly requested" that his son should keep the devised estate, and all such real estate as he was or might become entitled to under certain settlements, "or otherwise howsoever," and not to sell, alien, or dispose of the same, except by way of exchange, or for reinvesting the value in the purchase of other estates; and in case H O should die without leaving issue male of his body him surviving, the testator expressed his anxious desire that he should so settle and devise the estates so devised to him, and also the estates to which he was or might become so entitled as aforesaid, in such manner and to such persons that the same might continue in the name of O:—Held, that H O took an estate in fee simple in the devised estate unfettered by any condition. Hood v. Oglander, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 528; 34 Beav. 513.

A testator by his will gave the whole of his real and personal property to his sister for life, and by a codicil, made on the same day, he expressed his desire that his sister should do what she pleased with the remaining property, excepting a tenement called W M and 1,400*l.* stock, of which his sister should only receive the rent and interest for life, and afterwards to her eldest son on his taking the name of Millard; but should he refuse to take that name, or should his sister depart this life without a son, then the said tenement and stock should go over to his cousin T P on his taking the name of Millard, and so on to his heirs, each taking the said name, none of them being allowed to inherit the property who should not take or possess the name of Millard. The sister survived, and her eldest son received at baptism, together with other names, that of "Millard":—Held, first, that the testator's sister took an estate for life with remainder in fee to the son who should first come into esse, to vest immediately on his birth; secondly, that the condition as to taking the name of Millard was a condition subsequent; and, thirdly, assuming the condition not to be invalid for remoteness, that the name being given in baptism was sufficient compliance therewith. Bennett v. Bennett, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 37; 2 Dr. & S. 266.

Devise of real estate to A for life, and after her decease, to B and C and D and E (an infant), "provided she lives to attain the age of twenty-one":—Held, that this was a condition subsequent, and that the tenant for life having died during the minority of E, E was entitled to her share of the rents until she attained twenty-one. Simmonds v. Cox, 29 Beav. 455.

Property was by will limited to the defendant, on condition of his settling some Scotch estates within a limited time on trusts, the validity and effect of which were doubtful. The defendant settled the estates within the time in general terms, on the persons on whose behalf the condition was imposed:—Held, that this was a sufficient compliance with the condition. Scarlett v. Lord Abinger, 34 Beav. 338.

(c) Period of Vesting.

A testator devised real estate to his wife for life, directing that on her death it should be shared, share and share alike, amongst twelve persons nominatim, "or the survivors of them." All the twelve survived the testator, but only six survived the tenant for life:—Held, reversing the decision of Wood, V.C., that there was no such settled rule of construction applicable to gifts of real estate respecting the period to which the survivorship should be referred, as prevented the Court from ascertaining that period simply by the intention of the testator, as gathered from the words of the particular devise when construed in their natural and ordinary sense; and that the testator had sufficiently expressed an intention to have these words as used by him construed with reference to the death, not of himself, but of the tenant for life, and that the six devisees who survived the tenant for life were alone entitled. In re Gregson's Trusts, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 41; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 428.

Per Turner, L.J.—Words of survivorship ought not to be construed as referring to the event of the devisee dying in the testator's lifetime, if there be any other period to which they can reasonably be referred. Ibid.

Semble—The rule of construction as laid down in Cripps v. Wolcott (4 Madd. 11) applies as well to real as to personal estate. Ibid.

Stringer v. Phillips (1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 292) and Doe v. Prigg (8 B. & C. 231; 6 Law J. Rep. K.B. 296) questioned. Ibid.

A testator devised freeholds and leaseholds to trustees, upon trust for his wife for life; remainder for E A and S G for their lives; and if either should die without leaving issue, upon trust for the survivor for life; but if either should die leaving issue, then one moiety to the children of E A and one moiety to the children of S G, "and to their respective heirs, executors and assigns, as tenants in common, the said children to become beneficially interested on the death of their respective parents":—Held (affirming the decision of the Master of the Rolls), that the children of E A and S G acquired vested interests respectively on their births, and not upon the death of their respective parents. M'Lachlan v. Taitt, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 276.

A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to his daughter for life, and afterwards he directed his trustees to "pay, transfer and divide" his residuary estate between his children, and (by substitution) the issue of such as should have died in his lifetime leaving issue living at his decease. He subsequently authorized his trustees in their discretion, if they should think fit, to pay the male issue their shares at any time between attaining twenty-one and thirty, with power of maintenance and advancement in the meanwhile, but he directed that the shares of female issue should be "vested" at twenty-one:—Held, that the shares of the issue vested on the death of the daughter. Barnet v. Barnet, 29 Beav. 239.

A testator, who was entitled to a reversion expectant on the death of A and B without issue living at their death, devised it in trust to sell and divide the produce between his six daughters or such of them as should be then living, and the children of such of them as should be dead, the children taking their parents' share. But, if only one daughter survived A and B, she was to take the whole, and the heir-at-law was to take if no daughter or child of a daughter should be living at the death of A and B:—Held, that the shares of the children of the daughters vested not at their mother's death, but at the death of the survivor of A and B. Lewis v. Templer, 33 Beav. 625.

A testator devised his residuary real estate to his son G H D, and directed him to settle the F estate, which was included in the devise, to the use of G H D for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail male, or tail general, or in tail male with remainder in tail general, or otherwise in tail as he should think proper, with remainder to H T D for life, with remainders over, and an ultimate limitation to the survivor of G H D and H T D, his heirs and assigns. And the testator directed that such settlement should contain such powers of jointuring, of charging with portions for younger children, of sale and exchange, &c., as G H D should direct, and should also contain all other usual and proper provisions for giving effect to his intentions as therein expressed, and all such other powers and provisions as counsel should advise. There was a large quantity of timber on the F estate: Held, that in settling the property the estates for life ought not to be limited without impeachment of waste, but that powers must be given to the trustees to cut timber in a due course of management for the benefit of all parties interested. Davenport v. Davenport, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 33; 1 Hem. & M. 775.

(e) Contingent Remainders.

A testator devised freeholds, as to one-fifth to J H for life, with remainder to all and every his children who should attain twenty-one, with remainder over if there should be no child who should attain twenty-one; and bequeathed leaseholds to trustees "in trust for such person or persons as should from time to time be entitled to the freeholds." J H died leaving one child only, W J O H, then under twenty-one, but who subsequently attained that age:—Held, upon a bill filed by W J O H, against the trustees, claiming both the corpus and the intermediate rents (which had been accumulated by the trustees during his minority) of one-fifth of the leaseholds: first, that assuming the limitation of the freeholds to be a contingent remainder, so that it failed at A's death, still this failure, by reason only of a feudal rule, would not prevent the Court from ascertaining by reference to the gift of the freeholds, as if it had been good by way of executory devise, what persons were intended to take thereunder, and consequently that W J O H was, in any event, entitled to the corpus of one-fifth of the leaseholds; secondly, that having regard to the peculiar terms of the referential gift, the question whether W J O H took the intermediate rents of the leaseholds, depended upon whether he would take the intermediate rents of the freeholds—in other words, upon the question whether the remainder in the freeholds was vested or contingent; thirdly, following Festing v. Allen (12 Mee. & W. 279; 13 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 74), and dissenting from Browne v. Browne (3 Sm. & Giff. 568; 26 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 635), that the remainder to the children of A who should attain twenty-one was a contingent and not a vested remainder, and therefore that the intermediate income of the one-fifth of the leaseholds fell into the residuary personal estate. Holmes v. Prescott, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 264.

The rules laid down in Hodgson v. Lord Bective (1 Hem. & M. 376; 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 489), respecting the destination of the income of property contingently devised and bequeathed, adhered to. Ibid.

A testator, in 1827, devised land to trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon trust to stand seised of the land during the life of W, and until the testator's debts and legacies should be satisfied, upon trust to let the land, and to apply the rents in discharge of the debts and legacies until the same should be fully paid, and thenceforth to pay the rents to W for life; and after the death of W, and the payment of the debts and legacies and the expenses of the trust, the testator devised the land to the heirs of the body of W, with remainder to his own right heirs. The trustees, after paying the debts and legacies, conveyed the legal estate to W for his life, and W suffered a recovery to the use of himself in fee. Collier v. M'Bean, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 555; 34 Beav. 426. (See as to this case, 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 144.)

In a suit for specific performance by W against a purchaser from him,—Held, that the trustees took under the will an estate determinable on the death of W and payment of the debts and legacies; that the estate limited to the heirs of the body of W was a legal estate; that the conveyance by the trustees to W did not enable him to defeat the contingent estate limited to the heirs of his body; and that if such conveyance had had that effect, the Court of Chancery would have relieved against it as a breach of trust. Ibid.

A testator by will devised estates to three persons upon trusts, and appointed them executors of his will. By a codicil he directed that one of the three (by name) should not be a trustee and executor, but that the other two and another (by name) should be the executors of his will:—Held, that the estates were, by implication, devised to the three named in the codicil. In re Turner, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 144.

(g) Implication of Cross-Remainders.

A testator devised real estate to J S for life, with remainder to his children as tenants in common in tail, and in case any one or more of the children should die without issue, then the share or shares of him, her or them so dying should go to the eldest surviving son for the time being of J S in tail, and in case of no such son, then to the other or others of the children of J S as tenants in common in tail; and in case all such children should die without issue, then over. There were six children of J S, three of whom died without issue in the lifetime of their eldest brother A. Then A died, leaving him surviving B, a brother, and C, a sister, the latter of whom contended that the words "share or shares" were not sufficient to carry over to B the three-sixths which A took by accruer; and that as to these shares, cross-remainders must be implied to B and C, as tenants in common:—Held, that as the will shewed an intention to accumulate the shares of such of the tenants in common as died without issue upon the eldest surviving son for the time being, it would be an unreasonable construction first to restrict the word "shares" to original shares only, and then to imply cross-remainders as to the accrued shares, and that under the remainder to the eldest surviving son for the time being the shares which accrued to A (as well as his original share) vested in B as tenant in tail general. Dutton v. Crowdy, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 241; 33 Beav. 272.

If husband and wife have issue, and the wife take by devise an estate in fee in certain lands, and so the husband become tenant by the curtesy initiate, a term for years which the husband previously had in the same lands will not, during the wife's life, merge either in his estate as such tenant by the curtesy, or in the estate which he has in the lands in right of his wife. Jones v. Davies (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 116; 7 Hurls. & N. 507.

(i) After-acquired Property.

In 1840 a testator devised as follows: "I give and devise to my wife, all my part, share, estate, or interest of and in the dwelling-house or tenement, and likewise the several closes or parcels of land hereinafter mentioned (describing them). And I also give and bequeath all my goods and chattels, dwelling-house or tenement heretofore mentioned, unto my said wife, for her use and interest during the term of her natural life; and after her decease, I give and devise all my property, real and personal, unto my heir or heirs to be equally divided among them and as joint heirs of this my above-mentioned property." Several years afterwards the testator became possessed of two other closes and two cottages, and died in 1850:—Held, that the after-acquired property passed under the will, and the testator's wife took a life interest in it. Jepson v. Rey, 3 Hurls. & N. 873.

(k) Meaning of particular Words.

(1) "And premises."

A testator devised a messuage "and premises" situate No. 4, Turnham Green Terrace, held of the Prebend Manor:—Held, that a small piece of garden severed from the house No. 4 by a road, but held under the same manor and usually occupied therewith, passed by the devise. Hibon v. Hibon, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 374.

A testator devised his estates to trustees upon trusts for payment of certain debts and annuities. As to the S estate, the trustees (after a special purpose after mentioned) were to pay the rents to his eldest son for life, afterwards to his eldest grandson for life, and after his decease for the first and other sons of such grandson, with remainders over. Another estate was similarly disposed of for a second son and his issue. The testator gave pictures, plate, &c. as heir-looms with the S estate. The special trust was that the surplus rents of the real estate should be applied in aid of the personal estate until all the testator's debts, liabilities, mortgages and legacies should be paid. The testator gave power to the trustees to repair his mansion-houses and insure them and their contents against fire, and to make improvements, and declared that they might, if they should think proper, permit the person entitled for life or any greater estate in the S property, to occupy the "mansion-house, gardens and premises," without paying any rent or compensation for the same, and without such person being obliged at his expense to put the same in repair, or being at any other expense than paying the rates and taxes. The eldest son presented a petition praying that he might be declared entitled to the use of the park, and to have the gardens kept up by the trustees:—Held, that by the word "premises" the testator must have intended that his eldest son should enjoy more than mere gardens and curtilage; and that having regard to the context of the will and the surrounding circumstances, he was entitled (the trustees not objecting) to occupy the park and also an orchard; and that the trustees were bound to keep up the gardens according as they might deem to be necessary. Lethbridge v. Lethbridge, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 388; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 523.

A testator, by his will, after giving annuities, directed that the surplus of the rents, profits and interest of his real and personal estate should be applied by his trustees in the reduction of mortgage and other charges upon his estates. Subject thereto, he devised his S estate to trustees for his sons for life, and empowered his trustees to permit the person entitled for life or any greater estate in the S property to occupy the mansion, gardens and "premises" rent free. The Home Farm had no farm-house, and the farm-buildings and farm were occupied by the testator at the time of his death:—Held, that the word "premises" meant premises in immediate connexion with the mansion, and did not include the Home Farm. Lethbridge v. Lethbridge, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 737; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 523.

(2) "Appurtenances."

A testator, possessing a farm in the parish of G, and a small piece of land in the adjoining parish of A, which had always been occupied and let at an entire rent with the farm in G, devised all his lands and hereditaments, "situate, lying and being within the parish of G, with the appurtenances," to G for life with remainder to the child or children of G in tail; and he empowered P and J, the trustees of his will, during the minority of a tenant in tail entitled in possession, to take possession of the property on behalf of the minor, and to grant leases; and he devised the residue of his real estate to P and J, during the life of M, in trust for M, with remainders over. The testator died in 1842, and thereupon G took possession of the lands in G and A. In 1850 G died, leaving an only daughter, an infant, and P and J took possession of the land in G and A, and in 1861 they granted a lease of the whole farm in pursuance of the power. In 1863 the daughter of G came of age and took possession of the whole farm. In 1864 M filed a bill to establish his right to the land in A:—Held, that the land in A did not pass by the specific devise, but formed part of the residuary estate, and that M's right was not barred by the Statute of Limitations, inasmuch as the possession of P and J from 1850 to 1863 must be attributed to their character of devisees in trust of the residuary estate, and was therefore not adverse to that of M. Lister v. Pickford, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 582; 34 Beav. 576.

A testator devised "all that messuage wherein D now resides, with the appurtenances thereto belonging and therewith occupied":—Held, that the devise passed a piece of land purchased by the testator after the date of his will, which adjoined the house and was occupied therewith as a garden by D at the time of the testator's death. In re the Otley and Ilkley Joint Line Committee, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 596; 34 Beav. 525.

(3) "As now occupied by me."

A testatrix, at the date of her will, being owner of two adjoining houses, &c., occupied one herself, in the garden of which was a pump; the other was occupied by T A as her tenant from year to year; and he, with the knowledge of the testatrix, was accustomed to go into the garden and fetch water from the pump for the use of his house, there being no other water supply:—Held, that the right to the use of the pump did not pass by a devise of "the house as now in the occupation of T A." Polden v. Bastard, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 372; 4 Best & S. 258.

(4) "Children."

Though the word "children" in its primary sense is to be read as a word of purchase, and to be confined to issue in the first degree, yet the interpretation of the word is subordinate to the intention to be collected from the rest of the will, and it may be converted into a word of limitation, and interpreted "heirs of the body." Byng v. Byng (House of Lords), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 470; 10 H. L. Cas. 171.

A testatrix devised as follows: "I give in trust to my executors for my niece, M A B, and her children all my Q H estates in E, provided she takes the name of Cranmer and arms, and her children, with my mansion-house, furniture, plate, books, linen, &c., Archbishop Cranmer's portrait" (and other chattels), "as heir-looms with my estate":—Held (affirming the decision of the Lords Justices and of Wood, V.C.), that the word "children" must be read as a word of limitation, and that M A B took an estate tail. Ibid.

(5) "Either one."

A testator gave to his wife a house during her life, and at her death to go to his two children; the rent to be equally divided between the two, and at their deaths to go to their children. But in case that either one of them should die without children, that share to go to the other; and that the house should not be sold, but be kept amongst them as long as it lasted. Both of the children of the testator died without children:—Held, that each of them took a moiety absolutely. Drennan v. Andrew, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 384.

(6) "Heirs."

The word "heirs" in a devise to first and other sons construed "heirs of the body" in order to give effect to the general intention, that the sons should take successively and in priority of birth. Hennessy v. Bray, 33 Beav. 96.

Devise to A B for life, and afterwards to his first and other sons successively, according to the priority of their respective births, and their respective heirs (omitting "of their bodies"), to the intent that the elder should be preferred to the younger, and for default of such son or sons, to the daughters as tenants in common in fee:—Held, that the sons of A B took successively as tenants in tail general. Ibid.

Devise, after a tenancy for life, of borough English lands for sale, and to divide the moneys among all the testator's sons and daughters who might then be living, and to the heir and heirs of those who might be deceased, share and share alike:—Held, that under the gift to the heirs, the common law and not the heirs in borough English took. Polley v. Polley (No. 2), 31 Beav. 363.

Two houses, one of leasehold and the other of gavelkind tenure, were given by will (after the exhaustion of prior limitations) to the right heirs of the testator:—Held, that the heir-at-law was entitled to both. Sladen v. Sladen, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 775; 2 Jo. & H. 369.

(7) "Issue."

Devise to A for life, and after her decease to her lawful issue then living, and the children of such of them as should be then dead, in equal shares, the children of such issue to take their parents' share:—Held, that the word "issue" was to be construed "children," and that the children of A and the children of A's children who pre-deceased her took for life only. Fairfield v. Bushell, 32 Beav. 158.

(8) "Leaving issue of her body."

A testator gave and devised an estate to trustees for and during the life of his niece M, upon trust to permit and suffer M to take the rents and profits of the same during her life: "And from and immediately after the decease of my said niece I give and devise the said messuages, &c. aforesaid unto the issue of the body of her my said niece, as well male as female, to be equally divided amongst or between them at their respective ages of twenty-one years or days of marriage, which shall first happen, share and share alike, and to the heirs and assigns of such issue respectively, and if any of such issue should be under the age of twenty-one years, at the decease of my said niece as aforesaid, &c.; I direct that an equal share of the rents and profits of the said hereditaments and premises may be appropriated towards the education and maintenance of such issue as shall not have attained the age of twenty-one years at the decease of my said niece as aforesaid; and if my said niece shall depart this life leaving only one child of her body, then I give and devise all, &c., unto such only child, &c., as soon as he or she shall attain the age of twenty-one years aforesaid; but in case my said niece shall depart this life without leaving any issue of her body at the time of her decease as aforesaid, or in case all such issue shall depart this life under the age of twenty-one years and unmarried as aforesaid, then I give and devise the said, &c., to the children of my brother, &c." M married and had one daughter, who attained the age of twenty-one years, but died in the lifetime of M unmarried:—Held, that even if an estate in fee in remainder did vest in the daughter of M (which the Court doubted), such an estate would be divested upon her death in the lifetime of M. Young v. Turner, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 268; 1 Best & S. 550.

(9) "Now occupied by me."

A testator, by his will made in 1854, devised to his wife "all that my messuage of dwelling-house, with the buildings and lands belonging thereto, now occupied by me, situate at W, containing about twenty acres, together with the close of land called H, now occupied by W, as tenant thereof, to the use of my said wife, her heirs and assigns for ever"; and devised the residue of his real estate to trustees. In 1847 a railway separated part of a field from a farm belonging to the testator, occupied by a tenant, and at the date of the will the testator occupied a portion of the separated part as potato ground, the remainder of that part, called T, being still occupied by the tenant as part of his farm; but the testator, before his death, took T into his own occupation, and occupied it to his death in 1856, with the house and land admitted to form part of the devise to the wife. A closer approximation to the quantity of "twenty acres" was obtained by excluding T:—Held, that T did not pass under the devise to the wife, the words "now occupied by me" being matter of description of the property devised, and was not to be construed as speaking from the death, within the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 26. s. 24. Hutchinson v. Barrow, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 280; 6 Hurls. & N. 583.

(10) "Or."

Devise to A for life when he attains thirty-one, and after his death to his eldest son in fee. In case A should not live to that age "or" not have any son, then in trust for B for life on attaining thirty-one, and after his death to his eldest son in fee, and in case of failure, to the eldest son of the testator's daughter in fee. A attained thirty-one and died without having had issue, and B also died without having issue:—Held, that "or" could not be read "and," and that the eldest son of the daughter took the estate. Cooke v. Mirehouse, 34 Beav. 27.

A testator after leaving certain legacies devised as follows: "As to my real estate, if my daughter dies before she arrives at lawful age, or have no lawful issue, then I leave my real and all my other property to J J and D H, equal between them, but in case my daughter shall have lawful issue, then I leave the whole of my property real and personal to her and her heirs":—Held, by a majority of the Court (Wightman, J. and Byles, J. dissentientibus) that J J and D H would take under the will only in the event of the daughter dying under age and having no children; and that they took nothing as the daughter lived to be twenty-one, though she never had any child. Johnson v. Simcox, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 38; 7 Hurls. & N. 344.

(11) "Rents, issues and profits."

A testator, who was entitled to various rectories in E S, devised his manors, advowsons, messuages and hereditaments in E S to trustees upon trust to make certain payments out of the rents, issues and profits, and subject thereto to accumulate the "residuary or surplus rents, issues and profits" of the same property for twenty-one years on specified trusts. A claim by the heir-at-law to the proceeds of sale of a next presentation to one of the testator's rectories, on the ground that the next presentations were not disposed of under the trust of "rents, issues and profits," was disallowed by the Lords Justices on the construction of the whole will. And semble—per Turner, L.J., that the words "rents, issues and profits" were of themselves sufficient to include the proceeds of sale of the next presentation. Cust v. Middleton, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 185.

(12) "Such as shall survive."

E M T devised real estate to her three nephews, A, B and C, for their respective lives, share and share alike, with remainder, as to the share of each nephew, to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to his daughters as tenants in common in tail, and in case of the death of any or either of the nephews without lawful issue, male or female, then to such of her said nephews as should survive, and to their and his issue in the manner thereinbefore mentioned, and in case of the death of all the said nephews and their issue, then to the right heirs of the testatrix. A died leaving a son, then B died without issue, then C died leaving a son:—Held (overruling a decision of one of the Vice Chancellors), that the words of the will, "such as shall survive" of the nephews, must be construed as meaning "the others or other" of them, and consequently that A's son was entitled to one moiety of B's share. In re Tharp's Estate, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 59; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 453.

Devise to A for life, with remainder to B in fee, but if B should die leaving issue, then to his children. B survived A, and died leaving children:—Held, that the gift to his children did not take effect. Slaney v. Slaney, 33 Beav. 631.

Devise to trustees of freehold premises, on trust to pay the rents to P for life, and after her decease, on further trust for such person or persons, being a child or children of P, as she should by will appoint, and in case P should die without leaving children her surviving, or in default of appointment, or so far as such may not extend, on trust for M in fee. P died leaving children, but without appointing:—Held, M entitled. Goldring v. Inwood, 3 Giff. 139.

Devise and bequest to A, and after her decease leaving any child or children her surviving who should attain twenty-one, to pay her share to her eldest child, his executors, administrators and assigns, with a gift over in default of such child:—Held, that A's eldest child, who died in A's life, did not take, but that the second child, who survived her mother, was entitled. Stevens v. Pyle, 30 Beav. 284.

A testator devised a real estate to trustees in fee, in trust for all the children of his two sisters then born, or thereafter to be born, who should have attained or should afterwards attain twenty-one, in equal shares; and he directed that, as the same should respectively become vested, the trustees should convey the same accordingly:—Held, that the children born after the testator's death took a share. Eddowes v. Eddowes, 30 Beav. 603.

A testator devised his freeholds in trust to pay two-fifths of the rents to A for life, with remainder to his children; and to pay three-tenths to B for life, with remainder to his children; and to pay the remaining three-tenths to C for life, with remainder to her children. By a codicil, he left A an equal share only of the property with B and C, instead of the increased share:—Held, that the property was divisible into thirds, one of which belonged to each of the legatees for life, with remainder to his children. Quentery v. Quentery, 33 Beav. 369.

(m) Effect of Recital in Codicil.

Held, that a devise for life contained in a will could not be enlarged by a recital in a codicil that such devise was in tail. In re Arnold's Estate, 33 Beav. 163.

(B) What Property passes.

(a) In general.

Where a testatrix gave "all those her freehold messuages or tenements, hereditaments and premises called West Cliff, with the appurtenances thereto belonging, situate at West Cowes, and now used as lodging-houses," and in a codicil referred to the same property as "her estate called West Cliff, at West Cowes,"—Held sufficient to pass not only the lodging-houses but other houses, of which some were unfurnished, and also certain plots of ground, together with the site of a private road and of a church then building, and the advowson, all known as the West Cliff Estate. Cunningham v. Butler, 3 Giff. 37.

A testator in 1841 devised all the freehold property "of which I am seised or entitled in fee simple" in strict settlement. He afterwards devised all the copyholds "I am or at the time of my death shall be possessed of," upon trusts corresponding with those of his freeholds. The testator died in 1861:—Held, that freeholds acquired after the date of the will passed by the devise. Lord Lilford v. Keck (No. 2), 30 Beav. 300.

Devise of all the freehold, real and leasehold estates in the counties of Lincoln and Cambridge (except such as I have hereinbefore disposed of), "and all the leasehold lands" at S, in the "county of Dorset, and elsewhere, which I can dispose of by this my will":—Held, that it passed freeholds in Norfolk and elsewhere wherever situate. Pinney v. Marriott, 32 Beav. 643.

A gift by will, dated before the Wills Act, 1 Vict. c. 26, came into operation, of "all and every my freehold, copyhold and leasehold messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments, and all and every my stocks, funds, moneys, mortgages, annuities, securities for money, debts, goods, chattels, and generally all other my real and personal estates and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, and of what nature, kind or quality soever the same may be, whereof, wherein, or whereto I, or any person or persons in trust for me, am, is, are, or shall or may be seised, possessed, interested, or entitled in possession, reversion, remainder or expectancy, or otherwise howsoever," was held to refer to real estates purchased by the testator between the date of his will and his death, and the will being invalid to pass such subsequently-acquired estates, the heir-at-law was put to his election between them and his interest under the will. Hance v. Truwhitt, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 289; 2 Jo. & H. 216.

(b) Mortgage and Trust Estates.

A devise by a testator of all his real and personal estate to his nephews and nieces, who were a numerous and unascertained class,—Held, not to pass estates vested in the testator in trust or on mortgage, but that such estate descended to his heir-at-law. In re the Trustee Act; in re Finney's Estate, 3 Giff. 465.

(c) Parcel or no Parcel.

M S executed a devise in these terms: "I give my mansion-house at Tedworth in the county of Hants, and all my manors, farms, lands, tenements and hereditaments in the county of Hants, devised to me by my late husband (subject to the annuities charged thereon by his will, and subject to a further annuity charged thereon by me), and all other hereditaments in the said county of Hants of or to which I shall be seised or entitled, or over which I shall have a disposing power at the time of my death (all which hereditaments in the county of Hants are hereinafter described or referred to as my Tedworth estate), to &c." By the devise of the husband of M S (referred to in the will) the annuities mentioned by his wife were charged upon "all his lands at or near Tedworth." In ejectment by the heir-at-law against the person claiming under this devise, it was found by the jury that there was one property comprising land in the counties both of Wilts and Hants, known as the Tedworth Estate, and enjoyed as one property by the husband of M S and by M S herself at the time of her death; that there was no artificial or physical boundary between the portions of the estate in Wilts and Hants, and that the manor-house passing under the devise was largely disproportioned to the Hants property (including certain additions made to it by the will). Evidence was also given to shew that there was but one manor in the county of Hants, although there were several in the county of Wilts. The will contained no residuary devise, though there was a residuary bequest:—Held, that the description limiting the lands devised to the county of Hants must operate as a true limitation, and could not be rejected as a false demonstration, and that lands in Wilts were excluded from the devise. That there was therefore an intestacy as to this last-named property, and the heir-at-law was entitled to recover it in ejectment from the devisee. Webber v. Stanley, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 217; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 698.

(C) Particular Limitations.

(a) Trust or Beneficial.

A testator devised and bequeathed his property as follows: "I give and bequeath all my property, real and personal, of whatever nature or kind, wheresoever to be found, in possession, reversion or expectancy, to which I am legally or equitably entitled, unto my dear wife, C E, absolutely, and to be by her willed to any or either of my children in any manner suitable to her wishes, to hold to her for ever, and I appoint her executrix of this my will, hereby revoking all other wills":—Held, that the wife took the property absolutely; but that a trust was engrafted on it for the benefit of the testator's children, who might survive her, with a power for her to appoint it among them by will, as she might think fit. Evans v. Evans, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 662.

The widow of the testator made a will, by which she devised part of his real estate to a son of his, in liquidation of a debt due to him from the testator; and she afterwards made an agreement with that son and another, agreeing that the latter should have the property on the terms of his paying the debt due to the former, and also stipulating for certain benefits for herself:—Held, that neither the will of the widow nor the agreement was an exercise of the power in the testator's will. Ibid.

(b Joint Tenancy or Tenancy in Common.

J O, by his will, gave all his real estate, charged with an annuity and bequests, to his three sons, J O, W O, and C O, "as tenants in common" in fee. J O, the son, gave his property to his two brothers, "absolutely for their uses, under the directions of the will of my late father." C O devised all his estates to J E W. When J O, the son, made his will, all the moneys charged on the estates by the will of J O had not been paid:—Held, on a special case submitted to the Court, in which W O was plaintiff and J E W was defendant, that the will of J O, the son, created a joint tenancy in the property to his father thereby devised, and that the plaintiff took the whole of his share. Oliver v. White, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 689.

A devise of real estate to trustees to pay the rents and profits to C for life, during widowhood, and after her decease or second marriage to pay the rents and profits to all and every the child and children of his late sister, until the youngest of them should have attained twenty-one, and when and so soon as the youngest should have attained twenty-one, then on trust to sell the real estate and to divide the moneys equally between and among the said children, share and share alike:—Held, that all the children were tenants in common until the youngest attained twenty-one. In re Grove's Trusts, 3 Giff. 575.

A devise to two persons, in terms importing a joint tenancy, is not changed into a tenancy in common by a subsequent gift over of the "estate" of one of them upon a certain contingency. Edwardes v. Jones, 33 Beav. 348.

A testator devised his real estate to his wife and his son D, and he then proceeded thus: "If my son D shall happen to die without issue living, my will is that all his estate is to be divided between all my children in equal shares;" and "if my wife will intermarry she is to enjoy none of my property":—Held, first, that the wife and D took as joint tenants; secondly, the wife having died in the life of the testator, and D having survived the testator and died a bachelor, that the whole estate was divisible between the testator's children, and that D's representatives took his share of it. Ibid.

(c) Fee Simple.

A testator devised freeholds to trustees to pay the rent to his five children "or their heirs":—Held, that the children took a fee. Adshead v. Willetts, 29 Beav. 358.

A testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to sell, if expedient, and invest in consols, and permit his wife, durante viduitate, to receive the rents and dividends, and from and after her decease or second marriage to divide "the residue of his estate and effects" between his children (without words of inheritance):—Held, that (subject to the wife's interest) the children took the real estate absolutely. Tatham v. Vernon, 29 Beav. 604.

A testator devised his Upton Park estate to his five daughters and his grandson, as tenants in common, for their respective lives, with remainders over. By a codicil he devised to his son A and his heirs "the like share he had given to his five daughters in the Upton Park property in every respect whatever":—Held, that A took one-seventh in fee. Bedborough v. Bedborough (No. 1), 34 Beav. 284.

A testator gave his real estate to trustees to permit his wife to receive the rents for life, with remainder for the separate use of his daughter, and after her decease for the sole use and benefit of all and every the children and issue of his daughter which she might happen to leave her surviving, to take as tenants in common, and their respective heirs and assigns for ever; and if but one such child, then upon trust for such only child, his or her heirs or assigns for ever. But if his daughter should happen to die without leaving such issue, or leaving such, all of them should die during their minority and without leaving lawful issue, then upon trust for such persons as his daughter should by deed or will appoint. And the testator bequeathed his personal estate in terms nearly identical with the devise of the real estate, except that in the gift over the language was "in case there shall be no child or issue of my said daughter." The daughter survived the widow and died, having had six children, two of whom only survived her; one child was unmarried, and the other had a son born before the death of the daughter:—Held, that all the children or issue of the daughter living at her death took per capita as tenants in common in fee simple as to the real estate and absolutely as to the personalty, the property being devisable equally in thirds between the two children and the grandchild. Cancellor v. Cancellor, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 17; 2 Dr. & S. 194.

(d) Defeasible Fee Simple.

A testator devised an estate to his daughter for life, and after her decease to her son or sons, daughter or daughters, to him, her, or them, or his, her, or their heirs for ever; but, should his daughter die without having such heir or heirs, then the estate to be sold within three months after her death and the produce divided amongst other persons. The daughter died without having had any issue:—Held, that the gift over was valid and took effect. Polley v. Polley, 29 Beav. 134.

(e) Estate Tail.

C by his will gave his estate to his grandson T C for life, with remainder to "the first son of the body of the said T C severally and successively in tail male" of the name of C; and for want of such lawful issue of that name, either by his said grandson T C or his son J C, then amongst his "daughters and their children" in fee:—Held, that estates tail were given to the first and other sons of T C, and that the gift over to the daughters and their children was a gift to a class, and that a child of a daughter who died before the date of the will was not within the gift. Parker v. Tootal, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 198; 11 H.L. Cas. 143.

Semble—That estates tail by implication were given to T C and J C after the estates tail of the sons of T C. Ibid.

A devise of real estate to be divided equally between my two sons, who shall enjoy the interest thereof, and then to go to their respective families according to seniority:—Held, that the two sons took as tenants in common in tail general. Lucas v. Goldsmid, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 935; 29 Beav. 657.

Devise to A for life remainder to the heirs of the body of A and his, her, and their heirs and assigns for ever, as tenants in common:—Held, an estate tail in A. Mills v. Seward, 1 Jo. & H. 733.

Devise to A for life, and from and after her decease, unto the heirs of her body, they to take the freehold and inheritance thereof as tenants in common, and in default of such heirs of the body of A unto the testatrix's own right heirs:—Held, that A took an estate tail. Anderson v. Anderson, 30 Beav. 209.

(f) Estate for Life.

The testator (by will made in 1809) after giving all "his lands, tenements, chattels, and premises whatsoever" to his wife during her life, gave and bequeathed at her death certain messuages "to his son W M, he paying to certain legatees the sum of 50*l.* each, out of the aforesaid premises." By another devise he "gave to his son J M certain other messuages at the decease of his wife." The residuary clause was as follows: "All the rest and residue of my estate of whatever nature, kind and quality soever the same may be and not herein disposed of, after payment of my debts, &c., first I give to my grandson the sum of 5*l.*, lastly I give and bequeath unto my four daughters equal share and share alike of the said residue and remainder and to be paid to them one year after the death of my wife:—Held, according to Right d. Compton v. Compton, that the devise to J M was not enlarged to a devise in fee by implication from the prior devise to W M (which was accompanied with a charge), and that J M took an estate for life only. Morris v. Lloyd, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 202; 3 Hurls. & C. 141.

Held, also, that the reversion in fee passed by the residuary devise, the words "to be paid, &c." being satisfied by being applicable to some part, if not to the whole, of the residue. Ibid.

E P, by her will, dated in 1789, devised to A and B and their heirs, certain real estate, to hold to them, their heirs and assigns, to the use of S L (her grandson) for life, with remainder to the use of A and B and their heirs during the life of S L to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the use of the children of S L, but if he should die without leaving such issue to the use of C D L (another grandson) for life, with remainder to the use of A and B and their heirs during the life of C D L to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the use of the children of C D L, but if he should die without leaving such issue to the use of her granddaughters, their heirs and assigns for ever, as tenants in common and not as joint tenants. The testatrix died in 1791, leaving her two grandsons, bachelors, surviving. Subsequently they both married, and died, both leaving children:—Held, that the children of S L took estates for life only; that no interests were effectually given to C D L or his children or to the granddaughters of the testatrix, and that, subject to the life estates to S L and his children, the inheritance devolved as under an intestacy to the heir-at-law of the testatrix. In re Pollard's Trusts, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 657.

The circumstance that the whole fee simple is (under a will made before 1838) devised to trustees, cannot be relied upon as a ground for enlarging a subsequent gift under the will to cestuis que trust in a case where the will contains an ulterior though contingent gift to other cestuis que trust of the whole beneficial fee. Ibid.

A testator who died in 1804 devised real estate to his daughter for life, with remainder to her sons successively in tail, with remainder to her daughters as tenants in common (without words of limitation), and in default of such issue to his son in fee:—Held that, contrary to the decision in Doe v. Taylor (10, Q.B. Rep. 718), the daughters took for life only. In re Arnold's Estate, 33 Beav. 163.

"Devise of my moiety of closes at L":—Held insufficient, prior to the last Wills Act, to pass the fee. Ibid.

(g) Vested or Contingent Estates.

Henry T devised real estate to K and others during the life of the testator's son Henry, in trust for him; and after his decease the testator devised the property to the heirs of the body of Henry, and in default of such issue to the testator's nephew Henry, for life, and after his decease to the testator's own right heirs of the name of Henry T, if any such there should then be, for ever:—Held, that the devise to the testator's right heirs of the name of Henry was a contingent remainder to the testator's heir-at-law if named Henry T, and that the testator's heir-at-law at the death of the second life estate not being named Henry, the contingent remainder failed, and the testator's heir-at-law was entitled to the property in preference to a Henry T who, although in the line of descent from the testator, was not his heir-at-law. Thorpe v. Thorpe, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 79; 1 Hurls. & C. 326.

Devise, after the death of the tenant for life, in trust to sell, and "pay and divide" the produce amongst all his children, to be paid as and when they respectively attained twenty-one, and in the mean time the interest to be applied in their maintenance, with a gift over in case the tenant for life died without leaving any child:—Held, that the interests of children vested at their births. Shrimpton v. Shrimpton, 31 Beav. 425.

In a gift over on the death of A before the estate became vested in him, the word "vested" held to mean vested in interest, and not vested in possession. In re Arnold's Estate, 33 Beav. 163.

(h) Clause of Forfeiture.

A testator devised certain estates to trustees upon trust to pay the rents, &c. to A and B, his wife, for their lives, and after their decease to settle and assure the said estates to the use of all and every the son and sons of A and B successively, for their respective lives, with immediate remainders after the decease of each and every such son to the use of his first and other sons successively in tail male, with remainders over, with an ultimate remainder to his own right heirs. The will contained a proviso that if the said A and B or any of their children who might be entitled to the estates should reside in foreign parts for more than six months while in enjoyment of the rents and profits of the estates, or if any son or remoter issue of the said A and B should fail (as therein mentioned) to profess the Protestant religion, "then the devises in favour of the said A and B and their sons and remoter issue should cease and be absolutely void, so far as concerned the rights and interests of the party making default, but not further or otherwise." A tenant in tail male having come into possession, and both resided abroad and failed to profess the Protestant religion,—Held, first, that upon the true construction of the proviso the testator had not shewn an intention that the whole estate tail should determine, but that only the individual interest of the tenant in tail should cease, and yet the estate tail with all the remainders limited thereon continue for the benefit of those to whom the testator intended the property to devolve after the death of the tenant in tail; and, secondly, that this intention of the testator was one which could not legally be effected, and, consequently, that the proviso was inoperative. As to the operation of the proviso upon the ulterior remainders, assuming it to have amounted to a declaration that the whole estate tail should determine—quære. Seymour v. Vernon, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 690.

(i) Shifting Clause.

A shifting clause will be construed strictly. Walmesley v. Gerard, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) 435; 29 Beav. 311.

Where a large estate was devised to J G who had acquired a smaller estate from his father by descent, and not in the manner specified, upon which it was to be conveyed to shifting uses in favour of his brothers and their issue,—Held, that J G, on taking the larger estate, might also retain the smaller without forfeiting his claim to the larger estate, though the smaller was specifically referred to in the will. Ibid.

If a person to whom an estate is devised executes deeds, under an impression that a shifting clause in the will required him to convey a smaller estate to specific uses, effect will be given to them, though the terms of the shifting clause do not apply to the estate conveyed, and though the grantor might have retained the smaller estate without forfeiting the larger; but it will not be assumed that he intended to part with more than he supposed himself compellable to convey. The ultimate use, therefore, on failure of the limitations referred to in the shifting clause, will result to the grantor and his heirs, and not to the devisor of the larger estate and his heirs. Ibid.

If deeds are executed in general terms, they will be considered to include all the limitations, powers and provisos to which the shifting clause makes the estate liable. Ibid.

Shifting limitations in favour of nephews will not be implied in favour of nieces, if no mention is made of nieces in the shifting clause. Ibid.

If members of a family take the benefit of a shifting clause, those taking the larger estates cease immediately to have any estate, right or interest in the smaller estates; and any deeds which the former possessory owner may execute with reference to the smaller estates cannot affect the uses in or the devolution of the smaller estates. Ibid.

Limitations and conditions affecting estates transferred by a shifting clause follow each estate as it shifts. Ibid.

A B, who was tenant for life, with remainder to his issue in tail, forfeited his estate before he had any issue:—Held, upon the intention apparent on an executory instrument, that the next remainderman became entitled to the rents. D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 34 Beav. 36.

A will directed a settlement to be made of the G estate, which should contain a shifting clause, providing that if any person taking the G estate should not re-settle the De Ligne estate (acquired through another title) to like uses, the G estate should go to such uses as if the limitation in his favour had not been inserted. It also directed the insertion of a name and arms shifting clause in a very different form. A B, a tenant for life, with remainder to his children in tail, refused to re-settle the De Ligne estate, and he had no issue:—Held, thereupon, that the next remainderman was entitled to the rents of the G estate until A B died or had issue. Ibid.

Construction of a shifting clause. Lord Kenlis v. Earl of Bective, 34 Beav. 587.

A testator directed two estates to be purchased (A and B). The estate A was to be settled on the sons of his daughter (except Lord K the eldest) and their issue, and in default on K for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainder to his issue in tail general, with remainders over to daughters of the daughter. Estate B was to be settled on Lord K for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and afterwards to the same uses as the estate A. There was a shifting clause determining the estate of Lord K and his first and other sons in estate B, in case he or his issue male became entitled to estate A. K having become entitled to estate A, it was held that his first life estate alone in estate B had ceased, but that his second life estate therein, expectant on the failure of younger sons of the daughters, was still subsisting. Ibid.

(D) CHARGES.

A testator, by his will, dated in June 1855, directed that "all his debts should be paid by his executors out of his estate":—Held, reversing the decision of Stuart, V.C., that such direction did not exonerate a mortgaged estate, devised by the will, from the payment of the mortgage debt. Woolstencroft v. Woolstencroft, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 22.

Devisees of a real estate, which had been mortgaged by the testator, held entitled to have the mortgage paid out of the other real and the personal estate devised for payment of debts, notwithstanding Locke King's Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113). Newman v. Wilson, 31 Beav. 33.

A B mortgaged freeholds and leaseholds together, and died intestate in 1857:—Held (as between the heir and administrator), that the freeholds and leaseholds must bear the burden rateably. Evans v. Wyatt, 31 Beav. 217.

A direction to pay debts out of personal estate is not a sufficient expression of intention within the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, to exonerate a real estate from a mortgage to which it had been made liable. Rowson v. Harrison, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 818; 31 Beav. 207.

A bequest of personalty "subject to the payment thereout of all the testator's just debts" is a sufficient indication of intention to make the personal estate the primary fund for the payment of mortgage debts, under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. Mellish v. Vallins, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 592; 2 Jo. & H. 194.

A testatrix devised two farms to trustees, to sell and apply the money for specific purposes. These farms were subject to a mortgage for 1,600*l*. The residue of her real and personal estate she devised to her two sons, and directed that the mortgages, debts and incumbrances charged thereon should be borne by the premises specifically affected. She then directed that all her debts, funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid out of her residuary real and personal estate, and she charged the same thereon accordingly. Upon a bill by the parties interested in the purchase-moneys to arise from the two farms,—Held, that the general direction to pay all debts included mortgage debts, and that the two farms were devised free from the mortgage thereon. Allen v. Allen, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 442; 30 Beav. 395.

A testator, by will dated in 1859, directed that his executors should, by and out of the moneys to arise from the sale, calling in and conversion into money of his personal estate and effects, pay his debts:—Held, that such direction exonerated a mortgaged estate, devised by the testator to one of the executors, from the payment of the mortgage debt, the testator's personal estate being sufficient for the payment of all his debts, including the mortgage debt. Smith v. Smith, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 91; 3 Giff. 263.

A bequest, contained in a will dated in 1857, of all a testator's personal estate "subject to the payment of his debts," renders such personal estate primarily liable for the payment of a sum of money, with which the testator had charged it by way of mortgage; notwithstanding the statute 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. (commonly called "Locke King's Act,") which makes the mortgaged lands primarily liable to bear mortgage debts; the direction to pay debts out of a particular fund amounting to a sufficient indication of a "contrary or other intention" within the meaning of the act. Eno v. Tatam, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 311; 4 Giff. 181.

Dictum of Lord Campbell in Woolstencroft v. Woolstencroft (2 De Gex, F. & J. 350; 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 22) explained by Turner, L.J. Ibid.

A will executed before the 1st of January 1855, is a will already made within the meaning of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, notwithstanding it does not come into operation by the death of the testator till after that day. Nor will a mere republication by codicil, giving no new operation to the material dispositions in the will, deprive it of the character of a will already made. Therefore, where a testator, by his will dated before the 1st of January, 1855, devised real estate (which was then subject to certain mortgages) to T P in fee, and after that day made a codicil which did not affect or refer to the devise, it was held that the devisee was entitled to have the devised estate exonerated out of the personalty. Rolfe v. Perry, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 471.

A testator gave his residuary personal estate to trustees, upon trust to sell and convert the same into money, and thereout, in the first place, pay all his "just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses," and, after full payment and satisfaction thereof, to hold the residue upon certain trusts therein mentioned:—Held, reversing a decision of the Master of the Rolls, that this was a sufficient expression of "a contrary or other intention" under Locke King's Act, to make the personal estate primarily liable for the testator's mortgage debts. Moore v. Moore, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 605; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 602.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. (Locke King's Act) does not apply to leaseholds. Solomon v. Solomon, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 473.

A testator devised his real estate to trustees, upon trust, in the first place, out of the rents, issues and profits, to pay life annuities, "and, subject to the trusts aforesaid," to pay the residue of the rents, issues and profits to his four grandsons for life, and, as any of them died, he devised his one-fourth of the real estates to their children in tail:—Held, that the annuities were not charged on the corpus of the estate. Sheppard v. Sheppard, 32 Beav. 194.

The only remaining assets of a testator consisted of a devised real estate, which was liable to his bond for securing an annuity. Before the annuity had fallen in arrear, the annuitant instituted a suit for administration, and for an injunction and receiver. The Court merely declared the plaintiff's annuity a charge on the real estate, but ordered the plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs of suit. Norman v. Johnson, 29 Beav. 77.

Life annuities bequeathed by will, to be issuing and payable out of leaseholds and personalty, with power to recover them when in arrear by distress or sale, in like manner as rack-rents are recovered by law:—Held, to be charged on the income and not on the corpus. Addecott v. Addecott, 29 Beav. 460.

Land devised, subject to a charge which is undisposed of, goes to the devisee free from the charge. Heptinstall v. Gott, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 776; 2 Jo. & H. 449.

A testator devised his own estates in trust to pay the mortgages on his estate, "as well settled and unsettled." Part of the settled estates consisted of leaseholds, in which the testator had a life interest only, but after the date of the will, the fee of it was conveyed to him, he having purchased the reversion. Immediately after this he and his eldest son mortgaged it for the purchase-money, with a power of sale, and the equity of redemption was limited to them jointly, and the surplus produce of the sale was reserved to them according to their respective rights and interests therein:—Held, that this mortgage was payable out of the testator's own estate under the trusts of the will. Lord Hastings v. Astley, 30 Beav. 260.

(E) VOID DEVISE.

(a) Trust for Accumulation.

A testator, by will dated before 1838, devised real estates to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to accumulate the rents and profits for a longer period than that permitted by the Thellusson Act, and divide them among certain persons. The will contained a clause disposing of "all the rest, residue, and remainder" of the testator's estate and effects to other persons:—Held, that although the direction to accumulate, so far as it exceeded the limit prescribed by the Thellusson Act, was void ab initio, yet, having regard to the construction put upon residuary devises under the old law, the testator had shewn an intention not to give the void accumulations to the residuary devisee, and that the heir-at-law was entitled thereto. Smith v. Lomas, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 578.

(b) Remoteness.

A testator devised an estate to his son for life, and, after his decease, to and amongst all and every the child or children of his said son, for and during the term of his, her, or their lives, in equal shares if more than one; and after the decease of any or either of such child or children, he further gave and devised the share of him, her or them so dying of and in the said estate unto his, her or their child or children, if more than one, lawfully to be begotten, and to his, her or their heirs for ever, as tenants in common:—Held, that the devise was good as to the children of such children of the son as were living at the death of the testator; since the gift to them must take effect, if at all, within the limits allowed by law; and the share of each child and its children was ascertainable within the legal period; and the gift of each share was in effect a separate and independent gift, and unaffected by any remoteness of limitation existing in respect to the other shares. Knapping v. Tomlinson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 2.

Cattlin v. Brown (11 Hare, 372) followed. Ibid.

Arnold v. Congreve (1 Russ. & M. 209) treated as overruled. Ibid.

A testator bequeathed five leasehold houses, having about fifty-four years to run, to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children. And after the expiration of any of the leases, he directed his trustees to convey to his daughter and her children one or more of his five freehold houses of equal annual value, or as near as could be to the expired leasehold:—Held, that the devise was neither invalid for remoteness or uncertainty. Wood v. Drew, 33 Beav. 610.

A testator, who died in 1811, was entitled to the reversion of an estate expectant on the death of his son, without issue living at his death. By his will, after reciting that he was entitled to a reversion on the death of his son without issue generally, he devised it to trustees to sell upon the death of his son without issue generally, and divide the produce:—Held, that the trust was not void for remoteness. Lewis v. Templer, 33 Beav. 625.

(c) Secret Trust for Charity.

A devise of land to A B, upon the face of the will for his own benefit, but really upon a secret trust assented to by him for a charity, vests the legal estate in A B subject only to a resulting trust for the testator's real representative. Therefore, where a testator devised his residuary real estate to trustees upon a secret agreed trust for a charity, and his heir-at-law was not known,—Held, as between the Crown and persons claiming under the surviving trustee, that the legal estate was well devised, and that the former could therefore establish no claim by escheat. Sweeting v. Sweeting, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 211.

In the case mentioned the Court considered itself bound by the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42. to decide the question as to the legal effect of the devise, and accordingly made a declaration as to the legal right, dismissed the Attorney General from the suit, and directed inquiries as to the heir. Ibid.

(F) REVOCATION.

A specific devise is revoked by a subsequent contract to sell at the option of the purchaser, though the option be not exercised until after the testator's death. Weeding v. Weeding, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 680; 1 Jo. & H. 424.

DISENTAILING ASSURANCE.

[See FINE AND RECOVERY.]

An estate stood limited subject to a life estate to five persons as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders between them in tail. One of these five persons, a married woman, concurred with her husband in a deed mortgaging her fifth share and all other the share and interest to which she might become entitled by the death of any of the other tenants in tail without issue, and the deed contained a covenant to levy a fine of the property expressed to be conveyed by the deed. A fine was levied purporting to extend only to the fifth share. Afterwards one of the other tenants in tail died without issue, and without having barred his estate tail:—Held, that there was an error in the fine which was caused by 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 74. s. 7, and that the fine was effectual as to one-fourth, and not as to one-fifth only. Life Assoc. of Scotland v. Siddal, 3 De Gex, F. & J. 58.

An assurance executed for disentailing copyholds, to have any operation under the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 74, must be entered on the rolls of the manor within six calendar months after the execution thereof, by analogy to the time when required for the enrolment in the Court of Chancery of similar assurances affecting freeholds. Honywood v. Forster, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 930; 30 Beav. 1.

An equitable tenant in tail of copyholds executed a disentailing deed, intending to bar his entail in divers copyhold estates. By his will he gave an annuity to the tenant in tail in remainder, and supposing the deed to have barred the entail, he devised both the freehold and copyhold estates, which lay intermingled, and could not be distinguished, to other persons. It was afterwards ascertained that the deed was informal, and that it did not bar the entail. Upon a bill by the tenant in tail in remainder,—Held, that the apparent intention of the testator was to dispose of the copyholds away from the tenant in tail in remainder, and that he must elect which he would take, the copyholds or the annuity. Ibid.

A disentailing assurance under the Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries of an equitable estate in copyholds must be entered upon the rolls of the manor court within six months after its execution. Gibbons v. Snape, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 103; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 621; 32 Beav. 130.

An account of the rents was directed at the suit of the issue in tail for six years previous to the filing of the bill. Ibid.

The entail of lands to be purchased with rents hereafter to become due to trustees may be barred under the statute 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 74. s. 71. Fordham v. Fordham, 34 Beav. 59.

DISORDERLY HOUSE.

[See MUSIC AND DANCING—REFRESHMENT HOUSE.]

If a weekly tenant of a house use it as a brothel, and the landlord receive no additional rent by reason of the immoral occupation, the latter cannot be convicted of keeping a brothel merely because, having notice of the nature of the occupation, he does not give the tenant notice to quit. R. v. Barrett, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 36; 1 L. & C. 263.

The prisoner, being the owner of a house, let out the different apartments in it separately to young women, who, to his knowledge and with his consent, used them for the purposes of prostitution. They were merely weekly tenants. The prisoner, when he let the rooms, knew of the purposes to which they would apply them, and fully assented thereto, but he received no share of the earnings of the women. He did not live in the house, and he only went there to collect his weekly rents. He had no other control over the tenants than arose from his power as landlord to determine the tenancies:—Held, that he could not be indicted for keeping a disorderly house. R. v. Stannard, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 61; 1 L. & C. 349.

DISTRINGAS UPON STOCK.

A writ of distringas was obtained to restrain the transfer of a particular sum of stock, upon the usual affidavit that the applicant was interested in the money. The writ was then served upon the Bank of England, with a notice not to permit the transfer of a totally different sum of money standing in a different name, this proceeding being rendered possible by the peculiar practice of the Bank. Writ discharged, with costs. In re Cross, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 255; 1 Dr. & S. 580.

DISTRESS.

(A) WHAT MAY BE DISTRAINED.

A, the owner of certain lace-machines, paid 12*s.* a week to B for permission to place the machines in a room in B's factory, and for free ingress and egress to the room for himself and workmen for the purpose of working and inspecting the machines. B supplied the necessary steam-power for working the machines, payment for which was included in the above sum:—Held, that there was no demise to A of any part of the room, and that the weekly payments could not be distrained for as rent. Handcock v. Austin, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 252; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 634.

Goods in the possession of a pawnbroker as security for money advanced cannot be distrained for rent; and in an action by the pawnbroker to recover goods distrained under such circumstances, the pawnbroker is entitled to recover the full value of the goods. Swire v. Leach, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 150; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 479.

Rails and other chattels by the terms of the contract, when placed on the land, became the absolute property of the company, the contractor having no property therein, except the right of using them on the land for the purpose of the works, and on completion of the line, a condition precedent, the plant was to be given to the contractor as part consideration, or if used by the company to be paid for:—Held, not liable to be taken in execution for the company's debts. Beeston v. Marriott, 4 Giff. 436.

(B) WHEN WRONGFUL.

An entry for the purpose of making a distress through a window fastened by a hasp is unlawful. Handcock v. Austin, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 252; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 634.

There is no illegality in distraining for rent by climbing over a fence, and so gaining access to the house by an open door. Eldridge v. Stacey, 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 458.

The broker having been forcibly expelled, regained possession by force after an interval of three weeks:—Held, that he was justified in so doing; and that it was a question for the jury whether by staying out so long he had abandoned the distress. Ibid.

(C) IRREGULAR SALE.

Goods belonging to the defendant having been distrained for rent on a third person's premises, they were duly appraised, and the landlord, instead of actually selling, took them at the condemned price in satisfaction of the rent and costs, and then handed them as a gift to the plaintiff, upon which the defendant took possession of them:—Held, that there was no sale so as to divest the defendant of the property in the goods, and he had therefore a right to take them. King v. England, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 145; 4 Best & S. 782.

(D) TENDER OF AMENDS.

Detinue will not lie for goods impounded damage feasant where tender of amends has been made after the impounding. Singleton v. Williamson, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 287; 7 Hurls. & N. 747.

(E) ABUSE OF, BY WORKING.

If a distrainor abuses a distress by working it, the owner may interfere and prevent it, and no action can be maintained against him for pound breach or rescue. Smith v. Wright, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 313; 6 Hurls. & N. 821.

(A) JURISDICTION.

[See PROHIBITION, Foster v. Foster.]

The Court has jurisdiction to dissolve a marriage solemnized between foreigners in a foreign country, on the ground of the adultery of the wife committed abroad, if the husband at the time the adultery is committed, and at the time the petition is presented, is bona fide and permanently resident in England; although, for the purpose of succession, he may not have acquired an English domicil. Brodie v. Brodie, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 185; 2 Swab. & T. 259.

A Scotch divorce is inoperative on the marriage of a domiciled Englishman. Tollemache v. Tollemache, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 113.

A a domiciled Englishman married in 1837, at Gretna Green, B a Scotchwoman, and afterwards cohabited with her, without abandoning his English domicil. In 1841 B committed adultery in Scotland with C. In the same year, on the ground of that adultery, A obtained a divorce in the Court of Session in Scotland. C then married B, and died in 1855, having by her had issue. In 1854, A having been advised by counsel that the Scotch divorce was inoperative in England, he presented a petition to the House of Lords for a bill to declare his marriage void from the date of the Scotch divorce. This petition was rejected, and on the passing of the Divorce Act, A instituted a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the adultery in 1841:—Held, 1, that the Scotch sentence of divorce being inoperative, the Court had jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage. 2, That A under the circumstances had not been guilty of unreasonable delay in presenting his petition, within the meaning of section 31. of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. Ibid.

A, an Irishman by birth, resided at the Cape of Good Hope from 1842 till 1862. During the earlier part of this period he served in an English regiment stationed at the Cape, during the latter in the Cape Mounted Rifles. In 1850 he married B at the Cape, and in 1852 this marriage was dissolved by a sentence of the Colonial Court on the ground of B's adultery. In 1852 he married C in the lifetime of B, and in 1863 he died intestate. An application by C for administration to A as his widow was opposed on the ground that A was a domiciled Englishman at the date of his first marriage, and therefore that the sentence of divorce pronounced by the Colonial Court was inoperative:—Held, that as upon the evidence there was no proof that A was a domiciled Englishman, or that his domicil was not at the Cape, the sentence of divorce must be treated as valid. Argent v. Argent, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 133; 4 Swab. & T. 52.

Quære—Whether if A had been a domiciled Englishman the divorce would have been invalid in England. Ibid.

The Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes has, under section 3. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, jurisdiction to vary a decree of the Ecclesiastical Courts, allotting permanent alimony. Harmar v. Harmar, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 118.

Where a husband was domiciled in Ireland, and had only a temporary abode in England at the date of filing the petition, and the wife appeared and submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court, the full Court dissolved their marriage, which had been celebrated in Ireland, on the ground of adultery committed by the wife in England and on the Continent. Callwell v. Callwell, 3 Swab. & T. 259.

The Court is not at liberty to recognize an agreement made between the counsel of the petitioner and co-respondent in respect of the amount of damages to be paid, but is bound by the assessment of the jury. Ibid.

A respondent in a suit for dissolution of marriage having entered an absolute appearance, cannot afterwards plead to the jurisdiction of the Court, nor can she raise such objection by act on petition. Forster v. Forster, 3 Swab. & T. 144.

If a respondent intends to plead to the jurisdiction of the Court, she should appear under protest.—Semble, however, that at the hearing she may, notwithstanding, object to the jurisdiction. Ibid.

(B) Legitimacy (Declaration Act).

In a petition under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, the citation of parties, between whom and the petitioner there already exists a judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction upon the subject now in suit, does not afford ground for a plea of res judicata. The Attorney General is by the act a necessary respondent; the Court is bound therefore to decide the personal question of status as between the Crown and the petitioner. The intention of the 10th section is not to prevent the Court pronouncing a decree which may militate against former judgments, but to protect former judgments against its operation. Shedden v. Her Majesty's Attorney General, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 217; 2 Swab. & T. 170.

Evidence by a witness of reputation of marriage is admissible so long as it appears to be of a general reputation; so soon as it appears, however, upon cross-examination or otherwise, that the witness is speaking from information given to him by some individual, even of the existence of a general reputation, such evidence is merely hearsay, and, as such, inadmissible. Ibid.

The admissibility of declarations by members of the family terminates with the commencement of the controversy, and the termination of this admissibility is not affected by any knowledge or ignorance on the part of the declarant of the existence of that controversy; nor is it affected by its being shewn that such proceedings were fraudulently commenced with a view to exclude the possibility of any such declaration. Ibid.

The giving in evidence by the one side, without objection raised by the other, a copy-letter from a letter-book, does not waive the right of the party so giving it from objecting to the other side putting in a letter between the same parties from the same book. Ibid.

The commencement of the controversy, and not of the institution from which it springs, is the commencement of the lis mota, and terminates the admissibility of family declarations. A declaration made expressly with a view to a probable future contest is admissible quantum valeat. Not so, however, when made in a prior cause on the same subject-matter. A prior cause carried on between the same parties will not be a lis so as to exclude declarations, unless the very point subsequently in dispute upon which it is sought to bring such declaration to bar was then in litigation. Ibid.

(C) Jactitation of Marriage.

A suit of jactitation of marriage can only be instituted by one of the parties to the pretended marriage. In re Campbell v. Corley, ex parte Campbell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 60.

(D) Nullity of Marriage.

[See post, (b) (1) Wing v. Taylor.]

(1) Fraudulent Misnomer.

A marriage by banns, where the publication of banns was in the name of "John" instead of "Bower," the christian name of the man, both parties being at the time of the solemnization of the marriage aware of such misdescription, was pronounced null. Midgley v. Wood, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 57.

The woman having consented to such publication on the faith of the statement of the man that the marriage would not thereby be invalidated, the Court condemned him in the costs of the suit of nullity instituted by her. Ibid.

Quære—Whether, when the ground of a suit of nullity is such that either party might have instituted it, the respondent may plead matter tending to sustain the suit, and cross-examine the petitioner's witnesses, and adduce affirmative evidence in support of this plea. Ibid.

Quære also—Whether in such a suit a respondent, who by his answer admits the allegations of the petitioner, may, on the petition being dismissed at the hearing, institute a fresh suit on the same ground. Ibid.

Semble—That it is collusion for both parties to a suit, instituted on grounds which would entitle the petitioner only to sue, to concur in getting up evidence in support of the petition, though the evidence be true. Ibid.

Quære—Whether it would be so if either party might have instituted a suit on the same grounds. Ibid.

A partial departure from the true name of one of the parties to a marriage, in a licence obtained in the altered name by the other party, for the purpose of concealing the intended marriage, is no cause of nullity, if the altered name may represent the person, and if such licence was obtained for, and by the direction of, that person. Bevan v. M'Mahon, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 61; 2 Swab. & T. 230.

Aliter in the case of a marriage by banns after a publication in such an altered name under similar circumstances. Ibid.

A marriage was solemnized by virtue of a licence, in which the name of the woman was stated to be "Margaret Bevan," her baptismal name, and that by which she was commonly called, being "Margaret Lea Bevan." The licence was obtained in the altered name by the man, who, knowingly, and by the direction of the woman, suppressed the name "Lea," in order that the surrogate might not know who the woman was, and that the intended marriage might be kept secret from her friends:—Held, in a suit of nullity of marriage instituted by the woman on the ground of misnomer in the licence, that as the name "Margaret Bevan" might represent her, and the licence was obtained for her, and by her direction, the marriage was not void as having been solemnized without licence. Ibid.

(2) Marriage after Decree of Divorce and before Time for Appeal had elapsed.

After a decree of dissolution of marriage on the ground of the adultery of the wife had been pronounced, but before the time allowed for appealing against the decree had elapsed, the wife married again:—Held, that such marriage was void. Chichester v. Mure, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 146; 3 Swab. & T. 223.

On the 1st of June, 1860, a final decree of dissolution of marriage was pronounced; parliament was prorogued on the 28th of August, 1860, and on the 20th of November, 1860, when parliament was not sitting, the respondent married again:—Held, that the marriage was void. Rogers v. Halmshaw, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 141; 3 Swab & T. 141.

(1) Affinity.

By the law of England affinity is not created by sexual intercourse without marriage. Wing v. Taylor, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 258; 2 Swab. & T. 278.

The illicit intercourse of the man with his wife's mother prior to the marriage does not render the marriage void, as being within the prohibited degrees of affinity. Ibid.

Prima facie the vestry is part of the church. A petition for sentence of nullity, on the ground that a marriage was solemnized in the vestry which does not aver that the vestry formed no part of the church, is insufficient. Ibid.

The 4 Geo. 4. c. 76. s. 28, which requires that two witnesses should be present at a marriage, and should sign the register, is merely directory; and the non-compliance with its directions is no ground for annulling the marriage. Ibid.

(2) Impotence.

(i) Generally.

In a suit of nullity of marriage by a woman on the ground of impotence, the Court not being satisfied with the evidence at the hearing suspended its decree; but afterwards, on motion, pronounced the marriage null upon affidavits that, since the hearing, the parties had renewed cohabitation for some weeks, and that the marriage had not been consummated. M—— v. H——, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 12; 3 Swab. & T. 592.

After a cohabitation of fourteen years a woman presented a petition for a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of the man's impotence. The report of the inspectors and the medical evidence shewed that the woman was virgo intacta et apta viro, and that there was no apparent defect or malformation in the man. The Court was satisfied that the marriage had never been completely consummated, but was not satisfied that the non-consummation arose from the incapacity of the man, and it therefore dismissed the petition. X—— v. Y——, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 81.

Any evidence is admissible in a suit for nullity which tends to throw light on the case set up by the petitioner or the respondent; evidence is therefore admissible as to disputes between the petitioner and the respondent during their cohabitation, although the only issues raised by the pleadings are the respondent's impotence and the consummation of the marriage. Ibid.

The woman cohabited with her husband from their marriage, in November, 1848, till July, 1862; she then occupied a separate bed for two or three weeks, and left his house in August, 1862, after disputes about other matters, and did not return to it. In May, 1864, she filed her petition for nullity, by reason of his impotence; he traversed this, and alleged consummation. The report of the inspectors pronounced her to be a virgin and apt, and stated that the man had no apparent imperfection. At the hearing the petitioner and respondent both gave evidence, and medical men, besides the inspectors, gave evidence on both sides. In the result the Court held, that the petitioner had failed to prove that the marriage had remained unconsummated by reason of the impotence of the man, and dismissed him from the suit. L—— v. H——, 4 Swab. & T. 115.

(ii) Permanent or curable.

A congenital malformation, rendering consummation impossible, though curable by a surgical operation, is a ground of nullity, if such operation would be attended with great danger to life. Such a malformation may be considered incurable. W—— v. H——, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 73; 2 Swab. & T. 240.

It is not a condition precedent to the right of the petitioner to a decree, under such circumstances, that he should call upon the respondent to submit to an operation. Ibid.

Evidence is admissible in such a case to explain or vary the report of the inspectors. Ibid.

The circumstance that at the time of the marriage the petitioner, the man, was aged fifty-four, and the respondent forty-nine, is no bar to such a suit. Ibid.

Quære—Whether there is any limit of age at which the right to a decree of nullity on such a ground ceases. Ibid.

Incapacity to consummate a marriage is no ground for a decree of nullity, unless the incapacity be permanent. If there is a possibility that its cause may be cured, the Court will not pronounce a sentence of nullity, although such cure may be highly improbable. Stagg v. Edgecombe, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 153.

Quære—Whether in a case in which there is incurable impotence a decree of nullity will be pronounced where there has been only cohabitation for three months. Semble—That in a suit by the woman for nullity of marriage on the ground of impotence, there must be a report by sworn medical inspectors as to the state of the woman. Semble, also, that when the Court rejects a petition for a decree of nullity, it will not decree a monition that the petitioner do return to cohabitation, unless such process is prayed by the respondent. Ibid.

S, a woman, married E on the 22nd of July, and lived with him till the 23rd of September. She petitioned for a decree of nullity by reason of his inability to consummate the marriage. He did not appear. The report of medical inspectors negatived any apparent and incurable defect on his part, but ascribed the non-consummation to incapacity caused by a long-continued habit of self-abuse, which (as further explained by their viva voce evidence) they considered might possibly, but not probably, be cured; the question being one of moral restraint. There was no report of inspectors as to the condition of the woman, and their viva voce evidence was equivocal as to proof of non-consummation from examination of her person. The Court refused to make the decree. S—— v. E——, 3 Swab. & T. 240.

Semble—The Court would not, at all events, make such a decree without a report from sworn medical inspectors as to the condition of the woman. Ibid.

(iii) Triennial Cohabitation.

In a suit of nullity of marriage on the ground of the impotence of the husband, if the marriage has not been consummated, and there is no visible defect in either party, impotence will not be presumed merely from ineffectual cohabitation, unless such cohabitation has lasted for three years. Cohabitation for two years and ten months is not sufficient. M—— v. H——, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 159; 3 Swab. & T. 517.

The presumption of impotence arising from ineffectual cohabitation may be rebutted by proof that the non-consummation of the marriage is due to another cause. Ibid.

A woman petitioned for a decree of nullity on the ground of the man's impotency, after a cohabitation of seventeen months. The respondent did not appear, and refused to submit to inspection. The medical inspectors certified with respect to the petitioner, that there were no certain signs of virginity, and that the physical appearances were consistent with the marriage having been consummated or not. The Court being satisfied by the petitioner's evidence that the marriage had never been consummated, that the non-consummation was owing to the impotency of the respondent, and that the physical appearances of the petitioner were to be accounted for otherwise than by consummation, granted a decree of nullity. D—— v. F——, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 66; nom. F——, falsely called D—— v. D——, 4 Swab. & T. 86.

The rule as to triennial cohabitation only applies when the impotency is left to be presumed from continual non-consummation, and not when it is plainly proved aliunde. Ibid.

(iv) Inspection.

In a suit of nullity of marriage on the ground of malformation, the petitioner on moving for the appointment of inspectors should also move for an order that the respondent submit to inspection. Semble—When the respondent appears the Court will allow each of the parties to nominate one of the inspectors, and when he does not appear it will allow the petitioner, in default of the respondent nominating one, to select both. S—— v. E——, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 164.

Where in answer to a suit by a husband for restitution of conjugal rights, the wife pleads the impotence of the husband, the Court will, upon the application of the respondent, appoint medical inspectors to examine her. It is convenient that the same medical inspectors should examine both parties. C—— v. C——, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 31.

In a suit of nullity of marriage on the ground of physical incapacity, each party has a right to nominate two medical inspectors to examine him or her. It is not necessary that both parties should be examined by the same inspectors. In a suit of nullity by a woman, the Court, with the consent of the respondent, allowed the petitioner's evidence to be given on affidavit. B—— v. C——, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 135.

(c) Lapse of Time.

A married B in 1834. In October, 1838, she left him, alleging that he was impotent, and that he himself had in many conversations admitted the fact. In November, 1838, and from that time till 1854, she had tried to effect a reconciliation, maintaining herself all this time by her own means. Suits were then instituted against her husband for her debts; he then made her an allowance, which he continued till October, 1858, when he proposed to reduce it on account of his altered circumstances. In November, 1858, this suit was instituted:—Held, that though delay was not an absolute bar to such a suit, it was a reason for requiring the strictest evidence of the complaint; and the Lords, agreeing with the Court below that such evidence had not been given, affirmed the decree of that Court by which the suit had been dismissed. H—— v. C—— (House of Lords), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 103.

Where a husband, who was the petitioner in a suit for nullity on the ground of his wife's malformation, had not instituted the suit until upwards of eleven years after the marriage, the Court required him to give an explanation of the delay before making a decree. E—— v. T——, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 37; 3 Swab. & T. 312.

Lapse of time, coupled with an indirect motive for bringing the suit, is an absolute bar to a suit for a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of impotence. M—— v. B——, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 203; 3 Swab. & T. 550.

(d) Confrontation.

Decree of confrontation granted in a suit for nullity of marriage. Enticknap v. Rice, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 110; 4 Swab. & T. 136.

(E) Dissolution of Marriage.

(a) When the Suit is maintainable.

(1) Adultery coupled with Cruelty [See (H) Cruelty].

(2) Adultery coupled with Desertion [See (I) Desertion].

(b) When not maintainable.

(1) Agreement made in former Suit.

Petition for dissolution of marriage dismissed on the ground that it was presented in violation of an agreement made in a former suit by which the petitioner had surrendered any right to relief in respect of misconduct alleged to have been committed prior to the institution of that suit. Rowley v. Rowley, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 97; 4 Swab. & T. 187.

(2) Discretionary Bar.

Where the petitioner has been guilty of adultery or cruelty, &c. the Court may, in the exercise of the discretionary power vested in it by the 31st section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, refuse to decree a dissolution of the marriage, although such adultery, cruelty, &c. may have been condoned. Goode v. Goode, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 105; 2 Swab. & T. 253.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of the wife's adultery, the respondent did not appear. The co-respondent denied the adultery, and that issue was found by a jury in favour of the petitioner. The evidence upon which the verdict was founded being unsatisfactory, the Judge Ordinary declined to make a decree upon it against the respondent. Dolby v. Dolby, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 110; 2 Swab. & T. 228.

A ward in Chancery who had no means of his own, at the age of sixteen, married clandestinely a prostitute of about the age of thirty-five. By an order of the Master of the Rolls made a month after the marriage, it was ordered that the husband should be delivered into the custody of his guardian, with liberty for the guardian to send him abroad, and that the wife should be restrained from holding any communication with him. In pursuance of this order, he was sent abroad against his will. The wife being left without means of support, she applied to her husband's guardian for money, but it was refused. For some months after the marriage she conducted herself properly, and then relapsed into her former course of life. In a suit by the husband for dissolution of marriage,—Held, that as the separation was, on the husband's part, involuntary, and he had no means wherewith to contribute to his wife's support, he had not wilfully separated himself from her nor been guilty of such neglect or misconduct as had conduced to the adultery so as to give the Court a discretionary power, under section 31. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, to refuse to dissolve the marriage. Beavan v. Beavan, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 36.

Where in a suit by a husband the adultery of the wife is proved, the Court will not under the discretionary power vested in it by section 31. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, refuse to decree a divorce, unless some act of misconduct specified in that section is established. It will not act on mere suspicion. Davies v. Davies, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 111; 3 Swab. & T. 221.

A husband, in 1842, married a fellow-servant, and continued with her in the same service until 1846, when, in order to improve his position, he left, and took another situation. His wife remained in the same place, and there formed an adulterous connexion with a fellow-servant. It did not appear that the petitioner, from the time he left his wife, had ever visited or communicated with her:—Held, that the petitioner was entitled to a divorce. Ibid.

In a suit by a wife for dissolution of marriage, adultery and cruelty were proved, but there was no evidence of any misconduct subsequent to the year 1844. From that time until shortly before the year 1863, when the petition was filed, the wife was without means of instituting a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court or in this Court:—Held, that she had not been guilty of unreasonable delay. Harrison v. Harrison, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 44; 3 Swab. & T. 362.

In 1861 a decre nisi was made by the Divorce Court in favour of the appellant, who had previously obtained a decree for a divorce a mensa et thoro in the Ecclesiastical Court. Subsequently to the decree nisi the Queen's Proctor intervened, alleging collusion, and that the husband had been living in adultery since the divorce a mensa et thoro. The charge of collusion was, however, abandoned, but the adultery was proved, and the Court reversed the decree nisi, dismissed the petition, and condemned the appellant in the costs of the Queen's Proctor:—Held, on appeal, that the Judge of the Divorce Court had, under the circumstances, a discretion, under the 31st section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, to refuse a divorce, and that such discretion had been properly exercised. Lautour v. Her Majesty's Proctor (House of Lords), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 89; 10 H.L. Cas. 685.

A petition for dissolution of marriage by reason of the adultery of the wife, dismissed on the ground that the petitioner, before the adultery, had wilfully separated himself from the respondent without reasonable excuse. Jeffreys v. Jeffreys, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 84; 3 Swab. & T. 493.

At the hearing of a suit, by a husband, for dissolution of marriage, the petitioner, after his case had been proved, tendered himself for examination, under the 43rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, and confessed that on one occasion, during a temporary separation from the respondent, he had been guilty of an act of adultery. The Court refused a decree. Clarke v. Clarke, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 94.

A husband, believing that his wife, who had eloped from him, and was living in adultery, was dead, married another woman and committed adultery with her. The Court, in the exercise of the discretion vested in it by the 31st section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, granted the husband a divorce notwithstanding his adultery. Joseph v. Joseph, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 96.

A young man who had just taken his degree at Cambridge married a prostitute and never afterwards cohabited with her. He had no means of providing a home for her, or of contributing to her support, and the day after the marriage he separated from her and went to live with his father, who, on being informed of the marriage some months afterwards, caused a deed of separation to be executed, by which an allowance of 1*l.* a week was secured to her. This allowance was paid by the husband's father. After the execution of the deed the wife was guilty of adultery. In a suit by the husband for dissolution of marriage,—Held, that the separation, if wilful, was not without reasonable excuse, and that the petitioner was entitled to a decree. Proctor v. Proctor, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 99; 4 Swab. & T. 140.

After a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, a man is not liable to be sued, jointly with his former wife, for a tort committed by her during the coverture. Capel v. Powell, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 168; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 743.

(F) JUDICIAL SEPARATION.

(a) When the Suit is maintainable [See (H) Cruelty, and (I) Desertion].

(1) Decree pending Cross-Suit for Dissolution.

A wife, who has obtained a verdict in a suit for judicial separation, in which she is the petitioner, is entitled to a decree of judicial separation, notwithstanding the pendency of a cross-suit by the husband for dissolution. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 70; 4 Swab. & T. 84.

(2) On Petition for Dissolution.

The Court will, on the application of a petitioner, grant a decree of judicial separation instead of a decree of dissolution, although the petition prays for dissolution, and evidence has been given upon which a decree of dissolution could be founded. Dent v. Dent, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 118; 4 Swab. & T. 105.

(b) When not maintainable [See (K) Condonation].

(1) Impediment to Marital Intercourse arising after Marriage.

An impediment to marital intercourse supervening after marriage in consequence of the disease of the wife cannot be pleaded in bar to a suit by her for judicial separation on the ground of adultery. M—— v. M——, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 168.

(2) Lapse of Time.

Delay in instituting a suit for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty, is not a bar to the suit; but it is a material fact for the consideration of the Court, as tending to shew that there was no serious apprehension of further violence. Smallwood v. Smallwood, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 3; 2 Swab. & T. 397.

In a suit for judicial separation, brought by the wife, on the ground of cruelty,—Held, on appeal, affirming the decision of the Judge Ordinary, that lapse of time, though not an absolute bar, yet taken in connexion with other circumstances, e. g. a deed of separation, may shew that the application was not made, bona fide, for the protection of the wife, but for some collateral purpose; and that if the Court was satisfied of this, the petition ought to be dismissed. Matthews v. Matthews, 3 Swab. & T. 161.

(c) Compromise of Suit.

Upon a petition for judicial separation by the wife, on the ground of cruelty, an arrangement was come to by counsel for both parties, before the jury was sworn, that the record should be withdrawn, the suit not moved, and a referee appointed to settle the terms of a separation by deed, with full powers over the question of income. The referee refused to go into the charge of cruelty, as contended for by the petitioner, for the purpose of aggravation of alimony. Upon motion by the petitioner upon the ground that the agreement was silent as to costs, and that it had been intended by the petitioner to place the referee in the position of the Court to hear and decide upon the whole case, the Judge Ordinary refused to allow the record to be re-entered. Hooper v. Hooper, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 49.

Though the Court cannot recognize an agreement to live apart, it will hold parties bound by an agreement upon which a suit for separation was compromised. Ibid.

Upon appeal to the full Court,—Held, that the wife, as a party to the suit, may bind herself by such an arrangement, and that it is equivalent to a judgment in the suit; that the referee had no need to consider the question of cruelty, as the amount of permanent alimony is not varied by the amount of marital delinquency; that, in allotting it, regard may properly be had to the status of both parties, but that it can never be increased for the purpose of mulcting the guilty party. Ibid.

(G) RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

[See (D) (b) (iv) Inspection.]

(a) Absolute Bar.

A plea in bar to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is bad, unless it set forth matter sufficient to entitle the respondent to a decree of judicial separation. A plea that the respondent had reasonable suspicion that the petitioner had committed adultery, is bad. Burroughs v. Burroughs, 30 Law J. Rep, (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 186; 2 Swab. & T. 303.

An agreement to live separate is no bar to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Spering v. Spering, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 116; 3 Swab. & T. 211.

(b) Discretionary Bar.

The Court has no discretionary power to refuse a decree in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights on the ground that the suit was instituted by the petitioner, not in order that he might regain the society of his wife, but for some collateral object. Scott v. Scott, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 23.

The petitioner in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is entitled to a decree unless he is proved to have committed a matrimonial offence which would be ground for a judicial separation. Ibid.

Unless the respondent to a petition for restitution of conjugal rights can establish a legal defence to the petition, the petitioner will be entitled to a decree, and the Court has no discretion to inquire into the sincerity of the petitioner in bringing the suit. Scott v. Scott, 4 Swab. & T. 113.

A decree will not be granted in an undefended suit for restitution of conjugal rights, upon mere proof of the marriage. Evidence of the other facts of the case must be given. Where, at the time of pronouncing a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, the respondent was abroad, the Court directed that the decree should be served on the respondent's return to England, and that it should require him to certify within a fortnight after such service that he had obeyed it. Pearson v. Pearson, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 156.

In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights the Court has no jurisdiction to make a decree until the marriage has been formally proved, although the respondent may have filed an answer not taking issue on the marriage. Scott v. Scott, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 23.

(d) Practice [Dismissing Petition. See (T) Practice. (2) and (3) Withdrawing and Dismissing Petitions. Enforcing Decree. See (T) Practice (g), Motions, Orders, and Decrees].

(H) CRUELTY.

[See Squires v. Squires, post, (P). And see post, N) (a).]

(a) Generally what amounts to Cruelty.

Spitting in the wife's face, combined with other acts of violence, held to constitute cruelty. A test of injuries such as spitting in the face is the sense in which they are received. If not resented at the time, less weight will be attached to the charge when brought forward. Waddell v. Waddell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 123 ; 2 Swab. & T. 584.

A husband assaulted his wife in the public street without inflicting personal injury, but by his conduct and filthy language led a passer-by to take her for a common prostitute and insult her :—Held, that he had been guilty of cruelty. Milner v. Milner, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 159.

Cruelty is no answer to a suit for judicial separation on the ground of adultery. Tuthill v. Tuthill, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 214.

Quære—Whether a respondent, in a suit for judicial separation on the ground of adultery, is at liberty to introduce a charge of cruelty into the answer, and to pray for a judicial separation, and to give evidence in support of that charge in the event of the petitioner's failure to establish the charge of adultery ? Ibid.

A wife in consequence of her husband's cruelty left his house. She afterwards came back, but refused to return to his bed except upon condition that he would restore her to her position in the household as his wife, with which he refused to comply. In consequence of his ill-treatment, she again left and never returned. After the final separation, in consideration of the wife's agreement to apply part of her settled income for the benefit of the children of the marriage, the husband promised to allow them to visit her from time to time. This promise he failed to perform, and in consequence of the breach of his agreement, and not from fear of personal violence, the wife six years after the separation instituted a suit for judicial separation ; and it was held by the full Court, affirming the decision of the Judge Ordinary, that the wife was entitled to a decree of judicial separation. Cooke v. Cooke, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 154 ; 3 Swab. & T. 246.

Weight given by the Court to the wife's evidence of unnatural connexion had, or attempted to be had, with her by the husband, and to evidence tending to prove the existence of gonorrhœa, and of its wilful communication by husband to wife. N—— v. N——, 3 Swab. & T. 234.

Cruelty established by proof of habitually insulting conduct and violent temper, leading to frequent quarrels and occasionally to slight acts of violence, and inducing mental and bodily suffering. Knight v. Knight, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 112; 4 Swab. & T. 103.

A husband's constant intoxication and open profligacy, coupled with some slight acts of violence towards his wife, and an attempt to cut her throat, held to constitute a case of cruelty. Power v. Power, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 137 ; 4 Swab. & T. 173.

A husband treated his wife with neglect and indifference, ceased to have matrimonial intercourse with her, and carried on an adulterous intercourse with a servant in the same house where he and his wife were residing. The Court held that, in the absence of any threats or acts of positive violence, his conduct did not amount to legal cruelty. Cousen v. Cousen, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 139 ; 4 Swab. & T. 164.

A plea that the petitioner without reasonable cause withdrew from the bed of the respondent, and refused to render conjugal rights, standing alone and without any allegation of other misconduct, is no bar to a suit for judicial separation on the grounds of adultery and cruelty, and will therefore be struck out. Rowe v. Rowe, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 111 ; 4 Swab. & T. 162.

Where the evidence of actual violence used by the husband towards the wife is not sufficient of itself to warrant a decree on the ground of cruelty, the Court will take into consideration his general conduct towards her, and, if this is of a character tending to degrade the wife and subjecting her to a course of annoyance and indignity injurious to her health, will feel itself at liberty to pronounce the cruelty proved. Swatman v. Swatman, 4 Swab. & T. 135.

(b) Sufficiency of one Act of Cruelty.

One gross act of cruelty is ground for a decree of judicial separation if there be reasonable apprehension of further acts of the same kind. Reeves v. Reeves, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 178 ; 3 Swab. & T. 139.

A decree of judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty, will not be granted unless the Court is satisfied that further cohabitation is unsafe. A single act of personal violence committed under excitement, and not producing any considerable injury to the person, will not warrant the Court in concluding that further cohabitation is unsafe. Smallwood v. Smallwood, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 3; 2 Swab. & T. 397.

Petition by a wife for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty, dismissed, when the sole evidence of cruelty was, that in an altercation, arising out of the unfounded jealousy of the husband, he had seized his wife by the throat and had thrown her on the ground, and it did not appear that any marks on the throat, or injury to the health of the wife, had resulted from the violence. Ibid.

(c) By the Wife.

Repeated acts of unprovoked violence by a wife will be regarded as cruelty, although they may not inflict serious bodily injury upon the husband or imperil his safety. Pickard v. Pickard, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 158.

Where a judicial separation is granted on the ground of the wife's cruelty, the Court has power to order the husband to make a provision for her. Ibid.

Though the physical effects of the wife's violence may not generally be so serious to the personal safety of the husband as the effects of his violence towards her, yet the moral result of the wife's violence to all the proper relations of married life is so serious, that the Court will interfere, and not drive the husband to the necessity of meeting force by force. Prichard v. Prichard, 3 Swab. & T. 523.

In such cases the Court will expect some provision to be made for the maintenance of the wife; overruling White v. White and Dart v. Dart. Ibid.

(d) By Insane Person.

Cruelty committed by an insane person is no ground for judicial separation. Hall v. Hall, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 65; 3 Swab. & T. 347.

(e) Condonation.

A return to matrimonial cohabitation is necessary in order that there may be condonation. Cooke v. Cooke, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 81; 3 Swab. & T. 126.

Delay in presenting a petition for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty is not of itself a bar to the suit, but it is a circumstance to be taken into consideration, and combined with others may be a ground for dismissing the petition as tending to shew that the suit is instituted for some collateral object and not for the purpose of protection. Ibid.

A wife in consequence of her husband's cruelty left his house. She afterwards came back, but refused to return to his bed except upon condition that he would restore her to her position in the household as his wife, with which he refused to comply. In consequence of his ill-treatment, she again left, and never returned. After the final separation, in consideration of the wife's agreement to apply part of her settled income for the benefit of the children, the husband promised to allow them to visit her from time to time. This promise he failed to perform, and in consequence of the breach of his agreement, and not from fear of personal violence, the wife, six years after the separation, instituted a suit for judicial separation:—Held, 1. That the husband's cruelty was not condoned; 2. That as the suit was instituted in order that the wife might have access to her children, which she could not otherwise obtain, unless by renewal of a cohabitation which would be dangerous, and as there was no proof that it was instituted for any purpose that had no relation to the ill-treatment she had suffered, and the peril of a renewal of cohabitation, she was entitled to a judicial separation. Ibid.

The word "condonation" has the same meaning in the Divorce Acts as it had in the Ecclesiastical Courts; and the doctrine of revival is equally applicable to it. Therefore, although the adultery complained of by the petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage has been condoned, the petitioner is entitled to a decree if it has been revived by subsequent cruelty. Dent v. Dent, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 118; 4 Swab. & T. 105.

[And as to Condonation generally, see post, (K).]

(I) DESERTION.

[See (N) Pleading (a).]

(a) Generally what amounts to.

In a suit commenced on the 7th of November, 1861, by a wife for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and desertion for two years, it appeared that the parties were married in 1852 and lived together until 1856, when the husband took an appointment in the Commissariat in China, leaving his wife and only child in England, his motive for doing so, according to his own statement made subsequently, being that "his marriage had been the curse of his life, and he was miserable in his home." From China he wrote frequently to his wife, expressing attachment to her, but always asking for money to pay debts incurred by his extravagance, and never shewing the least inclination to return. In 1859 he was tried by court-martial and dismissed the service. He then wrote to his wife expressing his determination never to return to England, but to go to Australia via Alexandria, and asked that money should be sent to him at Alexandria to pay his passage to, and enable him to begin life in, Australia. On the 22nd of October, 1859, he wrote from Alexandria acknowledging the receipt of this money, and saying that he had resolved to go out to Sydney, and hoped to start for that place from Alexandria on the 25th of October. Instead, however, of going to Sydney, he went to Paris, lost all his money at a gaming-table, and thence came to England, where he arrived about the 10th of November, and shortly after formed an adulterous connexion with a woman whom he proposed to marry. He did not communicate with his wife or her friends until the 10th of December, when he wrote to her expressing no wish to see her, and giving no address, but stating that he was penniless, and requesting her if she wished to hear further of him to put an advertisement in a newspaper:—Held, that his letters, construed by his acts, warranted the conclusion that from the time he left Alexandria he never intended to return to his wife, and had therefore deserted her for two years and upwards before the commencement of the suit. Lawrence v. Lawrence,

31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 145; 2 Swab. & T. 575.

A married a woman, and, after cohabiting with her at her father's house for some weeks, left her. At his request she shortly afterwards went to him and remained with him for two or three days. He then sent her back to her father, saying that he could not support her. After the lapse of eighteen months, during which she did not hear from him, he went to her father's house, and asked to be allowed to see her. Her father refused to allow him to have any communication with her until he should be in a condition to support her. He then left, and never returned or asked her to return to him:—Quære, whether these facts established a case of desertion. Harris v. Harris, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 6.

To neglect opportunities of consorting with a wife is not necessarily to desert her. Williams v. Williams, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 172; 3 Swab. & T. 547.

So long as a husband treats his wife as a wife by maintaining such degree and manner of intercourse as might naturally be expected from a husband of his calling and means, he cannot be said to have deserted her. Ibid.

A husband and wife having failed in business, went into service in different families. For some years the husband constantly visited his wife once or twice a week when she was in London. After some years of such intercourse, the wife offered to purchase a business with her savings, in order that they might live together. The husband, who had then formed an adulterous intercourse with another woman, refused this offer, but continued to visit his wife as before:—Held, that the husband had not been guilty of desertion. Ibid.

(b) Wilful Separation.

A husband when reproached by his wife with an adulterous connexion he had formed with A said he wished to go and would rather be with A than with his wife. His wife said, "Go if you like, and when you are sick of A return to me," and she made him promise to return to her. He then left her, and never returned:—Held, that the conduct of the wife at the last interview did not shew assent by her to the separation, but that the husband had been guilty of desertion. Haviland v. Haviland, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 65.

A husband and wife executed a deed of separation, but none of its provisions were ever carried into effect, and the cohabitation was continued after its execution. The husband subsequently deserted the wife:—Held, that she was entitled to relief on the ground of that desertion notwithstanding the deed. Cock v. Cock, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 157; 3 Swab. & T. 514.

Shortly after a marriage the husband, with the intention of bringing about a separation, so treated his wife as to compel her to leave him. She subsequently made several offers to return; but he refused to receive her. She continued willing to return, until she found that he was carrying on an adulterous intercourse, which had subsisted since the marriage. She then refused to return, except upon condition that such intercourse should cease:—Held, that the husband's conduct, before the wife became aware of his adultery, amounted to desertion, and that such desertion was not put an end to by her unwillingness to return while the adultery continued. Graves v. Graves, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 66; 3 Swab. & T. 350.

An offer by a husband to return to cohabitation after he has deserted his wife for two years and upwards, and has committed adultery, does not take away her right to a decree of dissolution on the ground of such desertion coupled with adultery, the offence of desertion being complete before the offer was made. Basing v. Basing, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 150; 3 Swab. & T. 516.

An order obtained pursuant to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. s. 21, by a married woman deserted by her husband, for the protection of property acquired since desertion, will not enable her to maintain an action commenced before the date of the order for injuries to or in respect of such property. The Midland Rail. Co. v. Pye, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 314; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 179.

Quære—Whether it will enable her to sue for injuries in respect of which the cause of action is complete at the time of the order. Ibid.

(K) CONDONATION.

[See ante, (H) Cruelty (e).]

Condonation of adultery committed by a wife with A is a bar to any proceedings by the husband against A. If such condoned adultery is revived by the wife's subsequent misconduct, so as to entitle the husband to a decree of dissolution of marriage, A, though made a co-respondent in the suit, cannot be condemned in costs. Norris v. Norris, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 111.

To a suit by a wife for a dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery coupled with cruelty, condonation of the cruelty is no bar. Quære—Whether condonation of one marital offence is valid if made in ignorance of another marital offence. Dempster v. Dempster, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 20; 2 Swab. & T. 438.

Semble—That condoned adultery may be revived by undue familiarities short of adultery. Winscom v. Winscom, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 45; 3 Swab. & T. 380.

A charge of adultery held not to be established upon the evidence. Ibid.

In order to establish condonation, it is not sufficient to prove that a husband returned to cohabitation with his wife after he was in possession of evidence of her adultery; it is necessary also to prove that he gave credit to that evidence, and took her back believing her to be guilty and intending to forgive her. Ellis v. Ellis, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 100; 4 Swab. & T. 154.

(L) CONNIVANCE AND COLLUSION.

In order to establish connivance by the husband at his wife's adultery, it must be shewn that he gave a willing consent to it, and was an accessory before the fact. If the husband, intending that adultery should take place, does not interfere when he might do so, he is guilty of connivance. In a suit for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of the wife's adultery, a jury having found that the husband had connived at the adultery, the Court, being satisfied of the propriety of the verdict, dismissed the petition with costs. Allen v. Allen, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 2.

A husband who gives a willing assent to an act of adultery by his wife, desiring that it shall be committed, is guilty of connivance, although he may take no active step towards procuring it to be committed, and may not be an accessory before the fact. Marris v. Marris, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 69; 2 Swab. & T. 530.

Quære—Whether, in conducting a suit on behalf of the Queen's Proctor, the Attorney General can claim any privilege as in Crown cases. Ibid.

In order to establish connivance by a husband at his wife's adultery, it is not requisite that he should be an accessory before the fact—should have taken active measures to bring about the adultery; it is sufficient if he was cognizant that adultery would result from transactions which he approved of and consented to. Glennie v. Glennie, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 17.

Connivance is knowledge of, and acquiescence in, the conduct complained of. Boulting v. Boulting, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 33; 3 Swab. & T. 329.

Where a wife, who was a petitioner in a suit for judicial separation on the ground of adultery, had for many years before the commencement of the suit known of such adultery without complaint or remonstrance, and had been in receipt of an allowance from her husband, the Court held, that those facts were evidence to go to a jury in support of a charge of connivance. Ibid.

A husband wilfully abstaining from taking any steps to prevent an adulterous intercourse, which from what passes before his eyes he cannot but believe or reasonably suspect is likely to occur, is guilty of connivance, though there may be no corrupt intention on his part. Timmings v. Timmings disapproved of. (Per the Lord Chancellor and Lord Chelmsford, Lord Wensleydale dissenting.) Gipps v. Gipps (House of Lords), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 161; 11 H.L. Cas. 1—affirming the decision below, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 78; 3 Swab. & T. 116.

If a husband having the right to divorce his wife for adultery, abandons that right in consideration of a sum of money received from the adulterer, he can never afterwards be a petitioner for a divorce on the ground of his wife's criminal intercourse with the same person—(per Lord Chelmsford). Ibid.

A decree of dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery will not be granted when the adultery has been brought about by persons acting on behalf of the petitioner, although without his knowledge. Picken v. Picken, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 22.

Whilst the husband was abroad, his father employed A to watch the wife. A employed B. At B's instigation, but without the knowledge or concurrence of the petitioner or his father, the co-respondent induced the wife to commit adultery. The Court dismissed the petition. Ibid.

(b) Collusion.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery the adultery was proved, but it appeared from the evidence of witnesses called by the Court, that an agent employed by the petitioner to procure evidence and serve the citations on the respondents, then living together as man and wife, had, whilst on that mission, associated with them on intimate terms; had received money from the co-respondent; and had paid him money, which was afterwards repaid by the wife's father, in order that he might be enabled to complete the chain of evidence; that the father of the wife had paid money to the petitioner on his signing the petition, and also to induce him to proceed with the suit; had acted in concert with the petitioner in the conduct of the suit; and had aided in getting up the case by giving facilities for obtaining evidence of the adultery. The Court, being of opinion that the petition was prosecuted in collusion with the respondents, in compliance with the 30th section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, dismissed it. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 97.

When collusion has been established the petitioner cannot be examined for the purpose of contradicting or explaining the evidence of such collusion. Ibid.

If a husband, whose wife is leading a life of prostitution, pay money, or cause money to be paid to a person to commit an act of adultery with her, in order that he may obtain evidence to enable him to institute a suit for a dissolution of his marriage, the Court will not grant a decree in consequence of the act of adultery so committed with his concurrence. Sugg v. Sugg, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 41.

Where A, a friend of the petitioner, offered B 5*l*. if he would obtain evidence against a respondent, and B made an arrangement with the co-respondent that he should commit adultery with the respondent and receive half the money, and the adultery was accordingly committed, and the money paid by A and divided between B and the co-respondent, the Judge Ordinary directed the jury that if the arrangement between B and the co-respondent was made without the knowledge and concurrence of the petitioner, the petitioner would be entitled to a decree by reason of the adultery committed in pursuance of the arrangement. Ibid.

In an undefended suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the adultery of the wife, it appeared at the hearing that the wife had given the petitioner's solicitor a photograph of herself and attended in court at the hearing to aid in her identification, and for so doing received money from the solicitor. The Court, notwithstanding, being satisfied upon the evidence that there was no collusion between the petitioner and respondent, pronounced a decree nisi. Harris v. Harris, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 160.

In order to establish a charge of collusion against the petitioner and the respondent in a suit for dissolution of marriage, it is necessary to prove that there was some understanding or agreement between them. Gethin v. Gethin, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 43.

Where a husband and wife, both of them being anxious to obtain a divorce, presented cross-petitions, and the husband's petition was dismissed upon his own application, and he abstained from making any defence to his wife's petition, the Judge Ordinary directed the jury that if that course had not been taken in consequence of any understanding or agreement between the parties, but each had acted independently of the other, the petitioner was not guilty of collusion. Ibid.

(M) PARTIES TO SUITS.

(a) Committee of Lunatic.

The committee of a lunatic may maintain a suit for judicial separation, on the ground of the adultery of the wife of the lunatic. Woodgate v. Taylor, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 197; 2 Swab. & T. 512.

(b) Curator ad Litem.

A suit for dissolution of marriage cannot be maintained against a lunatic. Where such a suit had been instituted, the Court refused to appoint a curator ad litem to the respondent to enable the petitioner to proceed with the suit. Bawden v. Bawden, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 94; 2 Swab. & T. 417.

(1) Queen's Proctor.

The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7. enables any one of the public to give to the Court of the Judge Ordinary, between the decree nisi and the decree absolute for a divorce, information to relieve it from being misled on the subject of a divorce petition. That section confers on the Queen's Proctor the power to intervene in a case of collusion, but in that alone; and, except in such a case, if he takes any proceedings in a suit for divorce, he appears only as one of the public giving information to the Court, and under such circumstances the Court has no power to award him costs. Lantour v. Her Majesty's Proctor, 10 H.L. Cas. 685.

The Queen's Proctor cannot, without the leave of the Court, intervene in his official capacity to shew cause against a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage being made absolute. Gray v. Gray, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 96.

Where the Queen's Proctor intervenes in a suit for dissolution of marriage before the hearing, and pleads collusion and that the petitioner has been guilty of adultery, his right to intervene cannot be defeated by the petitioner asking only for a decree of judicial separation; but he will be allowed to prove his pleas. Drummond v. Drummond, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 177; 2 Swab. & T. 269.

The Court will not, at the hearing in such a case, allow the prayer of the petition to be altered into a prayer of judicial separation for the purpose of ousting the Queen's Proctor. Ibid.

The Queen's Proctor having intervened, during the progress of a suit for dissolution of marriage, and pleaded "that the petitioner and respondent had been acting in collusion, for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, contrary to the justice of the case," the Court ordered him to specify the nature of the collusion charged, but refused to order him to state the facts which he proposed to prove. Jessop v. Jessop, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 193; 2 Swab. & T. 301.

Where the respondent denied the allegations of the petition, and these issues came on for trial at the same time as an issue raised on a plea of the Queen's Proctor, "that the petition had been filed by arrangement with the respondent and others acting on his behalf," the Court held that the Queen's Proctor had nothing to do with the issues raised between the parties, and that his counsel had no right to comment on the evidence relating to them. Ibid.

Though the Queen's Proctor may fail to establish a charge of collusion, the Court will not order the costs to be paid by the Crown if the petitioner's conduct has been such as to justify the intervention. Ibid.

If before a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage has been made absolute material facts which would justify the intervention of the Queen's Proctor come to the knowledge of the Court, it will refuse to make the decree absolute, and will direct the registrar to lay the matter before the Queen's Proctor, that he may intervene if he think fit. Boulton v. Boulton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 27; 2 Swab. & T. 405.

When the Queen's Proctor intervenes in his official capacity by leave of the Court, under the latter branch of the 7th section of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, and pleads to a petition, he cannot immediately after issue has been joined on his plea file affidavits under the 18th of the Further Rules of 1860, shewing cause against the decree being made absolute, inasmuch as that and the following rules are applicable only to the intervention of "any person," without the leave of the Court under the first branch of the section. Boulton v. Boulton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 76; 2 Swab. & T. 551.

After the expiration of three months from the pronouncing of a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage, the Queen's Proctor, without obtaining leave to intervene, entered an appearance and filed affidavits shewing that material facts had not been brought before the Court. An application was made for a decree absolute, notwithstanding such appearance, &c., upon the ground that the Queen's Proctor, if he does not obtain leave to intervene, can only shew cause against a decree nisi as one of the public, and within three months from the pronouncing of the decree:—Held, by the Court, rejecting the application, that cause may be shewn against a decree by any person at any time before it is made absolute. Bowen v. Bowen, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 129; 3 Swab. & T. 530.

The Court has no jurisdiction to award the Queen's Proctor his costs under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7, unless he intervenes in his official capacity and proves collusion. Ibid.

The wife petitioned for dissolution; the husband made no answer; the hearing of the petition had been adjourned for further proof, pending which the Queen's Proctor intervened, and alleged the petitioner's adultery, who took issue thereon, and the Court allowed the proof of the original petition to be completed, and the issue as between the petitioner and Queen's Proctor to be set down for trial by a jury, retaining the same position in the cause-list as the original petition. Gethin v. Gethin, 2 Swab. & T. 406.

The Queen's Proctor can only intervene, in his official capacity, in a suit for dissolution of marriage when he alleges collusion. He may, however, as one of the public, shew cause against a decree nisi being made absolute. Masters v. Masters, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 7.

A respondent, by pleading in answer to a petition for dissolution of marriage material facts, of which no evidence is given at the hearing, does not bring them before the Court, within the meaning of the 7th section of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144; but such facts may, after a decree nisi has been pronounced, be set up by one of the public as ground for not making the decree absolute. Ibid.

The respondent in her answer to a suit for dissolution of marriage charged the petitioner with adultery, and at the hearing called witnesses in support of the charge, but the issue was found against her. The Queen's Proctor subsequently intervened, and charged the petitioner with collusion, and also with the adultery pleaded by the respondent:—Held, that he was not barred from setting up such adultery by the respondent having pleaded it, and adduced evidence at the hearing to prove it. Harding v. Harding, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 9.

When the Queen's Proctor intervenes after a decree nisi, and the affidavits filed by him and by the petitioner are contradictory, the Court will order the questions of fact in dispute to be tried by a jury. Ibid.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage the Queen's Proctor intervened after a decree nisi, and filed a plea on which issue was joined. An order was subsequently made, that the petitioner should attend in court on the hearing of the issue, and upon his non-appearance when the case came on for hearing, the Court reversed the decree, and dismissed the petition without requiring evidence in support of the plea. Pollack v. Pollack, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 49.

The Queen's Proctor intervened in a suit for dissolution, and alleged collusion and the petitioner's adultery. The respondent did not appear. No evidence being tendered in support of the petition when the case came on for hearing, the Court dismissed the petition, without requiring evidence to be produced in support of the Queen's Proctor's pleas. Sheldon v. Sheldon, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 80; 4 Swab. & T. 75.

An intervener shewing cause against a decree being made absolute, and alleging the same facts as those charged in the respondent's answer, and also collusion, is not bound to prove collusion before giving evidence of such facts. Harding v. Harding, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 108; 4 Swab. & T. 145.

The petitioner is not a competent witness in a proceeding by an intervener shewing cause against a decree nisi: nor will the Court examine him under the 43rd section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. in support of his own case. Ibid.

The Court will refuse to make a decree nisi absolute, after the expiration of three months from the time when it was pronounced, in order to enable the Queen's Proctor to make inquiries, and to lay a case before the Attorney General for his directions, upon an affidavit being filed by the Queen's Proctor to the effect that he has received information of material facts, and that he intends to take the direction of the Attorney General. Palmer v. Palmer, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 110; 4 Swab. & T. 143.

(2) Other Persons.

It is not competent for a person who has intervened in a suit for dissolution of marriage for the purpose of shewing cause against the decree nisi being made absolute, to object that the Court had no jurisdiction over the parties to the suit; nor to rely on, as material facts, charges which had been pleaded in answer to the petition but were abandoned at the trial; nor to support his opposition by matters which would only be ground for a motion by the parties for a new trial. Forster v. Forster, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 206; 3 Swab. & T. 151.

At any time before a decree nisi of dissolution of marriage is made absolute, it is competent for one of the public to intervene, although three months may have elapsed since the decree was pronounced. Clements v. Clements, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 74; 3 Swab. & T. 394.

The Court will not act upon affidavits filed in opposition to a decree nisi, unless it is satisfied that an intervener is properly before the Court. Ibid.

An appearance was entered for A, and affidavits were filed in opposition to a decree nisi. Affidavits were then filed, by the petitioner, shewing that A had never authorized the intervention. An appearance was then entered for B, and further affidavits were filed. The Court refused to take notice of the intervention of B, and being satisfied that A had never authorized the intervention in his name, made the decree absolute. Ibid.

Semble—That the Court will not act upon an intervention when satisfied that it is made at the instance of the respondent or co-respondent. Ibid.

A petition for dissolution of marriage was dismissed after decree nisi, on the ground of the petitioner's adultery, the charges of adultery proved by the intervener being identical with those contained in the respondent's answer but not proved by the respondent. Harding v. Harding, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 129; 4 Swab. & T. 145.

The Court will allow persons who are not parties to a suit to intervene and plead upon the question of the custody, maintenance and education of the children of parents, whose marriage is the subject of the suit. Chetwynd v. Chetwynd, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 130; 4 Swab. & T. 151.

[See (T) Practice; (r) Damages.]

(a) Generally who to be made.

A petition, by a husband, for dissolution of marriage, charged adultery with A and also with divers other persons, and afterwards, in pursuance of an order of the Court, particulars of the general charge were given, alleging adultery with B. After an order had been obtained by the respondent for a commission to examine B, who was abroad, the petitioner applied for leave to make B a co-respondent. The Court refused the application, on the ground that it was not bona fide, but solely for the purpose of excluding B's evidence. Codrington v. Codrington, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 62; 3 Swab. & T. 368.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, the petitioner must make every man against whom adultery is alleged in the petition a co-respondent, unless on special grounds he is excused by the Court from doing so. Carryer v. Carryer, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 47; 4 Swab. & T. 94.

Quære—Whether the want of evidence against the alleged adulterer, and the fact that he is resident abroad, are sufficient grounds for excusing the petitioner from making him a co-respondent. Ibid.

Although a wife has for many years been leading a life of prostitution, the husband, in a suit by him for dissolution of marriage, will not be excused from making a co-respondent, unless it appears that he knows of no person with whom she has committed adultery. Hook v. Hook overruled. Quicke v. Quicke, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 28; 4 Swab. & T. 419.

Semble—That if a husband, who has been allowed to proceed without making a co-respondent, afterwards and before the trial acquire evidence as to the person with whom his wife committed adultery, and who was previously unknown, he ought to bring the matter before the Court. He need not do so when the sole evidence is the wife's confession. Muspratt v. Muspratt, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 28.

The Court will not, upon the affidavit of the petitioner only, allow him to proceed without making a co-respondent. Leader v. Leader, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 136.

Where the wife, the respondent, was alleged to be leading the life of a common prostitute and to have committed adultery with several persons, who were necessary witnesses to enable the petitioner to establish the charges of adultery, the petitioner was allowed to proceed without making a co-respondent. Peters v. Peters, 3 Swab. & T. 264.

Where, in a suit for dissolution of marriage, the alleged adulterer, who had been made a co-respondent, appeared under protest and pleaded to the jurisdiction, the Court, on the application of the petitioner, dismissed the co-respondent from the suit on payment of his costs. Gaynor v. Gaynor, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 116.

A suit for dissolution of marriage abates on the death of the respondent; but the Court will not, on the application of the petitioner, order that the petition and affidavit in support of it be removed from the file. Brocas v. Brocas, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 172; 2 Swab. & T. 383.

Semble—That when the co-respondent dies pending a suit for dissolution of marriage, a motion should be made for leave to strike his name out of the proceedings. Sutton v. Sutton, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 156.

By the death of the petitioner a suit for dissolution of marriage abates. If, therefore, he dies after a decree nisi has been pronounced the Court cannot make it absolute. Grant v. Grant, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 174; 2 Swab. & T. 522.

The petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery died after a decree nisi had been pronounced, and before the time for making it absolute had expired. On behalf of the children of the marriage the Court was moved to make the decree absolute, in order that an application might be afterwards made, under the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61. s. 5. for an order varying the marriage settlement. The Court rejected the motion. Ibid.

(N) PLEADING.

(a) Certainty, Particularity, Relevancy, and Impertinence.

To a charge of cruelty, an answer alleging in general terms that the use of force was justified by the conduct of the petitioner is bad. The nature of the conduct should be stated, but particulars of time and place need not be given. Shaw v. Shaw, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 35; 2 Swab. & T. 515.

In a suit for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, cruelty may consist in the aggregate of the acts alleged in the petition, and each paragraph need not allege an independent act of cruelty sufficient in itself to warrant a decree. Leete v. Leete, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 121; 2 Swab. & T. 568.

An allegation of an act relied upon as cruelty is not bad on demurrer, if such act could under any circumstances amount to cruelty. Ibid.

An allegation that the respondent was in the habit of using insulting and abusive language to the petitioner in the presence of third persons, is admissible as tending to shew the temper and habits of the respondent. Ibid.

A respondent may not plead and demur to the same part of the petition without leave of the Court. Ibid.

A petition by a wife for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, alleged in the 4th and 6th paragraphs that the respondent on one occasion threw a silver spoon, and on another a walnut, at the petitioner, with great violence, and in the 8th that he was in the habit of using insulting language to the petitioner, and taunting and abusing her in the presence of the governess and servants. The respondent having demurred to these paragraphs, on the ground that none of the matters therein alleged amounted to cruelty, the Court set aside the demurrer as frivolous. The 9th paragraph alleged that the respondent was in the habit of beating and kicking the petitioner, but that she was unable to set forth the particular occasions. To this the respondent demurred, on the ground that he was not bound to answer such vague charges; and the Court set aside the demurrer as frivolous, holding that the generality of the charge was only ground for an application for particulars. Ibid.

In a petition for divorce on the ground of adultery, it is not competent to plead the ante-nuptial incontinence of the respondent, even though it and the adultery be charged to have been committed with the same person. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 12.

A petition for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty should specify all the acts of the respondent intended to be relied on as constituting cruelty. A general allegation, that during a specified time the respondent "committed divers acts of cruelty," is bad, and is ground for an order that the petition be amended by specifying such acts, but not for an order that particulars of the acts of cruelty be given. Goldney v. Goldney, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 13.

The answer to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights alleged that the petitioner had in a deed of separation covenanted not to compel or endeavour to compel the respondent to cohabit with him:—Held, that the averment was irrelevant, and must be struck out. Hunt v. Hunt, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 168.

In answer to a petition for judicial separation on the ground of desertion, the respondent may set out facts shewing that there was reasonable cause for the desertion, but such facts should be stated succinctly. Hill v. Hill, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 187.

Cruelty may consist in the aggregate of the acts alleged in a petition or answer, and each paragraph need not allege an independent act of cruelty sufficient in itself to warrant the relief sought. Green v. Green, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 64.

To a petition by a woman for a decree of nullity, on the ground of impotence, the respondent pleaded that since the marriage the petitioner had committed adultery. The Court ordered the plea to be struck out as impertinent. Taverner v. Ditchford, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 105.

According to the practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts an objection to the jurisdiction might be taken at any time, though it was more usual that it should be taken at the commencement of the proceedings. The proper course, for a respondent who intends to object to the jurisdiction is to appear under protest, and if he wishes for time to plead to the jurisdiction to apply expressly for time to do so. A minor should sue by guardian and not by attorney. Zychlinski v. Zychlinski, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 37; 2 Swab. & T. 420.

A respondent in a suit for dissolution of marriage who has appeared absolutely cannot plead a dilatory plea, e.g., that by reason of the domicil of the parties the Court has no jurisdiction, nor can he raise such objection by act on petition. Semble, however, that at the hearing he may, notwithstanding, object to the jurisdiction. If a respondent intends to plead a dilatory plea he should appear by person and under protest. Forster v. Forster, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 185.

A co-respondent may set up, in answer to a petition for dissolution, conduct of the petitioner, which, under the proviso to the 31st section of the Divorce Act, would give the Court a discretionary power to dismiss the petition; but he cannot give evidence of it unless it be pleaded. He is not precluded by the 33rd section from pleading it by the insertion in the petition of a claim for damages, though such a defence could not have been pleaded to an action for criminal conversation; the meaning of that section being, that in such a case the question of damages is to be dealt with, not that the record is to be framed, in the same manner as in actions for criminal conversation. Seddon v. Seddon, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 12.

(d) Claim of Damages.

Where damages are claimed against the co-respondent, the petition should specify the amount claimed. Quære—Whether the counsel for the co-respondent can, upon his own authority, consent to a petition being amended by the insertion of the amount of damages claimed. Spedding v. Spedding, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 96.

(e) Petition by Father of Minor.

In a suit for nullity instituted by the father of a minor, it must appear upon the face of the petition whether the father has instituted the suit in his own right or as guardian of the minor. Wells v. Cottam, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 41; 3 Swab. & T. 364.

A guardian cannot appear and plead on behalf of a minor without having been duly elected and appointed. Ibid.

An answer to a petition for restitution of conjugal rights, denying that the respondent withdrew from cohabitation without just cause, should state the cause of such withdrawal. If it does not, it is bad on demurrer, but the objection is waived by filing a replication. Ward v. Ward, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 120.

(g) Reforming Pleadings.

[See (O) Amendment.]

(h) Striking out Plea.

To a petition by a wife for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, the respondent pleaded adultery. The Court, on motion, refused to order the plea to be struck out, but left the petitioner to demur. Hall v. Hall, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 117.

Quære—Whether adultery is an answer to a charge of cruelty. Ibid.

(O) AMENDMENT.

(a) Of Petition.

After the hearing of a petition of a wife for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty, no decree having been pronounced, the Court allowed the petition to be amended by the addition of a charge of bigamy which came to the knowledge of the petitioner in the interval between the cause being set down for hearing and the hearing. Walker v. Walker, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 214.

After the hearing of an undefended petition had been adjourned for further evidence, an allegation was added to the petition by the leave of the Court, and it was re-served upon the respondent. When it again came on for hearing, the Court treated it as a new petition, and required evidence of all the facts necessary to found a decree, as well as of the additional allegation. Walker v. Walker, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 117.

A suit for judicial separation may be turned into one for dissolution of marriage without a fresh citation. Cartlidge v. Cartlidge, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 135.

A wife, who had instituted a suit for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty, subsequently discovered that her husband had also been guilty of adultery. The Court allowed her to amend her petition by adding the charge of adultery, and praying for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of cruelty and adultery, without extracting a fresh citation; but directed that the petition, when amended, should be re-served. Ibid.

A petition for a divorce on the ground of adultery must allege adultery in distinct terms. Ambler v. Ambler, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 6.

A petition by a husband for dissolution of marriage contained an inferential, but not a distinct, charge of adultery at a specified time and place. Personal service on the respondent had been dispensed with. Neither the respondent nor co-respondent appeared. At the hearing, adultery at the said time and place having been proved, the Court allowed the petition to be amended by adding a distinct charge of adultery without requiring the petition to be re-served. Ibid.

If at the hearing the Court gives leave to amend the petition to meet the case proved, the petitioner being in court, it may be then amended and a decree nisi may be pronounced; but if leave to amend is only granted at a subsequent date after taking time to consider, and the petitioner fails to move for a decree until some considerable time after the amendment has been made, the decree must bear date on the day when pronounced, and cannot be ante-dated. Ibid.

A petition by a husband for dissolution of marriage charged adultery with G and claimed damages. The respondent denied the charge. The co-respondent appeared, but did not file an answer. At the trial, before any witnesses were examined, the claim for damages was withdrawn. The evidence of two witnesses tended to prove that the respondent, on the 24th of September, 1861, committed adultery with some person unknown; and another witness proved that at the same place and time of day, but on the 17th of July, 1861, a man named G had passed some hours in the respondent's company. Upon the application of the petitioner, the petition was then amended by substituting for the charge of adultery with G a charge of adultery with some person unknown. The jury found a verdict for the respondent. Subsequently a rule for a new trial was made absolute upon affidavits that the latter witness had made a mistake in her evidence, and that the circumstance sworn to by her took place on the 24th of September, 1861. Upon the application of the petitioner, the Court ordered the petition and record to be amended by re-inserting the charge of adultery with G upon payment of his costs, but refused to allow the re-insertion of the claim for damages. Jago v. Jago, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 48.

When adultery is the ground of a petition it should be distinctly alleged. It is not sufficient to allege that the petitioner "is informed and believes" that the respondent has committed adultery. When leave to amend such a petition is granted, if there is no appearance, it must be re-served. Spilsbury v. Spilsbury, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 126; 3 Swab. & T. 210.

Where the respondent is in default by failing to file an answer in due course, he cannot object to a paragraph of the petition on the ground of irrelevancy. Burrell v. Burrell, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 136.

Where in the affidavit verifying the petition for dissolution of marriage the co-respondent's christian name was stated to be John instead of William, and a similar mistake was made in the citation and petition, the Court allowed the citation and petition to be amended, and did not require the affidavit to be re-sworn. Reuss v. Reuss, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 168.

An application for an order that a pleading be reformed, is an application to the discretion of the Court, and in exercising this discretion the Court will not, as in case of demurrer, consider whether or not the pleading is good in law; but whether or not it may prejudice the opposite side in the conduct of his case. Griffith v. Griffith, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 81; 3 Swab. & T. 355.

A petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty charged cruelty "in and during the months of April and May 1861." The respondent filed an answer denying the charges of the petition. Upon the trial of the cause, at which the respondent did not appear, the petitioner failed to prove cruelty at the time alleged, but established cruelty in June and July, 1861:—Held, that the petition might be amended by substituting the date of the cruelty proved. Bunyard v. Bunyard, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 176.

The Court will not order a pleading to be amended unless it is so framed as to embarrass the opposite side. Green v. Green, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 83.

Leave granted to amend a petition for dissolution of marriage by adding a claim for damages. Bartlett v. Bartlett, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 64.

(b) Of Answer.

A co-respondent, in the same paragraph of his answer, charged the petitioner with adultery with several women. The Court rejected a motion that the answer should be amended by inserting each charge in a separate paragraph, but without costs. Hunt v. Hunt, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 163; 2 Swab. & T. 574.

To a petition alleging adultery on divers occasions in September and October, 1862, the respondent pleaded a denial of the adultery, and, further, that if she had committed adultery as alleged, the petitioner condoned it up to the 29th of September, 1862. The Court refused to order the latter plea to be struck out upon motion. Windham v. Windham, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 89.

A wife petitioned for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty and adultery; the respondent traversed the charges, and afterwards obtained leave to amend his answer by adding a counter-charge of adultery. Before leave to amend was granted, and after an order for payment of the wife's taxed costs, the respondent became bankrupt on his own petition. An application to rescind the order for the amendment of the answer, on the ground that the respondent had become bankrupt solely for the purpose of avoiding payment of his wife's costs, and that the order was made by the Court in ignorance of the bankruptcy, was rejected. Greatorex v. Greatorex, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 9.

(c) Of Appearance.

By appearing absolutely a respondent admits the jurisdiction of the Court, and he will not be allowed afterwards to amend the appearance by appearing under protest with a view to plead to the jurisdiction. Garstin v. De Garston, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 45; 4 Swab. & T. 73.

(P) EVIDENCE.

Evidence of acts of adultery, subsequent to the date of the latest act charged in the petition, is admissible, for the purpose of shewing the character and quality of previous acts of improper familiarity. Boddy v. Boddy, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 23.

Upon the question of incapacity, although no application had been made for a monition or order for a personal inspection of either of the parties, the Court received medical evidence of an examination. Serrell v. Serrell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 55; 2 Swab. & T. 422.

Evidence to prove a species of cruelty not pleaded in the petition is not admissible; though evidence of violent demeanour and language not pleaded, but leading up to and making probable acts of violence pleaded, may be admissible. Jewell v. Jewell, 2 Swab. & T. 573.

In an undefended suit the Court refused to admit evidence that the respondent had infected the petitioner with the venereal disease, there being no allegation in the petition that cruelty of that nature had been committed, although there was a general charge of cruelty. Squires v. Squires, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 172; 3 Swab. & T. 541.

[See (Q) Witness.]

(c) Admissions on the Pleadings.

When the Queen's Proctor intervenes, and alleges matter which would be ground for reversing a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage, and such allegations are admitted by the petitioner by his replication, the Court will act on those admissions without requiring the proof of the facts admitted. Boulton v. Boulton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 115; 2 Swab. & T. 638.

When, after a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage at the suit of the husband had been pronounced, the Queen's Proctor intervened, and pleaded that the petitioner and the respondent had been acting in collusion for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, contrary to the justice of the case, and with that intent kept from the knowledge of the Court that the petitioner had been guilty of bigamy and adultery, and had by such conduct conduced to his wife's adultery, and the petitioner replied, admitting the charges of bigamy and adultery, but denying collusion, and that his conduct had conduced to the adultery of his wife, and pleaded that before the bigamy his wife had been guilty of adultery, the Court, upon the admissions in the replication, without requiring evidence of the facts therein stated, reversed the decree nisi, dismissed the petition, and condemned the petitioner in the costs of the intervention. Ibid.

Where a witness permanently resident abroad is examined under a commission, the presumption is, that the residence abroad continues at the time of the trial, and but slight evidence of his absence abroad is sufficient. But to make the deposition of a witness examined under a commission on account of his intended temporary absence abroad, or on account of illness, admissible at the trial, clear proof must be given that he is beyond the jurisdiction, or unable from illness to attend. Pollack v. Pollack; Mills v. Mills, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 183; 2 Swab. & T. 310.

Quære—Whether the examination of a witness taken under the order of the Court can be read in evidence at the trial, if the witness is prevented from attending it by pregnancy only. Haviland v. Haviland, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 144.

The written statements by a sick person to a medical man of the symptoms of his malady are not admissible in evidence, although the medical man has given advice upon the faith of such statement. Witt v. Witt, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 179; 3 Swab. & T. 143.

A verdict obtained upon the evidence of the parties to a suit, and the decree founded thereon, are not admissible, as evidence of the facts thereby established, in another suit between the same parties in which their evidence is inadmissible. Stoate v. Stoate, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 102; 2 Swab. & T. 223.

In a suit by the wife for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty and desertion, a jury having, upon the evidence of the parties and others, found the charges proved, the Court decreed a judicial separation:—Held, in a suit by the husband for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, that the verdict and decree in the suit for judicial separation were not admissible in evidence to prove charges of cruelty and desertion set up by the wife in her answer, because to admit them would be in effect to make use of the evidence of the parties in a suit in which their evidence was inadmissible. Ibid.

The Court will not order that the evidence taken under a commission in a cross-suit may be used at the hearing of a suit between the same parties. Hill v. Hill, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 197.

The principle on which the common law doctrine of estoppel rests is applicable to matrimonial suits, and, therefore, the judgment of this Court, upon a matter directly in issue, is conclusive upon the same matter between the same parties in another suit. Sopwith v. Sopwith, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 131; 2 Swab. & T. 160.

Semble, however, if the same issue be triable on different principles as to the admissibility of evidence in the two suits, that the doctrine of estoppel would not apply. Ibid.

Where a matter (e.g. adultery) is pleaded by way of defence to a matrimonial suit, the same strictness of proof is required to establish it as if it had been alleged in a petition as the foundation of a suit. Ibid.

In a suit, by a wife, for a judicial separation, on the ground of adultery, the husband denied the adultery, and upon the trial of that issue the Court pronounced that the adultery was not proved, and dismissed the petition. The husband subsequently filed a petition for restitution of conjugal rights:—Held, that the wife was estopped from pleading in bar the same acts of adultery as those alleged in the former suit. Ibid.

A decree founded on the evidence of the parties does not estop them from controverting, in another suit in which such evidence is inadmissible, a fact found by the decree. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 14; 3 Swab. & T. 597.

(f) Privileged Communications.

A petitioner in a suit for judicial separation was asked, in cross-examination, if she had not instructed her solicitor to institute a suit for restitution of conjugal rights instead of a suit for judicial separation:—Held, that she was bound to answer the question. Maccann v. Maccann, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 29; 3 Swab. & T. 142.

(1) In British Colonies.

Marriages of British subjects in British plantations are governed by the common law of England, unless it is otherwise provided by the Imperial legislature or that of the colony. Therefore, evidence of the solemnization by a clergyman of the Church of England according to the rites and ceremonies of that Church and of cohabitation, was held sufficient proof of a marriage between British subjects in Norfolk Island, then a British penal settlement. Limerick v. Limerick, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 92.

(2) In Foreign Countries.

A certificate of a marriage in a foreign country, not purporting to be a copy of an entry in the register of marriages kept by the law of that country, but only containing a reference to the register, cannot be received as evidence of the marriage, although it would be evidence of the marriage in the foreign courts. Finlay v. Finlay, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 149.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage, it appeared that the petitioner and respondent had lived together for five years in Virginia, and were received in society as man and wife; that by the law in force in Virginia, when the cohabitation began, no religious ceremony was necessary to the validity of a marriage, nor was any registry of marriages required to be kept; and that in consequence of war in Virginia, the record of any religious ceremony which might have taken place could not now be obtained:—Held, that there was sufficient proof of the marriage. Rooker v. Rooker, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 42; 3 Swab. & T. 576.

Identity may be proved by circumstantial evidence. Ibid.

(h) In Aggravation of Damages.

On an issue of adultery raised between husband and wife, to be tried by a jury, who have also to assess damages against a co-respondent who has not appeared, no evidence which is not admissible against the respondent can be given to shew that the co-respondent has been guilty of adultery; but evidence in aggravation of damages is admissible. The jury found a verdict for the respondent, and assessed the damages at one farthing. Stone v. Stone, 3 Swab. & T. 608.

(Q) WITNESS.

In answer to a petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, the wife pleaded countercharges of cruelty and desertion, and prayed for a judicial separation:—Held, that the wife's evidence was inadmissible to prove cruelty and desertion. Whittal v. Whittal, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 43.

The fact that a husband's answer to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights pleads adultery by the wife, and prays a judicial separation, does not render the evidence of the husband inadmissible. Burroughs v. Burroughs, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 56; 2 Swab. & T. 544.

In a suit by a wife for judicial separation on the ground of adultery coupled with cruelty, the evidence of the parties is inadmissible; but if the husband has appeared and has filed an answer, the Court will at the hearing, upon the wife abandoning the charge of adultery, allow it to be struck out of the petition, in order that such evidence may be admitted. Hudson v. Hudson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 5; 3 Swab. & T. 314.

Petition for judicial separation dismissed upon the facts proved. Ibid.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, the only evidence of the wife's adultery was a confession by her and proof of some slight familiarities between her and the co-respondent. The Court deemed this evidence insufficient, and under the 43rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. examined the petitioner, who was the sole witness of an act of impropriety conclusively proving adultery, and upon his evidence pronounced a decree nisi, but refused to condemn the co-respondent, who had not been personally served, in costs. Tatham v. Tatham, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 140; 3 Swab. & T. 511.

(b) Commission to examine.

Where the husband applies for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, and the wife does not oppose, the Court will grant the application, upon the husband's paying into the registry a sum sufficient to defray the wife's expenses incidental thereto. Baily v. Baily, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 47; 2 Swab. & T. 112.

As a general rule, a commission to examine witnesses in a suit will not be granted before issue joined. Shaw v. Shaw, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 95; 2 Swab. & T. 642.

When a commission to examine witnesses is granted in a suit in which no appearance has been entered, the Commissioner is nominated in the registry, and not by the petitioner. Lodge v. Lodge, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 93.

An application for a commission to examine witnesses may be refused on the ground of unreasonable delay. Stone v. Stone, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 33.

(1) Notice of.

Where a notice was served on the respondent's attorney in London, at two o'clock on Saturday, that a witness would be examined under an order of Court on the following Monday at Bath, the Court held that such notice was insufficient, and rejected the deposition. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 39; 3 Swab. & T. 397.

(2) Before Trial.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage, the Court, before the time for entering an appearance by the co-respondent had expired, allowed the petitioner to examine a proposed witness who was dangerously ill. Stone v. Stone, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 136.

When a petition has been filed the Court will allow witnesses who are about to go abroad to be examined before service of the citation. Brown v. Brown, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 203.

Quære—Whether depositions taken upon such an examination are admissible in evidence at the hearing. Ibid.

(3) At the Trial.

Where, at the hearing of a suit for dissolution of marriage, the petitioner, in pursuance of an order under section 43. of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, is present; if the Court allows the counsel of the respondent to call him, he must be treated as the witness of the respondent. He cannot be cross-examined by the respondent; and before he is sworn the respondent's case must be opened. Giles v. Giles, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 209.

If the respondent's counsel calls witnesses, the Court will expect him to open his own case and comment on the petitioner's evidence before he calls his own witnesses. If the co-respondent's counsel examines a witness called by the respondent, he can do so only by way of examination in chief, adopting the witness as his own. Glennie v. Glennie, 3 Swab. & T. 109.

If a wife, in a suit by her for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery and cruelty, gives evidence in support of the charge of cruelty, she cannot, in cross-examination, be asked questions tending to shew that she has been guilty of adultery. Fisher v. Fisher, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 24.

A respondent who, in his answer, simply denies the cruelty charged in a petition, may cross-examine the petitioner, if called, as to her general conduct, for the purpose of impeaching her credit, but her answer as to any matters not bearing upon the issue cannot be contradicted. Baker v. Baker, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 145; 3 Swab. & T. 213.

(e) Evidence to contradict.

Under the 23rd section of "The Common Law Procedure Act, 1854," 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, it is not competent for a party to prove that his own witness has formerly made a statement inconsistent with his present testimony. Ryberg v. Ryberg, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 112.

A petition by a husband for dissolution of marriage claimed damages. The co-respondent traversed the adultery, and charged the petitioner with cruelty. At the trial the petitioner called witnesses as to his general conduct towards his wife; and on the part of the co-respondent evidence was given of specific acts of cruelty:—Held, that, in reply, the petitioner might call witnesses to contradict the evidence of specific acts of cruelty, but not to prove his general conduct. Narracott v. Narracott, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 61; 3 Swab. & T. 408.

(1) Right to.

By obtaining an order of protection, a wife does not deprive herself of her right to alimony pendente lite in a suit subsequently instituted by her for dissolution of marriage. Hakewill v. Hakewill, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 254.

The institution of vexatious suits, by the wife against the husband, is a ground for allotting alimony pendente lite at less than the usual rate. Ibid.

Where the husband, a pilot in the Bengal pilotage service, whose annual salary, when on full pay, was 540*l.*, was, at the time of an application for alimony pendente lite, in England, upon six months' leave of absence without pay, and he had neither property nor income, the Court refused to allot alimony. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 82; 2 Swab. & T. 434.

Where the husband, a respondent, has not entered an appearance, alimony pendente lite by consent will not be allotted. Clarke v. Clarke, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 165.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage, instituted by an infant husband, by his guardian, it appeared from the answer to a petition for alimony pendente lite that the sole property to which the husband was entitled was a contingent reversionary interest:—Held, that the wife was not entitled to alimony. Beavan v. Beavan, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 166; 2 Swab. & T. 652.

In allotting alimony pendente lite the wife must be considered as innocent. Her omission to file an answer to a petition charging her with adultery is no ground for refusing to allot alimony or allotting less than the usual amount. Smith v. Smith, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 91.

Where the answer to a petition for alimony alleged that the wife was in possession of property of the husband, the Court refused to allot alimony until she should account for the same. Bremner v. Bremner, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 119; 3 Swab. & T. 249.

Where the husband had no income, and his only property was a legacy of 500*l.*, not payable until eleven months after the application for alimony, the Court refused to allot alimony pendente lite. Brown v. Brown, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 144; 3 Swab. & T. 217.

A wife who is undergoing a sentence of imprisonment for felony is, nevertheless, entitled to alimony pendente lite. Kelly v. Kelly, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 181.

An order that alimony pendente lite be paid to the wife will, on her application, be varied by making the alimony payable to the wife or to her solicitor, but she must bear the costs of the application. Ibid.

Where a wife was undergoing a sentence of imprisonment the Court refused so to vary the order without an affidavit by her that she wished the alteration to be made. Ibid.

Where a husband in his answer alleged that he was in insolvent circumstances, and that his only income was weekly wages of meat, drink, washing and lodging, and 4*s*. a week, the Court refused to allot alimony pendente lite. Semble—That a wife, by applying to the Court for an allotment of alimony, upon the husband's answer is not precluded from afterwards examining witnesses in support of her petition. Capstick v. Capstick, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 105.

(2) When and how long payable.

The wife is entitled to an allotment of alimony pendente lite at any time before the hearing, although evidence has been taken de bene esse in support of the petition which proves that she has been guilty of adultery. Phillips v. Phillips, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 107; 4 Swab. & T. 129.

A decree nisi for dissolution of marriage is final as between the parties, and therefore on such a decree being pronounced, alimony pendente lite ceases to be payable. Where a husband has obtained such a decree, the Court will not make it absolute, though the time for doing so has arrived, until arrears of alimony pendente lite are paid. Latham v. Latham, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 163; 2 Swab. & T. 299.

Alimony pendente lite is payable from the date of the service, not of the return, of the citation. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 165.

Semble—That alimony pendente lite in a suit by a husband continues payable after a decree nisi, and until it is made absolute. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 127; 3 Swab. & T. 214.

In suits for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, alimony pendente lite ceases when the adultery has been finally established. Therefore, if the cause is heard by the Court, it ceases when the decree nisi is pronounced; if it is tried by a jury, it ceases when the time for moving for a new trial has elapsed without an application for a new trial being made, or if such a motion has been made and refused, when the time for appealing against such refusal has elapsed. Wells v. Wells, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. &. A. 151; 3 Swab. & T. 542.

The trial of a suit by the wife for judicial separation being postponed at her instance, the Court directed the payment of the alimony pendente lite which had been allotted to her to be suspended from the date of the postponement until the cause was tried. Rogers v. Rogers, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 87; 4 Swab. & T. 82.

(3) Amount of, and how ascertained.

When the accounts of the husband's income, in his answer to a petition for alimony, are complicated, the Court may refer it to the Registrar to ascertain what is the amount of income admitted by the answer. Smith v. Smith, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 207.

In accordance with the practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts, a husband is not entitled to deduct from his income the annual premium payable upon a policy of insurance upon his life; but where such a policy was settled upon trust for the benefit of his wife and children after his death, and the annual premium was deducted by his employers from his salary, and paid over by them to the insurance office in pursuance of an agreement with them, the Court deducted the amount of the premium in estimating his income. Forster v. Forster, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 84; 2 Swab. & T. 553.

Where the answer to a petition for alimony alleges that property of which the husband is owner is mortgaged, it should state the date of the mortgage and the name of the mortgagee as well as the amount of the mortgage debt. Crampton v. Crampton, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 142.

All the valuable property of the husband will be taken into account in allotting alimony, although he may derive no income from it. Therefore the value of shares in a joint-stock company, although no dividend is payable upon them, and the annual value of houses occupied by the husband or by others rent free, should be stated in the answer. Ibid.

Payments made by the husband to the wife, since the service of the citation, will be deducted from alimony pendente lite. Ibid.

The adultery of the wife is no ground for allotting less than the usual amount of alimony pendente lite, and the averment of such adultery in the answer is irrelevant. Ibid.

The circumstance that the husband has to maintain several children, the issue of a former marriage, is no ground for allotting less than one-fifth of his income as alimony pendente lite. Hill v. Hill, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 104.

(4) To whom payable.

The Court will not make an order for the payment of alimony pendente lite to the wife's attorney without a written consent from her. Brown v. Brown, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 102; 4 Swab. & T. 144.

(b) Permanent Alimony.

[See ante, (A), Harmer v. Harmer.]

(1) When and on what Principles awarded.

The amount of permanent alimony is not varied by the amount of marital delinquency. In allotting it regard should be had to the status of both parties, but it can never be increased in order to mulct the guilty party. Hooper v. Hooper, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 49.

In the absence of proof that the husband's income has altered, permanent alimony will be awarded upon the income upon which alimony pendente lite was allotted, and neither party will be allowed to dispute the correctness of the estimate then taken. Franks v. Franks, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 25.

Quære—Whether, upon the application for permanent alimony, a party can shew that there has been such alteration in the husband's income, unless he has previously filed a pleading setting forth the facts on which he relies. Ibid.

In the absence of proof that the husband's income has altered since the application for alimony pendente lite, permanent alimony will be allotted upon that which appeared then to be his income, although the wife may since have discovered that his income at that time was greater. Greenwood v. Greenwood, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 136.

Where the husband's income has diminished since the allotment of alimony pendente lite, he may, upon the application for permanent alimony, bring that fact before the Court by affidavit. It is not necessary that he should file a petition alleging such a diminution. Davies v. Davies, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 152.

Principles of allotment. Wilcocks v. Wilcocks, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 205.

Where a petition for alimony alleges that the husband has a "net annual income of," &c., he must in his answer state the amount of his gross income, and specify any deductions claimed. It is not sufficient if he states merely the amount of his net annual income. Nokes v. Nokes, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 24; 3 Swab. & T. 529.

In stating the income derived from land, the answer should state the gross rental and specify the outgoings. Ibid.

An allegation in an answer, "to the best of my judgment I value my stock-in-trade at," &c., is sufficient. Ibid.

The wife applied for permanent alimony on a decree for judicial separation by reason of cruelty. The husband stated on affidavit that, since the petition for alimony pendente lite, he had parted with his business (which was the principal source of income) for a yearly payment of 300*l.* for seven years, and 5 per cent. on the value of warehouse, stock-in-trade, debts, &c. The Court held that, in allotting alimony, the 300*l.* yearly must be taken as income, observing that, if the income really failed, the husband could apply for reduction of alimony. Moore v. Moore, 3 Swab. & T. 606.

The Court possesses larger powers than the Ecclesiastical Courts possessed to enforce orders for the payment of alimony. But in making orders for the payment of permanent alimony after a decree of judicial separation, it is bound by the same rules as the Ecclesiastical Courts, and therefore it will not order a husband to execute a deed charging his property with the payment of alimony, as it would thereby prevent him from making use of his property for the purpose of endeavouring to increase his income. Hyde v. Hyde, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 63; 4 Swab. & T. 80.

In allotting permanent alimony the husband's income in respect of an annuity payable to him for a term of ten years must be taken during the term to be the amount of the annuity, and not a percentage on the present value of the annuity. Moore v. Moore, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 146.

(2) Amount awarded.

Where the only income of the husband was 60*l.* a year, derived from independent property, and it appeared that he had turned his wife out of doors, and that his mistress was living with him, the Court awarded a moiety of the income as permanent alimony. Avila v. Avila, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 176.

(3) Deductions.

In allotting alimony where the wife is supporting herself by her own exertions, her earnings must be taken into consideration. Goodheim v. Goodheim, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 162; 2 Swab. & T. 250.

In the allotment of alimony, a voluntary annual allowance made to the husband by a parent forms no part of the husband's faculties. Haviland v. Haviland, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 67; 3 Swab. & T. 114.

Upon the allotment of alimony, if a husband has contracted to pay off a debt by annual instalments, the amount of each instalment may be deducted from his annual income. Patterson v. Patterson, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 36.

(4) Examination as to.

Where the answer of a husband to a petition for alimony is not sufficiently explicit, he will, under the 12th rule of Further Rules, be ordered to give a further and fuller answer; but he will not be ordered to attend the hearing that he may be examined in open court, unless his answer is evasive. Clark v. Clark, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 32.

(5) To whom payable.

When alimony is by the terms of the order allotting it made payable to the wife, the husband is not bound, at her request, to pay it to her solicitor. The Court allowed such an order to be amended by making the alimony payable to the wife's solicitor, but refused to allow her the costs of the motion. Parr v. Parr, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 90.

(6) Other Matters.

If permanent alimony has been allotted to a wife on her obtaining a decree of judicial separation, and the husband afterwards obtains a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage on the ground of her adultery, the Court will not, before that decree has been made absolute, discharge the order for payment of alimony. Stoate v. Stoate, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 108.

Under Rule 29, which requires that eight days at least before moving for permanent alimony notice of the motion should be given, the eight days must be reckoned exclusive of the day on which the notice is given and of that on which the motion is made. Robinson v. Robinson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 189.

Where a wife was the unsuccessful party in two suits, the one brought by herself for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, the other by the husband on the ground of adultery, the Court refused to entertain a petition by her for permanent alimony, filed subsequently to the rule nisi, and antecedently to the final decree. Quære—Whether the decree nisi is not final as regards the parties. Winstone v. Winstone, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 109; 2 Swab. & T. 246.

After a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage at the suit of the wife, the husband will not be ordered to attend in court that he may be examined on his answer to the petition for alimony pendente lite, with a view to getting an order that he secure a provision to the wife under the 32nd section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. The wife may, however, examine witnesses to shew the husband's means. Mead v. Mead, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 30.

Where an answer is filed to a petition for alimony pendente lite, but no such alimony is allotted, and the wife afterwards applies for permanent alimony, she will not be allowed to file a fresh petition, but, upon giving notice, may examine witnesses to contradict the statements in the husband's answer to the petition for alimony pendente lite. Sykes v. Sykes, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 38.

If upon an application for permanent alimony the wife desires to shew that the husband's income has increased or that her own has diminished since alimony pendente lite was allotted, her proper course is to file a petition alleging such increase or diminution. Fisk v. Fisk, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 60.

Quære—Whether when such a petition has been filed, respondent is entitled to file an answer thereto. Ibid.

The original order for payment of alimony is entered in the court book, and an office copy of it is delivered to the party in whose favour it is made. Parr v. Parr, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 91.

The proper mode of effecting service of such an order is to leave a copy, and at the same time to produce the original office copy. Ibid.

(c) Permanent Maintenance.

(1) For the Wife.

Quære—Whether, when a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage has been pronounced, the Court can, before the time for making it absolute has arrived, order that the husband make a provision for the wife, under section 32. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. Laxton v. Laxton, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 208.

Quære—Whether Latham v. Latham is rightly decided. Ibid.

The rule of the Ecclesiastical Courts as to the amount of permanent alimony awarded to a wife who had obtained a divorce a mensa et thoro, furnishes no guide for the exercise of the discretion of the Court in determining what provision should be made by a husband for a wife who has obtained a decree of dissolution of marriage. The principles by which the Court will be guided in exercising that discretion are, that the wife having by her husband's misconduct been deprived of her position, she ought not to purchase redress at the cost of being left destitute; that it would be impolitic to give a wife any great pecuniary interest in obtaining a dissolution of the marriage tie; and that such provision should be payable only so long as the wife remains chaste and unmarried. Fisher v. Fisher, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 1; 2 Swab. & T. 410.

Where a wife, who had obtained a decree of dissolution of marriage, had no fortune, and her husband had some, and also trading profits, neither large nor certain, the Court considered that the wife was entitled to a maintenance only, and ordered that the husband should secure to her an annuity of 100*l.* for the support of herself and her daughter, payable so long as she should remain chaste and unmarried, to be reduced to 80*l.* if the daughter should die or marry. Ibid.

In exercising the power given by the 32nd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, of ordering the husband to make provision for a wife who has obtained a decree of dissolution of marriage, the Court will generally be guided by the principles laid down in Fisher v. Fisher, where the husband was ordered to secure to the wife, so long as she should remain chaste and unmarried, an annuity sufficient to maintain her. There may, however, be circumstances in a case which would justify the Court in ordering a more liberal provision for the wife. A wife having obtained a decree of dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and desertion, the Court, taking into consideration the conduct of the parties and other circumstances, ordered the husband to secure to her the payment of the sum of 2,000*l.* absolutely. Morris v. Morris, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 33.

The Court has no jurisdiction to order that a husband should make a provision for a wife separated from him on the ground of her cruelty. Dart v. Dart, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 125; 3 Swab. & T. 208.

In awarding a permanent provision under the 32nd section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. to a woman whose marriage has been dissolved by reason of her husband's misconduct, the Court will in future act upon the same principles as those upon which the Ecclesiastical Courts allotted permanent alimony after a decree of divorce a mensa et thoro, and will order him to secure to her about one-third of the joint income. Fisher v. Fisher overruled. Sidney v. Sidney, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 122; 4 Swab. & T. 178.

An order for permanent provision under the 32nd section forms part of the decree absolute. Ibid.

After a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage at the suit of the wife, an application was made, under section 32. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, for an order that the husband should secure to his wife a sum of money; but as it appeared that the husband's income, derived from a profession, only amounted to 300*l.* a year, and the wife, in addition to an income of 12*l.*, was entitled in reversion on the death of a person aged eighty to property which would produce an income of 70*l.*, the Court declined to make any order. Rawlins v. Rawlins, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 147; 4 Swab. & T. 158.

(2) For Children.

Where a decree of judicial separation at the suit of the wife had been pronounced, and the Court had ordered that she should have the custody of three children, all under the age of seven, alimony pendente lite having been allotted on the assumption that the husband's income was 400*l.* per annum, the Court allotted to the wife 160*l.* per annum as permanent alimony, 100*l.* for herself and 20*l.* per annum for each of the children. Whildon v. Whildon, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 174; nom. Whieldon v. Whieldon, 2 Swab. & T. 388.

On pronouncing a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the adultery of a wife, who on her marriage had a fortune of 1,678*l.*, which was not settled, but was received by the husband, the Court ordered that the husband should settle 1,000*l.* upon trust that the interest be applied for the benefit of the wife so long as she conducted herself properly and remained unmarried; and that upon her interest ceasing, the fund should be held in trust for the children of the marriage in equal shares; that the 1,000*l.* damages awarded against the co-respondent should be paid to the husband in lieu of the sum he would have to settle, and that the decree should be suspended until the settlement should be made. Bent v. Bent, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 175; 2 Swab. & T. 392.

A wife was entitled to the interest of 4,000*l.* vested in trustees for her life, with a power of appointment amongst her children. In a suit for judicial separation on the ground of her adultery, the adultery having been proved, the Court ordered that the trustees of the wife should pay over a moiety of her income to trustees named by the petitioner to be applied by the latter to the maintenance and education of the children of the marriage. The Court cannot interfere with a power of appointment vested in a wife. Seatle v. Seatle, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 216.

The Court has no power to order that a provision should be made for the maintenance and education of a child above the age of sixteen. Webster v. Webster, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 184.

(3) Settled Property.

The Court will not make an order as to the application of the settled property of the parties until after a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage has been made absolute. Horne v. Horne, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 111.

On an application for an order as to settled property, the settlement should be brought before the Court upon affidavit, and the Court upon consideration of the facts proved at the trial will decide as to the order to be made. Horne v. Horne, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 200.

A respondent who is served with a copy of a petition for dissolution of marriage, praying also for an order as to the settled property, if he does not appear, is not entitled to notice of the application. Ibid.

Under a post-nuptial settlement, two-thirds of the dividends of certain stock, to which the wife at the time of the marriage was entitled, were settled upon the wife for life for her separate use, and the remaining one-third on the husband for life, with benefit of survivorship for life, the corpus of the said fund, after the death of the survivor, to go to the issue of the marriage. The Court directed that, until further orders, the husband's portion of the income of the settled property should be paid to the wife, and in the event of her death in his lifetime the whole of the income, until further order, should be applied to the benefit of the child. Boynton v. Boynton, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 156; 2 Swab. & T. 275.

By a marriage settlement property was settled upon the husband for life, then upon the wife for life, then upon the children of the marriage. The marriage having been dissolved on the ground of the adultery of the wife, who continued to cohabit with the co-respondent, the Court, under section 5. of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, ordered that after the death of the petitioner the settled property should, in the event of the respondent surviving the petitioner, be applied to the benefit of the children of the marriage as if the respondent were dead. Pearce v. Pearce, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 182.

By settlements made before and after the marriage 724*l.* consols, the property of the husband, and 700*l.*, and also some leaseholds, the property of the wife's father, were settled upon the wife for life, and after her death on the husband for life, and after the death of the survivor upon the children of the marriage. The Court, after a decree absolute for dissolution of marriage at the suit of the wife, made an order, under section 5. of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, that the trustees of the settlements should deal with the proceeds of the property which came from the wife as if the husband was dead at the date of the decree absolute, but as to the 724*l.* settled by the husband, refused to alter the settlement. Johnson v. Johnson, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 29.

The Court has no power in a suit for dissolution of marriage to alter the settlements where there is no issue of the marriage. Dempster v. Dempster, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 113.

By an ante-nuptial settlement personal property of the wife, producing an annual income of about 85*l.*, was settled upon the wife for life, remainder upon the husband for life, remainder upon the issue of the marriage. The husband brought no property into the settlement. The marriage having been dissolved on the ground of the wife's adultery, and it appearing that the husband's means were not sufficient for the maintenance of himself and his child, the only issue of the marriage, of which he had the custody, the Court, under section 5. of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, ordered that during the life of the wife 20*l.* of her annual income should be paid by the trustees of the settlement for the benefit of the child. Webster v. Webster, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 29; 3 Swab. & T. 106.

A petition for an order as to the application of settled property should give full information as to the means of the applicant. Ibid.

Where a marriage is dissolved on the ground of the wife's adultery, the Court will not, under section 5. of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, deprive the husband of any interest he takes under a settlement, even for the purpose of applying it for the benefit of the children of the marriage. Thompson v. Thompson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 39; 2 Swab. & T. 649.

After a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage had been granted, the petitioner filed a petition praying for an order as to the application of settled property. Before the decree was made absolute, the respondent was served abroad with a copy of the petition and with a notice that after the decree absolute the Court would be moved to make the order prayed:—Held, that the Court had power to entertain the application in the absence of the respondent. Semble—That if no petition had been filed but notice only of an intended application had been given to the respondent, the Court could not have made an order as to the settled property. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 124; 3 Swab. & T. 207.

Under the marriage settlement of her father, a wife, upon the ground of whose adultery a divorce had been granted, was entitled to a sum of money after the death of her father in the event of his not otherwise disposing of it:—Held, that this was not property to which the wife was entitled in reversion, and that the Court therefore had no power under section 45. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. to order a settlement of it. Stone v. Stone, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 95; 3 Swab. & T. 372.

A husband, with moneys received by him in right of his wife, purchased railway stock, which was transferred into their joint names. By a deed of separation, this stock was vested in trustees upon trust for the husband for life, then for the wife for life, and afterwards for the children of the marriage, subject to the proviso that in the event of the marriage being dissolved the trusts should become null and void. The marriage was dissolved on the ground of the wife's adultery, and the trustees thereupon sold the railway stock and paid the proceeds to the wife:—Held, that assuming the deed of separation to be a post-nuptial settlement within the meaning of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61. s. 5, the trusts of the deed having determined, the Court had no power to deal with the property comprised in it. Ibid.

Semble—That such a deed is a post-nuptial settlement within the meaning of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61. s. 5. Ibid.

Where the petitioner had entered into a covenant binding his estate with the payment of an annuity to the respondent, in the event of her surviving him, the Court directed the annuity, when recovered, to be paid for the benefit of the children of the marriage. Callwell v. Callwell, 3 Swab. & T. 259.

After a final decree of dissolution of marriage, the Court may make an order as to the application of settled property for the benefit of children of the marriage, although the petitioner be dead. Ling v. Ling, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 52; 4 Swab. & T. 99.

(a) Custody of.

Where the children, with regard to whom an order for custody was applied for, were a girl aged twenty and two boys aged respectively eighteen and sixteen,—the Court held, that the 35th section of the Divorce Act, 1857, gave no jurisdiction; and that where the parent would have no power of control, the Court has none. Ryder v. Ryder, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 44; 2 Swab. & T. 225.

The Court may confer a benefit upon parties not before it, by ordering maintenance, though it cannot interfere with their liberty by an order made in a suit to which they are not parties. Ibid.

A decree of dissolution of marriage at the suit of the wife having been pronounced, the Court directed that, until further order, she should have the custody of a child, the only issue of the marriage, that she should not remove it out of the jurisdiction without the permission of the Court, and that the father should have reasonable access to it. Boynton v. Boynton, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 156; 2 Swab. & T. 275.

In the interval between a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage being pronounced and its being made absolute, the only order the Court can make as to the custody of children is an interim order, under section 35. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. Cubley v. Cubley, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 161.

The father is entitled at common law to the custody of the child at its mother's breast. The Court in making an order as to the custody pendente lite will not, unless some good cause is shewn, take away this right. Cartledge v. Cartledge, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 85; 2 Swab. & T. 567.

The Court will not, at the hearing of a cause, entertain an application for the custody of children if it is founded upon evidence not admissible in the cause, nor an application for permanent alimony. They should be made on a motion day. But at the hearing the Court may direct that the petitioner have the custody of children until further order, if the facts proved in the cause would warrant such an order, e.g., if the adultery of the respondent be proved. Wallace v. Wallace, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 34.

The Court refused to order that a wife who had obtained a decree of judicial separation should have the custody of an idiot child which was properly taken care of by the husband, where the custody was asked for, in order that it might be placed in an asylum for its own benefit, and not in order that the wife might have the solace of its society. Semble—That an application for the custody of a child upon such a ground should be made to the Court of Chancery. Cooke v. Cooke, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 180; 3 Swab. & T. 248.

The Court will not, at the hearing of a suit, order that the petitioner have the custody of the children of the marriage unless the petition prays for such custody. Boddy v. Boddy, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 163.

When a marriage is dissolved on the ground of the wife's adultery, the Court will not order that she have the custody of or access to the children of the marriage. Bent v. Bent, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 175; 2 Swab. & T. 392.

Where a petition for dissolution of marriage is dismissed, the Court has no power to make an order as to the custody of, or access to, the children of the marriage. Seddon v. Seddon, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 101; 2 Swab. & T. 640.

(b) Access to.

[See ante, (a) Bent v. Bent and Seddon v. Seddon.]

For the principles on which access to a child is granted or refused to a mother petitioning under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54. see In re Winscom, 2 Hem. & M. 540.

After a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, the Court will not order that she have access to the children of the marriage. Clout v. Clout, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 176; 2 Swab. & T. 391.

After a decree of judicial separation has been pronounced, the Court will not order that the wife have access to children of the marriage, unless application be made by petition. Anthony v. Anthony, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 208.

The Court has jurisdiction, pendente lite, to order that one of the parties to the suit shall have access merely to the children of the marriage. Thompson v.

Thompson, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 213; 2 Swab. & T. 402.

On an application for an order for access to children pending suit on behalf of the mother, the Court will require to be satisfied that the motive is natural love and affection for the children, and that the applicant has no indirect object in view; as to which, lapse of time in making the application may be material. The Court will also consider the convenience of all parties in the circumstances, and how the children would probably be affected if the order were made. Codrington v. Codrington, 3 Swab. & T. 496.

(T) PRACTICE.

(a) Trial of Causes.

(1) Directions as to Mode of Trial.

When the pleadings are complete the Court will, upon the application of a petitioner, direct the mode of trial, although he may not have complied with an order to furnish particulars of a charge in the petition. Gough v. Gough, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 128.

In 1860 a wife filed a petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty. When the cause came on for trial it was withdrawn from the jury by agreement of the parties, the petitioner undertaking not to institute other proceedings in the Divorce Court. In 1863 the wife instituted a fresh suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty, the acts of misconduct alleged in the petition being, with the exception of some acts of adultery of later date, the same as those charged in the first petition. The respondent pleaded the agreement in bar. Upon application by the petitioner for directions as to the mode of trial, the Court refused to make any order, upon the ground that the institution of the second suit was a gross breach of good faith and a violation of the agreement, by which the petitioner had surrendered irrevocably any legal right to relief in respect of misconduct charged in the first petition. Rowley v. Rowley, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 54; 3 Swab. & T. 338.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, the respondent and co-respondent traversed the adultery, and the respondent further counter-charged adultery and cruelty. The petitioner having allowed the time for filing a replication to the respondent's answer to expire without replying or obtaining further time, the respondent moved the Court to order the trial of this cause:—Held, that the pleadings being incomplete, the Court could not order the mode of trial. Broadwood v. Broadwood, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 10.

Where issue has been joined in a matrimonial suit, the Court will not refuse to give directions as to the mode of trial, as such refusal is tantamount to a dismissal of the petition, and cannot be appealed from to the House of Lords. Rowley v. Rowley, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 97; 4 Swab. & T. 137.

(2) By the Court.

The determination of issues of fact raised by pleas to the discretion of the Court under the proviso to section 31. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. rests solely with the Court. Narracott v. Narracott, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 132; 3 Swab. & T. 408.

(3) By the Full Court.

The Judge Ordinary will not, except for some sufficient reason, order a suit, which he is empowered by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. to hear alone, to be heard before the full Court. The desire of one of the parties that it may be so heard, and the probability that difficult questions of law may arise at the hearing, do not constitute a sufficient reason. Bevan v. Bevan, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 23.

(4) By Affidavits.

When leave is granted to prove a petition by affidavits, the order granting such leave must be drawn up before the hearing, and should be filed with the other papers. Webb v. Webb, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 63.

When the affidavits filed by a person shewing cause against a decree being made absolute and the affidavits in answer raise issues not proper to be decided on affidavits, the Court will order the issues to be tried by a jury. They cannot be tried by the Court itself on oral evidence. Masters v. Masters, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 7.

(5) By Jury.

The Queen's Proctor is on the same footing with all the other suitors of the Court. Gray v. Gray, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 83.

Quære—Whether a suitor for dissolution of marriage is entitled under the statute to a jury. Ibid.

When a question of impotence is raised in a suit, the appointment of two medical inspectors rests with the Court; but it will allow the parties to select them, and should they not agree, each will be allowed to nominate one. C—— v. C——, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 12.

The respondent, in answer to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, pleaded the impotency of the petitioner. The Court, upon the application of the petitioner, ordered the cause to be tried by a jury, notwithstanding the respondent's objection to that mode of trial. Ibid.

Although in a suit for judicial separation the Court, under section 36. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, may in its discretion refuse to direct that questions of fact be tried by a jury, it will generally at the request of either of the parties allow a jury. The circumstance that cruelty is in issue is no ground for refusing a jury. Taylor v. Taylor, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 126.

Where a cause is tried by a jury, the jury may be asked for a verdict upon issues of fact raised by pleas to the discretion of the Court, as an assistance to the Court in forming its opinion, but their verdict may be dispensed with. Narracott v. Narracott, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 132; 3 Swab. & T. 408.

There is no identity in legal effect between the written statement of questions of fact to be tried, prepared under section 38. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, and the Nisi Prius record in an action. Ibid.

(6) By Issues at the Assizes.

Where, upon a petition for dissolution of marriage, it appeared that by far the greater part of the witnesses to the facts in the suit resided at a great distance from London, the Court directed issues upon the charges and counter-charges of adultery and cruelty to be tried at the assizes. Richardes v. Richardes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 48.

Where an issue is ordered to be tried at the assizes, under section 40. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, it should be framed as an issue sent by the Court of Chancery. Hogg v. Hogg, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 209.

(b) Postponing the Trial.

The Court will, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7, grant leave for the Queen's Proctor to intervene in a suit for dissolution of marriage upon the statement of counsel, without affidavit, that the Attorney General has directed the Queen's Proctor to apply for such leave, but will not order the hearing of the petition to be postponed in order that he may plead to the petition, unless an affidavit shewing grounds for such postponement be filed, and notice be given to the parties. Anonymous case, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 88; 2 Swab. & T. 249.

The Court will not postpone the trial of a cause on the application of one of the parties if no notice of the motion has been given to the other party. Hepworth v. Hepworth, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 198; 2 Swab. & T. 514.

(c) Setting down Cause for Trial.

Where five months had elapsed since the Court had directed that a cause should be tried without jury, and the petitioner had not set down the cause for trial, the Court, on the application of the respondent, gave him leave to set it down for trial if the petitioner should not do so within a fortnight. Semble—That there is no provision in the Rules as to setting down a cause for trial, except where it is ordered to be tried by jury. Hare v. Hare, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 7; 2 Swab. & T. 218.

Where a petition has been set down for hearing and is afterwards amended and re-served, it must be re-entered in the usual course, and cannot be restored to the place the original suit occupied in the list of causes. Milner v. Milner, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 103.

(1) Generally.

The respondent's counsel may not controvert allegations of the petition not denied by the answer; but on the assumption that such allegations are true, he may cross-examine the witnesses and address the Court, for the purpose of shewing that a decree ought not to be pronounced. Tollemache v. Tollemache, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 113.

The respondent's counsel cannot reserve his comments on the petitioner's evidence until he sums up his own evidence. Glennie v. Glennie, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 17.

The co-respondent's counsel, if he calls no witnesses, should address the Court after the opening speech of the respondent's counsel. Ibid.

The co-respondent's counsel, by examining the witnesses of the respondent, adopts them as his own. Ibid.

(2) Right to begin.

Where, in a suit for dissolution by husband against wife, the wife pleaded that the marriage was null on account of the husband's impotency, the Court held that, there being substantially a traverse of the marriage, the petitioner had the right to begin. Serrell v. Serrell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 55; 2 Swab. & T. 422.

Where the Judge Ordinary is sitting without a jury, as the question of the fact of the marriage must be proved before him, the right to begin is not taken from the petitioner from the consideration that the only real issue in the case lies upon the respondent. Burroughs v. Burroughs, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 56; 2 Swab. & T. 544.

Upon an appeal from an order discharging a rule nisi for a new trial, the appellant must begin. Yeatman v. Yeatman, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 54; 3 Swab. & T. 361.

Upon such an appeal where notice has been given to the other side, the question for the Court is, not whether a rule nisi should be granted, but whether such rule should be made absolute or discharged. Ibid.

(3) Non-appearance of Parties.

When a jury has been sworn to try issues in a matrimonial suit, and neither of the parties appear, the Court will discharge the jury. Haydon v. Haydon, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 112.

(f) New Trial.

(1) Notice of Application for.

It is no ground for suspending the decree nisi after a verdict for the petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage that the respondent has given notice of an application for a new trial. Stone v. Stone, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 117; 3 Swab. & T. 212.

(2) General Principles as to granting.

In granting new trials in matrimonial suits the Court will be guided by the same principles as are the Courts of Common Law. Miller v. Miller, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 73; 2 Swab. & T. 427.

It is not a sufficient ground for setting aside the verdict of a jury as against the weight of evidence, that the Judge before whom the cause was tried would have found a different verdict. Unless the Judge is dissatisfied with the verdict, and there is reason for believing that, but for impatience, prejudice or misapprehension on the part of the jury, the verdict would not have been given, a new trial will not be granted. Ibid.

A new trial will not be granted on the ground that further evidence could be laid before the jury on a second trial, if such evidence could, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, have been obtained before the first trial. Ibid.

If a verdict has been found against two co-respondents in a suit for dissolution of marriage, and the Court afterwards, on the application of one of them, grants a new trial, on the ground that the verdict against him was contrary to the weight of evidence, there must be a new trial as to both, and pending that application the petitioner is not entitled to a decree absolute as to the other. Walker v. Walker, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 26.

Semble—That if the petitioner consented to the verdict being entered for the co-respondent who applied for a new trial he would be entitled to a decree. Ibid.

Quære—Whether, in matrimonial suits, if the verdict on one only of two issues is unsatisfactory, a new trial ought to be granted as to both. Cartlidge v. Cartlidge, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 126; 3 Swab. & T. 406.

Semble—That where in a suit by a wife for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery and cruelty, the petitioner obtains a verdict upon both issues, and a new trial as to one of them is afterwards applied for, the petitioner may abandon that issue and ask for a judicial separation upon the ground of the other charge. Ibid.

Where it is necessary for the petitioner to establish two points in order to obtain the prayer of the petition, the Court would not, even if dissatisfied with the verdict of the jury on one point, send that down for a new trial, because, if a different verdict were found on that point, it would not be sufficient to ground the relief prayed. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 3 Swab. & T. 400.

The Judge Ordinary had held that notice given to the opposite solicitor at a quarter before two P.M. on Saturday, in London, of an examination of a witness to be held at Bath at two P.M. on the following Monday, was not a reasonable and sufficient notice to enable such solicitor to attend and cross-examine, and had therefore refused to admit evidence so taken. In the circumstances, the Court refused to interfere with the ruling of the Judge Ordinary. Ibid.

Per Channell, B.—When a question to determine the admissibility of evidence has been decided by a Judge presiding at a trial by jury, the decision of the Judge on such question may be reviewed by a Court of Appeal. Ibid.

The Judge Ordinary—Quære, whether such decision of a Judge presiding at a trial is properly subject to the revision of a Court of Appeal. Ibid.

(3) Verdict against Evidence.

Where there is a conflict of evidence upon an issue of adultery (the Queen's Proctor intervening), the Court will not grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, unless it is dissatisfied with the verdict. Gethin v. Gethin, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 57; 2 Swab. & T. 560.

The Court will not grant a new trial, on the ground that witnesses called upon the first trial have wilfully suppressed material facts. Ibid.

A rule for a new trial upon the ground that a verdict is against the weight of evidence will not be granted, unless the Court is satisfied with reasonable certainty that there has been error or miscarriage. Scott v. Scott, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 1; 3 Swab. & T. 319.

A rule for a new trial will not be granted upon affidavits which do not shew surprise, but merely state that during the trial and after the close of the applicant's case material evidence had come to his knowledge. Ibid.

Where a verdict, finding that the respondent in a suit for dissolution of marriage has been guilty of adultery, is against the weight of evidence, a new trial may be granted, although the Judge who tried the cause is not dissatisfied with the verdict. Stone v. Stone, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 33.

In a suit by a husband, for dissolution of marriage, claiming damages, the respondent denied the adultery, and the co-respondent, who had not been personally served, did not appear. The jury found that the respondent had committed adultery with the co-respondent, and assessed the damages against the latter at 2,000*l.* The respondent having applied for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, the Judge Ordinary (Sir C. Cresswell), who had tried the cause, refused a rule. On appeal, his decision was reversed by a majority of the full Court, who set aside the verdict as against the respondent and the co-respondent, and made a rule absolute for a new trial as to both. Ibid.

Subsequently, the co-respondent, who was resident in Canada, and who had not heard of the institution of the suit until just before the trial, when it was too late for him to come to England, applied for leave to appear and file an answer. The Judge Ordinary (Sir J. P. Wilde) granted the application, upon condition that before the trial he should give security for costs; and on non-compliance with that condition, ordered the appearance and answer to be taken off the file. Ibid.

(4) Inconsistent Verdict.

An inconsistency in the verdict of a jury is no ground for a new trial, unless it is such that their opinion upon the substantial question for their decision cannot be ascertained. Ellyatt v. Ellyatt, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 137; 3 Swab. & T. 503.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, the jury found that the respondent had committed adultery with the co-respondent, and that the petitioner had connived at his wife's adultery, and they assessed substantial damages against the co-respondent:—Held, 1. That as there was no reason to doubt that the jury fully understood the meaning of the term, and had intended to find that the petitioner had been guilty of connivance, the inconsistency in their verdict was no ground for a new trial; 2. That as the Court was bound to dismiss the petition if it should find that the petitioner had been guilty of connivance, the co-respondent might apply for such dismissal; 3. That the co-respondent was not entitled to costs; 4. That the respondent was entitled to all her costs. Ibid.

(5) Mistake.

In a suit by a wife for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, the respondent denied the cruelty, but before the trial signed a written consent to the decree being pronounced, upon the erroneous statement of his solicitor that, upon the production of such consent at the trial, no evidence of the charges in the petition would be given. At the trial counsel appeared for the respondent, but called no witnesses. In support of the charges in the petition witnesses were examined, and the written consent was put in evidence, and a verdict was found for the petitioner:—Held, by the full Court, affirming the decision of the Judge Ordinary, that it was no ground for granting a rule for a new trial that the respondent had, in consequence of his being misled by his solicitor, abstained from adducing evidence to contradict the charges in the petition, and that thereby his character had been injured. Hill v. Hill, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 193; 2 Swab. & T. 407.

A mistake made by a witness in his evidence, if it be one likely to have disturbed the judgments, and to have misled the minds of the jury, is ground for granting a new trial. Jago v. Jago, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 10; 3 Swab. & T. 103.

(6) Misdirection.

It is no ground for a new trial that the Judge in his summing-up did not give as much weight to some parts of the evidence as they may have deserved. Codrington v. Codrington, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 60; 4 Swab. & T. 63.

(7) On Affidavits.

Where a rule nisi for a new trial has been granted on affidavits, and affidavits have been filed in answer, the party obtaining the rule will not be allowed to file affidavits in reply until the rule is argued. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 135.

(8) Appeal against Order for.

The Court has the power to extend the time (fourteen days) limited by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 2, for appealing against a decision of the Judge Ordinary granting or refusing a rule for a new trial. Boulting v. Boulting, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 81.

(g) Motions, Orders, and Decrees.

(1) Form of Decree.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage by a husband the respondent and co-respondent denied the adultery, and the co-respondent further pleaded connivance. The cause was heard by the Court, who pronounced a decree, the minute of which in the Court Book was, "The Judge Ordinary having deliberated, by his final decree dismissed the petition, &c.," the ground of dismissal not being stated. Upon the application of the petitioner, the Court afterwards varied the decree by stating therein that the Court was of opinion that the adultery was proved, but that the petitioner had connived at it, and thereupon dismissed the petition. Gipps v. Gipps, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 179.

(2) Motion for Decree Absolute.

Upon a motion to make a decree of dissolution of marriage absolute, a copy of the decree nisi should be filed. Fowler v. Fowler, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 31.

When a petition of appeal for the reversal of a decree nisi has been presented to the House of Lords, and the Court is afterwards moved to make the decree absolute, the appeal having been withdrawn, that fact should appear by affidavit. Where such an affidavit had not been filed, but the defendant's counsel admitted that the fact was so, the Court made the decree absolute. Baily v. Baily, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 163.

An application to make absolute a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage should be supported by affidavits of search for appearance by any person and of non-appearance, and if an appearance has been entered, that no affidavits in opposition to the decree have been filed. Boddy v. Boddy, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 95.

The affidavit, upon which is founded a motion to make absolute a decree nisi of dissolution of marriage, should shew that search was made in the registry at a recent date. The Court refused to make a decree absolute on the 4th of November upon an affidavit of search on the 1st of October. Stone v. Stone, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 7; 3 Swab. & T. 113.

(3) Opposing.

A respondent against whom a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage has been pronounced, cannot shew cause against the decree being made absolute, under section 7. of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. Stoate v. Stoate, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 173; 2 Swab. & T. 384.

Where affidavits have been filed in opposition to a decree nisi, the petitioner cannot in answer file an affidavit made by himself. Stoate v. Stoate, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 120.

(4) Service of.

Where orders had been made that the husband should pay the wife's costs and alimony pendente lite, and the husband had assigned the property, and could not be found, the Court allowed substituted service of the orders by leaving them at the last known residence of the husband, at his attorney's office, and at the address given in the appearance book. Nuttall v. Nuttall, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 164.

(5) Enforcing.

A decree was made in a suit in the Divorce Court whereby the husband was ordered to pay to the wife an annuity of 100*l.*, payable by monthly instalments. This decree was registered in the books of judgments kept in this court, and the Court refused to order it to be struck out, leaving the question of how far it could be made available against the husband open for discussion. Ex parte Holden, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 111; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 641.

(h) Petition.

(1) Amendment and Re-service.

A petition, by a husband, for a dissolution of marriage, alleged that the respondent, at a specified time and place, committed adultery with A. The respondent did not appear. At the hearing, the Court refused to allow the petition to be amended by adding to that charge the words "or with some person whose name is unknown to your petitioner," without re-service. Wallace v. Wallace, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 47.

A petition, by a husband, for dissolution of marriage did not charge adultery, but alleged that the respondent and co-respondent were "living and cohabiting together." Neither of the respondents appeared. At the hearing the Court refused to allow the petition to be amended, by inserting a charge of adultery, without re-service. Forman v. Forman, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 80.

If a respondent, misnamed in a petition, has been served, but has not appeared, the petition, when amended, must be re-served. Kisch v. Kisch, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 115.

(2) Withdrawing.

Where the Queen's Proctor has, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7, intervened after a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage has been pronounced, the petitioner will not be allowed to withdraw his petition; but the Court will hear the evidence in support of the pleas filed by the Queen's Proctor. Gray v. Gray, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 119; 2 Swab. & T. 263.

The Court will allow the wife to withdraw her petition for judicial separation, and file one for dissolution of marriage, if her proctor has not received from the husband her costs in the former suit. Ashley v. Ashley, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 175; 2 Swab. & T. 388.

C, the wife, obtained a decree nisi for dissolution of her marriage, the husband not appearing, after which the Queen's Proctor intervened and pleaded collusion between petitioner and respondent, and alleged that the petitioner had herself been living in adultery, and prayed to dismiss the petition and condemn the parties, or one of them, in costs; whereupon the Judge Ordinary was moved on behalf of the petitioner to direct the petition to be taken off the file of the Court, which he refused to do, and it was held, on appeal to the full Court, that the Judge Ordinary was right in such refusal. Gray v. Gray, 2 Swab. & T. 266.

Quære—If the petitioner had prayed to dismiss her petition on payment by her of the costs incurred up to that time by the Queen's Proctor's intervention. Ibid.

Leave granted to withdraw a petition for judicial separation and file a petition for dissolution of marriage upon the same grounds as those alleged in the first petition. Massey v. Massey, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 141.

(3) Dismissing.

When issues raised in a suit for dissolution of marriage come on for trial by a jury, the petitioner will not be allowed to withdraw the record; but on his application, if there is no opposition by the other parties, the petition will be dismissed. When by agreement between the parties a petition for dissolution of marriage is dismissed, the Court will not allow such agreement to be made an order of Court for the purpose of enforcing its terms. Ryder v. Ryder, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 164.

A wife who has been guilty of adultery since the commencement of the suit is not entitled to a decree of judicial separation on the ground of cruelty; but upon proof of such adultery the Court will dismiss the petition, although the respondent may not have recriminated. Drummond v. Drummond, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 177; 2 Swab. & T. 269.

Semble—That if the respondent is aware that the petitioner has been guilty of adultery, his omission to recriminate is evidence of collusion. Ibid.

The Court will not dismiss a petition by the husband for dissolution of marriage, except upon payment of the wife's taxed costs and the costs of the motion. Pearce v. Pearce, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 182.

When a verdict has been found for the respondent the Court will not dismiss the petition until the month allowed by the Rules for moving for a new trial has elapsed. Hitchcock v. Hitchcock, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 198; 2 Swab. & T. 513.

A motion to dismiss a petition after a verdict for the respondent should be supported by an affidavit that no application for a new trial has been lodged in the registry. Hill v. Hill, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 198; 2 Swab. & T. 515.

After a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage at the suit of the wife had been pronounced, the wife renewed marital intercourse with her husband, and informed her attorney that she did not wish any further proceedings to be taken in the suit. Upon an application by the husband to dismiss the petition, the Court declined to accede to it, but said that, if both parties consented, it would order all proceedings in the suit to be stayed. Lewis v. Lewis, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 199; 2 Swab. & T. 394.

Quære—Whether the Court at the instance of the parties can dismiss a petition for dissolution of marriage after a decree nisi has been pronounced. Ibid.

Where issues in a suit for dissolution of marriage have been tried by a jury the Court will not dismiss the petition on the application of the petitioner until the time allowed by the rules for moving for a new trial has elapsed. Aliter if all the parties concur in the application. Seddon v. Seddon, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 31.

If at the hearing no one appears on behalf of the petitioner, the respondent has a right to have the petition dismissed. Desmarest v. Desmarest, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 34.

Dismissing petition on respondent's application after notice of abandonment by petitioner. Symons v. Symons, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 84; 2 Swab. & T. 435.

When directions as to the trial of a cause have been given, and the petitioner fails to set it down for trial in due course, the Court will not, on the ex parte application of the respondent, dismiss the petition; but will grant a rule nisi, calling on the petitioner to shew cause why the petition should not be dismissed. Stuart v. Stuart, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 110; 3 Swab. & T. 219.

In a suit, by a husband, for dissolution of marriage, the co-respondent appeared, but filed no answer. Upon a motion, by the petitioner, for the dismissal of the petition, as against the co-respondent, on the ground that there was no evidence against him, it was held that the application could only be granted upon payment of the co-respondent's costs. Smith v. Smith, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 11.

After a decree for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of the wife's adultery, the husband, who was respondent in a cross-suit for restitution of conjugal rights, which had not been heard, moved that the petition should be dismissed. The wife refused to consent to its dismissal, except upon payment of her costs up to the date of the decree absolute:—Held, that as it did not appear in the suit for restitution that the wife had been guilty of adultery, the Court could not, without her consent, dismiss the petition; but that as her adultery disentitled her to costs, the respondent, if she did not consent, might put on the record a plea that she had been found guilty of adultery. Rolt v. Rolt, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 51; 3 Swab. & T. 604.

(4) Dismissing Second Petition.

A petition was filed by a wife for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty; a citation issued, but the respondent was not served. Afterwards the wife's solicitor, who was unaware of the former proceedings, in pursuance of fresh instructions, filed another petition for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty and adultery, and issued a citation which, with a copy of the petition, was served on the respondent, who entered an appearance. The first citation could not be found. The Court rejected a motion on behalf of the wife, that the second petition should be taken off the file, or should be dismissed, and that a fresh citation should issue on the first petition, in order that the petitioner might proceed upon the first petition. Turner v. Turner, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 134; 2 Swab. & T. 426.

(i) Citation.

(1) Form and Requisites of.

If the name of a respondent is mis-spelt in the citation, and there is no appearance, the Court will not order that service of such citation shall be deemed sufficient, but a fresh one must be extracted. Cotton v. Cotton, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 133.

Where a petition for dissolution of marriage has been served in which a mistake is made in the Christian name of the person with whom the respondent is alleged to have committed adultery, the Court will allow it to be amended, but it must be re-served. Love v. Love, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 134.

When the address of the respondent is unknown, he may be described in the citation as late of the last known place of his residence. Forster v. Forster, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 134; 3 Swab. & T. 158.

(2) Service of.

(i) Personal.

An affidavit of service of the citation, &c. should allege that the party served is a respondent in the suit. Temple v. Temple, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 34.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage, if the respondent does not appear, proof must be given at the hearing of the identity of the respondent and the person served with the citation. Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 163.

The Court will not allow a suit to proceed upon the mere undertaking of an attorney to accept service of the citation for the respondent. Personal service on the respondent is necessary, unless the Court has dispensed with such service. Milne v. Milne, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 143; 4 Swab. & T. 183.

An affidavit of service of a citation which refers to the certificate of service indorsed on the citation, and states that such indorsement is true, is insufficient; it should state in terms that the citation was served. Rich v. Rich, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 77.

(ii) By Advertisement.

When an order has been made, dispensing with personal service upon a respondent, a copy of it should be brought in with the other papers, when the Court is moved to direct the mode of trial. The insertion in a newspaper of advertisements on the 7th and 14th of a month, is a sufficient compliance with an order to advertise twice with the interval of a week. Elsley v. Elsley, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 145.

Where a respondent is cited by advertisement and leave to amend the petition is afterwards granted, the amended petition need not be advertised. Smith v. Smith, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 145; 3 Swab. & T. 216.

(k) Appearance.

(1) Time for Entering and Leave to appear.

An appearance may be entered at any time within twenty-one days from the service of the citation in a matrimonial suit. Child v. Child, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 156; 3 Swab. & T. 537.

In a suit, by the husband, for dissolution of marriage the wife did not appear. The co-respondent filed an answer, and the issue raised was set down for trial. The Court subsequently allowed the wife to enter an appearance upon an affidavit by her denying the adultery, and stating that she had been prevented by poverty from appearing earlier, but directed that the costs should not be taxed against the husband. Bent v. Bent, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 160.

An issue raised by the respondent in a suit by the husband for dissolution of marriage, in which damages were claimed against the co-respondent, having been set down for trial by a jury, the Court refused to allow the co-respondent, on the day previous to that fixed for the trial, to enter an appearance, on the ground that the application was then too late. Pounsford v. Pounsford, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 188.

(2) Search for.

The Court refused to make absolute a decree nisi of dissolution of marriage pronounced on the 30th of January, upon an affidavit that on the 30th of the ensuing April search had been made in the registry, and that no appearance had been entered in opposition to the decree, the search having been made a day too soon. Serrill v. Serrill, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 114; 2 Swab. & T. 636.

(l) Affidavits.

(1) Entitling.

In a suit of nullity by the wife, an affidavit entitled S. v. C, instead of S. falsely called C. v. C, was rejected. Sutherland v. Croomie, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 125; 3 Swab. & T. 210.

(2) Filing.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage, triable upon affidavits, in which there was no appearance, a motion for further time to file affidavits was granted, notwithstanding the 35th Rule, which directs that, "In cases to be tried upon affidavit, the petitioner and respondent shall file their affidavits within eight days from the filing of the last proceeding." Davis v. Davis, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 139.

(m) Particulars.

(1) Of Acts of Adultery.

By obtaining further time to plead the respondent waives any objection to the sufficiency of the charge of adultery in the petition. He is still, however, entitled to particulars of the charge. Hepworth v. Hepworth, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 215.

A petition by a husband for dissolution of marriage alleged that on divers occasions since a specified date the respondent had accompanied the co-respondent to divers places in Bristol and its neighbourhood unknown to the petitioner, and had committed adultery with the co-respondent. The Court ordered that particulars of this charge should be given, or that the petitioner should file an affidavit that he was unable to do so. Higgs v. Higgs, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 64.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, the petitioner, in pursuance of an order made on the application of the respondent, delivered particulars in which he alleged generally adultery with A at Malta "between 1859 and 1862 and during a journey in Switzerland, Savoy, Sardinia and Italy." Upon application for further and better particulars, it appearing that the information of the petitioner was solely derived from a diary and certain correspondence of the respondent, the Court ordered that unless particulars, setting out the dates and occasions of the alleged adultery, should be given to the respondent, ten days before the trial, the petitioner should be precluded at the trial from giving any save documentary evidence of the adultery charged. Codrington v. Codrington, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 53; 3 Swab. & T. 368.

A petition for divorce by a husband in the 3rd paragraph alleged that the respondent, since the 8th of October, 1846, had on divers occasions committed adultery; and in the 4th that the respondent had, since April, 1864, up to the date of the petition, been habitually visited at her residence at &c., by A, and had on divers of such occasions and particularly on the night of the 31st of August, 1864, committed adultery with A:—Held, first, that it was not sufficient to give particulars of the dates when, places where, and persons with whom, the adultery alleged in the 3rd paragraph was committed; but that the petition must be amended by setting out such particulars. Secondly, that the respondent was not entitled to particulars of the adultery charged in the 4th paragraph. Porter v. Porter, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 207; 3 Swab. & T. 596.

When a petition contains a general charge of adultery of which particulars are ordered and delivered, the petitioner ought, if he intends to give evidence of acts of adultery not included in the particulars, to give notice of them to the other side a reasonable time before the hearing. If he does not give such notice, the trial will be adjourned. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 31; 3 Swab. & T. 610.

Where a trial was adjourned on the ground that the evidence tendered in support of a general charge of adultery took the other side by surprise, the Court made no order as to the costs of the adjournment, on the ground that both parties were to blame for the state of the pleadings and the record. Ibid.

(2) Of Collusion.

Where the Queen's Proctor obtains the leave of the Court to intervene, and pleads collusion between the petitioner and respondent, such plea is a good plea; but the petitioner is entitled to be acquainted with the character of the collusion intended to be charged, by way of specification or particulars. Jessop v. Jessop, 2 Swab. & T. 301.

(n) Inspection and Production of Documents.

Semble—That the Court has jurisdiction to order that one of the parties to a suit be at liberty to inspect and take copies of a document in the possession of the other party, for the purpose of framing a pleading or supporting a suit or defence. Shaw v. Shaw, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 95; 2 Swab. & T. 642.

P petitioned for dissolution of marriage and for assessment of damages. The Judge, on summons, at the instance of the co-respondent, ordered the petitioner to bring into the registry letters written by the respondent to him, or to file an affidavit that he had no such letters, or that they contained no such matters as suggested by the affidavits in support of the summons. Pollard v. Pollard, 3 Swab. & T. 613.

(o) Staying Proceedings.

Under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. s. 43. the Court has only power to order that the petitioner attend on the hearing of the petition. It cannot, therefore, order his attendance at the hearing of the case of the Queen's Proctor, if the intervention was after a decree nisi had been pronounced. Semble, however, that though the Court has no power in such a case to order the attendance of the petitioner it may stay proceedings in the suit until he appears. Pollack v. Pollack, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 28; 2 Swab. & T. 648.

Where cross-suits had been instituted by the husband for dissolution and by the wife for judicial separation, in which the same issues were raised, the Court stayed proceedings in the wife's suit, which had been commenced after that of the husband, until after the hearing of the husband's suit. Osborne v. Osborne, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 38; 3 Swab. & T. 327.

Where the same issues are raised in cross-suits, and an order is made for a commission to examine witnesses, it will be drawn up in such a form that the evidence will be admissible in both suits. Ibid.

An answer filed, without the leave of the Judge Ordinary, after the time allowed by the Rules for filing it has elapsed, may be treated by the petitioner as a nullity. Avila v. Avila, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 104.

An application for leave to file an answer after the cause has been set down for trial, must be supported by an affidavit shewing reasonable ground for granting it. Jago v. Jago, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 49.

(q) Payment into Court.

The Court has no power to order immediate execution for the recovery of damages awarded against the co-respondent and ordered to be paid to the petitioner, nor to order that such damages be paid into court. Pounsford v. Pounsford, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 188; 2 Swab. & T. 389.

A sequestration having been issued against the estate of M, who was the plaintiff in an action in which he had recovered 65*l.* 5*s.* and costs, the Court ordered the solicitor for the defendant in that action to pay the 65*l.* 6*s.* into the registry, not to be paid out until further order; the solicitor to have notice of any application respecting it, so that he might enforce his lien for any extra costs to which he might be entitled, and to be indemnified against costs which he might incur in enforcing his lien beyond the amount of the fund. Munt v. Munt, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 134.

(1) Unfounded Claim for.

A petitioner having claimed damages from a co-respondent, evidence was produced by the co-respondent shewing that the respondent was leading an abandoned life when he made her acquaintance, and raising a strong suspicion that the petitioner must have been aware of that fact:—Held, that the co-respondent ought not to be condemned in costs on the ground that the claim for damages was improper under the circumstances. Manton v. Manton, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 121; 4 Swab. & T. 159.

(2) Assessment and Measure of.

In assessing damages against the co-respondent, the jury are to take into consideration the same circumstances as would have been considered by a jury in an action for criminal conversation. Comyn v. Comyn, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 210.

In the assessment of damages against a co-respondent the measure of damages is the value of the wife of whom the husband has been deprived. As a general rule, evidence of the co-respondent's means is inadmissible. Semble, however, that the jury may take his wealth into consideration, if he has used it as a means of seducing the wife. Cowing v. Cowing, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 149.

(3) Application and Investment of.

A jury having assessed the damages against a co-respondent at 250*l.*, the Judge Ordinary ordered the petitioner to assign his interest in them to a trustee for the benefit of the child of the marriage. Clark v. Clark, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 61; 2 Swab. & T. 520.

In a suit by a husband for a dissolution of marriage, a jury assessed the damages against the co-respondent at 1,000*l.*, and the co-respondent was condemned in costs. The Court ordered the damages to be paid to the petitioner in trust to pay thereout such costs as should not be recovered against the co-respondent, and as to the residue in trust for the children of the marriage in equal shares, to be paid to them on attaining twenty-one. Spedding v. Spedding, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 31.

Upon pronouncing a decree of dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, the Court ordered that the damages (2,500*l.*) assessed by the jury should be applied, in the first instance, to the payment of so much of the petitioner's costs out of pocket as should not be taxed against the co-respondent, and that the residue should be settled upon the respondent for life dum casta vixerit; and after her death, or on breach of that condition, upon the issue of the marriage. Narracott v. Narracott, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 132; 3 Swab. & T. 408.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, no order was made that a portion of the damages should be settled on the wife for life "dum casta vixerit." The Court refused afterwards to vary the order by making the wife's interest continue only "dum casta et innupta vixerit." Narracott v. Narracott, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 54; 4 Swab. & T. 76.

After an order had been made directing the application of damages, which had been assessed against a co-respondent, for the benefit of the petitioner, the respondent and their children, an agreement was made between the petitioner and co-respondent in which no provision was made for securing to the children the benefit which they would have taken under the order. The Court, on the application of the respondent, although her interests were not affected, enforced the order. Forster v. Forster, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 88; 4 Swab. & T. 131.

Where a husband had obtained a decree of dissolution, upon the ground of adultery, with 150*l.* damages against the co-respondent, permanent alimony was refused, but the damages awarded were ordered to be invested in the purchase of a government annuity for the wife's benefit. Latham v. Latham, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 43.

(4) Speedy Payment of.

Where damages, awarded by a jury against the co-respondent in a suit by the husband for dissolution had been ordered to be paid to the petitioner, and it appeared that he was in danger of losing them, the Court ordered they should be paid within ten days. Bent v. Bent, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 189.

(s) Attachment.

(1) Generally.

A husband who has been served with a decree in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights ordering him to take his wife home, is bound to take the first step by inviting her to return to him. If he does not, an attachment will be issued. If he has not appeared in the suit, notice of the motion for an attachment is not requisite. Alexander v. Alexander, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 173; 2 Swab. & T. 385.

An affidavit of non-payment of taxed costs and alimony to the person to whom they are ordered to be paid cannot be read on a motion for an attachment if filed subsequently to the notice of motion. Symons v. Symons, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 215.

Where it is sought to charge a second attachment upon a person already in custody under a prior writ, the practice of the Court is, conformably with that of the Court of Chancery, that, upon motion for such writ, a habeas should issue to the keeper of the Queen's Prison to bring up the prisoner, and, upon his being present on the day named, that he should be charged accordingly. Dickens v. Dickens, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 59; 2 Swab. & T. 521.

An attachment will not be granted for non-payment of money pursuant to order, unless a copy of the order be annexed to or recited in the affidavit of service. Lidmore v. Lidmore, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 134.

An attachment for non-payment of alimony was granted, although the order did not state to whom payment was to be made, where it appeared that the wife and her solicitor had at the same time demanded payment of the husband and he had paid neither. Ladmore v. Ladmore, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 157.

(2) Contempt.

The use of threatening expressions to a person cognizant of facts in issue in a suit with the intention of intimidating him and preventing him from giving evidence at the hearing, is a contempt of Court. Shaw v. Shaw, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 35; 2 Swab. & T. 517.

Threatening a petitioner to publish concerning him a statement of facts unless he withdraws his petition, is a contempt of Court. In re Mulock, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 205; 3 Swab. & T. 599.

A party who is in contempt for non-compliance with an order of the Court cannot be heard, except for the purpose of purging the contempt. Garstin v. De Garston, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 45; 4 Swab. & T. 73.

(t) Sequestration.

A bankrupt who has obtained an order of discharge under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, is thereby protected from any proceeding to enforce the payment of alimony for the non-payment of which he has been attached before the order of discharge. A sequestration against his estate for such alimony therefore will not be granted. Dickens v. Dickens, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 183; 2 Swab. & T. 645.

On non-payment of certain sums due by way of alimony and costs, a writ of sequestration issued against the respondent's property, and an order was made on K to pay into court a sum of money awarded in an action in the Queen's Bench to be paid by K to respondent. On motion on behalf of petitioner to order such sum to be paid out in part satisfaction of her attorney's taxed costs and her own alimony, the Court refused to make such order, H and F, respondent's attorneys in the action in the Queen's Bench, having satisfied the Court, on affidavit, that they had a lien for costs in that cause exceeding the sum so paid into court. Munt v. Munt, 2 Swab. & T. 661.

(u) Change of Attorney.

Where an order has been made for the change of the attorney in a suit; the order must be drawn up and filed in the registry, before any step can be taken by the fresh attorney. Grice v. Grice, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 134.

(U) Costs.

(a) Of the Wife.

(1) General Points.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, the respondent and co-respondent denied the charge, and the respondent further charged the petitioner with adultery. It appeared at the hearing that this latter charge was substantially the joint defence of the respondent and co-respondent. A jury found that the respondent and co-respondent had not been guilty of adultery, and also that the petitioner had not been guilty of adultery. It was held, the respondent was entitled to the whole of her costs incurred in supporting the first issue, although they should exceed the sum deposited in the registry, but that as to the second issue she was entitled only to a moiety of the costs incurred. Burroughs v. Burroughs, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 124.

By section 51. of the Divorce Act, the Court which hears the suit has absolute authority over costs, and no appeal as to costs only lies. The settled practice of the Court is, that the wife, if she fails, will not be entitled to taxed costs beyond the sum of money paid into court by the husband at the order of the Registrar. In the present case the Court rejected a motion for an order on the husband to pay the balance of the wife's taxed costs above such sum of money paid into court, and condemned the wife's solicitor in costs of the motion. Glennie v. Glennie, 3 Swab. & T. 109.

Quære—Whether, if dissatisfied with the Registrar's order, the wife's solicitor ought not then to have applied to the Judge Ordinary to vary such order. Ibid.

Where a new trial is granted on the application of the wife, the Court cannot impose upon her the terms of payment of costs if she has no means, but the husband must pay the costs of both parties. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 127; 3 Swab. & T. 214.

A wife, pending a suit by her for a judicial separation, returned to cohabitation, no order for the taxation of her costs having been made. The husband, therefore, applied to have the petition dismissed:—Held, that it could be dismissed only upon payment of the wife's costs. Cooper v. Cooper, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 71; 3 Swab. & T. 392.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, a jury found that the wife had committed adultery. On a new trial, granted on the ground of surprise, the wife succeeded. The Court being of opinion that the case was trumped up by the husband, condemned him in the wife's costs of both trials, and also in the costs of the rule for a new trial. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 114.

The dismissal of a petition does not prevent the Court from enforcing, by attachment, the payment of alimony and costs previously ordered to be paid by the petitioner. Bremner v. Bremner, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 202; 3 Swab. & T. 378.

Where in a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, the co-respondent is found to have been guilty of adultery, under such circumstances as would entitle the petitioner to the costs of that issue, the dismissal of the petition on the ground of the petitioner's adultery does not necessarily disentitle him to such costs. Ibid.

Where a wife, in her answer to a petition for dissolution, traversed the adultery charged, and brought several counter-charges against the petitioner, which appeared at the hearing to be entirely without foundation, the Court made the following order as to her costs of the hearing: her costs to be taxed as if she had only traversed the adultery and had gone to trial on that issue alone, all costs of and occasioned by the rest of her answer being disallowed: from her costs thus taxed, any costs to be deducted which the petitioner had reasonably incurred for the purpose of meeting the charges made against him in the answer; and the residue, if any, to be paid to the respondent out of the sum deposited in the registry by the petitioner to meet her costs of the hearing. Clark v. Clark, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 71; 4 Swab. & T. 111.

The general rule that in a matrimonial suit the husband is liable for the wife's costs does not apply to a suit of nullity of marriage where the de facto husband and wife are both made respondents and the marriage is declared null. Where, however, in such a suit the wife's costs may be considered to be consequent on the husband's conduct (e.g., if by his importunity she was induced to contract an invalid marriage), the Court may, under the 51st section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, order them to be paid by the de facto husband, provided there was reasonable ground for her defending the suit, but not otherwise. Wells v. Cottam, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 12; 3 Swab. & T. 593.

(2) Interlocutory Motions.

A wife, who unsuccessfully makes or opposes an interlocutory motion in a matrimonial suit, is not entitled to the costs. Accordingly, it was held that the costs of an unsuccessful motion by a wife for access to the children of the marriage, and of an unsuccessful opposition by her to a motion for further particulars of the charges made by her in her petition, should not be allowed. Hepworth v. Hepworth, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 253.

The fee of counsel for advising on the sufficiency of an answer, which is special, and not a mere traverse of the allegations in the wife's petition, will be allowed on the taxation of costs. Ibid.

Where, upon the husband's answer to a petition for alimony pendente lite, it appears that he has no means, the Court will refuse to allot alimony; but the wife will be entitled to her costs of moving for an allotment. Gaynor v. Gaynor, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 144.

The costs of an application by a wife for time to plead will not be allowed, unless the application was rendered necessary by the default of the husband. Harding v. Harding, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 76; 2 Swab. & T. 549.

Where a wife obtained an order for the attendance of the husband on the hearing of her petition for alimony, for the purpose of being examined thereon, and the husband was examined accordingly, but his evidence satisfied the Court of the truth of his answer, the costs of the motion for the order were disallowed. Ibid.

(3) Of the Hearing.

Where the husband had paid a sum into the registry to meet the wife's costs of the hearing of the petition, and had died shortly before the time appointed for the hearing, the Court made an order for the taxation of the costs incurred for the hearing by the wife's solicitors, and the payment to them of such taxed costs out of the fund in the registry, with leave to the solicitors of the husband's executor to attend the taxation. Hall v. Hall, 3 Swab. & T. 390.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage the wife, before the hearing, obtained the usual order for the taxation of her costs. The Registrar made an appointment, and found that her taxed costs, up to the date of the order, amounted to 9*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*, and that 90*l.* would be a reasonable sum to be paid into the registry to cover the wife's costs of the hearing, but he declined to make his report to that effect, as the petitioner's solicitor was not present, and he made a second appointment. In the interim the cause was heard, and the wife failed in the suit:—Held, that she was not entitled to the costs incurred before the date of the order, nor to the costs of the hearing. Gough v. Gough, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 136.

When a petition by a husband is dismissed with costs, the wife is entitled to her costs of the hearing, though they may exceed the sum for which security has been given. Cooke v. Cooke, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 15; 3 Swab. & T. 603.

A wife who has obtained a decree nisi is entitled to an order for the payment of her surplus costs of the hearing beyond the amount deposited in the registry, notwithstanding that a motion for a new trial and a bill of exceptions are pending. Chetwynd v. Chetwynd, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 65; 4 Swab. & T. 108.

(4) De Die in Diem.

In a suit for nullity of marriage, instituted by the father of the husband in his own right against the husband and wife, the wife is not entitled to have her costs de die in diem taxed against the petitioner. Wells v. Wells, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 72; 3 Swab. & T. 364.

(5) Security for.

The inability of the husband, respondent in a matrimonial suit, to deposit in the registry, or give security for a sum of money to defray the wife's costs of the hearing pursuant to order, is no ground for refusing an attachment against him for non-compliance with the order. Hepworth v. Hepworth, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 18; 2 Swab. & T. 414.

When the husband is petitioner, and does not comply with such an order, the Court will stay the suit. Ibid.

The 32nd section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. empowers the Court, in a suit for dissolution of marriage, to make such an order as to the wife's costs of the hearing, as it may make in a suit for judicial separation. Ibid.

The guardian who institutes a suit in behalf of an infant husband will be ordered to pay into the registry, or give security for a sum of money to meet the wife's costs of the hearing. Beavan v. Beavan, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 166; 2 Swab. & T. 652.

(6) Of Special Jury.

Semble—That when, upon the application of a wife, a cause is tried by a special jury, the Court may, in its discretion, refuse to allow the wife the costs of the special jury. Scott v. Scott, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 40.

(7) Suing in Forma Pauperis.

A wife suing in forma pauperis for a dissolution of marriage, if she obtains a decree, is entitled to costs. Afford v. Afford, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 174; 2 Swab. & T. 387.

(8) Payment into Court.

In a suit by a wife for judicial separation, the Judge Ordinary having reason to believe that it had been instituted not for the purpose of obtaining a decree, but for the purpose of obtaining costs from the husband, and being satisfied by affidavits that the petitioner was a drunken and profligate woman, and that she had for many years been living in open adultery, directed that her taxed costs incurred prior to the hearing should be deposited in the registry until further order, instead of being paid over to her attorney. Rogers v. Rogers, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 87; 4 Swab. & T. 82.

(b) Against Wife.

A wife, after a decree nisi of dissolution of marriage on the ground of her adultery, became entitled to 500*l*., which was the only property she possessed. The Court refused to order, under the 45th section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, that a part of this should be applied to the repayment of costs incurred by the husband in the suit, although she had been guilty of gross misconduct, and had increased the costs of the suit by an unfounded countercharge against the husband. Semble—That the Court would have made such an order if the residue of the wife's property would have been sufficient to maintain her. Carstairs v. Carstairs, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 170; 3 Swab. & T. 538.

(c) Against Co-respondent.

The Court may order the costs of the proceedings to be paid by the co-respondent where the adultery is established, although the petitioner may not have prayed for such costs. Finlay v. Finlay, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 104.

Where in a suit for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of the wife's adultery, the adultery of the wife is proved, but the petition is dismissed under the 31st section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, on account of the husband's marital misconduct, the wife is entitled to all her costs, though they may exceed the sum paid into the registry, and the co-respondent will not be condemned in costs. Starkey v. Starkey, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 118.

Where in a suit for dissolution of marriage by a husband, the adultery of the wife is proved, but the petition is dismissed under the 31st section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, on account of the husband's marital misconduct, the co-respondent will not be condemned in costs, nor will he be allowed his costs. Seddon v. Seddon, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 101; 2 Swab. & T. 640.

When, in a suit for dissolution of marriage, the co-respondent is condemned in costs, he is liable for the costs of the petitioner and respondent incurred in obtaining an alteration of a marriage settlement. Gill v. Gill, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 43; 3 Swab. & T. 359.

The exercise of the discretion as to costs vested in the Court by the 34th section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. depends upon the opinion of the Court as to the conduct of all the parties in each case; and even if it is proved that the co-respondent knew the respondent to be a married woman when the adultery was committed, it does not necessarily follow that he will be condemned in the whole of the costs. Codrington v. Codrington, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 60; 4 Swab. & T. 63.

Where a respondent, in her answer, charged the petitioner with wilful neglect and misconduct, and that charge was negatived by the verdict of the jury, and a decree was granted on the ground of her adultery with the co-respondent and with another person who was not a party to the suit, the Court, being of opinion that the conduct of the petitioner had been such as to invite reasonable challenge, refused to condemn the co-respondent in the whole of the costs of the suit, and condemned him in those costs only which had been incurred in proving the respondent's adultery with him. Ibid.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage the jury found that the respondent had been guilty of adultery, but that there was not sufficient evidence against the co-respondent. The co-respondent's conduct having been such as to lead to a reasonable suspicion in the mind of the petitioner that he had been guilty of adultery, the Court refused to allow him his costs. Robinson v. Robinson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 210.

The Court will not always order the petitioner to pay the co-respondent's costs when the petition is dismissed. In a case where the jury were discharged without giving a verdict, and the petitioner did not proceed to a second trial, but allowed his petition to be dismissed, the Court, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, declined to order him to pay the co-respondent's costs. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 34 Law J. Rep, (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 144.

At the trial of issues joined in a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, no one appearing on behalf of the petitioner, the jury returned a verdict that the respondent had not committed adultery with the co-respondent. No application having been afterwards made for a new trial, the Court, upon the motion of the co-respondent, dismissed the petition, and condemned the petitioner in costs. Potts v. Potts, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 32.

Where in a suit for dissolution of marriage by a husband the adultery was proved, but the petition was dismissed on the ground of the gross misconduct of the petitioner, the Court refused to make any order as to the costs of the petitioner or co-respondent. Hick v. Hick, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 11.

(f) Of Queen's Proctor.

Where the solicitors for the petitioner and respondent conducted the proceedings in a suit for dissolution of marriage in such a way as to give rise to a reasonable suspicion of collusion, and the Queen's Proctor thereupon obtained leave to intervene and shew cause against the decree nisi being made absolute, but it appeared, on shewing cause, that neither of the parties to the suit had been implicated in the irregularities of their solicitors, the Court made absolute the decree nisi, and made no order as to the costs of the intervention. Cox v. Cox, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 255; 2 Swab. & T. 306.

The Queen's Proctor, under section 7. of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, can only intervene in his official capacity in a case of collusion; and where no case of collusion has been made out, he merely appears to shew cause against the decree nisi as one of the public, and the Court has no jurisdiction to award him his costs. Lautour v. Her Majesty's Proctor (House of Lords), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 89; 10 H.L. Cas. 685.

The Queen's Proctor intervened in a suit for dissolution of marriage and pleaded, charging the petitioner with adultery and collusion. The petitioner traversed both charges, but before the issues were tried moved the Court to dismiss the petition. The Queen's Proctor not consenting, the Court rejected the motion on the ground that the Queen's Proctor would be entitled to his costs if he established collusion. Joyce v. Joyce, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 200.

Where, on the intervention of the Queen's Proctor, after a decree nisi on the ground of the wife's adultery, it was proved that the petitioner, subsequent to his wife's adultery and a sentence of divorce a mensa et thoro, obtained by reason of such adultery, had himself been adulterously cohabiting with a woman, the Court rescinded the decree nisi, dismissed the petition, and condemned the petitioner in the costs of the Queen Proctor's intervention. Latour v. Latour, 2 Swab. & T. 524.

(g) Taxation.

The principle of taxation of costs in matrimonial suits is as between party and party, but not as between party and party in the common law courts. The costs of issues found against the wife will be allowed her, unless they have been vexatiously and improperly put upon the record. Allen v. Allen, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 9; 2 Swab. & T. 107.

The number of witnesses whose expenses are to be allowed is a question for the discretion of the Registrar, who should allow the expenses of such as there was reasonable ground for calling or subpœnaing. Ibid.

The reasonable expenses of journeys and inquiries taken and instituted for the purpose of procuring information should also be allowed. Ibid.

The costs of a party's appearance on a motion will not be allowed if such appearance is unnecessary, although he may have received notice to appear from the opposite side. Frebout v. Frebout, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 214.

Term refresher fees will be allowed on the taxation of costs. Stoate v. Stoate, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 214.

When two separate motions were made on the same day for an attachment against the husband, the one for non-payment of costs, the other for non-payment of alimony, the Court, in granting an attachment, allowed the costs of only one motion. Watts v. Watts, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 29.

When an application is made in court which might have been made in chambers, the applicant, if successful, is only entitled to such costs as would have been incurred in chambers. Higgs v. Higgs, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 64.

The Court will not order the Registrar to review his taxation of a bill of costs, unless it appears that such taxation is wrong in principle. Cooke v. Cooke, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 79; 3 Swab. & T. 374.

(1) By Suspending Judgment.

Where a party to a suit has failed to obey an order for the payment of costs, the Court will not upon his application give judgment until the costs be paid, or a valid reason for their non-payment be given. Chichester v. Mure, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 120.

(2) By Attachment.

The Court granted an attachment for non-payment of costs after substituted service of the order for payment. Miller v. Miller, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 165.

An attachment for non-payment of costs ordered to be paid within a specified time will be granted though there has not been a personal demand. Nicholls v. Nicholls, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 115; 2 Swab. & T. 637.

The omission to indorse on a writ of attachment issued for non-payment of costs the amount of the costs, is a mere irregularity, which will be waived by delay in applying to the Court to set aside the writ. Pearson v. Pearson, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 102; 2 Swab. & T. 546.

Service of an order for payment of costs is effected by leaving an office copy of the order with the party chargeable, and at the same time producing the original order. Unless the original be produced, the attachment for non-payment of costs will not be granted. Davies v. Davies, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 104; 2 Swab. & T. 437.

Where service cannot be effected in consequence of the original order being filed in the registry, the Court will, upon motion, direct that it be delivered out that it may be served. Ibid.

The Court refused to issue an attachment against a husband for non-payment of the wife's costs in a suit for judicial separation, in which she was the petitioner, upon an affidavit being made by him shewing that he had not the means of paying them. Holland v. Holland, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 65; 4 Swab & T. 78.

(C) CHANGE OF.

(A) WHEN ACQUIRED BY RESIDENCE.

Officers of the East India Company's service attaining the rank of Colonel, being allowed to reside in Europe subject to orders to return, can acquire a domicil of residence there, notwithstanding they are liable to be called upon to return to India. The Attorney General v. Pottinger, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 284; 6 Hurls. & N. 733.

Sir Henry Pottinger, born in Ireland, went, in 1804, to India, as a cadet in the East India Company's service, and resided there until 1840, when he left Bombay, the presidency to which he was attached, and came to England, having attained the rank of Colonel, and colonels by the express rules of the service were allowed to reside in Europe, subject to orders for return to duty in India. In 1841 he was sent as minister from this country to China, and returned in 1844, and purchased and furnished a house in London, and resided there for a short period, when he went to the Cape as Governor, where he remained until 1848, when he was appointed by the East India Company Governor of Madras, where he resided until 1854, when he returned to England, and remained there from June 1854 to September 1855, going in the first instance to his London house, and afterwards removing to various places on account of his health. In September 1855, being advised to winter in a warmer climate, he went to Malta, where he died in March 1856. Before he left England he made his will, in which he was described as of London. At Malta he made two codicils; in one he was described as then residing at Malta, and in the second as of London and then residing in Malta:—Held, that the testator, in 1844, acquired a domicil in England, notwithstanding that he continued down to his death in the East India Company's service, and had while in England frequently expressed his intention on account of domestic circumstances to return to reside in India. Ibid.

A testator, having a Scotch domicil of origin, went to India in 1840, where he purchased a coffee plantation, and continued to reside and carry on his trade till 1858, when, on account of ill health, he came over to this country, and resided here and in Scotland for eighteen months, after which he returned to his plantation in India, and lived there till his death, in 1860:—Held, that the testator had acquired an Anglo-Indian domicil, which was not changed at the time of his death, and that his property was not liable to legacy duty Allardice v. Onslow, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 434.

Semble—The circumstance that a foreign fixed residence is adopted merely with the view to the acquisition of a fortune, and with an ulterior intention of returning home, is not sufficient to prevent the place of residence from becoming that of domicil. Ibid.

(B) FOREIGN OR ENGLISH.

Personal property may be subject to succession duty, although exempt from legacy duty by reason of the testator having a foreign domicil. In re Capdevielle, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 306; 2 Hurls. & C. 985.

The testator, born in France, of French parents, became a merchant's clerk at Gibraltar, and in 1830 went to reside at Manchester, to purchase goods for his firm; and he subsequently became a shipping agent there until his death in 1859. He occupied weekly lodgings, and also paid a weekly sum for his board. He paid two visits to his native place (in 1835 and 1846), and in the latter year bought an estate there; and a solemn act was passed before a notary at his native place for the preservation of his co-hereditary right of succession over some landed property there. In this act the testator was described as "merchant, of Manchester, in England, native of Montory," and his relatives (nephew and nieces, parties to the deed) declared in it that he had not forfeited his hereditary rights to the estate, and that he desired to maintain his right. During the whole time his intention was to return to France and die there, and he always deemed and considered himself a Frenchman, and not an Englishman; but he never fixed upon any period when his return should take place, and he lived at Manchester with the intention of remaining there for an indefinite period:—Held (Pollock, C.B. dissentiente), that the domicil of the testator was French, and, consequently, that his personal property in England was not liable to legacy duty. Held (Bramwell, B. hesitating), that the testator's personal property was liable to succession duty. Moorhouse v. Lord commented upon. Ibid.

Upon a claim, on the part of the Crown, for payment of legacy duty, treating the testator as domiciled in England, it appeared that the testator (whose name was English, but whose place of birth was unknown,) had held a commission in the English army, but had sold out in 1810, and retired to France, where he resided until his death in 1820, placing an illegitimate son at a French school. His will, made at Paris in 1819, was in the English form. He left property in the French funds, and none in England:—Held, upon the foregoing facts, that the presumption was against an English domicil, and that in the absence of proof by the Crown of English domicil, legacy duty was not payable. The President of the United States v. Drummond, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 501; 33 Beav. 449.

Upon a question whether the domicil of a testator, who was a native of France, was English or French, the principal evidence went to shew, in support of the English domicil, that he came to England when he was eighteen; that he carried on a business in London for above twenty years; that he always resided in England, with occasional visits to his native country; that he married an Englishwoman according to the English rites; that he took leases of his business premises in England for twenty-one years; that he voted at an election; that he served the office of headborough; that he consulted a lawyer as to obtaining letters of naturalization; that his children were registered and baptized in England according to the English form; that he made an English will which would have been inoperative in France; and that he repeatedly expressed his intention of making England his home, and becoming an Englishman. And in support of the French domicil, that he purchased a piece of land in his native village, and often said he should build a house there, and return to live in France; that he paid a visit every year to France; that he placed his children at school in France, and by his will appointed his brother, who resided in France, one of the executors and guardians of his children:—Held, upon the balance of evidence, that the testator's domicil was English. Drevon v. Drevon, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 129.

(C) CHANGE OF.

A mere change of residence is not sufficient to constitute a change of domicil, although it may be tolerably certain that the new residence will be continued for life. There must be an intention to change the domicil. Moorhouse v. Lord (House of Lords), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 295; 10 H.L. Cas. 272.

In 1805 J S, a native of Scotland, went to the East Indies, and, with the exception of one year only, resided there from that time until his death, which took place in 1830. During a part of the time of his residence in India he was an indigo planter, and during the remainder he was a merchant and banker at Calcutta. Between 1805 and 1814 he constantly corresponded with his family, but none of his letters were preserved. In 1814 he became entitled to an estate in Scotland under the will of his father, subject to certain charges. On his receiving the news, he wrote a letter to his mother (which was preserved), in which he expressed an intention to return to Scotland when his affairs would allow it. Between 1819 and 1830 he wrote several letters, which were in evidence, to the trustees of his father's will respecting his estate, and in these letters he constantly referred to his intention to return to Scotland:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, and, on appeal, by the Lords Justices, that J S never lost his domicil of origin, and did not acquire an Anglo-Indian one. Jopp v. Wood, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 212; 34 Beav. 88.

In order to acquire a new domicil there must be an intention to abandon the existing domicil. Ibid.

Consequently a native of one country who goes to another, with the intention of residing there for the mere purpose of trading or making a fortune, does not, by length of residence alone, gain a domicil there. Ibid.

Whether, in the absence of all other evidence, an intention of abandonment of domicil might be inferred from long residence elsewhere than at the place of domicil—quære. Ibid.

The principle and exceptional nature of the decisions establishing that acceptance of a commission or office, in the East Indies, under the East India Company amounted to an adoption of an Anglo-Indian domicil considered and explained. Ibid.

DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA.

Money due on a policy and on a banker's deposit note held to pass as donationes mortis causa, by the delivery of the policy and note. Amis v. Witt, 33 Beav. 619.

DOWER.

[See FREEBENCH.]

(A) ELECTION.
(B) WHEN BARRED OR FORFEITED.
(C) TO WHAT IT EXTENDS.

(A) ELECTION.

A testator made a provision for his widow, expressly in lieu and satisfaction of any estate or interest to which she might be entitled, as his widow, out of his real and personal estate. The widow enjoyed this provision, but, as the certificate found, "in ignorance of her right to dower":—Held, sixteen years after testator's death, that she was still entitled to elect. Sopwith v. Maughan, 30 Beav. 235.

Where a testator having granted an annuity to his widow under his will directed that if she persisted in any claim on the residue of his property, she was to forfeit the annuity:—Held, the widow was not put to her election, but was entitled both to her dower and to the annuity. Wetherell v. Wetherell, 4 Giff. 51.

(B) WHEN BARRED OR FORFEITED.

W, a married man, entitled in fee simple in possession to real estate, became bankrupt. On a sale of his estate by the assignees, the deed of conveyance, after reciting that W and his wife joined for the purpose thereinafter mentioned, the operative part, omitting altogether the name of the wife, proceeded as follows: "the said W hath, and by this present deed intended to be acknowledged by the said 'wife' as her act and deed, doth bargain, sell," &c. The deed was executed and acknowledged by the wife in accordance with the provisions of the Fines and Recoveries Act. The wife survived W:—Held, that the wife had effectually barred her right to dower. Dent v. Clayton, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 503.

A widow's right to sue in equity for dower held to be barred where she had not, for upwards of thirty years, taken any proceedings, either at law or in equity, to have it assigned to her. Marshall v. Smith, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 189.

A wife forfeits her dower under the statute of Westminster the 2nd, by her adultery, though it may have been brought about by the misconduct of her husband. Bostock v. Smith, 34 Beav. 57.

(C) To what it extends.

The Dower Act (3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 105.) extends to lands of gavelkind tenure. Farley v. Bonham, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 239; 2 Jo. & H. 177.

EASEMENT.

(A) Subjects of Easements.

(a) Right to Stone for Repair of Highways.

The right for the inhabitants of a township to take stones from the land of another person for the purpose of repairing the highways, is a profit à prendre, and cannot therefore be claimed by custom; neither can it be claimed by prescription, as inhabitants are incapable by that description of taking such an easement, unless under a grant which would incorporate them. Constable v. Nicholson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 240; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 230.

To an action of trespass for cutting down and carrying away trees growing in the close of the plaintiff, the defendant pleaded an immemorial enjoyment of a right in one A B, the owner in fee of a close called Bloody Field, and all those whose estate he had, and his and their tenants, to enter the close of the plaintiff, and to cut down and convert to their own use the trees growing there, such right being claimed as appurtenant to the close of the said A B, but the plea did not allege that the timber so taken was to be used in any way in or about the said close of A B. Averment that the defendant was tenant to A B of the said close; and that the trees were cut down by the defendant in exercise of such right. There were other pleas, which set up the enjoyment of a precisely similar right for sixty years and thirty years respectively; and also a plea alleging a grant by a deed, which was lost, by the then owner in fee of the close of the plaintiff to the then owner in fee of the close of the defendant, of the right now claimed:—Held, that all the pleas were bad, as the right claimed being a right in gross could not pass with the occupation of the land. Bailey v. Stevens, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 226; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 91.

Semble, also, that such a right could not pass with the ownership of land; and per Willes, J., except in the case of landlord and tenant, in order that rights over the land of one may be attached to the land of another so as to pass with the ownership of the land, they must be such rights as are beneficial to the owner of the dominant tenement only so long as he remains owner of that tenement, and to other persons are of no benefit whatever. Ibid.

(B) Acquisition of Easements.

[By prescription, see Tapling v. Jones, post, (F)(c)].

A and B occupied adjoining houses as tenants to the same landlord under long leases, which were made on the same day and to expire at the same time. B, by building on his own premises, obstructed the access of light to a window in A's house through which the light had passed without interruption for more than twenty years:—Held, that A by the twenty years' user had acquired a right to the light, and might maintain an action against B for obstructing it, though they occupied their premises as tenants, and under the same landlord. Frewen v. Phillips (Ex. Ch.), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 356; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 449.

E, being seised in fee of a house, and also of land adjoining, granted, in 1855, a building lease of the land to trustees for ninety-nine years, and in the following year he conveyed the fee in the same land to them. In 1857 E conveyed the house in fee to G, under whom the plaintiff became entitled to the possession of the house. The defendant, subsequently, with the authority of the trustees, built on the land conveyed to them, so as materially to obstruct the light and air which for upwards of twenty years had come to the plaintiff's windows. The defendant did not build according to the plan contained in the building lease, but according to a different plan sanctioned by the trustees. Had he built according to the plan in the lease, the light and air coming to the plaintiff's windows would have been obstructed, but not to the same extent. Down to the time of the building lease there had never been, so far as could be traced, any severance either in the title to or possession or occupancy of the land and house, but they had been occupied and used together by the proprietors for upwards of fifty years:—Held, that the plaintiff had no right of action against the defendant for obstructing the light and air coming to his windows. White v. Bass, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 283; 7 Hurls. & N. 722.

The 3rd section of the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 71), limiting twenty years as the period for acquiring an indefeasible right to the access and use of light, is retrospective, so that such an easement may be acquired by virtue of enjoyment prior to passing the act. Simper v. Foley, 2 Jo. & H. 555.

An union of the ownership of dominant and servient tenements for different estates does not extinguish an easement of this description, but merely suspends it so long as the union of ownership continues, and upon a severance of the ownership the easement revives. Ibid.

Where a right to an easement of this description is acquired against the owner of a leasehold interest in the servient tenement, it is acquired also against the owner of the reversion. Ibid.

From 1841 to 1845, K was the owner in fee and occupier of a dry dock and a coal-wharf adjoining. During this joint ownership and occupation the bowsprits of ships entering the dock for repair commonly projected for about fourteen feet over the coal-wharf. In 1845 K put up the dock and the wharf for sale by auction in separate lots. The coal-wharf only was sold, and was conveyed by K to the defendant without any reservation, the conveyance containing the usual estate clause. In August, 1846, the dock was let to R M for twenty-one years, and in 1861 it was sold and conveyed to S subject to the lease. From the commencement of the occupation of R M, as lessee, down to 1863 the bowsprits of vessels using the dock had been suffered by the defendant, but not as of right, to project over the wharf as theretofore. In 1863 the defendant commenced the construction of warehouses on the wharf, which would effectually prevent vessels entering the dock from projecting their bowsprits as previously, and thus confine the use of the dock to smaller vessels. Upon a bill filed by S and R M against K,—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, that the defendant when he purchased the coal-wharf must have known that the use of the dock would require that the bowsprits of large vessels should overhang the wharf; that this was therefore an easement essential to the occupation of the dock, and that the defendant must be restrained from doing anything to prevent its full enjoyment. But, upon appeal to the Lord Chancellor, this decision was reversed, and the bill dismissed with costs. Suffield v. Brown, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 249.

The doctrine that where an owner of two properties conveys one of them to a purchaser, a reservation or re-grant will be implied in favour of the owner of all those continuous and apparent quasi-easements which are necessary for the due enjoyment of the property retained—approved by the Master of the Rolls—but, on appeal, denied by the Lord Chancellor to be law. Ibid.

If the owner of two adjoining tenements conveys one of them to a purchaser absolutely, the tenement so sold is discharged from any quasi-servitudes to which it was subjected by the vendor during his ownership of both properties, and the purchaser is not bound to take notice of the manner in which the tenement purchased has been used for the convenience of the adjoining and unsold tenement (per the Lord Chancellor). Ibid.

Pyer v. Carter (1 Hurls. & N. 916; 26 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 258) questioned. Ibid.

There being two tenants of adjoining houses held under the same landlord, the tenant of one of the houses acquired a right of way to his vaults through the adjoining vaults. The landlord sold both properties at one sale, with a condition that they were to be subject to and with the benefit, as the case might be, of all subsisting rights or easements of way or passage so far as any lot might be affected thereby:—Held, that, the vendor being subject to no liability as to right of way, the purchaser of one tenement could not enforce a right of way as against the other. Daniel v. Anderson, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 610.

A tin-mine in Cornwall which had been immemorially worked by tin-bounders under the peculiar custom of the county, was abandoned in 1856, and from that period had been worked by the plaintiffs, who claimed to be the owners of the mine, but by what title it did not appear. The tin-bounders had immemorially used, for the purposes of their mining operations, the water flowing from an old artificial watercourse, passing through the land of the defendants; and, upon the flow of the water therefrom being obstructed by the defendant, the plaintiffs filed their bill to restrain the obstruction:—Held, that the plaintiffs, not being entitled to work the mines by virtue of any estate derived from the bounders, and having themselves been in possession less than twenty years, had no prescriptive right to the use of the water. Ivimey v. Stocker, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 633: reversed on appeal, 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 467.

(C) Particular Easements.

[See ante, (B), and post, (F).]

(b) Air.

A right to free passage of air is not an easement within the meaning of section 2. of the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 71: affirming the decision below, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 384; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 268. Webb v. Bird (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 335; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 841.

A grant of a free passage of air to a windmill over the soil of another cannot be presumed from twenty years' user of the windmill: for the presumption of a grant only arises in cases where the owner of the servient tenement had it in his power to prevent the enjoyment, and did not; and it is not practically in the power of an owner of neighbouring land to preclude the passage of air to a windmill. Ibid.

(c) Way.

Semble—There may be a dedication of a highway to the public, subject to the right of the occupiers of the land to place things upon it, causing inconvenience, but not actual obstruction, to the public. Morant v. Chamberlain or Chamberlin, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 299; 6 Hurls. & N. 541.

The corporation of Yarmouth are, and have been from the time of King John, the owners of a quay, over which, as far back as the reign of Charles the Second, a public highway has existed, and as far back as living memory, but not from time immemorial, the occupiers of houses adjoining the quay, as of right and without interruption, used it for the deposit of anchors and other incumbrances, for their own convenience, causing inconvenience, but not actual obstruction, to the public. At court leets in the reign of Charles the First, inhabitants of the town, including occupiers of the houses, were fined for overburdening the quay to the impediment and obstruction of the public. The plaintiff, as surveyor of the highways, in attempting to remove anchors and other goods actually obstructing the highway, was assaulted by the defendant, who to an action for the assault pleaded a justification in defence of the goods as the servant of the owner. The plaintiff replied that the goods were obstructing a highway, and justifying the removal by the plaintiff as one of the public. The defendant rejoined that the highway was subject to the right of user of the land by the occupiers for the purpose of placing anchors and other things, and that the occupiers always had such right, and that no way was ever dedicated otherwise than subject to such right, and justifying as the servant of P, the occupier of the locus in quo :—Held, on a special case stating the above facts that the Court was not justified in drawing the inference that there was a dedication of the way subject to the right in question, and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the issue in fact on the rejoinder, but that the defendant was entitled to judgment on a demurrer to the rejoinder, as the limited dedication set up might exist in law. Ibid.

The owner of land built a house on the front of it with a cottage at the back, the access to the cottage being by a passage through the house. He conveyed the cottage to the defendant, in fee, with the right of passage, and two years afterwards he conveyed the house, with a garden to the plaintiff, in fee. From the time the house was built, the plaintiff and the prior owners and occupiers of it used a part of the passage, which was included in the ground conveyed to the defendant, for the purpose of passing between the house and the garden and offices, through a doorway opening from that part of the passage into the garden. There was, however, another mode of getting into the garden through a room in the house. Within twenty years of the building of the house, the defendant blocked up the doorway:—Held, that the plaintiff had not, as owner of the house, any right of way over the part of the passage in question, either by necessity or otherwise. Dodd v. Burchall, 31 Law J. Rep. (N S.) Exch. 364; 1 Hurls. & C. 113.

The conveyance to the defendant described the land as containing the dimensions shewn and delineated on a plan in the margin, "be the same a little more or less," and purported to convey it as it was then held and enjoyed by the vendor. The plan specified the dimensions in feet and inches, and the measurement corresponded with the actual measurement to a few inches:—Held, that the description could not be controlled or affected by the fact that six feet of the part of the passage purporting to be conveyed to the defendant was also included in the subsequent conveyance to the plaintiff, and had been treated as part of No. 1 by being covered in and included in the curtilage. Ibid.

Where one grants to another a right of way, the latter must bear the expense of making it available, by forming the road, keeping it in repair, and erecting the necessary fences—semble. Ingram v. Morecraft, 33 Beav. 49.

A was possessed of a close the only way to which was along a green lane between two other closes, one of which belonged to A and the other to B. In the absence of any direct evidence of ownership, the jury were told that they might presume the soil of the lane to belong in moieties to the owners of the adjoining closes, and that, in respect of the close at the end of the lane, A had a mere easement:—Held, a proper direction. Smith v. Howden, 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 398.

(D) SPURIOUS EASEMENTS: FENCES.

The owners and occupiers of an ancient copyhold inclosure, and they alone, had from time to time repaired the fence belonging to the inclosure between it and the common waste land of the manor:—Held, that the proper inference for a jury to draw was that at the time the lord granted the exclusive possession of the land, he granted it subject to the obligation on the part of the grantee to keep it fenced as against the cattle of the lord and the other copyholders turned out on the wastes of the manor, and that the owner or occupier was therefore bound to keep up the fence as against adjoining occupiers after the wastes of the manor were inclosed under a modern Inclosure Act. Barber v. Whiteley, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 212.

(E) EASEMENTS ACCESSORY TO RIGHTS OF PROPERTY: SUPPORT TO LAND.

G, the owner of certain land, sold it in lots, subject to conditions, by which, inter alia, the purchaser of lot 6. was required to covenant to build according to a certain elevation. The plaintiff, who was the purchaser of the adjoining lot 7, altered, with G's consent, an old building standing on such lot, by raising its wall several feet on the next side to lot 6. The defendant, who was the purchaser of lot 6, excavated the land as required to build according to the said conditions, and in consequence of this the plaintiff's building fell:—Held, that as the excavations were authorized by the conditions of sale, and were made therefore with the licence of G, the vendor, the plaintiff could not sue for the injury he had sustained by his building being so deprived of the lateral support of the land in lot 6. Murchie v. Black, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 337 ; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 190.

Semble—That the plaintiff, assuming he had the right to such support, lost it by raising the old wall and so increasing the superincumbent weight. Ibid.

The owner of freehold lands and his lessee will be restrained from working mines under a watercourse otherwise than in a manner not likely to prevent the plaintiff from enjoying an uninterrupted flow of water to his works. Elwell v. Crowther, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 763; 31 Beav. 163.

But upon the freeholder and his lessee undertaking not to work the mines so as to interfere with the flow of water to the plaintiff's works or to diminish the supply, further proceedings were stayed, with liberty to apply. Ibid.

(F) EXTINGUISHMENT OF EASEMENTS.

(a) Alterations.

The plaintiff was owner of a building two stories high, with a range of windows in each story. Those on the ground floor were ancient unaltered windows; those on the second floor had, within twenty years, been altered, not in number, but in size, by additions on one side and the top of each window. The plaintiff's building was at a distance of ten feet from the edge of his land. After the alteration in the plaintiff's windows the defendant built a shop close to the edge of his own land, but without any intention of obstructing any of the plaintiff's windows. The jury found that the effect of the defendant's building was to obstruct the lower windows, but the question as to the right of the plaintiff to complain of the obstruction was reserved to the Court on the above facts and a model of the premises, which was found to be correct:—Held, per Erle, C.J., and Williams, J., that the plaintiff's right to the light of the lower windows was not lost by reason of the opening of the upper windows; and that, if the defendant intended to justify his obstruction of the lower windows, on the ground that he had built with the intention of obstructing the upper windows, and could not obstruct the upper without also obstructing the lower, it was necessary for him to have raised that defence and proved it at the trial, and that he could not rely on the mere fact that the result of his obstruction was to do that which, if he had so intended it, might have been lawfully done by him.—Held, per Byles, J., that the right of the servient owner to block up ancient lights, when new ones are opened, is not absolute, but conditional on the existence of an inability to block up the new without blocking up the old; and as the servient owner in this case had not yet exercised his right of blocking up the new windows, he was liable to the owner of the dominant tenement for blocking up the old.—Held, per Keating, J., that the question turned upon whether or not the alteration of the upper windows by the dominant owner was so material as that the right to the easement, as it formerly existed, was thereby gone. And that if that were so, and the jury had found that the unprivileged light could not be obstructed, without also obstructing the privileged light, the defendant would not be liable for the latter obstruction; but that in this case this defence was not established. Binckes v. Pash, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 121; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 324.

The plaintiff, being the owner of a house abutting upon a back yard in the occupation of the defendants, possessed two ancient lights overlooking such yard, which for the greater acquirement of light and air he modernized by removing the old casements and substituting new ones of a lighter construction, but not extending the aperture occupied by their frames. The defendants then proceeded to erect and glaze with opaque glass a framework close to these improved windows. A bill was filed for an injunction to restrain such proceedings:—Held, that a party possessed of ancient lights has a right to acquire an increased access of light and air if he can do so without altering the aperture, and this does not create a new easement; that the owner of an ancient light is entitled to use it in any manner he pleases, by obstructing, opening or protecting it, or by taking away old window-frames and substituting new ones of a much less size and thickness, so that he does not extend the aperture itself, and that the intrusion upon a neighbour's privacy is not a ground for interference either at law or in equity. Turner v. Spooner, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 801; 1 Dr. & S. 467.

If the owner of a tenement has windows looking upon the premises of another, he cannot increase their size or number, or claim more extensive rights. Cooper v. Hubbuck, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 123; 30 Beav. 160.

Whether the materiality or immateriality of an easement usurped over the land of another, will be considered, upon an application for an injunction, if the owner of the land over which it is claimed considers it a trespass or nuisance, and requires its abatement—quære. Ibid.

If ancient windows which look over the land or upon the premises of another are enlarged and are complained of, the Court upon their being restored to their original dimensions will restrain the owner of the adjoining property from obscuring such restored windows. Ibid.

Where a house is erected on the site of an old house which has been burnt down, the windows of which were ancient lights, the question whether the character of ancient lights attaches to the new windows, depends on the question whether the servitude they would impose on the servient tenement is substantially the same as that which previously existed; and where the windows of a new house so erected, although somewhat differing in form from the windows of the old house, were of about the same area and very nearly in the same positions, the Court held that the servitude imposed on the servient tenement not being a more onerous nor a different servitude, the characters of ancient windows attached to the new windows. The Curriers Co. v. Corbett, 2 Dr. & S. 355 (on appeal, this case was reversed upon a different ground).

Where the owner of a house sells a piece of adjoining land, the purchaser may build on it as he pleases, and the vendor cannot prevent his doing so, even although the buildings erected on it may interfere with his ancient lights. Ibid.

If an adjoining owner knowingly permits a messuage and premises to be rebuilt of an increased size and height, with the alteration of ancient lights, and the opening new lights upon an additional floor, he cannot object to them after they are complete, or assert a right to raise a party-wall, and build upon his own property so high as to render the new buildings less accessible to light and air than they were at the completion of the work. Cotching v. Basset, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S) Chanc. 286; 32 Beav. 101.

(b) Encroachments.

A was the owner and occupier of a house of three stories which had an ancient window on each floor. He altered the windows in the two lower floors, leaving the window in the third floor unaltered. He also built two new stories to his house, with windows intended to be permanent. A did not intend by making these alterations to abandon any privilege of his ancient windows. B, the owner of adjoining premises, could not obstruct the new windows in the upper floors without also obstructing the old windows, and he built on his own land a wall which had the effect of obstructing all A's windows. A afterwards blocked up his new windows, and sued B for continuing the obstruction of the wall, which the defendant refused to remove:—Held, per totam Curiam, that, though one or more of the old windows were left in their original condition, still the defendant was justified in obstructing both the old and new windows, it being impossible to obstruct the new without also obstructing the old.—Held, by Keating, J., that the effect of the plaintiff's act, in enlarging his old windows and throwing out new ones, was to cause an abandonment of the easement as it previously existed; and that the plaintiff had not preserved his easement by objecting to the wall being built by the defendant.—Held, by Byles, J., that the plaintiff having indicated, by the mode in which he proceeded, that he intended permanently to alter the condition of his windows, and the defendant having exercised his right of obstruction also in a permanent manner, the plaintiff did not, by restoring his own premises to the status quo before these alterations took place, acquire the right to call upon the defendant to do the same.—Held, by Erle, C.J. and Williams, J., that the throwing out new windows and enlarging old ones was not an abandonment of the prior easement; and that though it conferred a right on the defendant, the servient owner, to obstruct the new lights, and, if necessary in so doing, to obstruct the old also, yet that on the plaintiff's restoring his premises to their original condition, it was incumbent on the defendant to remove his obstruction, and that the permanent nature of this obstruction did not justify him in continuing it. [See Jones v. Tapling, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 111; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 283.]—Held, by the majority of the Court of Exchequer Chamber [see 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 342; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 826], that the action lay; by Wightman, J. and Crompton, J. that assuming that the defendant had a right to maintain the obstruction to the plaintiff's old lights so long as that course was necessary for the purpose of blocking up the new windows, this right of the defendant ceased when the plaintiff closed up the new windows; by Bramwell, B. and Blackburn, J., that it was no excuse at any time for the defendant that he obstructed the plaintiff's old windows for the purpose of blocking out the new windows, and that the new windows could not have been otherwise prevented from becoming privileged in twenty years' time, and that Renshaw v. Bean was bad law; and by Pollock, C.B. and Martin, B., that Renshaw v. Bean was well decided; that the defendant was justified in erecting the wall to block the new lights; and also that he was not liable to an action for not taking it down when the plaintiff removed the new windows. And held, by the House of Lords, that B had not at any time the right to build a wall which would have the effect of obstructing the ancient lights in A's house, although the new windows could not otherwise have been obstructed. Tapling v. Jones (House of Lords), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 342.

Held, also, that the right to an ancient light since the Prescription Act depends upon the statute, and does not rest on any presumption of a grant or a fiction of a licence having been obtained from the adjoining proprietor. Ibid.

Renshaw v. Bean and Hutchinson v. Copestake overruled. Ibid.

(c) Acquiescence.

To an action for obstructing the light and air from entering the plaintiff's dwelling-house, for raising buildings above the level of the said house, and thereby preventing the smoke from being carried off from it by the chimneys of such house, and for pulling down certain adjoining buildings of the defendant by which the house of the plaintiff was deprived of the support to which it was entitled, the defendant pleaded for a defence upon equitable grounds that the grievances complained of were occasioned by the defendant pulling down a messuage of his and erecting another messuage in lieu of it, and that the defendant so pulled down the one messuage and erected the other, and expended thereby large sums of money, with the knowledge, acquiescence and consent of the plaintiff, and on the faith that the plaintiff so knew of, and acquiesced in, and consented to the defendant so pulling down the one messuage and erecting the other, and so spending such sums of money. The defendant being under terms not to rely on such plea as amounting to a common law plea of leave and licence, the plaintiff replied thereto, upon equitable grounds, that the plaintiff acquiesced and consented as in that plea mentioned upon the faith of false representations made to him by the defendant, viz. that the grievances complained of would not result from the pulling down of the one and erecting the other messuage, and expending of the money as in the plea mentioned:—Held, that the plea was good as an equitable defence, but that the same was well answered by the replication. Davies v. Marshall, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 61; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 697.

(G) EXTENT OF OBSTRUCTION NECESSARY TO SUPPORT AN ACTION AND FOR AN INJUNCTION.

The warehouse of the plaintiffs, which had ancient windows, having been burnt down, was rebuilt by them. In the new warehouse the windows were placed in different situations, were of different sizes, and altogether occupied more space than the windows of the old building. Some parts of some of the new windows coincided with some parts of the old; but the greater portion did not coincide. The defendants, who had premises on the other side of the street, raised their own house, and so obstructed the access of light to the new windows. They could not have obstructed the passage of light to such portions of the windows as were new, without at the same time obstructing its passage to such portions as were in the sites of the old windows:—Held, that the plaintiffs, under these circumstances, could not maintain an action against the defendants for obstructing the passage of light to their warehouse windows, as no one of the existing windows substantially corresponded with any of the ancient lights; and (per Channell, B. and Blackburn, J.) that it was not necessary in the present case to decide whether there is a right to block up a new window, if it cannot be done without also blocking up an ancient unaltered one. Hutchinson v. Copestake (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 19; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 863.

The plaintiff being owner of a house in which there were ancient lights, rebuilt it, and in so doing altered the position of some of the ancient windows, and also opened new windows. The defendant proposed to build so as to obstruct both the new and ancient windows:—Held, that as the defendant could not possibly obstruct the new windows without at the same time obstructing the ancient lights, the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction as prayed. The decision in Renshaw v. Bean approved. [See, however, Tapling v. Jones, ante, (F) (h).]

Weatherly v. Ross, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 128; 1 Hem. & M. 349.

Held, also that the plaintiff, on undertaking to close up the new windows and to restore the ancient lights to their original position, would be entitled to an injunction; but that as this was new relief, he must pay the costs of the suit. Ibid.

Where a landlord who had granted a lease of certain premises, including ancient lights and appurtenances to A, in consideration of certain improvements which had been made by A in the premises leased (which improvements included new lights), granted a lease of the adjoining premises to B, and B was building so as to block up the lights of A. Upon bill by A for injunction, held, that the landlord could not have blocked up such lights, and that his lessee, B, could stand in no better position, and the Court granted an injunction as against B. Davies v. Marshall, 1 Dr. & S. 557.

If a person having ancient lights which he is entitled to have protected, puts in new lights on the same side of the building, he has no right to any protection in respect of such new lights, and the owner of the contiguous premises may build up any structure obstructing the new lights, even though in so doing he necessarily interferes with the old lights. Ibid.

(A) REFUSAL TO INSTITUTE TO A LIVING FOR WANT OF TESTIMONIAL.

(B) FEES.

(A) REFUSAL TO INSTITUTE TO A LIVING FOR WANT OF TESTIMONIAL.

R, a clerk in holy orders, who had lately held a benefice and cure of souls in the diocese of M, was presented to a vacant living in the diocese of E. R, not having been ordained by the Bishop of E, and being wholly unknown to him, was required by the latter, before institution, to produce a testimonial from the Bishop of M as to his, R's, "honest conversation, ability and conformity to the ecclesiastical laws of England." R having failed to procure such testimonial within due time, the Bishop of E collated his own clerk by lapse:—Held, that the Bishop of E had no right to refuse to institute R on the ground that he had not produced such testimonial from the Bishop of M. Marshall v. the Bishop of Exeter (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 262; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 820.

The 48th Canon, A.D. 1603, has no application to the institution of clerks to livings, but only to the service of cures, and in churches and chapels by curates and ministers who are not incumbents. Ibid.

(B) FEES.

The office of registrar of the Court of an archdeacon is one to which fees may be annexed by immemorial usage. Such fees need not necessarily be of a fixed and ascertained, but may be of a reasonable, amount. Shepherd v. Payne, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 297; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 414.

The defendants P and Q were churchwardens of T, in the archdeaconry of C, which consists of 200 parishes; and which is divided into eighteen rural deaneries. It is also divided into four "calls"; and two visitations, one at Michaelmas and one at Easter, are held yearly at the principal town in each call, for all the parishes in that call. At the Easter visitation the churchwardens are cited to appear, and the registrar delivers to them their printed declarations of office, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 62. s. 9, which they sign. They also pay the procurations and synodals due to the archdeacon, and the churchwardens deliver to the archdeacon in his court a presentment of the state of their church and their declarations of office. The Michaelmas visitation is held chiefly for the purpose of ascertaining that the orders made at the Easter visitation have been complied with, and the business is frequently transacted by means of letters sent through the post, without the personal appearance of the churchwardens. The defendants were, in the year 1857, cited to the Easter visitation, when the defendant P attended; the other defendant did not appear. In respect of this visitation, the sum of 7*s*. 6*d*. was claimed by the plaintiffs, and payment refused by the defendants. At the Michaelmas visitation, the defendants were also cited, when the defendant Q sent a presentment through the post, in respect of which visitation a fee of 4*s*. 6*d*. was claimed by the plaintiffs, and refused by the defendants. Similar claims were made, and refused, at subsequent visitations, at which the churchwardens were not present:—Held, that though the fees were claimed in some respects for services not actually performed, yet that, as it appeared that it was the invariable practice to pay the fees when the churchwardens were absent, the claim was not invalidated on that ground. Held, also, that it was no objection to the recovery of these fees that the visitation was not held in each parish individually; for that practice had been sanctioned by custom; nor was it any objection that certain canons of 1603 had not been complied with; for even if the provisions of those canons related to fees of this description (as to which quære) still they could not take away the customary right. Ibid.

By a private act of parliament establishing a cemetery company it was enacted, that upon the interment of every person within the cemetery the company should pay to the incumbent for the time being of the church or chapel of the parish, or other ecclesiastical division of the parish, from which such person should be removed for the purpose of interment, certain fees. The district chapelry of J was carved out of the larger district parish of M after the passing of the act, and never had any burial-ground of its own:—Held, that the incumbent of J, and not of M, was entitled to the fees payable by the cemetery company for the interment of persons removed from the district of J, and this, notwithstanding the district of J had been constituted since the passing of the Cemetery Company's Act. Vaughan v. the South Metropolitan Cemetery Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 265; 1 Jo. & H. 256.

(A) WHEN MAINTAINABLE.

(a) Satisfied Term.

By a marriage settlement made in 1738, real estate was settled to the use of T T for life, and then to the use of trustees for the term of five hundred years, in trust for raising 200*l.* for the portions of the younger children of T T, with remainder to the sons of T T in tail. In 1783, in consideration of 200*l.* paid to the younger children of T T, and of the further sum of 240*l.* paid to R T, the eldest son of T T, the representatives of the trustees of the term by the direction of the younger children, and also R T, assigned the term by way of mortgage to H. In January 1784, R T, by a post-nuptial settlement, conveyed in fee to W C and G C, in trust for the use of R T for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to their son T for life, remainder to the lawful children of T in such shares as T should appoint, and in default of appointment, to them equally, and in default of issue, over to E, and her issue; and covenant by R T against incumbrances, except the term of 500 years in H for securing 440*l.*, which term was thereby agreed to be assigned in trust to attend the inheritance. In July 1784, H assigned the term to O in trust for W C and G C, for the uses and trusts limited by the settlement of January 1784, to the intent that it might be preserved and kept on foot to attend the inheritance to protect it from incumbrances. In 1841, by mortgage deed (made after the death of R T and his wife) T and his three children demised the property to W for a term of 2,000 years, and the deed contained a declaration that O should stand possessed of the term of 500 years in trust for W, for better securing the mortgage money, and subject thereto in trust to attend the inheritance. In 1843, T, in exercise of the power of appointment under the settlement of January 1784, appointed the property in fee to his three children as tenants in common, subject to the mortgage of 1841; and it was declared that such mortgage debt should thenceforth become the proper debt of the three children. In 1844, W transferred the mortgage and term of 2,000 years, in trust for M; and the representative of O assigned the term of 500 years, also in trust for M, to secure the mortgage money, and then in trust for the three children of T, and subject to those trusts to attend the inheritance:—Held, that the term of 500 years was a satisfied term within the meaning of the statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112, and could not be set up against parties claiming the inheritance under E on default of lawful issue of T; the dealings with the term in 1841 and subsequently being invalid for want of such lawful issue. Plant v. Taylor, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 289; 7 Hurls. & N. 211.

In ejectment the plaintiffs, as above stated, claimed through E under the settlement of January 1784, alleging that T, who was dead, had no lawful children, his three children being the issue of a second wife, whom it was proved T had married during the life of his first wife. The defendants claimed under the same settlement as being the three lawful children of T, and they impugned the validity of the marriage of T with his first wife on the ground that such first wife was then a married woman; and they proposed to give in evidence declarations of T made to his son respecting T's marriage with his first wife:—Held, that such declarations were inadmissible. Ibid.

The plaintiff, in an action of ejectment, brought in 1862, had executed a mortgage in fee of the premises in 1844, in the lifetime of his mother, who was then in possession, to one J; and the defendant, who had purchased under a power of sale contained in this mortgage, for four years preceding the issue of the writ had been in the receipt of the rents. The plaintiff in 1861 took out letters of administration to his mother, who died in 1848, and claimed title, as administrator, to the residue of an unexpired term of years determinable on lives existing at the date of the issue of the writ. At the trial, the plaintiff gave evidence that the premises were in the possession of his mother in her lifetime; and in order to cut down the legal presumption of a seisin in fee, gave parol evidence to shew the interest his mother took was less than the fee, by giving evidence of search for and probable loss of and secondary evidence of the contents of a deed of assignment of the premises for the remainder of a term of ninety-nine years, subject to lives, under which the mother was alleged to have been in possession, and under which he now claimed:—Held, first, that there was evidence for the jury of the existence of such a term, and that it might be presumed that the possession of the mother was with reference to that term; and, secondly, that for the purposes of this action, the plaintiff was a stranger and suing as administrator to his mother in a different right from that in which he had executed the mortgage in his mother's lifetime, and that the fact of his having a beneficial interest in the premises, as one of his mother's next-of-kin, did not make him the less a stranger; and that he was, therefore, not estopped by the mortgage from relying on his title to the term as administrator. Metters v. Brown, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 138; 1 Hurls. & C. 686.

F, being possessed of a cottage and land, put Q into occupation of them in 1837, and in the same year mortgaged them for a term of years, and paid the interest down to 1848, when he conveyed the equity of redemption to H. Q held possession from 1837 until January 1862, without payment of rent to any one, and then executed a conveyance in fee to the plaintiff, and remained in occupation as the plaintiff's tenant; but in April 1862 Q gave up possession to H, who subsequently joined the mortgagee's representative in a conveyance to the defendants. Ejectment having been brought by the plaintiff in 1863,—Held, first, that the twenty-five years' possession by Q and conveyance to the plaintiff did not give the latter a title as against the mortgagee or those claiming under him; and, secondly, that there was no estoppel. Ford v. Ager, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 269; 2 Hurls. & C. 279.

The defendants, in an action of ejectment, were lessees to the plaintiff of the premises, and paid the rent reserved under their lease, which contained in the habendum the following proviso: "Subject, nevertheless, to a certain indenture of lease bearing date, &c., and made between G D of the first part, J D, E D and R B D of the second part, and W K of the third part, whereby the said premises were demised to the said W K, his executors, administrators and assigns, for a term of twenty-one years from &c., subject to the covenants and agreements therein mentioned." At the time of ejectment brought, which was for breaches of covenants contained in the defendants' lease, the term demised in the previous lease was still outstanding in the said W K:—Held, that the defendants were not entitled to set up this outstanding term as a defence to the ejectment. Duke v. Ashby, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 168; 7 Hurls. & N. 600.

(B) PRACTICE.

(a) Time for Proceeding after Appearance.

A plaintiff in ejectment is not to be deemed out of court if he do not proceed within a year after the date of appearance entered. Section 58. of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76. does not apply to actions of ejectment. Scrope v. Paddison, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 244; 6 Hurls. & N. 641.

(b) Interrogatories.

An order, requiring a plaintiff in ejectment to answer interrogatories as to the nature of his title, will not be made under sect. 51. of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, on an affidavit merely satisfying the requirements of section 52. Such order will only be made where there is an affidavit shewing special circumstances to justify it. Pearson v. Turner, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 224; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 157.

In the exercise of the powers conferred by section 51. of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, in allowing a party to deliver interrogatories to the opposite party, this Court will take as a guide the rules and principles acted upon in the courts of equity as to bills of discovery, although it will not consider itself to be fettered by those rules. And in an action of ejectment the Court will not compel the defendant to answer interrogatories where the answer would tend to shew that he had incurred a forfeiture of his lease by reason of his having underlet the premises. Pye v. Butterfield, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 17; 5 Best & S. 829.

ELECTION.

A testator was seised of the entirety of two freehold houses situate at A and B respectively, and of two-thirds of a freehold house and eighteen cottages situate at B; and his wife was seised of the other third of the last-mentioned house and of the cottages. By his will, he devised "all his freehold messuages or tenements, cottages, &c., at A and B, or elsewhere," to his wife for life, with remainder over. He also gave his personal estate to his wife. Upon a bill for the administration of his estate,—Held, that the wife and those claiming under her must elect between her one-third and the benefits given to her by the will. Miller v. Thurgood, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 511; 33 Beav. 496.

The doctrine of election is not properly a rule of positive law, but a rule of practice in equity. The knowledge of it is not therefore to be imputed as a matter of legal obligation. Where a case of election arises, the person who ought to make it must be shewn to have known of his duty to do so, and must be proved to have done such acts as amounted to an election. Spread v. Morgan, 11 H.L. Cas. 588.

Remaining in possession of two estates, held under titles not consistent with each other, affords no decisive proof of that kind. The rule is, "that if a party being bound to elect between two properties, not being called upon so to elect, continues in the receipt of the rents and profits of both, such receipt affording no proof of preference, cannot be an election to take the one, and reject the other."—Padbury v. Clark (2 Mac. & G. 298) confirmed. Ibid.

Semble, per Lord Chelmsford—A party having an equity to compel an election, does not forfeit that equity by delay in enforcing it. And, per Lord Chelmsford—An election gives a right to compensation. Assuming such compensation to be in the nature of a simple contract debt, the Statute of Limitations can only begin to run against it when the election has been made. Ibid.

The Appeal Committee cannot decide what documents are, and what are not, necessary to be printed in the appendix to a case. A question on this point, though known by the parties to exist, was not made the subject of discussion during the argument on the appeal. The House would not afterwards hear it discussed, and refused to make any order as to the costs of the appendix. Ibid.

The decision below being reversed, and the cause remitted, the Court below was left to deal with the general question of costs. Ibid.

EMBEZZLEMENT.

[See LARCENY—NAVAL STORES.]

(A) FRAUDULENT APPROPRIATION OF MONEY.

It was the duty of the prisoner, who was assistant overseer, to collect the poor-rates on behalf of the overseers, and to enter the sums received from time to time in a book which he was bound to keep, and to pay the money in to the overseers' account at their bankers'. The prisoner received certain sums for the rates and duly entered them as received, but instead of paying them in to the bankers, as he told the overseers he had done, he fraudulently appropriated the money to his own use, and obtained from the overseers receipts, on the faith of his statement, in order to deceive the Poor-Law Auditor:—Held, that he was guilty of embezzlement, notwithstanding that he had charged himself in his book with the receipt of the money. R. v. Guelder, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 34; Bell, C.C. 284.

(B) CLERK OR SERVANT.

(a) County Court Bailiff.

A bailiff of a county court who has fraudulently appropriated the proceeds of levies made under the process of the county court, cannot for this misconduct be convicted on an indictment charging him as servant of the high-bailiff with having embezzled the moneys of the high-bailiff his master. R. v. Glover, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 169; 1 L. & C. 466.

(b) Sharer in Profits.

The prisoner, the cashier and collector of a manufacturing firm, had, in addition to a fixed yearly salary, a per-centage on the profits made by the firm, but was not to be liable for its losses. He had no control over the management of the business:—Held, that he might be indicted as a servant for embezzling the moneys of the firm. R. v. Macdonald, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 67; 1 L. & C. 35.

(c) Agent allowed Commission on Orders.

The prisoner was employed to obtain orders for the sale of iron, manufactured by the prosecutors in a different county. He was to receive a certain commission on the orders he got. It was his duty to account to the prosecutors for any money he might receive; but it was not expressly found to be his duty to receive money. He received money for them, which he fraudulently appropriated to his own use:—Held, by the Court, that the prisoner could not be convicted of embezzlement, as he was not shewn to be a clerk or servant to the prosecutors, or a person employed in the capacity of a clerk or servant. R. v. May, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 81; 1 L. & C. 13.

(d) Commercial Traveller.

The prisoner, a commercial traveller paid by commission, employed by the prosecutor to obtain orders and receive payments, fraudulently appropriated a sum he received for the prosecutor:—Held, that he was liable to be indicted for embezzlement as the servant of the prosecutor, although he was at liberty to receive orders for other persons also. R. v. Tite, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 142; 1 L. & C. 29.

(e) Secretary to Money Club or Building Society.

The prisoner was secretary to a money club, a voluntary association. By the rules he was to make out the promissory notes to be signed by the members and their sureties, to whom money was advanced. He was a member of the committee, whose duty it was to inquire into the sufficiency of persons proposed as sureties. He was also to summon special meetings, and to counter-sign all cheques on the treasurer. The members paid their instalments on club nights to the stewards, who handed the sums over to the treasurer. In consequence of doubts of the solvency of the makers of a particular promissory note, it was, by the direction of the club, handed over to the prisoner by the payee, the trustee of the club, with directions to the prisoner to sue upon it or to get better security for the money advanced. The prisoner employed an attorney, sued on the note in his own name, and received payment from one of the makers. He appropriated the money to his own use, and for a long time denied the receipt of it, and returned the note to the trustee as being unpaid:—Held (Crompton, J. dubitante), that the duties of the prisoner as secretary were sufficiently cognate to that of the receipt of money for the club to make his employment to receive money in this particular instance an employment of him as clerk or servant; and that, notwithstanding he had recourse to an action in his own name to get in the money, he still received it for and on account of his employers. R. v. Tongue, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 49; Bell, C.C. 289.

A secretary of a benefit building society, according to the certified rules, had nothing to do with the receipt of money when paid off by the mortgagees, but the rules were not strictly followed, and the secretary was in the habit of receiving such moneys. The secretary embezzled a sum so paid to him. It was held, that he might be convicted of embezzlement under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 47, as the course of business was evidence that, in addition to his duties as secretary, he was employed by the trustees as their servant to receive such moneys on their behalf. R. v. Hastie, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 63; 1 L. & C. 269.

(f) Trading Company.

On an indictment against the prisoner, as servant to A and others, for embezzlement, proof was given that the prisoner was servant to a trading company, calling itself the R Coal Company, "Limited"; that this name was over the office-door of the company; that there were eighty shareholders, of whom A was one; that its affairs were managed by directors; that its shares were transferable by certificate, without the consent of the other shareholders; and that a minute-book of resolutions was kept. No certificate of incorporation was put in evidence:—Held (Blackburn, J. dubitante), that there was no evidence for the jury that the company was incorporated, and that on the evidence the prisoner was properly alleged in the indictment to be the servant of A and others. R. v. Frankland, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 69; 1 L. & C. 276.

(g) Member of Friendly Society.

The prisoner was a member of a duly certified friendly society. He was also paid secretary to the society. His duty, among other things, was to keep correct accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the society, to receive the moneys weekly from members, and to pay what was due from the society, and weekly to place the balance in the society's box which was left in the lodge-room. He appropriated to his own use certain sums paid in by members, and omitted to enter them as received in the society's books:—Held, that he might be convicted of embezzling the money. R. v. Proud, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 71; 1 L. & C. 97.

A committee formed of the members of two friendly societies for the purpose of conducting a railway excursion, appointed certain persons to sell the excursion tickets to the members of the societies. The money received from the sale of the tickets was to be paid over to a specified person, and was to belong to the two societies in certain proportions. The prisoner, who was a member of the committee, was one of those nominated to sell tickets, and a certain number of tickets were entrusted to him by the committee to sell. Of these he sold some, but instead of paying over the sum received for the sale, he fraudulently appropriated it to his own use. He received no remuneration for his services:—Held, that the prisoner was not liable to be convicted on an indictment charging him as servant to the other members of the committee with embezzling their moneys. R. v. Bren, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 59; 1 L. & C. 346.

(A) JUDGMENT RECOVERED.

(E) BY DEED.
(F) BY UNTRUE ACCOUNTS AND FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.
(G) BY CONDUCT.

(A) JUDGMENT RECOVERED.

To a declaration on a marine policy of insurance, alleging a loss by a peril insured against, the defendant pleaded, by way of estoppel, a judgment, by a foreign Court, of condemnation of the ship and cargo, in which it was found, as a ground of condemnation, that the ship was laden in whole or in part with articles contraband of war, and had them in the act of transportation at sea; and that she was not truly destined to the port of Matamoras, but to some other port, and in aid and for the use of persons then at war with the United States, and in violation of the law of nations; and that the ship's papers were simulated and false as to her real destination:—Held, that this judgment did not conclusively find that the ship had not sailed for Matamoras, or that she had deviated from her voyage, but only that the ultimate destination of the ship, or goods, or both, was some other port than Matamoras, and that upon this interpretation of the judgment the facts conclusively found were insufficient. Hobbs v. Henning, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 117.

Held, also, per Erle, C.J. and Byles, J., that such a judgment could not be pleaded as an estoppel. Ibid.

It is competent to the Court of Chancery, notwithstanding the provisions in the Chancery Amendment and Regulation Acts of 1858 and 1862 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27. and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42), in refusing an injunction, to reserve to the plaintiff the right of proceeding at law. Langmead v. Maple, 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 255.

To a declaration for an injury to the plaintiff's reversion, by building upon and against certain walls of the plaintiff, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff ought not to be permitted to implead him in respect of those causes of action, because, after their accrual, and after the passing of the Chancery Regulation Act, 1862, the plaintiff commenced his suit and filed his bill in Chancery against him, and impleaded him therein for the same rights, claims, and causes of action, as in the declaration alleged; and that such proceedings were thereupon had that the Court of Chancery determined the same alleged causes of action in favour of the defendant and gave judgment and decreed in respect thereof in favour of the defendant; and that the said judgment and decree still remained in force:—Held, a good plea by way of estoppel. The plaintiff replied that he ought to be permitted to implead the defendant in respect of the causes of action in the declaration alleged, because he said that the Court of Chancery, in dismissing his bill, reserved to him the right of proceeding at law for the causes of action in the declaration alleged, and ordered his bill to be dismissed without prejudice to such right:—Held, a good replication. Ibid.

(B) JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT.

A defendant, by allowing judgment to go against him by default in an action to which he has a good defence, is not estopped from pleading such defence in a subsequent action against him by the same plaintiff, if such defence be not inconsistent with any traversable averment in the declaration in the former action. Therefore where, in the first action, in which judgment by default was so obtained, the declaration was for non-payment of rent which had accrued due under an agreement to grant a lease, and the plaintiff, in a subsequent action, sued the same defendant for further rent under the same agreement, the defendant was held not to be estopped from pleading in such last action that a yearly tenancy had, by agreement between the parties, been substituted for the defendant's interest under the agreement declared on, and that such yearly tenancy had been duly put an end to before the accruing of the plaintiff's cause of action. Howlett v. Tarte, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 146; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 634.

(C) BY RECORD.

In an action of trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's land, and building thereon a wall and cornice, a verdict was found for the defendant on the pleas of liberum tenementum. In a subsequent action, by the devisees of the former defendant against the former plaintiff and his wife, for injury to the reversion by the wife breaking and entering the land and pulling down the cornice, the defendants were held (dubitante Martin, B.) to be estopped, by the record in the former action, from giving evidence to shew that the land under the cornice had not then been in dispute. Whittaker v. Jackson, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 181; 2 Hurls. & C. 926.

(D) RES JUDICATA.

To a declaration for the infringement of a patent the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not the first inventor; that the plaintiff did not file a sufficient specification within six months; that the invention in the specification was not the invention for which the letters patent were granted; that the invention was not new; and that the invention was not one for which letters patent could be granted. To these pleas the plaintiff replied that he had filed a bill in Chancery against the defendant for another infringement of the same patent; that the matter was referred to arbitration; that the defendant contended before the arbitrator that the letters patent were illegal and void on the several grounds respectively set out in the pleas, and also contended generally that the patent was illegal and void, and that the arbitrator awarded that the letters patent were not illegal nor void:—Held, that there was no estoppel, and the replications were therefore bad. Newall v. Elliot, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 120; 1 Hurls. & C. 797.

To a declaration for negligently running down the plaintiffs' vessel, the defendants pleaded that the plaintiffs had taken proceedings in the Court of Admiralty against the ship and freight, and had arrested the ship and caused her to be sold, and that the money arising from the sale and the amount of the freight was paid into that court to abide the decision, and that the same had been ordered to be paid out to the plaintiffs by that Court:—Held, that this was a bad plea, and that the proceedings in the Court of Admiralty were no bar to the subsequent proceedings in this Court. Nelson v. Couch, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 46; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 99.

(E) BY DEED.

By a deed between a railway company and contractors, claims by the latter (specified in a schedule), under the contract, for alleged losses by reason of delay in obtaining possession of the land, were referred to arbitration. The deed recited that, with the exception of the claims contained in the schedule, the company and the contractors had "settled, adjusted and mutually satisfied every other account, claim or demand which the parties had against each other arising out of the said contract, or any other account, matter or thing whatsoever, as the company and the contractors thereby admitted and acknowledged":—Held, that this recital was not an estoppel to an action by the company on a bond entered into by the contractors, conditioned for the performance of their original contract, alleging as a breach the non-execution and completion of tunnels according to the contract. The South-Eastern Rail. Co. v. Warton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 515; 6 Hurls. & N. 520.

Upon the dissolution of partnership between the plaintiffs and the defendant, the defendant assigned to the plaintiffs all his interest in a patent, which formed part of the assets:—Held, that the defendant could not afterwards set up the invalidity of the patent as against the plaintiffs. Chambers v. Crichley, 33 Beav. 374.

(F) BY UNTRUE ACCOUNTS AND FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.

The plaintiff, the surveyor to the trustees of turnpike roads, rendered to the trustees yearly accounts purporting to be the whole amount of the moneys expended in the maintenance of the roads, it being his duty to make all contracts and give orders and pay the sums due in respect thereof, he being permitted to draw cheques on the treasurer to a certain amount, and the balance alleged to be due to him at the end of each year being carried on to the next. From the accounts so rendered, the clerk to the trustees, pursuant to statute 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, made out and transmitted to the clerk of the peace a statement of the revenue and expenditure of the trust, and these statements were duly published as required by law, and the trustees, with the moneys in hand, paid off debts of the trust. The plaintiff subsequently claimed a larger sum as due to him in respect of payments in these years, the whole amount of which ought to have been paid for and brought into the previous accounts, but was knowingly omitted by the plaintiff, but without any intention on his part to receive more than was due to him:—Held, Bramwell, B. dissenting, that the plaintiff was estopped from recovering the excess from the trustees, they having acted upon the faith of the statements in the accounts originally rendered. Cave v. Mills, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 265; 7 Hurls. & N. 913.

The plaintiff, wishing to sell certain shares of which he was the owner, was induced by his broker to execute a transfer, leaving a blank for the broker to insert the numbers and description of the shares. The broker fraudulently filled up the blank with the numbers and description of other shares belonging to the plaintiff, but in a different company, namely, that of the defendants, and passed the transfer as a genuine transfer to a purchaser. By the rules of the defendant's company it was necessary to produce certificates of the shares before a purchaser's name could be entered on the register as the holder of the shares. The certificates of the shares in question were kept by the plaintiff in a box in the broker's custody. The box was locked, and the plaintiff kept the key. The broker, however, managed to get a duplicate key and stole the certificates, and produced them with the transfer, and the name of the purchaser was registered. In an action by the plaintiff, claiming damages and a mandamus to have his name restored to the register in respect of the shares,—Held (dissentiente Keating, J.), that the plaintiff had been guilty of no false representation or culpable negligence such as estopped him from charging that the transfer deed was a forgery. Swan v. the North British Australasian Co. (Ex. Ch.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 273; 2 Hurls. & C. 175.

By a deed of settlement a farm tenement was conveyed, subject to a term for 1,000 years, to A for life, with power of leasing for three lives, and with a remainder over, which ultimately became vested in the defendants as tenants in tail. The term for 1,000 years had been created for securing a sum of money, and was, at the time of such settlement, vested in two trustees, one of whom was A, the tenant for life under the settlement. A, in exercise of the said power of leasing, made a lease of the farm for three lives, under which lease the plaintiff became tenant, subject to the rent which was thereby reserved, and which rent he paid to the defendants or their attorneys, R & D, upon the defendants' coming into possession of the property. Afterwards R & D, acting as the defendants' attorneys, wrote a letter to the plaintiff, representing to him that the legal estate was in C under the said term for 1,000 years, and directing the plaintiff, as tenant, to pay the rent to C. In consequence of such letter the plaintiff allowed C to recover judgment against him for rent under the lease. The defendants having afterwards distrained for rent,—Held, in an action of replevin, that as the term for 1,000 years had merged as to one moiety in A, and the defendants had therefore a right to distrain for a moiety of the rent, the effect of the representation by R & D would not estop the defendants from recovering rent which the plaintiff had not paid in consequence of such representation, or had not thereby made himself liable to pay under the judgment obtained against him by C. Greenish v. White, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 93; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 209.

Quære—Whether the representation by R & D was binding as an estoppel on the defendants; the defendants being married women, and therefore not capable of appointing attorneys. Ibid.

(G) By Conduct.

Where a vendor has recognized the right of his vendee to dispose of goods remaining in the actual possession of the vendor, he cannot defeat the right of a person claiming under the vendee, on the ground that no property passed to the latter by reason of the want of a specific appropriation of the goods. Woodley v. Coventry, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 185; 2 Hurls. & C. 164.

The defendants, corn-factors, sold 350 barrels of flour to C, who sold them to the plaintiffs, and gave them a delivery-order on the defendants. The plaintiffs sent the delivery-order to the defendants' warehouse, where the flour remained. The warehouseman said, "It is all right," and gave samples of the flour, and the plaintiffs thereupon advanced money to C. In point of fact, no appropriation had been made of 350 barrels from a larger number in the plaintiffs' warehouse. C became bankrupt, and the price remained unpaid to the defendants. The plaintiffs having brought trover for the flour,—Held, that the defendants were estopped by their conduct from saying that the property in the flour did not pass to the plaintiffs. Ibid.

C, who had been managing clerk to B, a deceased merchant, sold a part of B's personal estate to the defendant, with the consent of A, who claimed an interest therein; and by an agreement between A, C, and the defendant, C, in the name of B, drew a bill of exchange for the price on the defendant, and in the like name indorsed it to A, who retained it till his death. The defendant accepted the bill after it had been so indorsed. After A's death, A's executor put the bill in suit against the defendant, declaring on it as on a bill drawn and indorsed by B. The plea denied the indorsement by B:—Held, that under the circumstances, the defendant was by his own agreement estopped from denying that the bill was indorsed as alleged. Aspitel v. Bryan (Ex. Ch.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 328; 5 Best & S. 723.

Semble—That the bill was evidence of an account stated. Ibid.

Annual stipends payable to the incumbents of five parishes were charged upon certain real estate in 1603; the stipends were paid by the owners of part of the property up to 1853, when payment was discontinued. In 1858 these owners sold their property, and in the particulars of sale, which were seen by the legal advisers of the incumbents and approved as conveying sufficient notice of their claims, the payments were mentioned, but it was stated that they had been discontinued, and were believed not to be legally recoverable:—Held, that the incumbents were estopped from demanding arrears previous to the filing of the bill. The Attorney General v. Naylor, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 151; 1 Hem. & M. 809.

A patentee brought an action for damages for infringement against a certain firm who gave judgment by consent before declaration filed, and immediately took a licence to use the patent for a term. On a bill being filed by the patentee, after the expiration of the licence, to restrain an alleged further infringement of his patent, by the defendants in the action and certain other persons who had joined the firm after the date of the judgment at law,—Held, upon motion for decree, that the defendants in the suit were not estopped either by the licence or by the judgment at law from denying the validity of the plaintiff's patent. Goucher v. Clayton, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 239.

(A) Particular Cases relating to the Admissibility and Effect of Evidence.

(a) Where Written Document inadmissible for Want of a Stamp.

D having a contract to erect buildings for the defendant, and being indebted to B in 23*l.*, at the request of the agent of the latter, verbally promised to give B an order on the defendant, and accordingly sent B the following document addressed to the defendant:—"Please to pay 23*l.* to B and charge the same to my account, J D." The defendant, on seeing this order, signed the following document, and delivered it to B:—"I agree to pay you cash 23*l.*, as per order of D, if I have so much cash left on hand on completion of his contract"; and the defendant subsequently paid the 23*l.* to B. In an action by the assignees of D, who had become bankrupt, against the defendant, for work done under the building contract,—Held, that the order being inadmissible in evidence for want of a stamp as a bill of exchange, there was no evidence of an assignment of the debt so as to entitle the defendant to credit for 23*l.* which he had paid to B after the bankruptcy. Pott v. Lomas, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 210; 6 Hurls. & N. 529.

(b) Evidence irrelevant to the Issue.

The plaintiff brought an action of contract to recover the expenses of raising a boat which had been sunk in a collision with a vessel of the defendants, when the latter was being navigated by the plaintiff, a pilot employed by the defendants for that purpose. The defendants denied such contract, on which issue was joined, and at the trial they tendered evidence to shew that the collision was occasioned by the plaintiff's fault:—Held, that such evidence was inadmissible. Speeding v. Young, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 286; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 824, 827.

Held, also, that the plaintiff, after verdict in his favour, was not entitled, on the taxation of costs, to the costs of evidence tending to shew that the collision was not occasioned by his negligence. Ibid.

(c) Evidence to contradict or discredit Witness.

In order that a party producing a witness may be allowed to give in evidence, under the 22nd section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, a previous statement of the witness as being inconsistent with his present testimony, it is not necessary that the two statements should be directly or absolutely at variance. Jackson v. Thomason, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 11; 1 Best & S. 745.

Quære—Whether, independently of the Common Law Procedure Act, when an attesting witness, called to prove a will, gives evidence invalidating the will, the party calling him may give evidence to discredit him. Ibid.

Where a party to the cause gave evidence himself in support of his case, it was held, by Willes, J. and Keating, J. (Byles, J. dissenting), that he might be asked, on cross-examination, with a view of testing his credit, whether an action had not been brought against him by another person in the County Court, in respect of a similar claim, upon which he had given evidence and had had notwithstanding a verdict of the jury against him; and that he might be so examined without production and proof of the record of the proceedings in the County Court. Henman v. Lester, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 366; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 776.

Held, also, by Willes, J. and Keating, J., that, even if the Judge at the trial ruled wrongly in allowing such questions to be put and answered, the Court would not on that account grant a new trial, unless it could see that injustice had been occasioned by such mistaken ruling. Ibid.

(d) Uncorroborated Evidence of Interested Witness.

The testimony of a claimant alone cannot be acted on, unless there be some corroborative evidence. Parish v. Parish, 32 Beav. 207.

The plaintiff asserted that he had contracted to purchase some shares from the defendant, but the contract was not in writing, the fact was contested, and it was proved by the plaintiff alone. There was, however, proof that the plaintiff had paid the defendant money, but on what account did not appear, and that the defendant had admitted, in writing, that the shares belonged to the plaintiff, though they had not been transferred for fourteen years:—Held, that the contract was sufficiently proved. Ibid.

The evidence of a father claiming an estate for life as tenant by the curtesy will be considered sufficient proof that his child was born alive, when it was acquiesced in and acted upon by the father of the wife, who was residing in the house. Jones v. Ricketts, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 753; 31 Beav. 130.

A purchased sixty-four shares in the name of B, but had the certificates of them delivered to himself. On A's death the certificates of fifty of the above shares were in his possession. In a suit by A's executrix, for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that B was a trustee for her of the fifty shares, the certificates of which were in A's possession at his death, B swore that after the purchase all the above sixty-four shares were given to him by A, but that on the occasion of such gift he took the certificates of fourteen only of such shares, and left the certificates of the remaining shares in A's possession. There was no other evidence than that of B in support of the alleged gift:—Held, that the unsupported evidence of B was insufficient to establish that the fifty shares were given to B. Forrest v. Forrest, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 428.

The evidence of an auctioneer is admissible to prove what took place at the auction. Swaisland v. Dearsley, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 652; 29 Beav. 430.

Evidence of belief only is admissible on interlocutory application, though not at the hearing of a cause, and the grounds of such belief are properly stated in the affidavit, even in the case where such grounds consist in great part of conversations with third persons, who might be but are not produced, and where the deponent swears that he disbelieves the statements made to him by such persons. Bird v. Lake, 1 Hem. & M. 111.

In an action for a fraudulent misrepresentation as to the trustworthiness of a third person, the defendant may call witnesses to testify their belief as to such trustworthiness at the time of the representation. Therefore, where in such an action as to the trustworthiness of W, a tradesman, the plaintiff proved that he had given credit to W on the faith of a letter written by the defendant on the 24th of October 1860, and to establish the scienter evidence was given that the defendant had bought goods from him below their value,—Held (Bramwell, B. dissentiente), that the defendant was entitled to ask tradesmen living in the same town with W, "Was W on the 24th of October 1860 trustworthy to your belief?" Sheen v. Bumpstead, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 124; 1 Hurls. & C. 358.

(f) Evidence to Character (Individual Opinion).

If a prisoner on his trial gives evidence that his character is good, it is open for the prosecution, by way of reply, to prove that the prisoner's character is bad—Martin, B. dubitante. The Queen v. Rowton, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 57; 1 L. & C. 520.

Evidence of character must not be evidence of particular facts, but (by all the Court, except Erle, C.J. and Willes, J.) must be evidence of general reputation only, having reference to the nature of the charge. And per Erle, C.J. and Willes, J., a witness's individual opinion respecting the general character and disposition of the prisoner with reference to the charge is admissible, though such witness knows nothing of the prisoner's general reputation. Ibid.

On a trial for an indecent assault, where the defendant had given evidence of his good character, a witness called by the prosecution to rebut such evidence was asked, "What is the defendant's general character for decency and morality of conduct?" The witness said, "I know nothing of the neighbourhood's opinion, because I was only a boy at school when I knew him; but my own opinion, and the opinion of my brothers, who were also pupils of his, is, that his character is that of a man capable of the grossest indecency and the most flagrant immorality":—Held, by the majority of the Judges, that this answer was not admissible in evidence. Ibid.

(g) Evidence of Birth.

In the absence of clear evidence of respiration by a child after its separation from the funis, clear evidence of pulsation or of animal motion after such separation will be taken as proof that the child was born alive. Brock v. Kellock, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 498; 3 Giff. 58.

For the reason above stated, the Vice Chancellor had decided that the child was born alive, and, on appeal, the Lords Justices, on the evidence of the accoucheur who attended the mother in her confinement, and whom they considered a person of competent skill and of integrity, affirmed his Honour's decision. Ibid.

(h) Reading the Whole of a Document put in.

The general rule of evidence, that if one side puts in evidence a document for the purpose of using part of it, the other side has a right to have the whole put in, does not apply to merchants' or traders' books of account, containing entries of receipts and payments; and, therefore, if one side puts in such books of account to prove certain items of receipts, that does not entitle the other side to put those books in evidence to prove payments, unless the different items are so mixed up together as clearly to form one transaction. Reeve v. Whitmore, 2 Dr. & S. 446.

Although an entry of receipt is good evidence of such receipt as against the person making it, an entry of payment is not evidence of such payment in favour of such person. Ibid.

(B) JUDICIAL DOCUMENTS (COUNTY COURT ORDER).

A county court order for giving up possession of premises, made against a person holding under the tenant, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108. s. 50, is not conclusive evidence of title in a subsequent action against him for mesne profits. Campbell v. Loader, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 50; 3 Hurls. & C. 520.

The Court refused to go into the question of improper rejection of a document, on the ground that it did not appear by the Judge's notes that the document had been formally tendered in evidence at the trial. Ibid.

(C) PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The articles of association provided that a minute signed by any person purporting to be the chairman of any meeting of directors was to be receivable in evidence without any further proof. An entry was made in the minute-book stating the names of parties and the number of shares subscribed for, the name of the chairman, who signed the minute, being set down for 100 shares. The minute was signed, not at the next meeting, but after the proceedings to wind up the company:—Held, that the minute was prima facie evidence against all who were present at the meeting, and, in the absence of counter evidence shewing the incorrectness of the minute, that the chairman was liable as a contributory for 100 shares. Ex parte Sir Cusack P. Roney, in re the Llanharry Hematite Iron Ore Co. (Lim.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 731.

(D) PRIVATE DOCUMENTS.

(a) Entries of Deceased Persons.

A letter by a solicitor, since deceased, making an offer on behalf of a cestui que trust, will not be admitted as evidence in a suit against the trustees by the cestui que trust, where the cestui que trust denied that the solicitor was employed by him, or that he acted on his behalf. Bright v. Legerton, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 338; 29 Beav. 6.

Although the mere entries in a solicitor's books of business alleged to have been done by him, or in a bill of costs and disbursements made out by him in the regular course of business, would not be evidence against third persons, a solicitor's bill of costs, made out to trustees, introducing the name of the cestui que trust as being personally present when the business was transacted, paid by the trustees, and allowed in the settlement of accounts with the cestui que trust, are admissible evidence against the cestui que trust. Ibid.

(b) Contracts.

The defendant had entered into a contract with H for the execution, by H, of certain works at a shed belonging to the defendant. In order to induce M to supply H with the castings necessary for the carrying out of this contract, the defendant promised M to pay her the sum of 218*l.* then due to her from H within six months, provided he had work done by H as security for the same:—Held, in an action by the executors of M, to recover the 218*l.* under this agreement, that they were bound to shew that work to that amount had been done for the defendant by H, and that for this purpose it was necessary to produce the contract between H and the defendant under which the work was executed. Hill v. Nuttall, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 303; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 262.

In addition to the above agreement, the defendant also undertook to pay M for such further castings as should be required for his shed and should be supplied by her on account of H. Further castings were supplied by M to H, but as to some of them there was no evidence that they were delivered by H at the shed:—Held, that there was evidence for the jury to find the defendant liable for these castings under the second agreement. Ibid.

(c) Letters (Res Gestæ).

In trover, the question between the parties was, whether the plaintiffs had sold the goods to A (through whom the defendant claimed) on his own account, or whether they had agreed to sell them through A to G & Co. who, however, had never authorized the purchase. A, at the time of the contract, gave the name of B as a reference of the responsibility of G & Co., the plaintiffs alleging that it was given in reference to G & Co.'s responsibility as buyers, the defendant alleging that it was given merely in reference to their responsibility as the intended shippers of the goods on A's behalf. After the delivery of the goods into the hands of A, the plaintiffs wrote the following letter to their agents at L, where B resided: "We wish you to call and see B, and inquire as to the trustworthiness of Messrs. G & Co., and also of A, who is making a rather large purchase of goods for the above party, and who refers us to Mr. B. Write by return." An answer was received, but was not given in evidence:—Held, that the letter was admissible as evidence for the plaintiff as part of the res gestæ, and that no part could be excluded from the jury. Milne v. Leisler, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 257; 7 Hurls. & N. 786.

(E) SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

To justify the reception of secondary evidence of an agreement, it was proved that A, in whose possession it was, on landing at New York, was arrested on suspicion of being the bearer of secessionist dispatches, and deprived of all his papers (amongst which was the agreement in question, which had reference to shipments in this country of goods intended to run the blockade at Charleston); that all were subsequently restored to him, except the agreement; and that, on his making inquiry for it of the agents of the Federal Government at New York, he was told that it had been sent to Washington:—Held, that it was sufficiently shewn that reasonable efforts had been made to procure the original agreement, and that therefore a copy was properly received in evidence. Quilter v. Jones, 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 747.

(F) PAROL EVIDENCE.

(a) To explain and interpret Written Contracts and other Documents.

In a contract under seal, by which the plaintiff contracted to build for the defendants a house and premises for a certain sum, it was provided that "no alterations or additions should be admitted unless directed by the defendants' architect by writing under his hand, and a weekly account of the work done thereunder should be delivered to the architect every Monday next ensuing the performance of such work." In an action on the contract,—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to shew that by the usage of the building trade "weekly accounts" meant accounts of the day work only, and did not extend to extra work capable of being measured. And that mere sketches of the manner in which the work was to be done furnished by the architect, but not signed by him, were not directions within the meaning of the contract. Myers v. Sarl, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 9; 3 E. & E. 306.

Evidence of statements made by a testator when he executed his will, to explain whether a clause in his will referred to a previous want or not, was rejected. M'Clure v. Evans, 29 Beav. 422.

Where it is sought to import a warranty into a contract of sale contained in letters which are ambiguous in their terms, it is competent to the party sought to be charged to give evidence of all the surrounding facts and circumstances, for the purpose of shewing that a warranty was not contemplated by the parties. Stucley v. Baily, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 483; 1 Hurls. & C. 405.

In an action for the breach of warranty of a yacht sold by the defendant to the plaintiff, the case for the plaintiff consisted of proof that his agent having gone to examine the vessel with a view to buying her, and being unable to ascertain the state of soundness of the masts, where they passed through the decks, told the captain, who was the defendant's agent in the sale, to have them examined by a shipwright and report the result. The captain subsequently wrote, "I have had a good overhaul at the masts, and find they are all as sound as ever." An offer of 3,000*l.* was then made by letter by the plaintiff's agent, who said the plaintiff would have to lay out 500*l.* in repairs. The defendant replied by letter declining to take less than 3,500*l.*, and saying, "You must, I think, be under some very great error in thinking 500*l.* would be required to be spent. Beyond the usual painting, &c., and perhaps a little repair to the copper, I don't really think there are any necessary repairs. . . . Personally I know her sea-going qualities, and how thoroughly sound she is and tight in every part." In a subsequent letter the defendant further said, "her masts have been examined and found as sound as when put in." After some further correspondence, the plaintiff purchased the vessel for 3,375*l.*, and a transfer or bill of sale was made in accordance with the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854:—Held, that assuming the assertions in the letters amounted to a warranty of the soundness of the masts, it was competent to the defendant to prove all the surrounding circumstances and statements of the parties, as well after as before the letters, to shew that a warranty was not contemplated. Ibid.

Semble—That the letters did not amount to a warranty. Ibid.

Quære—Whether it was competent to the plaintiff to set up a warranty not referred to or contained in the bill of sale of the vessel registered under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104). Ibid.

Family repute admissible to shew that a legatee was the godson of the testator. In re Gregory's Settlement and Will, 34 Beav. 600.

A former will of a testator held admissible evidence on a question as to which of two persons was to take as legatees. Ibid.

(b) To contradict or vary Written Contracts and other Documents.

The declaration stated that the defendant agreed to transfer a farm held by him under Lord S to the plaintiff, upon the terms and conditions under which the same was held by the defendant under Lord S, and to sell the stock at a certain price, and alleged a breach of that agreement. The defendant pleaded non assumpsit, and a contemporaneous oral arrangement, that in the event of Lord S not consenting to the transfer, the above agreement was to be null and void, and that Lord S had refused his consent. The principal agreement was in writing, and the plaintiff paid to the defendant 100*l.*, a part of the consideration money, and sold with the defendant's consent a small portion of the stock; but when Lord S refused his consent the defendant tendered back the 100*l.*, which the plaintiff refused to accept:—Held, that evidence of the contemporaneous oral arrangement was rightly received; for that, under the circumstances, the inference of fact was that the oral arrangement was intended to suspend the written agreement and not as a defeasance of it. Held, also, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to produce or cause to be produced at the trial the lease from Lord S to the defendant referred to in the declaration. Wallis v. Littell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 100; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 369.

The plaintiff agreed in writing to purchase certain furniture of the defendant, and by that agreement the defendant was authorized to settle an action of C v. L. In an action, by the plaintiff, against the defendant, for not settling the action, evidence was offered and received of a distinct oral agreement to settle, made on the same occasion as, and immediately before the written agreement. The jury found that such an oral agreement was made:—Held, that the evidence was admissible, and that on the finding of the jury the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict. Lindley v. Lacey, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 7; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 578.

A testator, by his will, gave to two persons the privilege of purchasing his warehouse, &c.; and they, by a joint letter written to the trustees of the will, signified their acceptance of the privilege, but no conveyance was ever executed. The Court held, that it was at liberty to receive evidence of the acts of the purchasers, shewing that they considered themselves entitled as tenants in common. Harrison v. Barton, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 213; 1 Jo. & H. 287.

Parol evidence of statements of intention is not admissible in such a case. Ibid.

(G) DECLARATIONS OF DECEASED PERSONS.

On the trial of an action for the infringement of a patent, the novelty of which was disputed, the defendant gave evidence that R O, then deceased, had, previous to the date of the plaintiff's patent, used a process identical with the plaintiff's, and had produced and sold a product exactly similar to that produced by the plaintiff's patent. The plaintiff called witnesses in reply, and a witness deposed that R O had, on a sale of the product subsequent to that of which the defendant had given evidence and subsequent to the plaintiff's patent, stated that the article was new and that he wished it to be kept secret:—Held, that the evidence was inadmissible. Hyde v. Palmer, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 126; 3 Best & S. 657.

Where an issue is raised between the Crown alleging the bastardy of, and parties claiming to be related to, a deceased intestate, the burden of proof is on the parties setting up the relationship. In such a case evidence of declarations made by a deceased person, other than the deceased in the cause, is inadmissible, unless the relationship is proved aliunde; but evidence of declarations made by the deceased in the cause is admissible. In the goods of Emsley, 2 Swab. & T. 491.

Where a will and codicil (the drafts of which were produced) were proved to have been left by the attorney who drew them with the testator after execution, but were not forthcoming after his death, declarations of the testator to various members of his family down to a few days before his death, expressive of his satisfaction at having settled his affairs, and intimating that his will was left with his attorney, were held to be properly admitted, to rebut the presumption that the will and codicil had been destroyed by the testator animo revocandi. Whiteley v. King, 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 756.

(H) PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE.

[See title PRESUMPTION—Of Survivorship, see Wing v. Angrave, title WILL.]

The evidence to repel the presumption of legitimacy of a child born during wedlock must be strong, distinct, satisfactory and conclusive, and such as to produce a judicial conviction that the child was not procreated by the husband. Atchley v. Sprigg, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 345. 10 Jur NS 1144

Where, however, a husband and wife lived together for nine years without having a child, and then separated and never lived together again, and a child was born ten years after the separation, while the wife was in the habit of committing adultery with another man, which child was treated by the paramour as his own, and was called by his surname, and brought up by him, the child, notwithstanding possibility of access on the part of the husband, was held to be illegitimate. Ibid.

A mother's evidence is inadmissible to prove the legitimacy or illegitimacy of her child born during wedlock. Ibid.

The report in Plowes v. Bossey (31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 681) corrected. Ibid.

Although the law presumes a person who has not been heard of for seven years to be dead, yet (in the absence of special circumstances) it draws no presumption from that fact as to the particular period when he died and the onus of proving death at any particular period of time within the seven years lies with the party alleging death at such particular time. Thomas v. Thomas, 2 Dr. & S. 298.

(I) CONFESSIONS.

If one of two persons charged with stealing says to the other (a policeman and W, the owner of the property, being present), "You had better tell Mr. W the truth," and neither the policeman nor W say anything, a confession made by the person addressed is receivable in evidence against him on the trial. R. v. Parker, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 144; 1 L. & C., 42.

(K) DEPOSITIONS.

(a) In Chancery.

A deposition, taken under the old system (before November, 1852), and used by a party to a suit in Chancery for the purpose of proving particular facts, is admissible as primary evidence of the same facts against the same party in an action by a stranger.—So held by Cockburn, C.J. and Crompton, J.; Blackburn, J. dissenting. Richards v. Morgan, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 114; 4 Best & S. 641.

By a bill in equity, E sought to set aside the purchase of an estate from him by M, on the ground that M was his solicitor, and had given inadequate value; and M, by his answer, sought to shew that the acreage and value of the estate were but small, and used and read, as part of his evidence, the deposition of H, a former tenant, tending to shew the small value and extent of the estate:—Held (by Cockburn, C.J. and Crompton, J.; Blackburn, J. dissenting), in an action by a stranger against M (in which the question was, whether a large tract of mountain land was included in this very estate, as M contended, or was waste of the manor in which it was situate), that H's deposition was admissible as primary evidence against M. Ibid.

Liberty was given to read the affidavit of a witness, who had been prevented, by illness, from being cross-examined, but the Court intimated that little attention would be paid to such an affidavit. Braithwaite v. Kearns, 34 Beav. 202.

(b) Before Magistrates.

There may be incidents to the state of pregnancy which render a woman too ill to travel. It is for the presiding Judge at the trial to decide in his discretion whether the evidence that the witness is too ill to travel is sufficient. R. v. Stephenson, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 147; 1 L. & C. 165.

To render a deposition of a witness absent through illness admissible in evidence on the trial of a prisoner for felony, it must have been taken in the presence of the magistrate as well as of the prisoner. R. v. Watts, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 63; 1 L. & C. 339.

At the hearing of a charge of felony the witnesses were examined and cross-examined by an attorney for the prisoner in the presence of the magistrate, and a note was made of the heads of what they could each prove; the witnesses and the prisoner were then taken into another room, and the witnesses were there, in the absence of the magistrate, examined by a clerk, and their answers taken in writing by him, and their signatures obtained to the paper; after which the witnesses and the prisoner were again brought before the magistrate, and the evidence so taken was read over. The prisoner was then cautioned by the magistrate, and having previously made a statement, signed it, and the magistrate then signed the paper:—Held, that this course of taking the depositions was irregular, and that a deposition so taken was inadmissible in evidence. Ibid.

(L) PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION.

The refusal of a person to allow another who has acted as his solicitor to give evidence in violation of the confidence of the professional relation, can form no just ground for adverse presumption against the person so refusing, and the doctrine in Armory v. Delamirie has no application to such a case—per Lord Chelmsford. Wentworth v. Lloyd (House of Lords), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 688; 10 H.L. Cas. 589.

(A) GRANT OF ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Jurisdiction.

The administration of the personal estate of a deceased person belongs to the Court of the country where the deceased was domiciled at his death. The Court of the domicil is the forum concursus to which the legatees under the will of a testator, or the parties entitled to the distribution of the estate of an intestate, are required to resort—per Lord Westbury, L.C. Enohin v. Wylie, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 402; 10 H.L. Cas. 1.

The duty of administering personal estate in this country is to be discharged by the Courts of this country, though in the performance of that duty they will be guided by the law of the domicil—per Lords Cranworth and Chelmsford. Ibid.

A married woman died intestate in France, leaving personal property there, but none in this country. Her husband, who survived her, was by the law of France unable to obtain possession of the deceased's property without first obtaining letters of administration in England:—Held, that as the deceased left no personal property in England, the Court had no jurisdiction to grant to her husband administration limited to the purpose of substantiating in France his title to the property there situate. In the goods of Tucker, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 29; 3 Swab. & T. 585.

(b) Droits of the Crown.

The rule of evidence in pedigree cases has not been relaxed of late years. The Attorney General v. Köhler, 9 H.L. Cas. 654.

The personal estate of an intestate who leaves no next-of-kin belongs absolutely to the Crown as part of the droits of the Crown. The fact that these droits are now by statute paid into the Treasury, and made to form part of the public revenue, makes no difference in this matter. Ibid.

Money paid to one sovereign in this right cannot, if improperly paid, be recovered from that sovereign's successor. Ibid.

The nominee of the Crown taking out administration to the estate of an intestate is under the same obligation as any other administrator. The 15 Vict. c. 3. only dispenses with the necessity of his giving the usual bond to the Ordinary, but imposes on him all the duties and liabilities of a private administrator. If he improperly pays to the Crown part of the intestate's effects, though such payment is made under authority of a warrant under the Sign Manual, he makes himself personally liable to restore it to parties afterwards proving themselves legally entitled. Upon his death that liability only continues against his personal representatives, and not against his successor in office. But that successor may make himself personally liable for the acts of his predecessor, as by taking out letters of administration de bonis non to the same estate. Ibid.

Where the nominee of the Crown had improperly paid money (thus coming to his hands) to the then sovereign, and the succeeding nominee of the Crown had taken out letters of administration de bonis non to the same estate, and, in a suit by the next-of-kin against him, had only contested the fact of the claimants being truly the next-of-kin, and denied, if they were so, liability to pay interest on the sum claimed, —Held, that this was in substance an admission of liability to pay the principal to the next-of-kin, and the claimants having satisfactorily established their title to that character, the liability to pay interest followed, as of course, on the liability to pay the principal. Ibid.

A, a defendant, as administrator on the nomination of the Crown, in a suit by the alleged next-of-kin, died; B, his successor in office, took out letters de bonis non. A bill to revive the suit was filed, and an order made thereon recited the prayer of the bill thus: "that the said suit and proceedings, which had so become abated as aforesaid, might be revived, and be in the same plight and condition against B, as they were at the time of the death of A, and that the plaintiffs might have the same relief against B as they would have been entitled to and had against A had he still been living," and then added, "which is hereby ordered by the Court as prayed":—Held, that this order did not of itself create any liability in B, but merely put the suit in the same state as it had been in before A's death. No costs were given. Ibid.

(c) Generally.

The grant of administration with the will annexed of a married woman, who appoints no executor, follows the interest, and can only be made to the husband on renunciation of the persons interested under the will. In the goods of Bailey, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 190; 2 Swab. & T. 135.

If the husband of a married woman who is entitled to letters of administration refuses to execute the administration bond, or to assist in her obtaining the grant, the Court will grant administration to her, and allow a third person to execute the bond. In the goods of Sutherland, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 126.

In 1807 letters of administration with the will of A annexed were granted by the Prerogative Court of Canterbury to B, as substituted legatee, the grant reciting, "that C, the universal legatee for life, had died without taking out letters of administration." In 1862, upon application for a grant of administration de bonis non, it was objected in the registry that by the terms of the will C was entitled to the effects of the deceased absolutely, and not merely for life, and therefore that the original grant was incorrect:—Held, that as the grant was not clearly bad, and the objection to its correctness, which turned on a nice question of construction, was not raised by a person interested, the Court would, after such a lapse of time, presume that it was rightly made. In the goods of Smith, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 187; 2 Swab. & T. 371.

A died leaving a will, whereby he appointed his wife sole executrix and universal legatee. She took probate, and afterwards married B, and during her coverture made a will in execution of a power vested in her, and appointed B sole executor. Upon her death B took limited probate of her will, and also administration of the rest of her effects:—Held, that B, as representing the whole of his wife's personal estate, was entitled to administration of the unadministered effects of A. In the goods of Martin, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 5; 3 Swab. & T. 1.

A testator appointed A, B and C his executors. A and B proved the will, power being reserved to C. B survived A, and died in the lifetime of C, having made a will and appointed an executor. It was held, under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95. s. 16, that upon the death of C the executor of B, the surviving acting executor, became the personal representative of the original testator. In the goods of Lorimer, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 189; 2 Swab. & T. 471.

Where the parties interested under a testamentary paper do not appear to a citation calling upon them to propound it, administration will be granted as in case of intestacy, without proof of the invalidity of the paper, although it is good on the face of it. Morton v. Thorpe, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 174.

Semble—The Court will not, upon the mere consent of the parties interested when they have not been cited, pronounce against such a testamentary paper without proof of its invalidity. Ibid.

Administration will not be granted when it appears that deceased left no personal property in England. In the goods of Fittock, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 157.

On a proxy of renunciation and consent being filed by the widow, which omitted, however, the usual declaration that she had not intermeddled in the estate of the deceased (she having intermeddled therein through mistake), the Court granted administration to the natural and lawful father of the deceased. In the goods of Fell, 2 Swab. & T. 126.

A grant in a chain of executorship, made by a diocesan Court in general terms, and not limited to property within its jurisdiction, is valid under the 87th section of the Probate Act, and entitles the personal representative of an original testator claiming under such grant to the transfer of stock standing in the Bank of England books in the name of the original testator. Semble, otherwise, if the diocesan grant were limited in its terms. In the goods of Tucker, 2 Swab. & T. 123.

A died leaving B his sole executrix and universal legatee. B died intestate, and administration of her effects was granted to her three children. A representative to A being necessary in order that certain property held by him as a trustee might be transferred, administration with the will annexed of unadministered effects was granted to one of the two surviving administrators of B, the other having been cited but not appearing. Hancock v. Lightfoot, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 174; 3 Swab. & T. 557.

If A dies intestate, and B, who is solely entitled to A's personal estate, afterwards dies without taking out administration, the appointment of a representative to B is a condition precedent to a grant of administration of the effects of A. In the goods of Allen, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 1; 3 Swab. & T. 559.

(d) To Next-of-Kin or their Nominees.

Quære—Whether a husband who, by a deed of separation, has resigned all claim to the property of his wife is thereby excluded upon her death, in his lifetime, from taking any interest as her representative. In such a case the Court will not grant administration to the next-of-kin of the wife unless the husband be cited. In the goods of Oranmore, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 183.

When husband and wife die by the same calamity, and there is no evidence that the one survived the other, administration of their personal estate will be granted to their respective next-of-kin. In the goods of Wheeler, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 40.

The next-of-kin of an intestate has by law the same title to administration as has the widow, though, under ordinary circumstances, the practice is to make the grant to the widow. Therefore, under the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, which gives the Court a discretion to grant administration to a person other than the one entitled to the grant, administration cannot be granted to the next-of-kin, passing by the widow. A person who is entitled to administration as next-of-kin, cannot take the grant as a creditor. In the goods of Corser, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 170.

A, a bachelor, who had gone to Australia, had not been heard of for seven years. His father died intestate about two years and five months before the expiration of the seven years. No personal representation had been taken out to the father. It being uncertain whether the deceased died before or after his father, the Court granted administration of his effects to his sister as one of his next-of-kin, under the 73rd section of the Probate Act. In the goods of Peck, 2 Swab. & T. 506.

In case of an intestacy, where the persons who are sole next-of-kin and the only persons entitled in distribution renounce their title to administration, the Court will make the grant to a person who would have been next-of-kin if the sole next-of-kin had been out of the way, although such person has no interest. In the goods of Johnson, 2 Swab. & T. 595.

For sufficient cause, e.g., the misconduct of the widow in having eloped from her husband and lived in adultery, the Court will grant administration to the next-of-kin in preference to the widow. In the goods of Anderson, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 149; 3 Swab. & T. 489.

Upon the consent of all the next-of-kin the Court granted administration under the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. to a person having no interest in the property of the deceased. Farrell v. Brownbill, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 185; 3 Swab. & T. 467.

(e) To Guardian.

The guardian of a minor of the whole blood is entitled to a grant of administration in preference to the half blood. Stratton v. Linton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 48.

The testamentary guardian has a right to administration for the use and benefit of minors, in preference to the guardian elected by them. Where a testamentary guardian to minor children had been appointed, and administration had, per incuriam, been granted to a guardian elected by the minors for their use and benefit, the Court revoked the grant, and granted administration to the testamentary guardian. In the goods of Morris, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 80; 2 Swab. & T. 360.

Where a married woman obtained a protection order under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, and died intestate, leaving her husband and children by him who were minors, and her husband her surviving, the Court, in the lifetime of the father, who was abroad, granted administration, for the use and benefit of the children, to their uncle, who had been duly elected by them as their guardian for that purpose. In the goods of Weir, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 88; 2 Swab. & T. 451.

Where the persons entitled in distribution to the effects of an intestate were minors and their next-of-kin were abroad, the Court, under the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, granted administration for their use and benefit to a guardian elected by them without requiring that the next-of-kin should be cited or renounce. In the goods of Hagger, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 96; 3 Swab. & T. 65.

(f) To Guardians of the Poor.

A, entitled to administration of the effects of B, was a pauper lunatic, and as such was confined in a county lunatic asylum, and no committee of her person or effects had been appointed. A's next-of-kin having been cited and not having appeared, the Court, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 73, granted administration of the effects of B to the guardians of the poor at whose expense A was maintained, for A's use and benefit, limited to the period of her lunacy. Southwell v. Findlay, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 21.

(g) To Attorney or Nominee of Person Abroad.

By an ordinance of British Guiana, the Administrator General is empowered to administer to the estate and effects of every person who shall die intestate, and whose heir ab intestato shall be unknown, or if known, shall be absent without having an attorney or agent in the colony to represent him. A died in the colony a bachelor and intestate, and having there no known relation. By virtue of the said ordinance the Administrator General took possession of the estate of the deceased in the colony, and appointed A his attorney to take out administration to the estate in England. Upon motion for a grant of administration to A the Court directed that the next-of-kin should be cited, and that the usual notice to the Queen's Proctor should be given; and afterwards, upon one of the next-of-kin appearing to the citation and consenting, the grant was made as prayed. In the goods of O'Brien, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 194; 2 Swab. & T. 604.

B, having acquired a domicil in British Guiana, died a bachelor and intestate, without any known relations there. Under an ordinance of that colony, the Administrator General took possession of B's property in that colony, and appointed Messrs. P, F and P, of Liverpool, to be his attorneys, and in his name to take out letters of administration to the personal estate of the deceased in this country. The Court, after the usual notice to the Queen's Proctor, and citations of next-of-kin, made the grant accordingly. In the goods of O'Brien, 2 Swab. & T. 604.

Administration will not be granted to a nominee of the person entitled to the grant, if the latter is in this country. In the goods of Burch, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 171; 2 Swab. & T. 139.

(h) To Universal or Residuary Legatee.

The universal legatee under a will which does not appoint an executor is, by the invariable practice of the registry, entitled to administration with the will annexed, and not to probate as executor according to the tenor. Semble—The 29th section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, which directs that, generally, "the practice of the Court of Probate shall be according to the practice of the Prerogative Court," applies only to procedure. And semble, that in the case of foreign wills which do not appoint an executor, the practice is to grant probate to an universal heir, and administration with the will annexed to an universal legatee. In the goods of Oliphant, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 82.

A testator on his deathbed gave instructions for a will to a person who was unknown to him, and who, in preparing the will, omitted his surname and also introduced the name and description of an executor who was totally unknown to the testator or any of his friends or relations, and who could not, therefore, be identified. With the consent of all the parties interested, the Court granted administration with the will annexed, to one of the residuary legatees, under the 73rd section of the Probate Act, 1857. In the goods of Sawtell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 65; 5 Swab. & T. 448.

(i) To Widow.

Under the 21 Hen. 8. c. 5. s. 3. a person who is not next-of-kin of an intestate cannot be joined in a grant of administration to the widow. In the goods of Browning, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 161; 2 Swab. & T. 634.

Where the estate was large, and required the management of a person conversant with business, and all persons interested consented to a joint grant of administration being made to the widow, and a person entitled in distribution, but not next-of-kin, the Court refused to make such a grant under the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. Ibid.

A testator, by his will, appointed an executor, and bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to A. The testator and A were lost in the same ship, and there was nothing to shew which of them was the survivor. The executor renounced :—Held, that as the bequest to A did not take effect, and therefore was not transmissible to his personal representative, the widow of the testator was entitled to administration with the will annexed. In the goods of Carmichael, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 70.

(k) To Creditors or their Surety.

On an application for a grant of administration to a creditor it must appear upon affidavit when the debt due to the creditor was incurred. Rawlinson v. Burrell, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 123; 3 Swab. & T. 479.

A surety who after the death of the principal pays off the debt is, in case of intestacy, entitled to administration as a creditor. Williams v. Jukes, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 60.

The Court will not make a grant of administration under the 73rd section of the Probate Act to a party entitled to a grant in another character. In the goods of Fairweather, 2 Swab. & T. 588.

The Court declined to make a grant de bonis non with the will annexed under the 73rd section to a creditor without citing residuary legatees named in the will, who were resident in Australia. Ibid.

Where an application is made for a grant of administration to the secretary of an association, on the ground that the deceased was indebted to the association, the Court ought to have such information of the constitution of the association as would shew that the secretary can be treated as a creditor. Ibid.

(l) To Assignees.

After the death of A, who died domiciled in France intestate, his estate was, by a decree of a French Court, declared bankrupt, and B was appointed syndic, or assignee, and authorized to dispose of the debts due to the deceased. Pursuant to this decree, the debts, including one due from a person in England, were sold to C. By the law of France, C could sue in his own name for the debts without obtaining letters of administration to A, and without any other judicial act. The persons entitled in distribution to the deceased's effects having been cited and not appearing, application was made for a grant of administration to C, limited to the debt due in England :—Held, that as C derived his title from the syndic as a purchaser, and not as representing the deceased, he was not entitled to a grant of administration. Dépit v. Delevieleuse, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 86; 2 Swab. & T. 131.

Semble—C could sue for the debt in this country in his own name. Ibid.

Semble—That the assignee of a debt due from a person who dies intestate is not entitled to a grant of administration as a creditor. Day v. Thompson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 183.

A died leaving a will whereof he appointed B executor and residuary legatee. B proved the will and afterwards became bankrupt, and subsequently died intestate, leaving part of the estate of A unadministered. At the time of his bankruptcy B was a creditor of A. The Court granted administration with the will annexed of the unadministered estate of the effects of A to the assignee in bankruptcy of B, in the character of assignee of a residuary legatee. Semble—that the assignee would also have been entitled to the grant as assignee in bankruptcy of a creditor of A. Downward v. Dickinson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 4; 3 Swab. & T. 564.

(m) In Cases of Uncertainty of Survivorship (Presumption of Death).

Where the presumption of A's death arose from the fact that he had not been heard of for seven years, and there was no evidence that he was ever married or had left a will, and his father died before the expiration of the seven years, the Court, on account of the impossibility of ascertaining whether or not A had survived his father, under section 73. of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, granted administration to the next-of-kin of A, without requiring administration to be taken out to his father. In the goods of Astell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 38.

In August 1858 A died a bachelor and intestate. In July 1861 the presumption arose that A's father, who had not been heard of for more than seven years, was dead, but there was no evidence as to the date of his death. The Court, under the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, granted administration of the effects of A to his mother, without requiring that administration to his father should be taken out. In the goods of Smith, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 182; 2 Swab. & T. 508.

(B) GRANT OF ADMINISTRATION LIMITED.

(a) To Part of Effects.

The will of A, by which he exercised a power of appointment and also disposed of his own personal estate, having been, as to his own estate, revoked by his subsequent marriage, the Court granted letters of administration of his effects, save as to such of them as he was entitled to appoint by will. In the goods of Mason, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 168.

(b) To receiving Proceeds of Sale of Effects.

A died intestate, leaving B, a private soldier, stationed in the East Indies, the sole person entitled to his personal estate. Upon A's death certain of his personal property was sold by auction, the proceeds of the sale remaining in the hands of the auctioneers. B wrote to C, stating that he should not return to England for three years, and directing C to take the necessary steps for lodging the proceeds of the sale in the Bank of England, with the exception of 10*l*., which he wished to be transmitted to him. The Court, under the 73rd section of the Probate Act, granted administration to C, for the benefit of B, limited to receiving the proceeds of the sale, and paying it, with the exception of the 10*l*., into the Bank of England. In the goods of Drinkwater, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 93; 2 Swab. & T. 611.

(c) To Moneys accruing from Negotiable Instruments.

A, who was indebted to B, and who, as a security for the debt, held certain negotiable instruments in trust for B, died intestate, and no administration was granted. In 1862, the official assignee of the estate of B, who had become bankrupt in the lifetime of A, assigned to C the outstanding debts due to B's estate, and C assigned them to D. Moneys being due in respect of some of the negotiable instruments for which the personal representative of A could alone give a discharge, the Court upon the next-of-kin of A being cited, and not appearing, granted to C administration of the effects of A limited to moneys due, or to become due, in respect of the said negotiable instruments, but refused to make such a grant to D. Macnin v. Coles, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 175.

Administration of an intestate's estate will not be granted to a person who, after the death of the intestate, buys up a debt due from him. Ibid.

(d) Ad Colligenda Bona.

A, a foreigner, died on his voyage to England. At the time of his death he had in his possession (inter alia) bills of exchange drawn upon merchants in England, and there was also a debt owing to him by a person in England. No testamentary paper was found in the deceased's possession, and he had no relative or agent in England. His relatives were resident in one of the Southern States of North America; but in consequence of a war between those States and the Northern States, and the blockade of the Southern ports, communication with them was difficult and uncertain. The Court, under the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, granted administration limited ad colligendum to a part owner of the ship on board which A died, and who had taken charge of his effects. In the goods of Wyckoff, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 214; 3 Swab. & T. 20.

Semble—That when a foreigner dies under such circumstances, the Crown is entitled to the custody of his effects. Ibid.

The Court, under special circumstances, made a grant to a creditor ad colligenda bona, limited to collect the personal estate of the deceased, to give receipts for his debts on the payment of the same, and to renew the lease of his business premises which would expire before a general grant could be made. In the goods of Clarkington, 2 Swab. & T. 380.

It has hitherto been the practice of the Court to refuse to appoint an administrator pendente lite, except a case of necessity is made out, e.g. that the estate is in jeopardy. In future the Court will appoint an administrator pendente lite in all cases in which it is the practice of the Court of Chancery to appoint a receiver. Bellew v. Bellew, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 125; 4 Swab. & T. 58.

In an interest suit between the Queen's Proctor and a defendant, asserting himself to be the lawful nephew of a deceased intestate, the Court appointed A B, who had been made a receiver in respect of the same estates in proceedings in Chancery, to be administrator pendente lite, on his affidavit that the estates in certain particulars would be benefited by being dealt with by a person clothed with such authority, and on consent of the parties to the suit. Her Majesty's Procurator General v. Williams, 2 Swab. & T. 353.

(f) To substantiating Proceedings in Chancery.

D, as sole executor and universal legatory, obtained confirmation in Scotland of the will of E. H, one of the next-of-kin of E, afterwards instituted a suit in the Court of Probate against D, in which the validity of the will and the rights of D to have the seal affixed to the confirmation was contested. This suit was compromised on certain terms. Disputes as to the meaning and effect of this arrangement having arisen, H, with others, instituted in Chancery an administration suit against D, which was held not to be maintainable for want of a legal personal representative of E. D refusing to ask that the seal of the Court of Probate should be affixed to the confirmation, H applied for administration with the will of E annexed, limited to substantiating the proceedings in equity. The application was resisted, on the grounds, first, that H was not entitled to administration unless by the terms of the compromise she was, in equity, made assignee of D, and therefore that a decree as to the effect of the arrangement should be first obtained, which might be done without the grant of administration; secondly, that by a sequestration granted under the Scotch Bankruptcy Act, all the property of the deceased had vested in a trustee appointed by the Scotch Court:—Held, notwithstanding that, administration limited to substantiating the proceedings in equity should be granted to a nominee of H. Hawarden v. Dunlop, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 180; 2 Swab. & T. 614.

In December 1846, A, who was then abroad, was last heard of. In September 1854, B died, and A if then alive would have become entitled to a share of her residuary personal estate, and such share was paid by B's executors into the account of the Accountant General of the Court of Chancery. A had no other personal property in England. Upon application by the next-of-kin of A for general administration,—Held, that as A never acquired a vested interest in B's residuary estate, (the presumption of his death having arisen at the end of seven years from the time when he was last heard of, and consequently prior to September 1854,) and had no other personal property in England, the Court had no jurisdiction to grant general administration, but that administration limited to attend and substantiate proceedings in Chancery might be granted. In the goods of Turner, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 180; 3 Swab. & T. 476.

(g) Where Executor or Person entitled to Administration is out of the Jurisdiction.

The Court granted limited administration to the personal representative of a legatee, the executor being out of the jurisdiction. In the goods of Collier, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 63; 2 Swab. & T. 444.

Where the persons entitled to administration were resident in one of the Southern States of America, and communication between that State and England was cut off by reason of the civil war between the Southern and Northern States, and the estate was not perishable, but consisted chiefly of money in the funds and in a savings bank, the Court refused to grant administration under section 73. of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. to a nephew of the deceased for the use and benefit of the persons entitled. In the goods of

White, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 161; 2 Swab. & T. 457.

(h) When made to Person entitled to a General Grant.

The Court may, if it think fit, depart from the usual practice of not granting limited administration to a person entitled to a general grant. The district Registrars are, by the rules, bound to adhere to such practice. Patteson v. Hunter, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 272.

A, a creditor, insured the life of his debtor, but the policy having by mistake been made payable to the representatives of the deceased, the Court granted administration to A limited to the policy. Ibid.

(i) For Use and Benefit of Minors.

A died intestate, leaving four children, of whom one was of age, but was abroad, and the other three were minors. An immediate grant of administration being necessary, the Court, under section 73. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, granted administration to the duly-elected guardian of the minors for their use and benefit, limited until one of the children should apply for a grant. In the goods of Burgess, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 158.

The 50th rule of the Rules for the Principal Registry in Non-contentious Business, which directs that "No person who renounces probate of a will or letters of administration, &c., in one character, is to be allowed to take a representation to the deceased in another character," is not absolutely binding on the Court. In the goods of Loftus, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 59; 3 Swab. & T. 307.

It is contrary to the practice of the Court to extend a grant for the use and benefit of minors beyond the time when the eldest of them attains his majority. Ibid.

A testator by his will appointed A and B executors and residuary legatees in trust, and also guardians of his children after the death or second marriage of his widow, and bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his widow for life, and after her death to his children. A and B renounced probate, and also their right, as residuary legatees in trust, to administration with the will annexed, and such administration was granted to the widow. Upon the death of the widow the Court granted administration with the will annexed de bonis non to A and B, as guardians of the children, but refused to extend the grant until the eldest child should attain his majority and should apply for administration. Ibid.

(k) For Use of Next-of-Kin, a Lunatic.

An intestate whose property was under 1,000*l.* in value left no known relation except a sister, who was of unsound mind, but had not been so found by inquisition, and who had no property of her own. The Court refused to grant administration under the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. for the use and benefit of the lunatic to a stranger in blood until the applicant should obtain an order from the Court of Chancery under the 12th section of "The Lunacy Regulation Act, 1862," (25 & 26 Vict. c. 86), rendering the property of the lunatic available for her maintenance and benefit. In the goods of Slumbers, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 93; 4 Swab. & T. 32.

(C) ADMINISTRATION BOND.

(1) Amount.

Where letters of administration were granted merely to enable a personal representative of the deceased to execute a formal release to the trustee under a marriage settlement, the Court allowed the property to be sworn under 20*l.* In the goods of Stacpoole, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 191; 2 Swab. & T. 316.

A grant of administration with the will annexed to a legatee upon the death of the original executor, and the renunciation of an executor substituted in the event of his death, is a cessate grant, and not a grant de bonis non, and the administrator is therefore bound to give security to the amount of double the value of the estate at testator's death, according to the ordinary practice. But where it appeared that the whole of the estate had been distributed with the exception of the legacy to the proposed administrator, the Court, under section 82. of the Probate and Administration Act, made the grant upon security being given to the amount of double the value of the property remaining unadministered. In the goods of Fozard, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 160; 3 Swab. & T. 173.

Where under a misapprehension as to the value of the personal estate of an intestate, the penalty of an administration bond was too large, the Court upon the execution of a fresh bond in a penalty proportioned to the actual value of the estate, ordered the original bond to be delivered out of the registry, in order that it might be cancelled. In the goods of Goold, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 105; 4 Swab. & T. 20.

(2) Reducing the Penalty.

A died intestate, leaving personalty sworn under the value of 6,000*l.* A's father, who was his only next-of-kin and the only person entitled in distribution, being unable to procure sureties to a bond in a penalty for double the amount of the estate, the Court accepted two sureties in the sum of 1,000*l.* each. In the goods of M'Donald, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 132.

A died intestate, leaving B his only next-of-kin and solely entitled in distribution. His personal estate was of the value of about 55*l.*, and it seemed that he had no debts. B being unable through poverty to obtain sureties to the amount of 200*l.*, the penalty of the requisite bond, the Court under section 82. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, reduced the penalty to 60*l.* In the goods of Harrigan, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 204.

(b) Sureties.

Where, the chain of representation being broken, the unadministered estate of a testator had been transferred into the name of the Accountant General of the Court of Chancery, the Court of Probate made a grant de bonis non to the residuary legatee for life without requiring sureties to the administration bond. In the goods of Cleverly, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 53; 2 Swab. & T. 335.

The Court of Probate has nothing to do with the amount under which an estate is to be sworn. Ibid.

The executors of a will being resident abroad, they appointed persons resident in Scotland as their attorneys to take out administration with the will annexed. The attorneys being unable to procure sureties to the bond resident in England, the Court accepted sureties resident in Scotland. In the goods of Ballingall, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 138.

The Court will not allow residents in Scotland to be sureties to an administration bond. The case In the goods of Ballingall overruled. Herbert v. Shiell, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 142; 3 Swab. & T. 479.

In order to obtain payment of a sum of money standing in the name of the Accountant General of the Court of Chancery, to which A was beneficially entitled, it was requisite that he should take out letters of administration de bonis non with the will annexed; but in consequence of his poverty and want of friends he was unable to procure sureties to the usual administration bond. The fund in Chancery, being the only property to the possession of which the deceased would become entitled under the grant, the Court, under section 81. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, dispensed with sureties to the bond. In the goods of De la Farque, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 199; 2 Swab. & T. 631.

(c) Cannot be dispensed with.

The Court has no power under any circumstances to dispense with an administration bond. In the goods of Powis, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 55.

Where security had already been given by the applicant as committee in lunacy, the Court required a bond for one-fourth of the property, with two sureties, each in one-half the amount. Ibid.

(d) Assignment of.

Upon affidavits shewing a breach of the condition of an administration bond, the Court, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 83, allowed a citation to issue, calling upon one of the sureties to shew cause why it should not be assigned, in order that it might be put in suit against him. Marshman v. Brookes, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 25.

An administration bond under the Probate Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 81, in the form given by the rules, when assigned to a creditor under section 83, can only be enforced by him for the benefit of all parties interested in the deceased's estate, and not to recover the creditor's individual debt, although he allege that there has been a devastavit; the statute not having altered the old law as to administration bonds, except so far as enabling the Court of Probate to order them to be assigned. Sandrey v. Michell, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 100; 3 Best & S. 405.

The proper mode of proceeding to obtain the assignment of an administration bond under section 83. of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, in order that it may be put in suit, is to move, upon affidavits shewing a breach of the condition of the bond, for a rule nisi calling upon the sureties to shew cause why the Court should not order that the bond be assigned to some person named in the rule. It is not necessary that the sureties be cited. In the goods of Jones, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 26; 3 Swab. & T. 28.

(e) Action on.

An administration bond, forfeited before the bankruptcy of the administrator, is not proveable under "The Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849," and consequently a certificate under that act is no bar to an action on the bond. Marshman v. Brookes, 3 Hurls. & C. 908.

(D) RIGHTS AND DUTIES.

(a) Undisposed of Estate.

A testator gave legacies to his executors, and followed the gift by a bequest to them of the whole of his estate charged with the payment of divers legacies, and he directed that all the costs and expenses they incurred should be borne by any money they might have from any part of his estate; upon a bill by the next-of-kin for an administration of the estate:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, and affirmed on appeal (one of the Lords Justices agreeing with his Honour), that the executors were not entitled to the residue beneficially, but as trustees; and that after payment of the legacies and their costs, &c., the next-of-kin of the testator were entitled to the residue. Saltmarsh v. Barrett, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 853; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 279.

A testator, by his will, said "I make my nephew, H C J, my whole and sole executor of all the various properties I may be possessed of at my death." The will contained no gift or bequest. Upon demurrer to a bill by the next-of-kin,—Held, that the executor was not entitled to any beneficial interest in the personal property, that he was a trustee for the next-of-kin, and that, under the 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 40, no implication could be raised, but that he was bound to shew, from the will itself, that he was to take beneficially. Juler v. Juler, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 142; 29 Beav. 34.

A testator bequeathed an annuity to his wife to be paid out of his effects, the executors of his will to give security for the same. He then made bequests to three of his nine children, and stated why he did not provide for three others; he then appointed certain strangers to be trustees and his three remaining children to be executors. The will contained no gift of residue:—Held, that there was sufficient on the face of the will to shew that the executors were intended to take beneficially. Harrison v. Harrison, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 647; 2 Hem. & M. 237.

(b) Debts due from the Estate.

Where executors had confessed judgment in an action brought against them to recover a debt barred by lapse of time and had paid the debt, it was held, in an administration suit, that they were entitled to be allowed such payment. In re Freer's Estate; Hunter v. Baxter, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 432; 3 Giff. 214.

After an administration decree, an executor has no right, as against the parties interested in the estate, to give an acknowledgment to take out of the operation of the statute a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations. Phillips v. Beal, 32 Beav. 26.

(c) Debts due to the Estate.

If a legatee in reversion has involved dealings with a stranger who is indebted to the estate of the testator, from which the legacy proceeds, a promissory note given by the legatee to the executors as a collateral security for the amount of the stranger's debt will not enable them to retain the legacy, if a creditor of the legatee having a bona fide charge upon the legacy requires it to be invested. Smee v. Baines, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 63; 29 Beav. 661.

One of several executors, contrary to the wishes of the others, compromised a debt of their testator, from which a benefit might result to himself. Upon a bill by his co-executors,—Held, that it was not binding on the estate of the testator, and that it must be set aside. Stott v. Lord, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 391.

Executors must be allowed a reasonable time for breaking up a testator's domestic establishment, and discharging his servants. Two months held not to be an unreasonable delay having regard to circumstances. Field v. Peckett (No. 3), 29 Beav. 576.

(e) Selling and Pledging Estate.

The concurrence of executors having under a will an implied power of sale for payment of debts, is not necessary to a conveyance by a devisee in trust for sale under the same will. Hodkinson v. Quinn, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 118; 1 Jo. & H. 303.

The Master of the Rolls having held, that a power to sell real estate will not be implied upon a mere direction by a testator that his executrix shall pay his debts, though the estate was devised to her that she should receive the rents and benefits for life, and if insufficient for her, then that she might mortgage the estate so far as needful for her maintenance, the Lords Justices, on appeal, affirmed the decision, holding that the executrix could not make a good title to a purchaser of the fee-simple of part of the estate. Cook v. Dawson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 359; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 127.

Although executors can make an assignment and give a receipt for purchase-money, which was binding, yet a purchaser is not bound to pay the purchase-money till probate, because till the evidence of title exists the executors cannot give a complete indemnity. Newton v. the Metropolitan Rail. Co., 1 Dr. & S. 583.

An executor, who was also a legatee, borrowed 500*l.* and gave the lender a memorandum reciting that the money was borrowed for purposes of the will, and agreeing to charge the trust estate, so far as he could and lawfully might, and his legacy and a policy, which was part of the assets, with the repayment, and to execute a mortgage. Afterwards the executor borrowed from the same person 400*l.*, and by a deed reciting the will and stating certain sums to be due from the estate to the executor and that the executor owed the lender 900*l.* The executor assigned to the lender all sums mentioned to be due from the estate to the executor by way of security for the 900*l.*, with interest:—Held, that the lender had by this deed given up such claim, if any, against the testator's estate as he had under the memorandum, and could only establish a security upon the executor's beneficial interest. In re Brettle, Brettle v. Burdett, 2 De Gex, Jo. & S. 244.

A testator, "in case his personal estate should be insufficient for the payment of his debts," charged them upon his real estate:—Held, that the executor had an implied power to sell and give valid receipt for the purchase-money without shewing the insufficiency of the personal estate. Greetham v. Colton, 34 Beav. 615.

Held, also, that the lapse of thirteen years between the death and the sale did not affect the executor's power. Ibid.

(f) Legacy to Executor.

One of two executors, to whom a legacy was bequeathed, renounced in 1853, but afterwards, in 1859, he retracted and proved the will. An administration suit was subsequently instituted against him as executor, and, it appearing that the estate had not been administered when the executor proved, he was held entitled to his legacy, but with interest only from the time of proving. Angermann v. Ford, 29 Beav. 349.

An executor who is incapacitated by illness from acting, and dies without acting, is not entitled to a legacy given to him for his trouble. In re Hawkins, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 80; 33 Beav. 570.

(g) Indemnity.

Executors bringing facts plainly before the Court and distributing the assets under its direction are absolutely protected against any future claims, and the only remedy of a creditor on covenant or otherwise, is against the legatees. Bennett v. Lytton, 2 Jo. & H. 155.

Where part of the estate had consisted of leaseholds held at a profit rent, the estate was ordered to be distributed without retaining assets to indemnify the executors against liability on the covenants. Ibid.

The order of the Court, made in an administration suit, directing distribution of a testator's estate, is a complete indemnity to executors against claims by third parties; and the Court, in requiring funds to be set apart or undertakings given, has in view, not the protection of the executor, but the possible rights of third parties. Williams v. Headland, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 20; 4 Giff. 505.

Proceeds of sale of the testator's residuary estate ordered to be paid to the residuary legatees upon their personal undertaking to make good any claim that might arise in respect of shares in a joint-stock company sold by the executors, but not transferred into the purchaser's name. Ibid.

(E) LIABILITIES.

An executrix allowed 190*l.* (part of the estate) to remain at the bankers' in her name as executrix. A loss occurred by their bankruptcy a year after the testator's death:—Held, that she was not personally liable for the loss. Swinfen v. Swinfen (No. 5), 29 Beav. 211.

Executors were made personally liable for a loss arising from placing trust moneys with bankers on a deposit account, which was not authorized by the will, and this notwithstanding a clause indemnifying the trustees against losses by a banker of moneys deposited for safe custody. Rehden v. Wesley, 29 Beav. 213.

A testator died in August, 1861, and his executors remitted to their solicitor 80*l.* to obtain probate, and 25*l.* to pay legacy duty. The solicitor became bankrupt in November, 1861, and the money was lost. The Court allowed the executors the 80*l.*, but not the 25*l.*, the latter advance being premature, the legacies not having yet (1863) been paid. Castle v. Warland, 32 Beav. 660.

A promissory note given to a creditor by one of the executors in the name of the testator's firm while the executor was carrying on the business pursuant to directions in the will, but was ignorant that the estate was insolvent,—Held, personally binding on the executors. Lucas v. Williams, 3 Giff. 150.

An administrator having advanced a sum consisting partly of the intestate's and partly of his own moneys on a security which it was apprehended would prove deficient,—Held, that the deficiency, if any, must be borne by his own share of the moneys advanced in exoneration of the intestate's estate. Lambe v. Orton, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 81.

An executor who allows his testator's estate to become insolvent, by keeping an account at a banker's at compound interest, will not be allowed the accumulated interest in passing his accounts. Bate v. Robins, 32 Beav. 73.

A testator, by his will, made A and B his executors. B died, and a suit was instituted to administer his estate. After decree and report made in this suit, but before B's assets had been distributed, a residuary legatee of the original testator filed a bill against A and the personal representative of B, seeking to fix A and the estate of B with liability in respect of balances improperly retained by A and B as executors:—Held, that notwithstanding the pendency of the former suit, a decree in the latter suit directing accounts as against A and B's personal representative, was properly made. Birks v. Micklethwait, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 362.

(b) Legacies and Charges on Legacies.

A trustee or executor, when he receives notice that a legatee has charged his legacy, is bound to withhold all further payments to that legatee. All right of set-off and adjustment of equities between the legatee and the executor, existing at the date of the notice, have priority over the charge, but the trustees can create no new charges or rights of set-off after that time. Stephens v. Venables, 30 Beav. 625.

Executors granted a lease of part of the testator's property to a legatee, who afterwards incumbered his legacy. Notice of the charge having been given to the executors,—Held, that they had, as against the mortgagee, a right to set off the rent due from the legatee at the date of the notice, but not subsequent rents. Ibid.

A legatee charged the share to which he was entitled, under his father's will, to A B, who gave notice to the executor. The executor indorsed on the notice that he had no objection to pay the money "that might become due" to the legatee "on the final distribution of his father's property." There was at this time a prior charge, of which the executor had notice, but he did not disclose it to A B. The executor on a subsequent occasion also represented that the legatee's share would certainly be as much as 1,500*l.*, which estimate turned out to be erroneous:—Held, that the executor was not liable for the suppression of the existence of the first charge or bound to make good the representation as to the value of the share. Stephens v. Venables, 31 Beav. 124.

A testator authorized his executor to advance any part, not exceeding one half, of the presumptive share of his children towards their maintenance and advancement. The estate being very small, the executor advanced more than the whole. The estate being insufficient to repay the amount to the executor, the Court in a suit by a child for administration gave priority to the costs of the suit, but gave the surplus to the executor in part payment of his advances. Robison v. Killey, 30 Beav. 520.

By a will legacies were given, some immediate and others to be paid to persons in succession. All trust moneys were directed to be invested in the public funds or on real securities. The executors, twelve months after the death, paid all the immediate legacies, and invested the remainder of the trust funds in a neighbouring bank. Two months afterwards the bank stopped payment, and a loss was sustained by which the trust funds became insufficient to pay the deferred legacies. The executors filed a bill to have accounts taken, and that the loss might be apportioned among the deferred legatees. One of the Vice Chancellors having decided that the loss must fall on the executor, and that he must pay the costs of the suit, on appeal, the Lords Justices held that, as there was no imputation on the good faith of the executor, and as he could not obtain a settlement of his accounts with the legatees, he was justified in filing the bill, and that the loss must fall upon the deferred legatees, who must bear among themselves rateably the loss of the failure of the bank, and not throw any part of the loss on the satisfied legatees. As to costs, those arising from the failure of the bank must be refused to the executor, and as to the general administration he could only be allowed those out of pocket. Fenwick v. Clarke, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 728.

(c) Interest.

If an executor pays a sum of money under an erroneous impression of the law, he will not, when ordered to replace it, be required to pay interest. Saltmarsh v. Barrett, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 783; 31 Beav. 349.

Executors having retained in their hands large balances arising from the estate without investing them, an inquiry was directed as to the propriety of their conduct, and they were charged with interest at 4*l.* per cent. upon a portion of such balances:—Held, that, in pursuance of the general principle, the executors could not be allowed the costs occasioned by the inquiry. Colyer v. Colyer, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 101.

An administrator who had, without reason, sold out stock specifically bequeathed to an infant and retained the produce after an order for payment, was charged with compound interest. Walrond v. Walrond, 29 Beav. 586.

(d) Costs.

To an administration suit the executors put in their answer, alleging that the suit was vexatious, and that nothing was due, and resisted the demand for an account; but an account being decreed they claimed first 400*l.* and subsequently 60*l.*, but the chief clerk having certified that 220*l.* was due from them, the Court ordered them to pay the costs of the suit. Eglin v. Sanderson, 3 Giff. 434.

After decree in a creditors' suit against the executors of a deceased testator a bill was filed by a residuary legatee seeking to charge the executors in respect of balances improperly retained, and under a decree made in the latter suit (adopting the accounts in the creditors' suit, but giving leave to surcharge and falsify) large balances were found due from the executors:—Held, that the executors ought not, even upon the condition of making good the balances, to be allowed any costs in the latter suit. Birks v. Micklethwait, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 362.

Profit costs were disallowed to an executor who had acted as his own solicitor, upon an objection taken by a creditor who was a party to the suit. Pollard v. Doyle, 1 Dr. & S. 319.

(F) RENUNCIATION.

The Court of Probate will not recognize an agreement by an executor to renounce. Hargreaves v. Wood, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 8; 2 Swab. & T. 602.

Therefore, where at the trial at the assizes of issues in a testamentary suit the suit was compromised on certain terms, inter alia, that two of the executors named in the will should renounce, and that the agreement should be made a rule of court, and these terms were embodied in an order of Nisi Prius, the Court refused to make the order a rule of court. Ibid.

An executor cannot renounce after he has taken probate. An executor under the will of a testator domiciled in Portugal accepted the executorship in that country, and also obtained probate in England. Becoming afterwards, through age and infirmity, incapable of acting, a competent Portuguese tribunal permitted him to renounce the executorship and appointed A to act as executor in his stead. Upon application for a grant to A of administration de bonis non with the will annexed,—Held, that the renunciation of the executor, though sanctioned by the law of Portugal, could not be recognized in this country, and that A therefore was not entitled to the grant prayed. In the goods of Veiga, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 9; 3 Swab. & T. 13.

A testator appointed A, who was resident abroad, his executor; A, by letter, renounced probate. The Court treated this as a valid renunciation, though not under seal, but ordered the letter to be recorded. In the goods of Boyle, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 109; 3 Swab. & T. 426.

A, resident abroad, being entitled to administration, executed a power of attorney, expressly authorizing B to execute, on his behalf, a renunciation and consent. The Court acted on a renunciation and consent executed by B under such power. In the goods of Rosser, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 155; 3 Swab. & T. 490.

B appointed C and D executors and residuary legatees in trust, his widow residuary legatee for life or widowhood, and C, D, E, F and G substituted residuary legatees. C and D renounced probate and administration as executors and residuary legatees in trust, and letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to the widow; she died, leaving part of the estate unadministered. The Court refused to allow C to retract his renunciation as residuary legatee in trust, but granted him administration de bonis non as substituted residuary legatee. In the goods of Morrison, 2 Swab. & T. 129.

(G) ACTIONS AND SUITS.

In an administration suit an inquiry as to wilful default will not be directed upon a mere general allegation of neglect. Some particular instance must be alleged and proved, so as to raise at all events a case of suspicion in the mind of the Court. Massey v. Massey, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 13; 2 Jo. & H. 728.

In a suit by B, the personal representative of a residuary legatee under A's will, for the administration of A's estate, an order was made by the Master of the Rolls for the payment by C, the survivor of the two executors of A's will, of the balance due from both executors on their joint account with interest to be certified. The order gave liberty to B to prove in a suit, pending before Stuart, V.C., for the administration of the estate of A's deceased executor, as a creditor on the estate of the latter for the balance due on joint account, and interest thereon; but B was directed by the order to pay what he should receive on his proof to the credit of his own suit, to a special account. C then paid a large part of the debt due to A's estate on the joint account. Subsequently to such payment B was admitted by an order in the suit before Stuart, V.C. as a creditor for the amount stated in a certificate (also made subsequently to the payment by C) by the chief clerk of the Master of the Rolls to be due under the order made by the Master of the Rolls; and a motion to discharge this order after the remainder of the debt due from A's executors had been paid by C was refused by Stuart, V.C., with costs. On appeal, both the orders made by the Vice Chancellor were discharged with costs. Micklethwait v. Winstanley, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 281.

Per Turner, L.J.—The effect of the payment into court by the survivor of two executors of a debt due by them jointly to their testator's estate, is to discharge also the estate of the deceased executor; and an order giving liberty to the person entitled to the testator's estate to prove for that debt in a suit for the administration of the deceased executor's estate, cannot after such payment be acted upon. Ibid.

In an interest suit, instituted by the Queen's Proctor, who alleged that M E, the deceased, died a widow, without lawful issue, intestate, and a bastard, the defendant, who claimed as nephew of the deceased, pleaded that M E was not a bastard; that she was the legitimate child of S W and Mary his wife; that S W and Mary, his wife, had one other lawful child, of whom the defendant was the lawful child:—Held, that the plea was sufficient, and that it was not necessary that the time and place of the birth of the deceased's parents should be alleged. Her Majesty's Procurator General v. Williams, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 90; 2 Swab. & T. 465.

In a suit for administration, instituted on behalf of the Crown by the Queen's Proctor, who alleges that the deceased died a bastard, &c., a defendant, who claims to be next-of-kin of the deceased, must, in his plea, set out his pedigree, but in doing so, particulars as to the time and place of a marriage and the date of a birth need not be alleged. Her Majesty's Procurator General v. Wallis, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 97; 2 Swab. & T. 466.

The defeodant, in setting out his pedigree, alleged inter alia that "the deceased was the legitimate daughter of Francis Godman Capell by his lawful wife." On motion for an order that the plea should be amended by setting out when, where and to whom F G C was married, and the date of the deceased's birth,—Held, that the plea was sufficient. Ibid.

(H) Costs.

A next-of-kin, after making inquiries for a will and waiting for five months to see whether a will was forthcoming, took out administration. The person of whom he had made inquiries then produced a will and propounded it as a legatee, and the administrator put him upon proof in solemn form. The Court revoked the administration and pronounced for the will, but allowed the next-of-kin's costs of obtaining administration and of the suit out of the estate, no explanation being given of the delay in producing the will. Smith v. Smith, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 57; 4 Swab. & T. 3.

(I) Practice.

(a) Affidavits.

An affidavit sworn before a notary abroad, will not be admitted unless it appears on affidavit that there was not at the place where it was sworn a British consul or other officer empowered by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 42. to take affidavits, and that a notary had by the law of such place authority to take affidavits. In the goods of Bernard, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 89; 2 Swab. & T. 489.

An affidavit in which the addition or place of abode of a deponent is not inserted will not be admitted. Ibid.

An executrix in the oath for executors was described as "the lawful widow and relict of the deceased": this was held a sufficient description of her as a widow. In the goods of Morgan, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 139.

The administrator's oath and affidavit for Commissioners of Inland Revenue were prepared in England and sent to New Zealand to be sworn by the widow of a deceased. When they reached New Zealand she had gone to reside at Hobart Town, whence they were returned to England duly sworn, but in them were interlineations, which had been inserted in consequence of the widow's change of residence, and against which the Judge before whom they were sworn had not set his initials. The Court under Rule 58. of the New Rules in Non-Contentious Business, allowed the oath and affidavit to be filed. The deponent in an affidavit was described as "the lawful widow and relict of the said deceased":—Held, that it was a sufficient description of her as widow. In the goods of King, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 14; 2 Swab. & T. 621.

(b) Citation.

A citation ought to be served upon a married woman in the presence of her husband. Herbert v. Shiell, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 142; 3 Swab. & T. 479.

Where a citation, calling on a married woman to accept or refuse administration, had not been so served, but a renunciation had been duly executed by her and by her husband, the Court made a grant without requiring fresh service. Ibid.

Service of a citation by a party to a suit is insufficient. Glyde v. Davie, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 184.

In order to obtain administration of the effects of a married woman who dies intestate after obtaining a protection order from the Court of Divorce, it is not necessary that the husband should be cited. In the goods of Farraday distinguished. In the goods of Brighton, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 55.

When the estate of the deceased, who died without any known relation, was barely sufficient to pay his liabilities, and a citation had been issued and served on behalf of a creditor upon the Queen's Proctor and by advertisement, but had been lost or destroyed by his solicitor's clerk, who had absconded for embezzlement, the Court dispensed with the rule requiring the citation to be returned into the registry, and made the grant of administration to the creditor. In the goods of Robinson, 4 Swab. & T. 43.

(c) Isle of Man Grant.

In the Isle of Man officers called "Sumners" are appointed in each parish by the bishop of the diocese, whose duty it is (inter alia) to take upon themselves grants of administration with the wills annexed, in the event of executors refusing to act, or being unable to give security to the Ecclesiastical Court of the diocese. A died in the Isle of Man, leaving a will, whereof he appointed executors. The executors being unable to give security to the Ecclesiastical Court of the diocese, administration with the will annexed was then granted to B, Sumner for the parish in which A died. The executors having been cited, and not appearing, the Court, upon an affidavit as to the circumstances under which the grant was made to B, and upon B's consent being filed in the registry, granted administration with the will annexed to the residuary legatee. Cubbon v. Steele, in the goods of Whiston, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 192; 2 Swab. & T. 318.

(d) Re-sealing.

A died in Ireland, possessed of personal property in England, and the Irish Court of Probate granted administration of his effects to B, no will having been found. Afterwards C propounded in this court a will of the deceased; B opposed it, and obtained a verdict upon issues raised by him. Upon the application of B the Court ordered the Irish grant of administration to be delivered out of the registry in order that it might be re-sealed by this Court under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 79. s. 95. Divenny v. Corcoran, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 26.

(e) Power of Attorney.

It is not necessary that a power of attorney to take out administration should be under seal. In the goods of Morley, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 108; 3 Swab. & T. 425.

(f) Justifying Security.

Where justifying security had been ordered, and it appeared that though the estate had been sworn under 2,000*l.*, its actual value was only 800*l.*, the Court allowed the sureties to justify for double the amount of the actual value, instead of double the amount under which the estate was sworn. England v. Wall, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 16.

Where the beneficial residuary legatees were minors, and the value of the residue was about 8,000*l.*, subject to a mortgage of 3,900*l.*, the Court granted administration with the will annexed de bonis non to a contingent legatee, and reduced the amount for which the sureties would have had to justify to 1,000*l.* each; it appearing that justifying security to a greater amount could not be given, that the grant was for the interest of the minors, and that their guardians did not oppose. In the goods of Fraser, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 57.

(g) Attachment.

An administrator in custody under an attachment, obtained by the persons entitled in distribution, for not filing an inventory, is not entitled to be discharged from custody upon his filing such inventory, except upon payment of costs. Marshman v. Brookes, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 95.

An attachment will be granted against a married woman for non-compliance with a citation, calling upon her to file an inventory in the registry of an estate of which she is administratrix. Baker v. Baker, 2 Swab. & T. 380.

As a general rule an attachment for disobeying an order of the Court will not be granted unless the order has been personally served. Williams v. Davies, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 127; 3 Swab. & T. 437.

An order that a defendant, "as administratrix of the effects of the deceased," do pay the plaintiff's costs of a suit, is tantamount to an order that such costs should be paid out of the estate, and does not render the plaintiff personally liable. Where, therefore, such an order was made, and there were no assets, the Court refused an attachment for non-payment of the plaintiff's costs. Ibid.

Money deposited in a bank by a husband, in the joint names of himself and his wife, as a provision for her in case of his death, upon his death becomes the absolute property of the wife. Ibid.

EXTRADITION TREATY.

Convention between Her Majesty and the King of Denmark for the mutual surrender of criminals. 25 & 26 Vict. c. 70.

Piracy.

By the 1st section of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76, (an act passed for giving effect to a treaty between Her Majesty and the United States of America for the apprehension of certain offenders) it is enacted, that in case requisition shall at any time be made by the authority of the United States, in pursuance of and according to the said treaty, for the delivery of any person charged with the crime of murder, or with the crime of piracy, &c., committed within the jurisdiction of the United States of America, who shall be found within the territories of Her Majesty, it shall be lawful for one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, &c., by warrant under his hand and seal, to signify that such requisition has been so made, and to require all Justices, &c. to govern themselves accordingly, and to aid in apprehending the person so accused, and committing such person to gaol, for the purpose of being delivered up to justice, &c.—Held (dissentiente Cockburn, C.J.), that the term "piracy" means such an offence as by the municipal laws of the United States is constituted piracy, and is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. Therefore, where a requisition had been made by the authority of the United States for the extradition of certain persons in England who were charged "with the crime of piracy on the high seas," and it appeared that such persons had, supposing they had committed the crime of piracy at all, committed such a crime as would amount to piracy by the law of nations,—Held, that this country ought not to give them up; and that having been apprehended and detained in custody under the warrant of a Justice in England, they were entitled to be discharged. In re Ternan, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 201; 5 Best & S. 645.

Held, also, that such a warrant was sufficient if made in the form given by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 120. Ibid.

Forgery.

By section 1. of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76, provision is made for the committal in this country, with a view to being delivered up to justice in the United States of America, of persons charged with the crime of murder, forgery, &c. By a statute of the State of New York, "Every person who, with intent to defraud, shall make any false entry . . . . in any book of account kept by any monied corporation within this State . . . . shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of forgery in the third degree." A requisition was made by the Government of the United States for the extradition from this country of a person who was charged with committing the offence of forgery under the above statute:—Held, that inasmuch as the offence committed did not amount to forgery by the law of England and of the United States (the two contracting parties to the Treaty of Extradition referred to in the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76. s. 1), the person charged was not liable to be given up by this country. In re Windsor, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 163; 6 Best & S. 522.

FACTORS' ACT.

(A) "Goods" within the Act.
(B) Agent intrusted with the Possession of Goods.
(C) Transactions protected by the Act.

(A) "Goods" within the Act.

Certificates of railway stock are not "goods" within the meaning of the Factors' Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39. Freeman v. Appleyard, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 175.

(B) Agent intrusted with the Possession of Goods.

By 6 Geo. 4. c. 94. s. 4, it shall be lawful to and for any person "to contract with any agent or agents, intrusted with any goods, wares and merchandise, or to whom the same may be consigned, for the purchase of any such goods, wares or merchandise, and to receive the same of and pay for the same to such agent or agents; and such contract and payment shall be binding upon and good against the owner of such goods, wares and merchandise, notwithstanding such person shall have notice that the person or persons making and entering into such contract, or on whose behalf such contract is made or entered into, is an agent or agents. Provided such contract and payment be made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that such person shall not when such contract is entered into, or payment made, have notice that such agent or agents is or are not authorized to sell the said goods, wares and merchandise, or to receive the said purchase-money." The plaintiffs, who were cloth-manufacturers, were informed by E, who was a factor and commission agent, that he could get them a customer for some of their goods, giving the name of Sykes as that of the intended purchaser. It is a common practice for manufacturers to send their goods to agents, who warehouse them, and sell them in their own names. The plaintiffs, believing the representations of E, sent parcels of goods from time to time to his warehouse, where he was to see them "perched," and was then to transmit them to Sykes. The statements made by E with reference to Sykes were untrue, and he sold the goods to the defendants, who purchased them bona fide:—Held, by Wightman, J. and Crompton, J., that E was an agent intrusted with the goods within the meaning of the above section, and that therefore the purchase by the defendants was protected. Held, by Blackburn, J., that at any rate the question ought to be left to the jury to say whether or not the facts shewed that he was such an agent, and whether it was in the ordinary course of business that the sale had taken place. Baines v. Swainson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 281; 4 Best & S. 270.

A, who transacted business on commission, but whose ordinary business was not to sell on commission, was intrusted by the defendant with some pictures. Either at that time or afterwards the defendant directed A to sell the pictures. Subsequently A, in fraud of the defendant, pledged the pictures with the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to retain the pictures as against the defendant till his advance was repaid, for that A was an "agent intrusted with the possession of goods" within the meaning of the Factors' Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 39), s. 1. Hayman v. Flewker, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 132; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 519.

(C) TRANSACTIONS PROTECTED BY THE ACT.

The defendants, bankers, having at the request of J L made advances to S L, and having a lien on certain goods in their possession in respect thereof, it was agreed between the bankers and J L that in consideration of the delivery of those goods to J L the latter should deliver to the bankers certain other goods intrusted to J L by the plaintiff, his principal, to be held as a lien by the defendants in place of the other goods, and also in respect of any future advances to be made to S L, and which J L then requested the bankers to make, and which agreement was carried out, and further advances made to S L in pursuance of such request:—Held, that the bankers having no notice of the plaintiff's title, the transaction was protected by the Factors' Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39. Sheppard v. the Union Bank of London, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 154; 7 Hurls. & N. 661.

To a plea setting up the above facts in answer to an action of detinue by the owner of the goods against the bankers, the plaintiff replied—First, that he was induced to intrust J L with the possession of the goods by the fraud of J L. Secondly, that the agreement by J L to deliver the goods by way of pledge was not made, nor were the goods delivered to the defendants in the usual and ordinary course of business. Thirdly, that the goods first deposited with the defendants were not J L's goods, nor had the defendants any lien thereon from J L:—Held, that the facts disclosed by the plea constituted an answer to the action under the Factors' Act, and that neither replication avoided that plea. Ibid.

(A) WHAT MANUFACTORIES ARE WITHIN THE FACTORY ACT.

[See post, (C).]

A mill belonging to the respondents, situate at Manchester, was used for the manufacture of cotton-waste and other similar materials into a substance known as "half-stuff." This substance is frequently made up into wadding and cotton goods, but in this case it was invariably transferred to another mill belonging to the respondents, situate in Hertfordshire, and then made up into paper:—Held, that the mill at Manchester was not subject to the provisions of the 7 Vict. c. 15, which, by section 73, excepts from its operation any factory used solely for the manufacture of paper. Coles v. Dickinson, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 235; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 604.

The premises of a manufacturer of crinoline skirts, in which steam-power is used to work machinery which by the interlacing or plaiting of cotton threads together around and over every part of the strips of steel, which are afterwards placed in the crinoline skirts, effects a covering for such strips, are a factory within the meaning of the Factory Acts. Whymper v. Harney, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 113; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 243.

(B) Employment of Children.

The appellant was the occupier of a factory within the meaning of the Factory Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 15, in which he manufactured cotton and wool into a material termed "webbing." The appellant manufactured also braces and girths in rooms which were part of the factory, using for the purpose both the webbing manufactured by himself and other webbing purchased by him. He was convicted, under the Factory Act, for employing a child in the factory after the hour of one o'clock. The child was engaged in labour for the appellant in the manufacture of braces and girths, and the only process in which he was employed was the preparation of pieces of leather for being stitched to the webbing, but no part of the webbing itself, nor any machinery, was in the room in which he was so employed. The 73rd section of the Factory Act states, that the act is not to extend "to any part of such factory used solely for the manufacture of goods made entirely of any other material than those enumerated" (amongst which "leather" is not included):—Held, that the room in which the child was employed was not within such exception, as it was not shewn to be a room used solely for the manufacture of goods made entirely of any other material than those enumerated in the act, and that therefore the appellant was rightly convicted. Taylor v. Hickes, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 242; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 152.

A child employed in "finishing" goods in a shed, in which finishing alone is carried on, but which communicates internally with other buildings in which "printing" is carried on, is "employed in a print work" within the meaning of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 29. s. 2, whether the particular finishing be incidental to the process of printing or not; and a surgeon's certificate of its health is therefore necessary under section 20. Hardcastle v. Jones, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 44; 3 Best & S. 153.

(C) Register of Young Persons.

T was the owner of premises in M, in which he carried on the manufacture of cotton sewing thread; he also had premises in L, to which he was in the habit of sending the thread in hanks, and where it was wound by machinery moved by steam-power, firstly on to cops, and secondly on to spools. No other process except this particular winding was carried on at L:—Held, that these latter premises were a mill or factory within the meaning of the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 103. s. 1, which prohibits the employment of young persons in the night, and also within the meaning of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 15. ss. 27, 73, by which the occupiers of factories are ordered to keep registers of all young persons employed by them in their factories, and that T was liable to the penalty imposed by the latter act for the offence of not keeping such a register. Haydon v. Taylor, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 33; 4 Best & S. 519.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

In justifying giving a person into custody on a charge of felony, it is sufficient to prove such facts as constitute a reasonable and probable cause for the charge, although the defendant may have acted not merely on those facts which are proved, but also on others, the truth of which, although alleged in the plea, are either not proved, or are disproved. Hailes v. Marks, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 389; 7 Hurls. & N. 56.

A plea of justification may be amended, either by striking out so much as is not proved, or by correcting the averments in the plea, in accordance with the evidence. Ibid.

The question of reasonable and probable cause on a plea of justification, in an action for false imprisonment, is one of law and not of fact. Ibid.

To an action for false imprisonment, and giving the plaintiff into custody of a police constable, the defendant, a printseller, pleaded that prints had been stolen from him, and he suspected the plaintiff upon these grounds: the plaintiff had at the time of the loss been making frames for the defendant, and frequently went to his place of business, and on many occasions sent the defendant's boy out for things on some errand or excuse; on which occasions he was in the room where the goods were kept, and whence they were stolen, and had the opportunity of stealing them; and although during that time he was in pecuniary difficulties, and paying off a county court judgment at 6*s.* a month, he was dealing largely in prints of the same sort, and had frequently left large bundles of such prints at a public-house; and, according to the statement of one B, had sold to him during that time 300*l.* worth of prints, wherefore &c. At the trial the defendant failed to prove either that the plaintiff left bundles of prints at a public-house, or the statement of B; and although the defendant proved the county court judgment, it appeared he was not aware of it at the time he gave the plaintiff into custody:—Held, that proof of the residue of the plea constituted an answer to the action. Ibid.

FALSE PRETENCES.

(A) Cases within the Statute.
(B) Venue.
(C) Indictment.
(D) Variance.
(E) Evidence.

(A) Cases within the Statute.

The prisoner, falsely representing that he was the agent of a certain loan society, and that on payment of 5*s.* 6*d.* he would obtain a loan for the prosecutor, induced the prosecutor to tell the prisoner to go to his wife for the money. The prisoner went and obtained the 5*s.* 6*d.* from the prosecutor's wife, stating that he was come for the money as the person from the loan society was waiting for it. On an indictment, charging him with obtaining the money by false pretences from the prosecutor,—Held, that the conviction was good, although, in fact, the money was actually paid by the wife apart from her husband. R. v. Moseley, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 24; 1 L. & C. 92.

Where a married man induced a woman to give him a sum of money by representing himself to be unmarried, and by promising that with the money he would furnish a house and return and marry her, he was held indictable for obtaining money by false pretences. R. v. Jennison, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 146; 1 L. & C. 157.

The prisoner and two other persons entered into articles of partnership, by the terms of which the profits were to be divided equally among them. By a subsequent verbal arrangement the prisoner was to act as agent for the sale of the partnership goods, and was to receive a commission on all orders obtained by him, which commission was to be paid out of the partnership funds before any division of profits was made. The prisoner by falsely pretending that he had obtained some orders, got his fellow partners to pay him a sum for commission:—Held, that he was not indictable for obtaining money by false pretences, as his charges were payable out of the partnership funds, and his false statement was a misrepresentation respecting a partnership matter, and would have to be investigated, and the sum paid duly considered in taking the partnership accounts, in order to ascertain the profits.—Per Pollock, C.B., the statute rendering indictable persons who obtain money by false pretences is not intended to apply to those who, by fraudulent and knavish statements, obtain money in the course of a real commercial transaction. R. v. Evans, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 38; 1 L. & C. 252.

K represented to B that he had a large quantity of good tobacco to sell, and induced B to agree to buy some. P was with K at the time, and it was arranged that P was to deliver the tobacco to B, and that B was to pay P for K. P accordingly, a few days afterwards, fraudulently delivered to B two bales purporting to be tobacco, as in pursuance of the contract, and received payment from B. The bales contained little else but rubbish; K and P were parties to the fraud:—Held, that K was liable, on these facts, to be convicted on an indictment charging him with obtaining money from B, by falsely pretending that he was possessed of a quantity of good tobacco. R. v. Kerrigan, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 71; 1 L. & C. 383.

It was the duty of the prisoner, a servant, to ascertain daily the amount of dock dues payable by his master, and, having ascertained it, to apply to his master's cashier for the amount, and then to pay it in discharge of the dues. On one occasion, by representing falsely to the cashier that the amount was larger than it really was, as he well knew, the prisoner obtained from the cashier the sum he stated it to be, and then paid the real amount due, and appropriated the difference:—Held, that his offence was not larceny, but obtaining money by false pretences. R. v. Thompson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 57; 1 L. & C. 233.

In order to sustain an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences, there must be a false pretence of some existing fact. Where the prisoner obtained money by pretending that he had got to pay his rent, while in fact he had no intention of paying it, but meaning to appropriate the money to his own purposes, it was held that there was no false pretence within the meaning of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 88. R. v. Lewis Lee, 1 L. & C. 309.

An indictment for attempting to obtain money by false pretences, alleged that the prisoner falsely pretended to H P, who lived at one Madame T's, that the said H P was to give the prisoner 10s., and that Madame T was going to allow him 10s. a week:—Held, by the Court (Blackburn, J. and Pigott, B. dubitantibus), that the indictment did not allege with sufficient certainty any false pretence respecting any existing fact. R. v. Henshaw, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 132; 1 L. & C. 444.

An indictment, charging the prisoner with obtaining moneys from a wife, whose husband had run away, by falsely pretending to her that she, the prisoner, had power to bring him back, is good, and sufficiently states an indictable offence. R. v. Giles, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 50; 1 L. & C. 502.

Though before she obtained the money from the wife the prisoner used only promissory words that she would bring the husband back, yet if the whole tenor of her conversation and conduct shews that she all along intended the wife to believe that she had the power of bringing the husband back, there is evidence for the jury in support of the indictment. Ibid.

(B) VENUE.

One, who obtains goods by false pretences in one county, and afterwards brings them into another county, where he is apprehended with them, cannot be indicted for the offence in the latter county, but must be indicted in the county where the goods were obtained. R. v. Stanbury, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 88; 1 L. & C. 128.

(C) INDICTMENT.

An indictment for false pretences alleged, that the prisoner falsely pretended to G S that a certain person, who lived in a large house down the street, and who had had a daughter married some time back, had been at him about some carpets, and had asked him to procure a piece (about twelve yards) of woollen carpet. The evidence was, that the prisoner went to G S's shop, in the village of S, and said that he wanted some carpeting for a family living in a large house in that village, who had had a daughter lately married. On this, G S gave the prisoner about twenty yards of carpet, which the prisoner afterwards sold to different persons at a higher price than G S would have charged for it. The only evidence to negative the pretence was that of a lady who lived in the village, and whose daughter had been married about a year ago, and who stated that she had not sent the prisoner for the carpet:—Held, that the indictment was sufficient, and that on the evidence stated the jury were warranted in finding the prisoner guilty. R. v. Burnsides, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 42; Bell, C.C. 282.

If a prisoner committed for obtaining a chattel by false pretences be indicted in one count for so obtaining the chattel, and in another count for obtaining another chattel by false pretences, without any authority of a Judge, or otherwise, under the statute 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, to prefer such second charge, the proper course is for the Judge at the trial to direct the second count to be quashed, and not to put the prisoner to plead to it. If, however, the two counts are allowed to go to the jury, and evidence is given respecting each charge, and the jury convict on each count, the conviction cannot be supported on either—not on the second, because it ought to have been quashed; nor on the first, because improper evidence has been received; the evidence as to the second charge being inadmissible in law on the trial of the first. R. v. Fuidge, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 74; 1 L. & C. 390.

The prisoners, having a cart-load of soot to deliver, took the cart to be weighed with a quantity of heavy rubbish under the soot. The attendant at the public weighing-machine gave them a ticket describing the weight of the load in the cart. The prisoners, after removing the rubbish, delivered the soot to the prosecutor, pretending that the soot was more in quantity than it really was, and that it was of the weight described in the weighing-ticket, and they produced the ticket to the prosecutor to vouch for the correctness of the alleged weight; and they thereby obtained from the prosecutor the price for the supposed quantity of soot:—Held, that an indictment, charging that the prisoners obtained money of the prosecutor by falsely pretending to him that the soot was of such a weight, whereas, in fact, it was not of that weight, but of a less weight, as the prisoners well knew, was supported by proof of the above facts, and that it was not necessary in the indictment to allude to the ticket, as what passed respecting the ticket was merely matter of evidence. R. v. Lee, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 129; 1 L. & C. 418.

(D) Variance.

On the trial of an indictment, charging that the prisoner obtained a horse of the prosecutor by falsely representing himself to be the servant of Hardman, of Stickley, the evidence was that the prisoner at first represented himself as a servant of Hardman, of Stickley Farm, but that afterwards learning that the prosecutor had mistakingly supposed that he had said he was the servant of Harding, late of Benwell Lodge, he adopted that view, and virtually said that he was the servant of Harding, late of Benwell Lodge, and now of Stickley Farm. It was proved that the prosecutor parted with his horse in the belief that the prisoner was the servant of Harding:—Held, that the conviction could not be supported, as the real pretence that operated on the prosecutor's mind was not alleged in the indictment. R. v. Bulmer, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 171; 1 L. & C. 476.

(E) Evidence.

The prisoner, a commercial traveller, employed by the prosecutor to take orders, but who was forbidden to receive moneys, obtained a sum of money from a customer of the prosecutor by the false pretence that he had authority to receive it:—Held, that evidence was not admissible to shew that the prisoner within a week from the time of the offence charged obtained another sum of money from another customer by a like false pretence. R. v. Holt, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 11; Bell, C.C. 280.

FELON.

(B) Dealings with Property before Conviction.

---

(A) Forfeiture of Estate.

In 1833 A B was convicted of felony and transported. At this time his wife was entitled to a fund, contingently on her surviving her mother. In 1846 A B obtained a conditional pardon, available in all places except the United Kingdom. The mother died in 1836 and the wife in 1852. On a petition by the Crown for payment, the Court, without deciding the right, merely ordered payment to the administrator of his wife. In re Harrington's Trusts, 29 Beav. 24.

(B) Dealings with Property before Conviction.

After the commission of a felony and before conviction, a felon may assign his property for valuable consideration; and a debt existing at the time of the commission of the crime is a sufficient consideration, if made bona fide. Chowne v. Baylis, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 757; 31 Beav. 351.

A clerk in a banking company robbed his employers of a large sum of money, and before conviction he deposited the deeds of some real estates with the company, and directed a transfer of certain policies of assurance on his life to be made to them as a security so far as they would extend for the money taken. The company afterwards prosecuted him for the felony to conviction; and upon a suit to realize the securities,—Held, that the money taken was a debt due from the felon to the company, and a good consideration for the securities given by the felon to the company. Ibid.

In November and December 1860, A committed acts, in respect of which he was, on the 8th of June, 1861, taken into custody, and, on the 21st of the same month, convicted of felony. Prior to his apprehension, viz., on the 23rd of May, 1861, he executed a voluntary settlement of personal estate belonging to him upon his wife and children:—Held, that such settlement was fraudulent and void as against the Crown. In re Saunders's Estate, Saunders v. Warton, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 179; 4 Giff. 179.

FERRY.

Proximity constituting an Evasion.

The plaintiffs sued the defendants for carrying in the line of their ferry, and also for carrying near thereto for the purpose of evading it. The ferry claimed was from the Isle of Dogs (an area of about one square mile) to Greenwich. On this island there was formerly but one highway, from Poplar on the north to Potter's Ferry Stairs on the south, but since the year 1800 the spot had become thickly inhabited, and several new roads had been made, some of which communicated with the old highway before mentioned. The ferry complained of had been established by the defendants at a point distant 1,280 yards from Potter's Ferry, which was the only place where the plaintiffs had ever kept men and boats for the purposes of the ferry. In a deed of conveyance, dated in the year 1676, the ferry is called "Potter's Ferry," and is described as "all that ferry extending itself from a place or marsh called the Isle of Dogs over the Thames unto the town of Greenwich." And it is said to be granted "in as ample a manner as the same hath heretofore been used, occupied, or enjoyed":—Held, that the limits of the ferry must be ascertained from user, and that by user the ferry was limited to the line from Potter's Ferry Stairs to the town of Greenwich, and did not extend to all parts of the Isle of Dogs; and that, therefore, the defendants had not carried in the line of the ferry of the plaintiffs. Newton v. Cubitt, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 246; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 32.

In ascertaining whether the defendants, though they had not carried in the line of the ferry of the plaintiffs, had carried near to it for the purposes of evading it, the change of circumstances which had taken place since the original grant of the ferry, might be considered, and that in the present case the defendants had not carried so near to the ferry of the plaintiffs as to have infringed any right of the plaintiffs. Ibid.

A grant of ferry from all parts of a certain area to a place or vill is in itself anomalous; it is, ordinarily, from the point where a highway reaches the water's edge to a point in the opposite bank, or to a vill. Ibid.

A disposition is made to a purchaser for value, within the meaning of the proviso in the 38th section of the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries Act, although the disentailing deed, conveying a fee to the tenant in tail to such uses as he shall direct, be the only deed enrolled: provided that deed and the other deeds declaring the uses in favour of the purchaser form part of one and the same transaction. Crocker v. Waine, 33 Law J. A was tenant by the curtesy, with remainder to his eldest son B in tail, with remainder to C. B sold and conveyed the property to A, and levied a fine in which A was counsel:—Held, that there was no discontinuance, that the remainder was not barred, and that the title was bad. Anderson v. Anderson, 30 Beav. 209.

(B) ACKNOWLEDGMENT BY MARRIED WOMEN.

(a) Trust Deed.

Where a provision in lieu of the estate given up by the married woman, is made by an investment in the funds in the names of trustees, the deeds declaring the trusts thereof must not only be produced to the Commissioners, at the time of taking the acknowledgment under the Fines and Recoveries Act, but must have been previously executed by the trustees; and it is not sufficient that the Commissioners are satisfied that such provision has been made by such investment for the benefit of the married woman. In re Dallas, 30 Law J. The Court will not permit a married woman to execute a conveyance under the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 74. s. 91, without the concurrence of her husband (he having refused to concur) upon an affidavit merely stating that the wife had left her husband in consequence of his violence, and was living apart from him. In re Price, 13 Com. ### (A) RIGHT OF.

The soil of navigable tidal rivers, so far as the tide flows and reflows, is prima facie in the Crown, and the right of fishery therein is prima facie in the public. But the right to exclude the public therefrom, and to create a several fishery, existed in the Crown, and might, lawfully, have been exercised by the Crown before Magna Charta, and the several fishery could, lawfully, be afterwards made the subject of grant by the Crown, to a private individual. Malcomson v. O'Dea, 10 H.L. Cas. 593.

Where a grant of a several fishery had been made by the Crown to a corporation, and rent received by the Crown in respect thereof for a long period of time, the earliest grants describing it as "an ancient inheritance of the Crown," it was held that the lawfulness of the origin of the several fishery might be presumed. Ibid.

There was a dispute as to the limits of the fishery. In an action against alleged trespassers, the plaintiff, the lessee of the corporation, tendered in evidence the bill and answer in Chancery in a suit instituted a great many years before by another grantee of the Crown against the corporation, and in which the limits of the alleged fishery were described:—Held, that as part of the history of the fishery and of the claims made to it, the bill and answer were admissible in evidence. Ibid.

The plaintiff also tendered in evidence an "Assembly Book," belonging to the corporation, dated in 1676, and containing entries of the rents due to the corporation from its various tenants, among which were entries of rents paid in respect of this fishery:—Held, that the book was admissible as an ancient document shewing the exercise of acts of ownership. Ibid.

The plaintiff also tendered in evidence, for the purpose of shewing the meaning of a particular phrase in the grants, a letter of licence from the Crown, in 1676, to one of its grantees, to alien the subject-matter of the grant:—Held, that the licence was admissible for that purpose. Ibid.

By a deed of feoffment, H aliened, bargained, sold, enfeoffed, and confirmed to G M, his heirs and assigns, for ever, "all that part of his fishery in Ulleswater Head, situate and being," &c., "yielding and paying therefor yearly and every year unto E H" (the lord of the manor of P) "a yearly free rent of 4*d.*" Livery of seisin was duly made upon this deed. Ulleswater Head was in the manor of P. By the court rolls of the manor of P it appeared that J M (a descendant of G M) was included among the freeholders of the manor, and was chargeable with the rent of 4*d.*, among other rents, and it appeared to have been duly rendered by him. He subsequently conveyed the fishery to the plaintiff. The defendants erected a pier upon that part of the lake of Ulleswater which was comprehended in the fishery, and used the pier for the purpose of embarking and disembarking passengers thereon:—Held, by Wightman, J. and Mellor, J., that the fishery must have been a several fishery, and must be presumed to have included the soil of the lake, and, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain an action against the defendants. So held, also, by Cockburn, C. J., but solely in deference to the authorities. Marshall v. the Ulleswater Company, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 139; 3 Best & S. 732.

Upon the hearing of an information against the defendant for fishing with a net in a tidal river in which the prosecutor claimed a private right of fishing, evidence was given to shew that he had such right by reason of his being lord of the manor and otherwise. The defendant denied his right to the fishing, and contended that himself and the public had a right of fishing in the river, and called witnesses to shew that they had fished it for many years without interruption. No prosecution had been instituted against any one for doing so. The Justices were called upon to hold their hands, and not to adjudicate upon the question raised. They nevertheless convicted the defendant:—Held, that they ought not to have done so, as there was reasonable evidence to shew that the question of title raised by the defendant was bona fide, and that, therefore, their jurisdiction was at an end. R. v. Stimpson, R. v. Peek, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 208; 4 Best & S. 301.

Rights in gross are not within the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 71. Shuttleworth v. Le Fleming, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 309; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 687.

(B) CONSERVANCY.

The 52nd section of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. cxlvii.),—which transfers to a new corporation, called "The Conservators of the River Thames," all the former powers of the Mayor of London, relating to the conservancy, preservation, and regulation of the River Thames,—empowers the conservators to appoint assistants to the water-bailiff, with authority, under the 30 Geo. 2. c. 21. s. 5, to enter fishing-boats and seize brood of fish found there, although the late act had not apparently the fisheries in contemplation. Turnidge v. Shaw, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 113; 3 E. & E. 588.

The penalties imposed by section 6. of the earlier act on persons obstructing the water-bailiff or his assistants in the execution of that act, are not extended to persons obstructing those officers when appointed under the Conservancy Act; but penalties may be recovered under section 76. of the later act from a person resisting the water-bailiff or his assistants, as persons employed in the execution of that act. Ibid.

(C) RIGHT TO ANCHORAGE TOLL.

A right to the soil of the sea in an oyster fishery below low-water mark, and to take anchorage toll from a ship which without necessity drops anchor within the limits of the fishery, may have been lawfully granted by the Crown to a subject before the time of legal memory; therefore such an immemorial right to take anchorage toll may be sustained. Free Fishers of Whitstable v. Gann (Ex. Ch.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 194; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 853: affirming the judgment below, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 372; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 287.—[This decision is reversed by the House of Lords, see 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 29; 11 H.L. Cas. 192.]

Where the right to take such toll was shewn to have belonged to a manor, an exemption from such toll cannot be claimed by a charter of Edw. 4; as the manor, and therefore the right to take the toll must have been created prior to the charter in question, and it is not in the power of the Crown to derogate from its own prior grant. Ibid.

Such toll is in respect of the use of the soil; and where such soil is a portion of a manor, the right to take the toll goes with the soil, and is, therefore, not destroyed by a division of the manor. Ibid.

(D) Salmon Fishery.

(a) Fixed Engines.

The Salmon Fishery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 109), prohibits the catching of salmon by any means within fifty yards below any dam, except by rod and line, unless the dam has a fish-pass attached thereto; and therefore any ancient right or mode of fishing by means of a fixed engine or otherwise, by virtue of any grant or charter or immemorial usage, although reserved by the act in certain cases, does not override such prohibition or exempt the possessor of such right of fishing from the penalties imposed by the act. Moulton v. Willby, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 164; 2 Hurls. & C. 25.

The Salmon Fishery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 109), s. 11, enacts that "no fixed engine of any description shall be placed or used for catching salmon in any inland or tidal waters; and any engine placed or used in contravention of this section may be taken possession of or destroyed":—Held, that the right to take possession of or destroy such engines extends to all persons, and is not confined to conservators or overseers appointed under section 33. for the preservation of salmon and enforcing the provisions of the act. Williams v. Blackwall, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 174; 2 Hurls. & C. 33.

(b) Fishing Mill-Dam.

The appellant was the occupier of a fishing mill-dam with a fish lock through it. At the head of the lock was a sliding door or hatch which moved in grooves, and when it was down no salmon could pass. Within three feet of this door, down stream, was a frame in which the up-stream hecks of the fish lock were placed before the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 109), when the lock was used for taking salmon. Since that act the appellant took out the hecks, but left down the hatch, by which the water was prevented from passing through the lock or box within the said fishing mill-dam. The hatch was necessary for the fishery as much as for the mill, but the milling power of the appellant's mill would be injuriously, though not ruinously, affected by lifting up or removing the hatch:—Held, that the fishing-dam was a fishery within the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861, and that the appellant might be convicted under section 20. of that act for not removing the hatch during the close season, although such removal would interfere with the milling power of his mill. Hodgson v. Little, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 229; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 198.

(A) Machinery.

The mortgage of a silk-mill was stated to include "all those the steam-engine or steam-engines, boilers, steam-pipes, main shafting, mill-gearing, millwrights' work and other machinery and fixtures whatsoever then erected or set up, or standing, or being, or which should at any time thereafter be erected or set up, or stand, or be in or upon the said lands, mill and premises, or any part thereof":—Held (reversing the decision of the Master of the Rolls, who confined these words to the machinery necessary to give motive power to the mill), that all the machinery and fixtures used in the manufacturing of silk within the mill were included. Haley v. Hammersley, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 771; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 587.

Where a lease contained a covenant by the lessee to yield up certain specified fixtures and all other additions, improvements, fixtures and things which then were or at any time during the term should be fixed upon the premises, it was held that the lessee's title to fixtures not ejusdem generis with those specified was too doubtful to be forced on a purchaser. Wilson v. Whateley, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 673; 1 Jo. & H. 436.

(B) Right to remove.

By a lease of land intended to be used for salt-works, the lessees covenanted that they would erect certain buildings and works, and that they would at the determination of the term "leave at the disposal of the lessors all the fixed materials of what nature or kind soever that should be in or about the said intended wychhouses or salt-works, or any ways relating thereto, save and except all the salt-pans and other movable articles made use of at all or at any of the said wychhouses or salt-works," which they the lessees were to take away for their own use and benefit. The interest of the lessees became afterwards vested in the defendants, who took upon themselves the performance of the above covenant, and also covenanted that they would yield up possession of the premises, with all erections, buildings and improvements, together with the cisterns, doors, &c., and "also all other fixtures and appurtenances of what kind or nature soever which should be used in or about the buildings," "but as to the salt-pans and other articles made use of at all or any of the said wychhouses, &c., and belonging to the defendants and their assigns, they should be at liberty to take and carry away from off the said premises, upon making good all such injury or damage as the said wychhouses, &c. might sustain in consequence of such removal," with an option to the lessors of purchasing any part of the salt-pans or other movable articles. The defendants sunk a brine-shaft and erected an apparatus for working it. They underlet the premises on the 13th of December, 1861. The plaintiffs, on the 23rd of June, 1862, wrote a letter demanding possession, as the underletting gave them a right of re-entry on the land; and an action of ejectment was brought on the 7th of July, 1862. Between the 18th of January and the 17th of March, 1863, the defendants sold and removed a number of fixtures, &c., and on the last-mentioned day they confessed judgment in the action of ejectment:—Held, that under the above covenants, the defendants had a right to take away such fixtures as could properly be called tenant's fixtures; and that they were entitled to a reasonable time after the receipt of the letter of the 23rd of June, 1862, within which they might remove them. Sumner v. Bromilow, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 130.

(C) Taking in Execution.

By an agreement for a lease, it was provided that the tenant should at all times during the term keep sufficient and suitable fixtures and effects on the premises for the purposes desired, and that none of the movable furniture and effects should be removed therefrom, except for the purposes of repair or of being replaced by others; and also that in case the term should be determined by effluxion of time, but in no other case, it should be lawful for the tenant, within twenty-one days after the expiration of the term, but not during any other period, to remove such fixtures, if any, as he might have affixed to the premises, unless the landlord should elect to purchase the same, which it should be lawful for him to do at a price to be settled by arbitration. It was further agreed, that in case the tenant became bankrupt or insolvent, "or if any distress or writ of extent or execution shall be lawfully levied or executed by seizure on the said premises," &c., then in any of the said cases the landlord might re-enter and put out the tenant, "and also seize and retain for her own use, and as her own, all fixtures whatsoever, whether tenant's or trade fixtures," &c. After this agreement had been entered into, the tenant put up some fixtures on the premises, which were tenant's fixtures. These fixtures and the tenant's goods were seized by the sheriff, under a fi. fa. on a judgment against the tenant, at the suit of a creditor. The landlord thereupon put in a claim to the fixtures:—Held, by the Exchequer Chamber, reversing the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, that by the agreement the tenant had renounced the ordinary tenant's right of removing fixtures during the term, and consequently that the sheriff had no right to take the tenant's fixtures in execution. Dumergue v. Rumsey (Ex. Ch.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 88; 2 Hurls. & C. 777.

(A) Foreign Attachment.
(B) Foreign Enlistment Act.
(C) Construction of Foreign Documents.
(D) Foreign Judgments.

(A) Foreign Attachment.

A creditor who obtains a foreign attachment gains no priority over the simple contract creditors when the debtor's assets are administered in this court. Redhead v. Welton, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 577; 29 Beav. 521.

A foreign attachment will not affect any moneys in the hands of a garnishee, unless the debtor could have maintained an action to recover them at the time of the attachment or at any time between the issuing of the attachment and the time when the pleas were entered by the garnishee. Where, therefore, two attachments were issued, it was held, that the first could not reach the balance in the hands of the garnishee, as it arose after plea, and that the second could not reach it, as it was issued after the garnishee had notice of its assignment. Webster v. Webster, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 655; 31 Beav. 393.

An attachment of the produce of the sale of a commission in the army in the hands of the army agents, was held ineffectual as against the lien and right of set-off of such agents, and as against a prior equitable assignment. Ibid.

In an action brought in one of the superior courts of law, W obtained a verdict against N for 600*l.*, and on the same day assigned the sum recovered to E, who immediately gave notice of the assignment to N. N was afterwards served with attachment papers, issuing out of the Lord Mayor's Court of the City of London in an action of B v. W, attaching all the moneys of W in the hands of N. N thereupon applied to E to know what course he should take with reference to the proceedings in the Lord Mayor's Court, but E declined to give any directions or to assume any responsibility; and ultimately judgment was recovered against N as garnishee. N then filed a bill of interpleader against B, W and E stating the above facts, and that the judgment was duly recovered against him as garnishee in the Lord Mayor's Court. W and E demurred:—Held, that it was not open to them, upon the argument of the demurrer, to contend, upon the other allegations in the bill, that the money recovered in a superior court of law was not attachable by process out of the Lord Mayor's Court. Nelson v. Barter, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 705; 2 Hem. & M. 334.

Proceedings by foreign attachment in the Lord Mayor's Court of the city of London, commenced after the death of the creditor of the garnishee, whose debt is attached, are null and void. Matthey v. Wiseman, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 216; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 657.

In an action by an administratrix for a debt due to M, the intestate, the defendants pleaded to the further maintenance that the debt sued for had been attached in the Lord Mayor's Court, in a suit instituted by K against the intestate, that a regular judgment had been obtained by K in such court, and that execution had issued thereon against the garnishees, and that after the commencement of this action the defendants as garnishees paid the said debt to K for the purpose of satisfying such judgment. Replication, that at the time of affirming the plaint in the Lord Mayor's Court, M, the intestate, was dead. Rejoinder, that at the time of affirming the said plaint, no one had administered to the estate of M, the intestate, but that before execution was had by K the plaintiff took out letters of administration to the estate of K, and might, according to the practice of the Lord Mayor's Court, and the custom of the city of London, have appeared to the said plaint and defended the same, or might have dissolved the said attachment and defended the said plaint:—Held, on demurrer, that the plaintiff was not estopped as against the defendants from shewing the nullity of the proceedings in the Lord Mayor's Court, and that the defendants could not avail themselves of the payment to K as any defence to the action. Ibid.

Quære—Whether the debt sued for by the administratrix was attached at all, inasmuch as there was no debt due to the intestate at the time of the attachment as the intestate was then dead. Ibid.

(B) FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT.

The 7th section of 59 Geo. 3. c. 69. enacts that if any person within any part of the United Kingdom, or in any part of His Majesty's dominions beyond the seas, shall, without leave and licence of His Majesty for that purpose first had and obtained, equip, furnish, fit out or arm, or attempt or endeavour to equip, &c., or procure to be equipped, &c., or shall knowingly aid, assist or be concerned in the equipping, &c. of any ship or vessel with intent or in order that such ship or vessel shall be employed in the service of any foreign prince, state or potentate, or of any foreign colony, province, or part of any province or people, or of any person or persons exercising or assuming to exercise any powers of government in or over any foreign state, &c., as a transport or store ship, or with intent to cruise or commit hostilities against any prince, &c., or against the subjects or citizens of any prince, &c., with whom His Majesty shall not then be at war, every such person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, &c., and every such ship or vessel, with the tackle, apparel, and furniture, together with all the materials, arms, ammunition and stores which may belong to or be on board of any such ship or vessel, shall be forfeited:—Held, that the mere building of ships, as distinguished from equipping, is not prohibited by the statute. Held, also, by Pollock, C.B. and Bramwell, B., that the equipment forbidden is an equipment of a warlike character, by means of which the ship on leaving Her Majesty's dominions shall be in a condition to cruise or commit hostilities. Held, by Channell, B., that the statute forbids an equipment for war, but that an equipment ancipitis usus—capable of being used for war—is within the meaning of the 7th section, provided the intent be clear that it is to be used for war. Held, by Pigott, B., that the prohibited intent is the main ingredient of the offence struck at by the statute, and that any act of equipping done in furtherance of that intent constitutes the whole offence. The Attorney General v. Sillem (The Alexandra case) (Exch. and Ex. Ch.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 93; 2 Hurls. & C. 431 (in error), 581.

By the Queen's Remembrancer's Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21. s. 26, it is enacted, that "it shall be lawful for the Lord Chief Baron and two or more Barons of the Court of Exchequer from time to time to make all such Rules and Orders, as to the process, practice and mode of pleading on the Revenue side of the Court," &c., "as may seem to them necessary and proper; and also from time to time, by any such Rule or Order, to extend, apply, or adapt any of the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, and the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, and any of the Rules of pleading and practice on the Plea side of the said Court to the Revenue side of the said Court, as may seem to them expedient for making the process, practice and mode of pleading on the Revenue side of the said Court as nearly as may be uniform with the process, practice and mode of pleading on the Plea side of such Court":—Held, by the majority of the Court of Exchequer Chamber, Cockburn, C.J., Crompton, J., Blackburn, J. and Mellor, J. (dissentientibus Erle, C.J., Williams, J. and Willes, J.), that the Chief Baron and Barons of the Exchequer had no power under the provisions of this section to make rules granting, in Revenue cases, rights of appeal to the Exchequer Chamber and House of Lords similar to those given in ordinary cases by sections 34. and 35. of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854; and that under such Rules no appeal lay to the Exchequer Chamber against the decision of the Court of Exchequer on a motion for a new trial, in the case of an information for a forfeiture of a ship, filed by the Attorney General under the 59 Geo. 3. c. 69. s. 7. Ibid.

(C) CONSTRUCTION OF FOREIGN DOCUMENTS.

In the construction of a foreign document in the English Courts, the Judge or Court must obtain, first, a translation of the document; secondly, an explanation of any terms of art used in it; thirdly, information on any special law; and, fourthly, on any peculiar rule of construction of the foreign state affecting it; and it is the duty of the English Court with such light to construe the document. The Duchess di Sora v. Phillips (House of Lords), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 129; 10 H.L. Cas. 624.

Whether there is any rule of the House requiring members who have heard the arguments in a cause to give their judgment upon it—quære. Ibid.

(D) FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

Declaration, that the captain of an English ship, while on a voyage, drew a bill of exchange on the then owners for the necessary disbursements of the ship, and the bill was dishonoured at maturity; that the plaintiff had in the mean time become mortgagee of the ship; that by the French law the bona fide holder for value of such a bill, if a French subject, can take proceedings in rem in the French courts, and attach and sell the ship in a French port in order to pay the bill; that the defendants, being English subjects and the holders of the bill, after it had been dishonoured conspired with T, a French subject, that they should indorse the bill to him without value, and that he should take proceedings in the French courts, and falsely represent that he was a bona fide holder for value; that this was accordingly done, and orders were thereby obtained from the French Courts that the ship should be attached and sold in a French port; and the plaintiff was thus deprived of his property in her:—Held, that the declaration was bad, as an action could not be maintained while the judgment in rem, though in a foreign court and obtained as alleged, remained unreversed. Castrique v. Behrens, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 163; 3 E. & E. 709.

A woman became, as alleged, by the law of France, donee of the universality of the succession of her deceased husband, and was thereby entitled to all his property, claims and causes of action, and became personally liable to his debts. After his death, she was compelled to pay certain bills of exchange on which he was liable as indorser. She thereupon took proceedings in France and obtained a judgment to recover the amount against the acceptor:—Held, that she might sue upon this judgment in this country in her own name, without taking out administration. Vanquelin v. Bouard, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 78; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 341.

Held, also, that, independently of the judgment, if by the law of France the wife, as such donee, was capable personally of enforcing the claim against the acceptor, she might enforce it personally in this country also, without taking out administration. Ibid.

To a count upon a foreign judgment, it was pleaded that the foreign Court had no jurisdiction because the defendant in the action there was not a trader, and was not resident within a certain district:—Held, that the plea was bad, inasmuch as, consistently with it, the foreign Court had jurisdiction over the person of the defendant and the subject-matter of the action, which was sufficient. Ibid.

Proceedings were instituted in the Supreme Court of New York against the defendants; and the actions, and all the issues therein, were referred to an arbitrator, who reported that there was a contract by the defendants that certain bills should be accepted by them, and that the contract was to be governed by the laws of the State of New York, and that the plaintiffs in the two actions were respectively entitled to judgment for the amount of the bills, with interest and costs. Upon this report, the Supreme Court adjudged that the plaintiffs should recover the said amount. To actions brought in this country on the foreign judgments, by the plaintiffs and by S & Co. respectively, the defendants pleaded that the judgments were erroneous and liable to be reversed, and that they were taking proceedings to obtain such reversal in the Court of Appeal, and they set out the record of the proceedings in the original suit:—Held, first, that the pendency of an appeal could not be a bar to an action upon the judgment. Secondly, that the lex loci of the contract must prevail; and that the Court in New York having decided in favour of the plaintiffs and of S & Co, judgment must also be given for them in these actions, although—Semble—That by the law of England no action would be maintainable because there was no privity of contract. Munroe v. Pilkington, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 81; 2 Best & S. 11.

Quære—How far a judgment of a foreign Court can be inquired into.

FORFEITURE.

[See DEVISE—LEASE—LEGACY—SETTLEMENT.]

Trust during the life of I H "to pay and apply the interest and annual produce of trust property to him for his own benefit if he did not make any assignment or mortgage of, or charge upon the same, or any part thereof, by any mode of anticipation, or do any act whereby such interest, &c., if made payable to him without any restriction, would become payable to any other person or persons," with a gift over on the happening of any such event. I H having executed a warrant of attorney under which judgment was entered up against him,—Held, that this being a proceeding in invitum, did not work a forfeiture of I H's life interest. Avison v. Holmes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 564; 1 Jo. & H. 530.

The estate of a tenant for life was liable to forfeiture on his mortgaging it. He mortgaged it to C D unknown to the parties taking under the forfeiture:—Held, that C D was liable to account to them for the rents, at all events from the filing of the bill, and beyond that from the time he had notice of the trusts creating the forfeiture. Hennessey v. Bray, 33 Beav. 96.

A B's life interest in a fund in England was liable to forfeiture if A B "should alien, sell, assign, encumber or transfer, or in any manner dispose of or anticipate" it. A B took the benefit of the Insolvent Act in New South Wales, having presented a petition there, by which he surrendered his estate (omitting this life interest from the schedule). The Judge accepted this surrender of his estate and placed it under sequestration in the hands of the Chief Commissioner of Insolvent Estates:—Held, that A B had thereby forfeited his life interest. Townsend v. Early (No. 2), 34 Beav. 23.

FORGERY.

[The statute law of England and Ireland relating to indictable offences by forgery consolidated and amended by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98.]

(A) UNDERTAKING FOR PAYMENT OF MONEY.
(B) ACCOUNTABLE RECEIPT FOR MONEY.

(A) UNDERTAKING FOR PAYMENT OF MONEY.

The prisoner employed a photographer to counterfeit Austrian bank-notes, directing him to take an impression of the note on a plate of glass by means of the photographic process, and then to get it engraved on metal or wood, so as afterwards to strike off the forged notes. The photographer accordingly took off on a glass plate a "positive" impression of the note, and shewed it to the prisoner, who was arrested while inspecting it. The impression on the glass was a mere shadow of the notes, easily washed off until fixed. No impression could be taken from it, but from it a "negative" could be made, and then from the negative copies of the note could be printed or an engraving could be prepared:—Held, that the prisoner was liable to be convicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 19. of the offence of without lawful authority or excuse making upon a certain plate an undertaking for the payment of money, purporting to be an undertaking for the payment of money of a foreign state. R. v. Rinaldi, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 28; 1 L. & C. 330.

Forging a document purporting to guarantee a master to a certain amount in money against the dishonesty of a clerk, is forging an undertaking for the payment of money within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 23. R. v. Joyce, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 168; 1 L. & C. 576.

(B) Accountable Receipt for Money.

A person may be indicted for forgery for making a false entry of a receipt of money in a book which purports to be a bankers' passbook with intent to defraud. R. v. Smith, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 154; 1 L. & C. 168.

If a person, with intent to defraud, and to cause it to be supposed, contrary to the fact, that he has paid a certain sum into a bank, make in a book, purporting to be a pass-book of the bank, a false entry, which denotes that the bank has received the sum, he is guilty of forging an accountable receipt for money. R. v. Moody, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 156; 1 L. & C. 173.

A turnpike toll-gate ticket is a receipt for money within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 23. R. v. Fitch, 1 L. & C. 159.

(A) Action for.

The declaration stated that the plaintiff, the defendant and C had entered into a joint adventure; that C advanced 6,000*l.* for it: 2,000*l.* for himself, 2,000*l.* for the plaintiff and as a loan to him, and 2,000*l.* on like terms for the defendant; that afterwards, C wishing to retire, the defendant offered to take the adventure on himself, and to become debtor to C for the plaintiff's 2,000*l.*, if the plaintiff would give up his share in the adventure; that the plaintiff agreed to this, and the defendant informed C of it; that C accepted the defendant as his debtor in lieu of the plaintiff; that thereupon the plaintiff was released from all liability to C; that nevertheless the defendant, knowing that he alone was capable of proving that the plaintiff had assented to the arrangement, falsely, fraudulently, and before the Evidence Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, passed, in order to make C believe that the plaintiff had never assented to give up his share in the adventure, and to induce C to sue the plaintiff for the 2,000*l.*, and to deter the plaintiff from calling him, the defendant, for a witness, wrote and sent to C a letter, professedly addressed to the plaintiff, pretending to expostulate with the plaintiff for not assenting to the arrangement, and asserting that the plaintiff had positively refused to do so; by means whereof C was induced to sue, and did sue, the plaintiff for the 2,000*l.* and recovered judgment against him for the sum of 2,486*l.*; and that the plaintiff was put to a large expense for costs. The Court held, that the declaration disclosed no cause of action, as it did not shew that the alleged damage arose from the alleged wrongful act of the defendant. Collins v. Cave (Ex. Ch.), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 55; 6 Hurls. & N. 131.

In an action against a husband and wife for a fraudulent representation by the wife, the declaration alleged, that the wife being desirous that the plaintiff should discount a bill of exchange drawn on her husband by one S, fraudulently represented to the plaintiff that such bill was accepted by her husband, whereby the plaintiff was induced to discount such bill; when, in fact the bill had not been accepted by the husband or his authority:—Held, by Erle, C.J., and by Byles, J., that these facts did not constitute a cause of action against the husband and wife. Held, by Williams, J., and Willes, J., that they did constitute such cause of action, as the fraudulent representation was not shewn to have been connected with any contract with the wife. Wright v. Leonard, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 365; 1 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 258.

In an action for a false representation, made on the 24th of October, as to the trustworthiness of W, a tradesman, the plaintiff gave evidence to shew that just before the time that the defendant represented W to be trustworthy the defendant had bought goods of W considerably below their value:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to ask his shopman, who knew all about the purchase of these goods, whether W, on the 24th of October, was trustworthy to his belief. The defendant was allowed also to ask the same question of tradesmen living in the same town with W. Sheen v. Bumpstead (Ex. Ch.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 271; 2 Hurls. & C. 193.

(B) Relief against, in Equity.

(a) When granted.

(1) In general.

In a bill seeking to set aside securities as obtained by misrepresentation, quære, whether it is sufficient to allege, that "the plaintiff was led by the defendant to believe that he had become possessed of the bills, for the amount of which the securities were given in the manner before mentioned" (which was bona fide)? But even if not sufficient on demurrer, advantage cannot be taken of the allegation not being more precise, when the case has been heard and decided on the merits. Where A obtains securities from B, by representing that he had discounted B's bills, in the hands of a third person who might have been a bona fide holder, when, in fact, he had obtained them from a person between whom and himself collusion was alleged, the misrepresentation as to the mode of obtaining the bills was held not to be immaterial. Circumstances which constitute a case of fraudulent misrepresentation. Smith v. Kay (House of Lords), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 45.

The principle by which, in the administration of justice, the limits of responsibility for the consequences of a false representation are to be ascertained, are these:—first, every man must be held responsible for the consequences of a false representation, made by him to another, upon which that other acts, and, so acting, is injured or damnified; second, every man must be held responsible for the consequences of a false representation, made by him to another, upon which a third person acts, and, so acting, is injured or damnified, provided it appear that such false representation was made with the direct intent, that it should be acted on by such third person in the manner that occasions the injury or loss; third, but to bring it within the second principle, the injury must be the immediate and not the remote consequence of the representation thus made. Barry v. Croskey, 2 Jo. & H. 1.

A bill averred, that the defendants, the directors and secretary of a projected railway company, having, partly by allotments to fictitious persons, and partly by purchase, obtained possession of all the shares of a given class in the company through their broker, induced the plaintiff, a stock-jobber, to contract to sell them certain of such shares to be delivered upon the "settling day" to be appointed by the committee of the Stock Exchange; and that they then, by false and fraudulent representations, made by them in their official character to the committee of the Stock Exchange, procured the appointment of a settling day, upon the arrival of which the plaintiff being by reason of the scheme, thus contrived by the defendants, unable to procure the shares he had contracted to deliver, except at a ruinous premium, was compelled to pay defendants a sum specified in the bill to release him from his contract, and the bill prayed for a declaration that such contract was fraudulent and void and inoperative, and for repayment to the plaintiff of the amount he had paid in respect thereof. The company having been joined as defendants to the bill upon the ground that they had adopted the fraudulent representations made by their directors and secretary to the committee of the Stock Exchange,—Held, on demurrer by the company, that although the company might have benefited by the fraudulent representations, e. g. by obtaining quotation of an increased price for their shares—and although, semble, they might be answerable for that increased price or for any other direct advantage derived from such fraudulent representations—yet, it not being shewn that the company knew such representations were made by their directors with intent to defraud the plaintiff by compelling him to perform his contract, or even that they knew of the existence of such a contract, the company were not responsible for the loss the plaintiff had thus incidentally sustained, and the company's demurrer was allowed. Ibid.

But held, that the bill was not open to demurrer on the part of the other defendant as being a mere bill for the recovery of money. Ibid.

A wife having been guilty of adultery, but unknown to her husband, in order the more easily to carry on the illicit intercourse, induced him to execute a deed of separation, whereby he covenanted to pay her an annuity, and to allow her to live separate; the adulterous intercourse was continued, and a divorce was subsequently obtained. The husband filed a bill to set aside the deed of separation, and it was held by the Lord Chancellor (reversing the decision of one of the Vice Chancellors), that the deed must be set aside, on the principle that none shall be permitted to take advantage of a deed which they have fraudulently induced another to execute, that they may commit an offence against morality, to the injury and loss of the party by whom the deed is executed. Evans v. Carrington, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 364; 2 De Gex, F. & J. 489; 1 Jo. & H. 598.

According to the terms of proposal by a tax collector (A) for a guarantee policy, answers were required by the guarantee society not only from the applicant, but also from his intended employers. Those employers were the Commissioners of Taxes, and instead of resorting to them, the society accepted the answer of the overseer of taxes, who, in reply to inquiries from the society, stated that the collector's accounts would be checked weekly, and that he would not be allowed at any time to hold in his hands more than from 100*l.* to 200*l.* A absconded in default to the amount of 654*l.*, and it appeared in evidence that although it had been the practice prior to A's appointment to check weekly the accounts of the collector who had preceded him, such practice was not continued after his appointment. Upon a bill, by A's sureties, for the purpose of obtaining payment of the money assured by the policy,—Held, by one of the Vice Chancellors, first, that the statement of the surveyor of taxes did not amount to a warranty, inasmuch as it was a representation by a third person, who was not a party to the contract, as to the course intended to be pursued by another person; secondly, that the representation in question being not to a past or existing state of things, but to the future acts of other persons, had no application to the case of a guarantee policy, and as the representation was made fairly and honestly, and was substantially correct, it did not vitiate the policy. Towle v. the National Guardian Assur. Soc., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 900; 2 Giff. 42.

The terms on which the guarantee policy was effected made it compulsory on A to effect a life policy with the above society, and he accordingly did so. On the life policy a memorandum was indorsed, stating its connexion with the guarantee policy. The society transferred their life business to a life assurance company, which received the premiums on the life policy, and A also paid the premiums on the guarantee policy to an agent of the latter company. It was decided by one of the Vice Chancellors, that the latter company was liable, with the society which issued the guarantee policy, for the amount thereby assured; but upon appeal, the Lords Justices (reversing that decision) held, that the policy was void from the beginning, as founded on misrepresentation; and on this and other grounds the bill was dismissed, but without costs. Ibid.

A purchase from a poor, sick and illiterate man, shortly before his death, at an undervalue, under circumstances of haste and without proper protection, was set aside at the instance of the heir-at-law. Clark v. Malpas, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 696; 31 Beav. 80.

The proper decree in such a case, is to direct the purchaser to execute a reconveyance, and not simply to declare the deed void. Ibid.

Where a niece had been induced to render valuable services to her uncle on the faith of his representation that by so doing she would become entitled to the benefit of the trusts created in her favour by a codicil to his will, and the testator afterwards revoked such trusts, it was held, that he had no right to make such revocation, and a decree was made that the trusts in favour of the niece declared by such codicil should be performed. Loffus v. Maw, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 49; 3 Giff. 592.

If a person make a representation calculated to induce another to assume a particular liability, and the circumstances are afterwards, before liability assumed, so altered to the knowledge of the person making the representation that the alteration might affect the course of conduct of the person to whom the representation was made, it is the imperative duty of the person who made the representation to communicate to the person to whom he made it the alteration of those circumstances; and a Court of equity will not hold the person to whom the representation has been made to be bound by any contract entered into on the faith thereof unless such a communication has been made. Traill v. Baring, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 521; 4 Giff. 485.

Assurance society A having on the 4th of May 1861 accepted, by way of re-assurance, a proposal for an assurance for 3,000*l.* on the life of L T, proposed on the 10th of the same month, through its secretary, to assurance society C, that the latter should take the risk of 1,000*l.*, part of the above 3,000*l.*, representing at the same time that assurance society B would take 1,000*l.* of the risk, while it would itself retain 1,000*l.*, and representing also that L T's life was a good one. The proposal of society A was accepted by society C. On the 15th of May 1861, and before the contract between society A and society C was completed, society A, without informing society C, assured 2,000*l.* with society B instead of 1,000*l.*, and did not itself retain any portion of the risk of the 3,000*l.* On the 18th of May 1861 the policy with society C for 1,000*l.* was executed. In January 1862 L T died, and society C subsequently learned that society A, instead of retaining a risk of 1,000*l.* on her life, as they had represented they would do, had got rid of the whole of their risk on L T's life, and upon society C refusing to pay the amount assured, an action was brought against it by society A. Upon a bill by society C against society A, in order to obtain a declaration that the policy of the 18th of May 1861 was fraudulently obtained, and that it ought to be delivered up to be cancelled, a decree to that effect, with costs, was made by one of the Vice Chancellors. On appeal to the Lords Justices, the decision was affirmed. Ibid.

The jurisdiction to relieve the plaintiff in such a case is at least as properly in this Court of equity as in a Court of law. Ibid.

A surety who executes a bond on a misrepresentation by the obligee of a material fact, is entitled to relief in this court; therefore, where the plaintiff was induced to execute a bond on a representation by the obligee that the principal was not indebted to him, which statement was untrue, the Court directed the bond to be cancelled. Blest v. Brown, 3 Giff. 450.

When the bond by a surety purported to guarantee the payment of flour to be supplied by the obligee (of a specific quality), in order to enable the principal debtor to execute a contract, and the obligee designedly supplied inferior flour so that the contract was annulled, the obligor is entitled to have the bond cancelled. Ibid.

On a bill by the plaintiff who, while lodging at an hotel and seriously ill, executed a bond to the landlord for 1,000*l.*, payable at six months' date, to secure moneys paid and advanced for the plaintiff for hotel charges, the landlord undertaking to rectify all errors in the accounts, the Court restrained an action at law on the bond, the plaintiff giving judgment for the amount of the claim. Edwards-Wood v. Baldwin, 4 Giff. 613.

The plaintiff agreed to purchase a share in a partnership business, on the footing of a balance-sheet prepared by an accountant employed by the vendor, which all parties believed (with the exception of slight errors) to be, and was treated as, generally correct. It turned out to be grossly inaccurate in regard to the existing liability. The Court set aside the contract. Charlesworth v. Jennings, 34 Beav. 96.

The circumstance that a person is affected with notice of certain documents does not debar him from claiming relief in respect of false and deceptive representations respecting their contents—per Turner, L.J. Kisch v. the Central Rail. Co. of Venezuela (Lim.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 545.

(2) Confidential Relationship and Undue Influence.

A being under the impression that he was the absolute owner of an estate which he had not seen for twenty years, sold it to his agent for an annuity of 40*l.* for the joint lives of himself and his wife and the life of the survivor of them. The estate was at the time settled on his wife for her separate use for life, A being entitled only to the reversion in fee expectant on his wife's decease. The interest of the wife was wholly overlooked, both by herself and her husband. The husband pressed the sale forward, and being a solicitor himself prepared the deeds, and was most anxious for the completion of the purchase. He died within a year after it was completed, having devised all his property to his wife. The consideration was grossly inadequate, the net yearly rental of the property being nearly 40*l.* Upon a bill by the wife to obtain a re-conveyance of the estate,—Held, that the sale could not be supported; the agent residing on the spot and knowing the value of the estate, which the vendor did not; and that although (assuming the annuity to be an adequate consideration for the reversion) the purchaser might keep the reversion on paying the consideration stipulated to be paid for the estate in possession, he was not entitled to retain his purchase either with an abatement from the consideration or at a value to be fixed by the Court; and that the plaintiff was entitled to a re-conveyance of the estate and also to the costs of the suit. Dally v. Wonham, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 790; 33 Beav. 154.

Where a person standing in the relation of confidential agent to another, has, by his participation in a fraud, induced the latter to part with his property at an undervalue, his representatives may be proceeded against in equity to make good the loss occasioned by fraud, even though the agent himself derived no pecuniary benefit. Walsham v. Stainton, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 68; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 678.

K, a barrister, acted professionally on behalf of Mrs. S, then a widow, and by his services gained for her very large estates. Soon after the litigation was finally determined in her favour, and while the parties continued still on the most friendly terms, Mrs. S executed a deed whereby, in consideration of K's services, she conveyed to him all the estates to which her title had been thus established, to hold the same to him and his heirs to the use of her, the grantor, for her life, and after her death, to the use of him, his heirs and assigns, subject to a charge of such debts as she might owe at her decease not exceeding 10,000*l.*, and of 10,000*l.*, which was to be subject to her appointment. The lady married again, and differences having arisen between herself and K she filed her bill to have the deed set aside and the reversion reconveyed; and the Master of the Rolls having made a decree according to the prayer, with costs, upon the plaintiff's appeal from that decree, their Lordships dismissed the appeal with costs. Broun v. Kennedy, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 342; 33 Beav. 133.

A testatrix gave a share in her residuary estate in trust for her daughter for life, with remainder to the daughter's children, and if none attained twenty-one (which happened) as she should appoint generally. In 1821 the daughter without any legal advice except that of the acting trustee, who was a solicitor and was, under the will, interested in the residuary estate, appointed that certain debts due from her husband to the testatrix should be accepted as part of the daughter's share. Her husband became soon afterwards a bankrupt, and died in 1853, and she died in 1858, having in settlements of accounts with the trustees from time to time proceeded on the footing of the deed:—Held, that a bill filed by her representatives in 1859 to set aside the deed on the ground of the appointment being a dealing between trustee and cestui que trust to the advantage of the former, and prejudice of the latter, under undue influence and without independent advice, was too late. Skottowe v. Williams, Williams v. Skottowe, 3 De Gex, F. & J. 535.

Securities given by plaintiff six months after he attained twenty-one, to the defendants for a debt due to them from his elder brothers, set aside with costs. Sercombe v. Sanders, 34 Beav. 382.

Voluntary conveyance to a mother by a daughter six months after she had attained twenty-one, and seven days before the daughter's marriage, but unknown to her husband, set aside both on the ground of the maternal influence and of the fraud on the husband's marital rights. Chambers v. Crabbe, 34 Beav. 457.

A son attained twenty-one in 1855, and in 1857 he conveyed to his father his reversionary estate and interest, in consideration of moneys advanced for his commission, outfit, and debts during his minority, and a further sum of 500*l.* then advanced:—Held, that the deed could not stand except as a security for the 500*l.* Potts v. Surr, 34 Beav. 543.

The doctrine laid down in Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278, adhered to. Ibid.

Transaction between father and son seven years after the latter came of age, by which the father obtained a benefit of 5,790*l.* in the event of the son dying without children, supported, there being a valuable consideration on the part of the father, the settlement being a fit and proper family arrangement, and the transaction not having been impeached until after the death of the father. Ibid.

Securities obtained from sons for their father's debts set aside, the creditors failing to prove (as they were bound to do) that the sons knew the true nature of the transaction, and that no undue influence had been exercised by the father. Berdoe v. Dawson, 34 Beav. 603.

(3) Dealings with Reversioners and Expectant Heirs.

C F was entitled to 1,203*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* consols, expectant on the decease of his father. Being in want of money, an assurance society lent him 150*l.* on his assuring his life, and mortgaging the policy and his interest in the consols. They also lent him a second 150*l.* on the same terms, but they refused to make further advances. He afterwards in 1856 sold his interest in the consols and the policies, subject to the mortgages, for 70*l.* His father was then aged fifty-six. C F died in 1858, and the mortgages were paid off out of the proceeds of the policies. His father died in 1860. Upon a bill by the administratrix of C F, the Court, considering that the full value of the reversion was 400*l.*,—Held, that the difference between 370*l.* and 400*l.* was ground sufficient to set aside the purchase upon repayment of the 370*l.* and interest. Foster v. Roberts, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 666; 29 Beav. 467.

Held, also, that the purchaser kept the policies on foot for his own benefit, and that he was entitled to the money which had been paid in respect of them. Ibid.

The burthen of shewing that a fair price has been given for the interest of an expectant heir lies upon the purchaser, and that burthen is not displaced by shewing that substantial value has been given. Talbot v. Staniforth, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 197; 1 Jo. & H. 484.

A bachelor, aged fifty-nine, tenant for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, purchased from his nephew, who was first presumptive tenant in tail, and under considerable pressure from his creditors, his expectant interest in the estate at an under-value; and the two then cut off the entail, and conveyed the estate to the use of the purchaser in fee:—Held, that this could not be looked upon as a family arrangement, and the purchase was set aside. Ibid.

The fact that a reversion is dependent upon contingencies which do not admit of estimation by actuaries, does not relieve the purchaser from the onus of shewing that fair value was given. Ibid.

Where unfair advantage was taken of the necessities of one who wished only to raise money upon mortgage, but was induced by his solicitor, who betrayed his interests to serve the purposes of the purchaser, to execute an absolute conveyance at a considerable undervalue, one of the Vice Chancellors set aside the transaction as an absolute sale; and, on appeal, the Lords Justices affirmed the decision, and directed that the transaction should stand as a mortgage; that an account should be taken of the rents and profits received by the purchaser, who was defendant, and the amount be set against the principal money advanced by him, on which interest at 5*l.* per cent. must be allowed, and that a re-conveyance must be executed to the plaintiff, the vendor, on his paying the amount found to be due. Douglas

v. Culverwell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 543; 3 Giff. 251.

Where the consideration paid for the purchase of a reversionary interest was proved to be 38*l.* less than its value, the purchase was set aside. Jones v. Ricketts, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 753; 31 Beav. 130.

A purchase of a reversionary interest by a brother from a sister at an undervalue, set aside twenty years after the purchase, and ten years and a half after the reversionary interest fell into possession, the influence of the brother continuing until a year before bill filed. Sharp v. Leach, 31 Beav. 491.

A B sold to C D a life interest in possession (subject to a mortgage for 800*l.*) and a reversionary interest in two sums of money. The price paid for the whole was 75*l.* and within a month C D sold it for 125*l.* to E F, who within three months afterwards sold it to G H for 550*l.* The value of the property in possession (free from the mortgage) was 1,231*l.*, and of the property in reversion, 312*l.* The purchase was set aside as against G H (who was held to have notice) on the ground of its being a purchase of a reversion at an undervalue. Nesbitt v. Berridge, Butler v. Berridge, 32 Beav. 282.

An account settled and signed by an expectant heir for the purpose of a post-obit security is not conclusive as between him and the person dealing with him; but the right of such heir to re-open the accounts does not extend to transactions not of a post-obit character forming items in the account. Tottenham v. Green, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 201.

The assignee of a post-obit security takes it with notice of all its legal incidents, including the right of the reversioner to open settled accounts between himself and the original mortgagor. Recitals in the mortgage deed of an account settled are not binding on the reversioner even as against sub-mortgagees. Ibid.

The repeal of the usury laws has not altered the rules of the Court of Chancery as to the dealings with expectant heirs, and accordingly, where an extravagant young man entitled in reversion to an estate, and very much pressed for money, had shortly after attaining twenty-one given to a money-lender securities bearing an exorbitant rate of interest, they were ordered to stand as a security only for the sums actually advanced, and interest thereon at 5*l.* per cent. per annum. Croft v. Graham, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 155.

A B, through a solicitor, borrowed money from C D upon a deposit of title deeds. The solicitor obtained the deeds back, for the purpose, as he stated, of preparing a legal mortgage. Instead of this, he got A B to execute a legal mortgage to himself instead of to C D, and he afterwards raised money on a transfer of this mortgage and, on the delivery of the title-deeds, from a creditor without notice:—Held, that the loss must fall on A B, and that he was liable to pay both mortgages. Adsetts v. Hives, 33 Beav. 52.

Held, that a purchaser from an old, infirm, and ignorant woman, having no professional advice, was bound to prove that he gave the full value for the property, and failing in such proof, the transaction was set aside with costs. Baker v. Monk, 33 Beav. 419.

A sum of 15,000*l.* was paid to the solicitors of the defendants, who desired to invest it. The solicitors did invest 10,000*l.* on a valid security, and they appropriated the remaining 5,000*l.* to their own use. They afterwards obtained from the plaintiff, another client, upon a representation that they were for the purpose of a suit to which he was a party, the execution of two deeds mortgaging his estate to secure to the defendants the sum of 5,000*l.* These deeds the solicitors handed to the defendants; and they became bankrupt in June 1865. On the 11th of October 1855, however, the plaintiff was served with notice of the defendants' intention to sell the plaintiff's interest under the mortgage deed, and an action was afterwards commenced against the plaintiff upon his covenant in the deed. The plaintiff, in April 1859, first discovered from the assignees of the solicitors all the particulars of the case, and then filed a bill to set aside the deeds, and the Master of the Rolls made a decree in his favour; but, upon appeal, the bill was dismissed, with costs, the Lord Chancellor considering that the plaintiff had, by his conduct, deprived himself of any claim to relief. Wall v. Cockerell, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 417.

A purchaser of real estate upon signing the contract assigned and delivered a negotiable bond, as a deposit, to G T, who (though never admitted) alleged himself to be a solicitor and the solicitor for the vendor. G T transferred the bond to the defendant, as a security for his own debt. The vendor of the real estate was a fictitious person, and the contract a fraud. The purchaser filed his bill to get back the bond from the defendant; and upon an application for an injunction to restrain him from disposing of it,—Held, that the deposit did not make G T a trustee for the plaintiff; and that the defendant, being a purchaser for value, without notice, could not be restrained from dealing with the bond. Ashwin v. Burton, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 196.

The plaintiff sold some coals to the defendant, and shipped them for exportation, and the bill of lading was made out and delivered to the vendee's agent. The plaintiff, not having received payment, instituted a suit for an injunction, and to obtain possession of the bill of lading, and they supported their equity by allegations of gross fraud which were disproved. The bill was dismissed with costs, the plaintiff's remedy being by action against the purchaser for the price. Straker v. Ewing, 34 Beav. 147.

This Court visits very severely a plaintiff who makes a charge of fraud against a defendant which he is unable to sustain by evidence. The rule is more stringent where the introduction of the charge is made for the purpose of giving the Court jurisdiction. Ibid.

A husband, by his bill, alleged that his wife, under the advice and assistance of the two trustees of the settlement, secreted and withheld moneys of the wife which ought to be paid over to him, the husband. The bill sought to recover those moneys. The trustees, who were made defendants, demurred, and their demurrer was allowed. Eaton v. Bennett, 34 Beav. 196.

Sales of annuities charged on a reversion and other property, were supported on evidence of auctioneers and others, in opposition to calculations of certain actuaries. A clause giving interest on arrears of the annuity held not objectionable. Tynte v. Hodge; Tynte v. Beavan, 2 Hem. & M. 287.

Where plaintiffs in an action against a railway company for compensation for injuries, filed a bill against the company for a declaration that a release given by them to the company for such injuries was a receipt only for 15*l.*, and that the defendants, who had pleaded such release in the action, might be restrained from relying on it as a release of the causes of action, on the ground that the release was obtained by fraud on the part of the company's agents, upon demurrer,—Held, that the fraud alleged was not such as a Court of law could necessarily deal with, and that the plaintiffs were not precluded from coming to this Court by reason of their having commenced the action, they not having attempted an equitable replication, and the Court overruled the demurrer. Stewart v. the Great Western Rail. Co., 2 Dr. & S. 438.

Where the vendors of a brewery make various and inconsistent representations as to the profits of the concern, which demanded investigation, for which the vendor afforded every facility, and which the purchaser in fact partially made, the Court decreed specific performance. Clarke v. Mackintosh; Mackintosh v. Clarke, 4 Giff. 134.

W, a solicitor, being indebted to E, and being pressed for payment or fair security, proposed to give him a second mortgage on the G estate. This estate had been bought in the name of the plaintiff, who was, however, only a trustee for W, a fact which did not appear on the deeds. The propusal being acceded to, W sent to E's solicitors a draft of the mortgage deed, which was in the common form, containing a covenant to pay. It was afterwards engrossed and executed by the plaintiff, without any communication between E and the plaintiff. The security of the estate proving insufficient, E sued the plaintiff on the covenant in the deed, and the plaintiff thereupon filed a bill to be relieved, on the ground that he had been defrauded by W into executing a deed containing a covenant to pay:—Held, that E was not bound to inquire whether the plaintiff had agreed to enter into the covenant, and that the frame of the deed did not affect E with notice of any fraud, and the bill was dismissed. Greenfield v. Edwards, 2 De Gex, J. & S. 582.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

  (b) To answer for the Debt of another.

  (d) Performance within a Year.
(B) Note or Memorandum in Writing.
(C) Acceptance and Receipt.
(D) How excluded.

(A) Contracts required to be in Writing.

(a) Interest in Land.

To an action for goods sold the defendant pleaded that it was agreed that in consideration of the defendant giving up possession of a public-house and stock in trade the plaintiff should pay the defendant 100*l.*, and give up and discharge the defendant from all debts and the causes of action in the declaration, and averred payment of the 100*l.* and delivering up of possession of the premises:—Held, that evidence of a parol agreement, by way of accord and satisfaction, was admissible in support of the plea, although to enforce the delivery of possession it might be necessary to shew a contract in writing to satisfy the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Lavery v. Turley, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 49; 6 Hurls. & N. 239.

(b) To answer for the Debt of another.

The plaintiff having entered into a contract to supply C & Co. with iron plates, delivered a part of them, but threatened to keep back the remainder, unless he received payment for them in cash. The defendant, who had an interest in the performance of the contract, thereupon agreed, that if the plaintiff would deliver the remainder of the goods he would cash for him the acceptances of C & Co. for the price of the goods already delivered and thereafter to be delivered, and protect him from the bills when they became due. The defendant by the agreement was to receive 3*l.* per cent. discount on the amount of the bills:—Held, that the agreement was in substance not a purchase of bills, but an engagement on the part of the defendant to answer for the debt and default of C & Co., and must therefore be in writing according to the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Mallett v. Bateman, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 243; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 530.

(c) Declaration of Trust.

When the Court of Chancery is called upon to establish or act upon a trust of lands by declaration or creation, the trust must not only be manifested and proved by writing, signed by the party by law enabled to declare the trust, but it must also be manifested and proved by writing, signed as required, what that trust is. Smith v. Matthews, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 445; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 139.

The Statute of Frauds does not by any means require that all trusts should be created only by writing, but that they shall be manifested and proved by writing so that there may be evidence in writing proving what the trust is. Ibid.

(d) Performance within a Year.

A transaction not in writing, which the Court considered to be a new agreement based upon a former written agreement, was entered into with a joint-stock company, and was not actually performed at the time when the company was ordered to be wound up in bankruptcy. One of the Commissioners allowed a proof for the amount for which the contract had been performed; but, on appeal,—Held, that the transaction was one which, under the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, ought to have been in writing, being one which could not be performed within a year; and as there was nothing which in the opinion of the Court amounted to a written contract, the proof must be expunged. Ex parte Acraman, in re the Pentreguinea Patent Fuel Co. (Lim.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 741.

The plaintiff agreed on a Sunday to serve the defendant for a year, the service to commence on the Monday. On the Monday the plaintiff, with the knowledge and consent of the defendant, commenced the service, and received 20*l.* on account:—Held, in an action for a wrongful dismissal within the year, in which an objection was taken that this was a contract for a year's service to commence on a future day, that the jury might infer a new implied contract on the Monday for a year's service from that day. —Semble, also, per Willes, J., that a contract made on one day to serve for a year from the following day is not within section 4. of the Statute of Frauds. Cawthorn v. Cordrey, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 152; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 406.

(B) NOTE OR MEMORANDUM IN WRITING.

One paper referring to another, in which the terms of an agreement are stated, will constitute a contract sufficiently executed according to the provisions of the Statute of Frauds; but where the first paper was in these words,—"I agree to let the premises in G L, containing three stables, &c., for the same rent and subject to the same conditions that I hold them myself," it was held (Campbell, L.C., dissentiente), that this paper, even though ratified by the proposed lessee, as it did not state the duration of the term, did not contain enough to constitute a memorandum of an agreement sufficient to satisfy the statute. Fitzmaurice v. Bayley, 9 H.L. Cas. 78.

In the Court of Queen's Bench, in an action on an agreement, the questions discussed were, one of fact, what the parties had said and written to each other, and one of law, what was the construction to be put on two letters of the defendant, which were relied on as a ratification of what his agent had done. In the Exchequer Chamber (upon the proceeding by appeal under the Common Law Procedure Act the judgment of the Court was given on the ground that even if the defendant's letters amounted to a ratification, it was null, for that the paper ratified did not contain a memorandum of agreement sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds:—Held, that it was competent to the Court of Exchequer Chamber to adopt that ground for its judgment. Ibid.

Negotiations having commenced between the plaintiffs and the defendant respecting the lease of a house by the plaintiffs to the defendant, the plaintiffs forwarded a draft lease, which defendant sent to his solicitors, intimating that he would leave the matter in their hands. After a correspondence between the solicitors of each party with reference to the terms of the lease, defendant's solicitors wrote to plaintiff's solicitors, "We have just seen our client, and have altered this draft lease in accordance with his instructions. We trust there will be now no impediment to prevent an early completion; and we shall be glad to receive the draft as soon as you can, that we may engross the counterpart. (Signed) K & B." To this the plaintiffs' solicitors replied by letter, forwarding draft and engrossment of lease and counterpart, claiming as solicitors to lessors to be entitled to engross both, at the expense of the lessee, and requesting the defendant's solicitors, when they had compared, to return the engrossments of the lease and counterpart, when they (the plaintiff's solicitors) would be prepared to exchange. The defendant's solicitors objecting to this, the negotiation went off; and the plaintiffs having brought an action against the defendant for the breach of an agreement to accept a lease on terms previously agreed upon,—Held, that there was no evidence of an authority from the defendant to his solicitors to sign an agreement to accept a lease on terms previously agreed upon; and that, supposing there had been such authority, the letter of the defendant's solicitors was only a proposal, which was not accepted in its entirety; the claim to engross the counterpart lease being a substantial part, and not a consequence of the agreement; and that therefore there was no signed agreement or memorandum thereof to satisfy the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Forster v. Rowland, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 396; 7 Hurls. & N. 103.

The plaintiff wrote to A, offering to purchase of him a horse at a certain price, and saying that if he heard nothing further he should assume that A accepted the offer. He did hear nothing further, until after a sale by auction had taken place, when both A and the defendant, who was auctioneer at the sale, wrote to the plaintiff to say that the horse had been sold at the sale by mistake, and expressing their regret at the occurrence:—Held, in an action for the conversion of the horse, that, as there was no memorandum in writing binding on A in existence at the time of the sale, the property in the horse had not then vested in the plaintiff, and that he could not rely on the subsequent letter of A, as that would not relate back so as to complete the plaintiff's title at the time in question. Felthouse v. Bindley, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 204; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 869.

After negotiations between the defendants, Messrs. Evans, and J. Noakes, the factor of the plaintiff, T. Durrell, as to the purchase of hops, the plaintiff, one of the defendants, and Noakes met at Noakes's office, and, after discussion, the price of 16*l.* 16*s.* per cwt. was agreed upon, and Noakes drew out the following document—

"Messrs. Evans,

Bought of J. Noakes.

| Bags. | Pockets. | | £. | s. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 33 | | T. Durrell, Ryarsh and Addiogton. | 16 | 16 |

Oct. 19th, 1860."

The defendant requested that the date might be altered to the 20th, which, by the custom of the trade, would give a week's more time for payment. The plaintiff and Noakes consented, and the alteration was accordingly made in the document by Noakes, who handed it to the defendant, and he took it away with him. The document was written on a leaf torn from Noakes's book, in which was a counterfoil, and this was left in Noakes's possession, and followed the terms of the other document, except that instead of "Messrs. Evans, bought of J. Noakes," was simply "Sold to Messrs. Evans":—Held, that there was evidence from which a jury might find that Noakes was the agent of the defendants, as well as of the plaintiff, to draw up a record of the contract between them; and that if he were, the writing by him of "Messrs. Evans" was a signature binding on the defendants within the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds. Durrell v. Evans (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 337; 1 Hurls. & C. 174—reversing the decision of the Court below, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 254; 6 Hurls. & N. 600.

In an action against the purchaser of goods, the sold note, signed by the broker acting for both parties, and which had been delivered by him to the purchaser, is a sufficient memorandum to satisfy the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds in the absence of proof of a variance between it and the bought note. Parton v. Crofts, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 189; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 11.

The plaintiff, a seed-merchant in Kent, wrote to the defendants, seedsmen in London, offering to sell the seed of growing turnips; to which the defendants replied, asking the quantities and price for white globe turnip seed. The plaintiff answered that all he could offer at present was the produce of 5 acres, at 18*s.* 6*d.* a bushel, delivered at the Bricklayers' Arms Station. The defendants offered to take 2 or 3 acres at 16*s.* 6*d.* The plaintiff wrote, saying he could not accept less than 18*s.*, his contract price with London houses. The defendants then wrote the following letter: "In reply to your favour of this morning, we beg to say, as our neighbours are giving you 18*s.* per bushel for white globe turnip, we, as a beginning with you, will take the produce of 3 acres at that price, to be delivered, as soon as harvested, free of carriage to London station. Let us know what other sorts you may have to offer, as also worzel seed of sorts for 1861 harvest. Waiting your reply, we remain, &c." The plaintiff verbally told the defendants he accepted the offer. The defendants having refused to receive the seed,—Held, on action brought, that there was a binding contract in writing within the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, although the plaintiff never replied in writing to the defendants' last letter. Watts v. Ainsworth, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 448; 1 Hurls. & C. 83.

The plaintiff advertised a house to be let, referring for particulars to E, a house agent. The defendant called upon E, and proposed to take the house from the following Michaelmas-day at a certain rent, and wrote down a specification of alterations and repairs which he would require to have done; and E, with his assent, wrote to the plaintiff, communicating to him the defendant's proposal, with a copy of the specification of repairs, and telling him that he had already set about doing them. In an action brought in a county court for a year's rent, or for the breach of the contract, the above letter was tendered in evidence on the part of the plaintiff, but was rejected by the Judge; and the plaintiff was nonsuited. On appeal to this Court, pursuant to the 14th section of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61,—Held, that the letter was properly rejected; and that, assuming it was admissible as a letter written and signed by an agent duly authorized for that purpose by the defendant, it was not such a memorandum of the bargain as to satisfy the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, inasmuch as it was a mere proposal. Clarke v. Fuller, 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 24.

Although a signed document, not containing the terms of an agreement therein referred to, but referring to another written (but unsigned) document which does contain these terms, may be connected with the latter document by parol evidence so as to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, the answer of the defendant, wherein the statute is pleaded and insisted on, cannot be made use of for this purpose. And a reference to "the agreement which your client alleges he has entered into," in a signed document, is not a sufficient acknowledgment of the existence of an agreement at all to take the case out of the statute. Jackson v. Oglander, 2 Hem. & M. 465.

Semble—An answer admitting a verbal agreement alleged in the bill but insisting on the statute, must read as if it were an answer denying the agreement in toto. Ibid.

(C) ACCEPTANCE AND RECEIPT.

The defendant, an innkeeper, ordered of the traveller of the plaintiffs, who were wine and spirit merchants at Bristol, two puncheons of rum and one hogshead of brandy, at six months' credit; they were to lie in bond in the plaintiffs' warehouse till wanted. The plaintiffs thereupon sent the defendant an invoice, specifying particular casks of brandy and rum as sold to him, stating that they were free from warehouse rent for six months. The plaintiffs kept a warehouse for their own and other people's goods, and they transferred the particular casks to the defendant's name in their warehouse books, as sold to him. After that entry the plaintiffs could not get the casks out of the bonded cellar in which they were. The defendant did not pay the price when the credit had expired, but asked the plaintiffs to take the goods back or to sell them for him. This the plaintiffs refused to do. The defendant never had the casks out of the plaintiffs' cellar. In an action, by the plaintiffs, for the price,—Held, that there was some evidence of a receipt and acceptance of the casks by the defendant so as to satisfy the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, for there was ground for saying that the character in which the plaintiffs held the casks had changed from that of mere vendors to that of warehousemen and agents of the defendant. Castle v. Sworder (Ex. Ch.), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 310; 6 Hurls. & N. 828.

The "acceptance" of goods, required by the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2. c. 3), in order to make the contract of sale good, may be prior to the "actual receipt," and need not be contemporaneous with or subsequent to it. Cusack v. Robinson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 261; 1 Best & S. 299.

The defendant, on the 24th of October, having examined at Liverpool several of a lot of 156 firkins of butter, verbally agreed with the plaintiffs to purchase the whole of them, and directed that they should be sent, by carriers whom he named, to Fenning's Wharf, London. The butter was accordingly delivered by the plaintiffs to the carriers, and by them delivered at Fenning's Wharf, in two lots, on the 26th and 27th of October. Fenning was in the habit of receiving and warehousing butter for the defendant until he sold it. The plaintiffs sent an invoice to the defendant in London, on the 25th of October, with a letter apprising him that the butter had been sent as he had directed. There was no direct evidence that the defendant inspected the butter at the wharf; but on the 27th of October he telegraphed to the plaintiffs that he should send it back as not according to sample, and it was re-delivered, on the same day, by Fenning to the carriers under an order from the defendant:—Held, first, that there was ample evidence that the goods when placed in the wharf were put under the control of the defendant, so as to put an end to any right of the plaintiffs as unpaid vendors; and that, therefore, there was a sufficient "actual receipt" by the defendant, within the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds. Secondly, that, the defendant having selected at Liverpool the specific firkins as those which he agreed to take as his property as the goods sold, and having directed those specific goods to be forwarded to London, there was an "acceptance" by him within the section. Ibid.

The defendants agreed by parol to purchase of the plaintiff four specific stacks of cotton waste at 1*s.* 9*d.* per pound. They sent their own packer with their sacks and their own carts to fetch it; their packer packed the waste into eighty-one sacks, twenty-one of which were weighed and then loaded on the defendants' cart and taken to the defendants' premises; the rest of the sacks were not weighed. On arrival of the twenty-one sacks at the defendants' premises they refused to accept any portion of the waste, on the ground that it was of inferior quality:—Held, that the property in the waste passed to the defendants, and that there was sufficient evidence of an acceptance and receipt to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Kershaw v. Ogden, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 159; 3 Hurls. & C. 717.

Hops were sold by sample, and, before prompt day, the buyer's foreman attended at the warehouse of the seller's factors to see them weighed, compared each pocket with the sample, and adjusted the allowances on some which he objected to:—Held, that this was a sufficient acceptance to satisfy the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds. Simmonds v. Humble, 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 258.

(D) How excluded.

A, having been deserted by his wife, and not having heard of her for ten years, married again; afterwards, having discovered that she was alive, and believing himself liable to be convicted of bigamy, he executed a deed, purporting to convey his land to B, for valuable consideration. It was proved, by parol evidence, that the deed was executed on the understanding that B would hold the land at A's disposal. No consideration was paid by B, and A remained for four years in possession of the land, and partly paid off a mortgage upon it:—Held, that the transaction was not illegal, and that A was entitled to a decree for a re-conveyance of the land, the Statute of Frauds being excluded, both on the ground of fraud and of a resulting trust within the 8th section. Davies v. Otty, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 252; (on demurrer) 33 Beav. 540.

FREEBENCH.

[See Dower.]

A, by the settlement on his marriage with B, "in order to make some provision for B, in case she should survive him," settled a copyhold estate upon himself for life, with remainder to B for life:—Held, that B's right to freebench out of other copyholds, of which A died seised and intestate, was not barred by the settlement. Willis v. Willis, 34 Law J. Rep (N.S.) Chanc. 313; 34 Beav. 340.

Semble—An intention to bar freebench, which attaches only on copyholds of which a husband dies seised, will not be so readily inferred from an antenuptial provision as under the old law an intention to bar dower. Ibid.

FRIENDLY AND OTHER SOCIETIES.

[The laws relating to Industrial and Provident Societies consolidated and amended by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87.—An act to amend the laws relating to Loan Societies (3 & 4 Vict. c. 110.) made perpetual by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 56.]

(A) Benefit, Building and Land Societies.
(B) Rights and Liabilities of the Society.
(C) Rights and Liabilities of the Members.
(D) Jurisdiction of Justices and the County Court.
(E) Actions against.
(F) Dissolution and Winding-up.

(A) Benefit, Building and Land Societies.

The Kent Benefit Building Society, so enrolled and certified, superadded the title of "Freehold Land Society," and borrowed money upon mortgage, and purchased land therewith through the intervention of trustees. The society became embarrassed, and, failing to pay interest, the mortgagee sold the estate, which being insufficient, he brought his action, and recovered the balance against the trustees. On the winding-up of the company, the trustees claimed the money recovered from them in the action:—Held, that the alteration of title did not constitute the society a "Land Society"; that they had no power to purchase land except for building, and the claim must be disallowed. Official manager's costs out of the estate. No order as to the other costs. In re the Kent Benefit Building Society, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 785; 1 Dr. & S. 417.

In 1852 certain persons formed themselves into a society, intended to be established under 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32, and which was subsequently registered under that act. The respondent became a member, by subscribing for two shares, and made payments on account. In 1853 the society purchased a freehold estate which was divided into allotments among the members, two of which were allotted to the respondent, and, on the 26th of March, 1855, he agreed to take them. He refused to pay either subscriptions or fines subsequently to that date, and an award was duly made against him under the powers of 10 Geo. 4. c. 56. s. 27, which, by 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32. s. 4, apply to societies established under 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32:—Held, that the respondent could not set up as an answer to a complaint made against him for non-payment of the sum awarded, that the society had ceased to exist as a society under 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32, by reason of the purchase of the freehold estate, and that even supposing such purchase was in contravention of the rules and original constitution of the society, the only remedy would be, as was held in Grimes v. Harrison, by an application to a Court of equity. Hughes v. Layton, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 89; nom. R. v. D'Eyncourt, 4 Best & S. 820.

Held, also, that the respondent could not withdraw himself from the society, while, according to the rules, he still owed money, unless he paid the money so due. Ibid.

A benefit building society is bound by orders for necessary repairs given by the secretary, though not sanctioned by the number of trustees required by the rules for transacting the ordinary business of the company, or entered in the minute book. Allard v. Bourne, 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 468.

(B) Rights and Liabilities of the Society.

A society cannot repudiate a debt merely on the ground that it has not been formally secured, though the want of form may affect its priority. Pare v. Clegg, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 742; 29 Beav. 589.

If a society becomes extinct, and the trustees of its estates and property undertake to apply them for the benefit of creditors, the creditors become cestuis que trust, and the Statute of Limitations will not operate as a bar to the debts.

A society, though irrational, if duly certified under the Friendly Societies Acts, will be considered legal as regards contracts with members and third parties. Ibid.

If a society is insolvent, and has ceased to exist, it is sufficiently represented in a suit for the administration of its estate, property and effects, if a single member of each class, interested in the affairs of the society, is brought before the Court. Ibid.

A testator, under the Friendly Societies Act, 9 Geo. 4. c. 56. and the 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 40, effected a policy of assurance on his life in a sum of 499*l.* 19*s.*, payable on his decease to his widow; and if none, to his executors, administrators or assigns. All previous acts relating to friendly societies were repealed and consolidated by the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 115, and assurances in favour of relations were limited to the sum of 100*l.*, but the rights of parties under former acts were preserved. The testator paid the premiums till his decease, and died indebted, leaving his widow surviving:—Held, in a suit by creditors, that the policy was good, though it exceeded the sum of 100*l.*, and that the widow was entitled to the sum assured; but that the money must be paid into court, as the wife, as administratrix, was found indebted to the estate of the testator. In re Owen; Clayton v. Owen, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 825; 31 Beav. 285.

If the treasurer of a friendly society makes an assignment of his estate and effects to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, the circumstance that the trustees of the society have been guilty of negligence in not auditing the accounts does not deprive the society of the right conferred by the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, to recover out of the estate of the treasurer what is due from him to the society in priority to his general creditors. Absolum v. Gething, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 786; 32 Beav. 322.

The service of a bill filed in this Court to compel payment of what is due from the assignees of the treasurer of a friendly society is a demand in writing, within the meaning of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63. s. 23. Ibid.

(C) Rights and Liabilities of the Members.

By a resolution passed at a meeting of a building society established under the 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32, the plaintiff was appointed surveyor of the society. The enrolled rules of the society provided for the appointment of a surveyor to examine houses and property previous to any money being advanced thereon, and to transact all other business that might require the assistance of a surveyor, and for which he should receive out of the funds a reasonable remuneration. At a meeting of the committee of management of the society, on the proposition of the defendant, who was a shareholder and member of the committee, the plaintiff was instructed to prepare plans and specifications for six houses. The plaintiff, who informed the committee that his commission was 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent., prepared the plans and specifications, and the committee entered into a contract with a builder for the erection of the houses on a piece of land which the defendant and two other committeemen had, on behalf of the society, taken on a building lease. The plaintiff superintended the building, and performed the duties of an architect, making reports to the society and giving certificates to the builder. The society having been broken up and the houses disposed of, the plaintiff, who had repeatedly claimed through the secretary his commission from the directors of the society, sued the defendant for the amount:—Held, Bramwell, B. dissentiente, that there was no evidence to go to the jury of any contract binding the defendant personally. Alexander v. Worman, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 198; 6 Hurls. & N. 100.

By the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31. and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 25, the officers or trustees of a society registered under the first of these acts, are the persons to be sued for a debt due from the society. These acts are repealed by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87, which incorporates the society on its being registered, and makes provision for the prosecution of actions pending against the trustees or officers at the time of the society obtaining its certificate of registration, but omits to provide for pending claims:—Held, that the members of a society registered under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31. and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87, might, in an action brought after the last act, be sued individually for a debt, due from the society before such last act, and for which no action had been ever brought against the trustees or officers. Dean v. Mellard, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 282; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 19.

An advanced member of a building society was held entitled to redeem his mortgage on payment merely of his fines and the subscriptions to the end of the thirteenth year (the estimated duration of the society), though he still remained liable for the subsequent subscriptions. Handley v. Farmer, 29 Beav. 362.

The mortgage property of an advanced member of a building society became saleable in consequence of his default. The property was sold by the society to the plaintiff, who took the forfeited shares, part of the purchase-money being payable by 20*l.* instalments:—Held, that he was liable under the rules to fines for non-payment of the instalments of the purchase-moneys. Ibid.

In a suit for redemption by an advanced member of a building society, a sum was found due from him to the society beyond that secured by the mortgage. An order on the plaintiff to pay it was made in the redemption suit. Ibid.

(D) Jurisdiction of Justices and of the County Court.

On a complaint, under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110. s. 16, for not paying a promissory note given to a loan society, the Justices can only make an order for the payment of the sum found to be due, simpliciter, and have no power to postpone the time of payment.

Parker v. Boughey, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 272; 3 Best & S. 43.

Under the statute 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63. ss. 40, 41, the County Court has jurisdiction to reinstate a member of an enrolled friendly society improperly expelled, although the rules of the society prescribe a mode of determining disputes under them. Ex parte Wooldridge, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 122; 1 Best & S. 844.

The officers of a friendly society refused to continue sick-pay to a member on the ground that his daughter, who received the money for him, had on two occasions knowingly received too much, and they expelled him from the society. By the 16th of the registered rules of the society, disputes arising under the rules, of any kind whatsoever, were to be referred to a private committee; and if not settled by them to mutual satisfaction, they were then to be referred to a district committee, whose decision was to be final. On an application for a mandamus to compel his restoration,—Held, (Cockburn, C.J. doubting,) that the County Court had jurisdiction to reinstate him. Ibid.

Quære—Whether rule 16. applied to this case. But held, that if it did, the County Court would direct the society to hear the dispute, and if the rule did not apply, the County Court Judge ought to decide the matter in difference. Ibid.

(E) Actions against.

By the 10 Geo. 4. c. 56. s. 27. it is enacted that provisions shall be made by one or more of the rules of every friendly society falling within the provisions of that act, specifying whether a reference of every matter in dispute between any such society, or any person acting under them, and any individual member thereof, or person claiming on account of any member, shall be made to Justices of the Peace or to arbitrators. By section 40. of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63. every dispute between any member or members of any such society, or any person claiming through or under a member, or under the rules of such society, and the trustee, treasurer, or other officer, or the committee thereof, shall be decided in manner directed by the rules of such society. The defendant was treasurer of the H Friendly Society, and as such treasurer received in the year 1853 a sum of money. He resigned his office in April 1856 without having paid over the money, and subsequently his name was struck out of the books. By the rules of the society, which was formed under 10 Geo. 4. c. 56, provision was made for a reference to Justices if any dispute should arise as to the legality or payment of any fine or allowance, or between any officer or member, &c. The defendant was, in November 1859, reinstated as a member of the society, by order of two Justices, and an action having been brought against him by the trustees to recover the said sum of money, it was held, that the action was maintainable, for that there was nothing in either of the above sections to take away the common law remedy by action in such a case:—Held, per Hill, J., that 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63. governed the case. Sinden v. Bankes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 102; 3 E. & E. 623.

The rules of a benefit building society, formed under the 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32, provided that the directors should determine all disputes which might arise concerning the affairs of the company, or respecting the construction of the rules or any of the clauses or things contained, and also of any by-laws, additions, alterations or amendments which should or might thereafter arise between the trustees, officers or other shareholders of the company; and the decision of the board, if satisfactory, should be conclusive, but if not satisfactory, reference should be made to arbitration, pursuant to the statute 10 Geo. 4. c. 56. s. 27:—Held, that a claim by the trustees of the company for subscriptions on shares, under a covenant entered into by a shareholder with them to pay the subscriptions and interest payable on his shares, according to the rules of the society, and perform the rules thereof in respect of the said shares, was not a dispute within the meaning of the statute or rule, and therefore that the shareholder was properly sued in a court of law. Farmer v. Giles, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 65; 6 Hurls. & N. 753.

Held, also, that the covenant was absolute, and that it was no answer that the covenantor had ceased to be a shareholder of the society at the time the subscriptions became due. Ibid.

The trustees of a provident society formed under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, but not registered under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87, cannot be sued in an action commenced after the passing of the latter act, as the previous act is absolutely repealed by it without any saving clause. Toutill v. Douglas, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 66.

An industrial society, formed before the passing of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1862, (which provides for the incorporation of previously-existing societies on registration, and enacts that legal proceedings then pending against a trustee or public officer may be prosecuted against the society in its registered name, but omits to provide for pending claims), cannot, although subsequently registered under that act, be sued as a corporation in an action commenced after the passing of the act for a debt incurred previously thereto.—So held on the authority of Dean v. Mellard. Linton v. the Blakeney Joint Co-operative Industrial Society, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 211; 3 Hurls. & C. 853.

(D) Dissolution and Winding-up.

The Court of Chancery has no jurisdiction to wind up an industrial society under the Companies' Act, 1862, even though there has been an omission to register it under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1862. In re the Chatham Co-operative Industrial Society (Lim.), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 737.

An industrial society was duly registered under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1852; which act was repealed by the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 87). In November 1862, before the society had been re-registered, an order for winding up the society was made by the Court of Chancery under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89. In June 1864 the society was registered under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87. Ibid.

On motion to discharge the order for winding-up,—Held, that the Court of Chancery had no jurisdiction to make the order, and that it must be set aside accordingly. Ibid.

Societies established under the 15 Vict. c. 31. held to be within the provisions of the Winding-up Acts.

In re the National Industrial and Provident Society, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 940.

By the Friendly Societies Act disputes are to be referred to the County Courts, which are to make such orders as the Court of Chancery may make, but in Scotch Friendly Societies the jurisdiction is given to the sheriff. Some members of a Scotch society having sought relief before the sheriff, the defendants pleaded to the jurisdiction, whereupon the sheriff directed a case to the Court of Chancery, under the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63, to ascertain whether that Court had jurisdiction in such a case in England:—Held, that the case did not come within the statute, and this Court declined to express its opinion. Brodie v. Johnson, 30 Beav. 129.

A provident society registered under the act of 1852 is to be wound up in the county court. In re the Rotherhithe, &c. Industrial Society, 32 Beav. 57.

Industrial and provident societies will not be wound up in Chancery; they must be registered under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87, and then wound up in the county court. In re the Midland Counties Benefit Building Society, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 520.

The Court of Chancery has jurisdiction, under the Companies' Act, 1862, to wind up benefit building societies. In re the No. 3. Midland Counties Benefit Building Society, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 739.

By Turner, L.J.—Benefit building societies are not within the provisions of the acts regulating friendly societies and industrial and provident societies. Ibid.

F was the holder of fully paid-up shares in an industrial society formed, with unlimited liability, under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1852. After the passing of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1862, which repeals the act of 1852, the society, being in difficulties, was registered under the act of 1862 for the purpose of being wound up, it having been held that a winding-up order could not be made under the repealed act. Upon motion to settle the list of contributories, it was held that F's name must be omitted, notwithstanding there were debts contracted before the registration of the company under the later act. The Sheffield and Hallamshire Ancient Order of Foresters Co-operative and Industrial Society (Lim.); Fountain's case; Swift's case, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 593.

An industrial society, formed with unlimited liability under the act of 1852, becomes, upon registration under the act of 1862, a society with limited liability. Ibid.

GAME.

[An act for the prevention of poaching, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114.]

(A) Reservation of Right of Shooting.

A let a farm to B, reserving the exclusive right of "hunting, shooting, fishing and sporting," and afterwards let to C the exclusive right of "shooting and sporting over and taking the game, rabbits and wild fowl upon" the farm, and covenanted with C for his quiet enjoyment of such right without interruption from persons claiming through him. B shot rabbits and grubbed up a large quantity of gorse, &c., whereupon C brought an action against A:—Held, first, that B had no right to shoot rabbits, and that his act therefore was a wrongful one, for which A was not liable; secondly, that B was entitled to grub up the gorse, &c. in the reasonable use of the land as a farm, that there was no implied covenant with C that this should not be done, and that A was therefore not liable for such act of B. Jeffryes v. Evans, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 261; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 246.

(B) Property in Game Feræ Naturæ.

Game started and killed wrongfully by one person on the land of another becomes the absolute property of the owner of the land, and not of the captor, though it be killed and carried away in one continuous act. Blades v. Higgs (House of Lords), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 286—affirming the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 182; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 844; and of the Court of Common Pleas, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) 151; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 501.

Quære—Whether there would be any difference if the game were started on the land of one person and killed on that of another. Ibid.

(C) Selling Live Game out of Season.

The 4th section of the 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32,—which imposes penalties on any licensed dealer who shall buy, sell, or knowingly have in his possession or control any "bird of game," after the expiration of ten days from the day on which the killing of such bird becomes unlawful; and on any unlicensed person who shall buy or sell any "bird of game" after the expiration of the ten days, or shall knowingly have in his possession or control any "bird of game" (except "birds of game" kept in a mew or breeding-place) after the expiration of forty days from the same period,—extends throughout to live birds; and a licensed dealer is therefore liable to penalties for selling live pheasants after the 11th of February. Loome v. Baily, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 31; 3 E. & E. 444.

(D) TRESPASS IN PURSUIT OR SEARCH OF GAME, UNDER 1 & 2 WILL. 4. c. 32. s. 30.

(a) Claim of Right.

A person charged, under the statute 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32. s. 30, with trespassing in pursuit of game in the daytime on land in the occupation of a tenant to A, set up a claim of right to shoot over the land, on the ground that he and every one who chose had always shot there till some recent acts of interruption, and declared his readiness to try the right with A:—Held, that the mere assertion of such a general right in himself and every one else, though he really believed it, without shewing any such claim of right as would be a defence to an action of trespass, did not oust the jurisdiction of the magistrates to convict under the statute in question. Leatt v. Vine, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 207.

The jurisdiction of the Justices to convict summarily under 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32. s. 30. for trespass in pursuit of game is ousted when a question of right to be on the land is bona fide raised between the complainant and defendant. Legg v. Pardoe, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 108; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 289.

In a prosecution for a trespass in pursuit of game under 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32. s. 30, the defendant cannot oust the jurisdiction of the Justices by disputing the title of the person who is alleged in the information to be in occupation of the land in question. In order to do that, he must make a bona fide claim of title on behalf of himself, or of those under whom he claims. Cornwell v. Sanders, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 16; 3 Best & S. 206.

The Justices are to consider whether the occupation is proved as alleged in the information:—Held, by Cockburn, C.J., Blackburn, J. and Mellor, J., that if there was any evidence before the Justices proving the occupation as laid, they would be justified in deciding that the information was proved; and that a superior Court ought not, upon a case granted by them under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, to interfere with their decision. Held, by Wightman, J., that if the Justices set out the whole of the evidence for the purpose of its being considered by the superior Court, such Court has jurisdiction to consider the matter, and reverse the decision of the Justices, if it appears that they have come to a wrong conclusion. Ibid.

The tenant of P shot game upon land which was occupied by him as tenant. Before the commencement of the tenancy P had granted the right of shooting over the land to G by deed. The tenant having been summoned before Justices was convicted of killing game upon the evidence of G that he had the exclusive right of shooting over the land; that he preserved the game there; that he had given no permission to the tenant to shoot; and that the tenant had killed game at the time in question:—Held, that upon this evidence the Justices ought not to have convicted the tenant, inasmuch as there was not sufficient evidence that the right of shooting was in G without the production of the deed. Barker v. Davis, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 140.

(b) Search for Dead Game.

A person who, in his own land, shoots a pheasant in the land of another, and goes on the other's land to pick the bird up, commits a trespass of entering land in pursuit of game within the meaning of the 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32. s. 30, the shooting and picking up the bird being one transaction. Osbond v. Meadows, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 238; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 10.

Quære—Whether entering land for the purpose of picking up dead game is a trespass within that act. Ibid.

The 30th section of 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32, which makes it an offence to "commit a trespass by entering or being in the daytime upon any land in search of game," does not apply to a case where the game alleged to be searched for was dead at the time. Kenyon v. Hart, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 87; 6 Best & S. 249.

The respondent was shooting upon his own land, when a pheasant rose and flew across the fence which divided it from the land of T. After it had crossed the boundary, the respondent fired at and killed it. It fell upon the land of T, and the respondent went over while it lay dead upon the ground and brought it away. Upon an information laid against him for committing a trespass by being upon the land of T "in search of game," the Justices dismissed the charge, on the ground that the mere act of entering the land for the purpose of picking up the pheasant, which was then dead, was not such a trespass as was contemplated by the act:—Held, distinguishing Osbond v. Meadows, that the Justices were right in refusing to convict. Ibid.

(c) Aiding and Abetting, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 5.

In support of an information, under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 5, against A for aiding and abetting B to commit the offence of trespass in pursuit of game, there was evidence that A drove B in a conveyance along a turnpike-road for a lawful purpose; that the conveyance was afterwards stopped, when B got out and entered a field and shot a hare, which he gave to A on returning to the conveyance, and A then drove along the road:—Held, that there was evidence on which the Justices might find A guilty of the offence so charged. Stacey v. Whitehurst, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 94; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 344.

Firing at game from a highway is a trespass in pursuit of game within 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32. And where two persons are jointly engaged in the unlawful act, they may be severally convicted thereof. Mayhew v. Wardley, 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 550.

(E) POACHING.

(a) Entering by Night Land open or inclosed, under 9 Geo. 4. c. 69.

(1) Land by Side of a Road.

The appellant was found with a net, and for the purpose of taking game, upon certain land, which had a hedge on either side, and a metalled road running through it. Between the road, on both sides of it, and the hedges, the land was waste land, varying in extent:—Held, that this land was not either open or inclosed within the meaning of the 9 Geo. 4. c. 69. s. 1, which makes it an offence to enter by night any land, whether open or inclosed, with any gun, net, engine, or other instrument, for the purpose of taking or destroying game. Veysey v. Hoskins, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 97.

(2) Third Offence.

An indictment, under 9 Geo. 4. c. 69. s. 1, alleged that on the 26th of December, 1854, C was convicted before &c., for that he, within the space of six calendar months then last past, to wit, on &c., by night, after the expiration of the first hour after sunset, and before the beginning of the first hour before sunrise, that is to say, about the hour of &c., did, by night, then and there unlawfully enter a certain close &c., with a gun, for the purpose of then and there taking and destroying game, contrary &c., and that he was then sentenced to be imprisoned for the period of three calendar months; that afterwards, to wit, on the 27th of November A.D. 1858, he was duly convicted before &c., for that he, within six calendar months next before &c., to wit, on the 24th of November in the year aforesaid, in the night of the same day, at &c., by night, unlawfully did enter and be in and upon certain inclosed land, in &c., with certain instruments, for the purpose of killing, taking and destroying game thereon, this being his second offence, contrary &c., and was then adjudged to be imprisoned for six calendar months, &c. It then alleged a third offence, which, by the terms of the statute, is made a misdemeanor:—Held, that the indictment was good, as it sufficiently shewed upon the face of it, that two previous convictions of offences within the terms of the act had taken place. Cureton v. the Queen, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 149; 1 Best & S. 208.

(3) Commencement of Prosecution within Twelve Months.

On the trial of an indictment for entering upon land armed for the purpose of taking game, the magistrates' warrant, on which the prisoners were arrested, was put in proof in order to shew that the proceedings in the prosecution had been commenced within twelve calendar months after the offence committed. The warrant recited that an information had been laid on oath respecting the offence:—Held, that the information ought to have been proved, and that the warrant alone was no evidence of the commencement of the prosecution. R. v. Parker, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 135; 1 L. & C. 459.

(1) Search by Constable.

By section 2. of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, it shall be lawful for any constable, &c. in any highway, &c. "to search any person whom he may have good cause to suspect of coming from any land where he shall have been unlawfully in search or pursuit of game, or any person aiding or abetting such person, and having in his possession any game unlawfully obtained, or any gun," &c.; and should there be found any game or such article or thing as aforesaid upon such person, &c., to seize and detain such game, article or thing; and then such constable, &c. may apply for a summons, &c.:—Held, that an actual search was not necessary to lay a foundation for the right to apply for a summons, and to proceed to a conviction under the above section. Hall v. Knox, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 1; 4 Best & S. 515.

(2) Evidence.

There is no difference between the evidence necessary to support a conviction under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 112. s. 2. and that in any ordinary case. All that is necessary is that the Justices should have such evidence as, according to well-known rules, is sufficient to lead to the inference that the offence has been committed. Brown v. Turner, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 106; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 485.

Proof that defendants were found together on a highway at six o'clock A.M. with bags containing one hare and several rabbits, and with nets and stakes, is evidence upon which Justices may convict them, under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114. s. 2. of having obtained the game by having been unlawfully on land in pursuit of game, or of having used the nets for the purpose of unlawfully taking game, without direct proof that any of the defendants had been upon any land or had used any of the nets. Evans v. Botterill, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 50; 3 Best & S. 787.

GAMING.

Persons tossing up halfpence and betting money on the number of heads and tails, are not guilty of an offence under the 5 Geo. 4. c. 83. s. 4, which makes liable to be convicted of being a rogue and vagabond "every person playing or betting in any highway, at or with any table or instrument of gaming, at any game or pretended game of chance." Watson v. Martin, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 53.

The defendant was in the habit of resorting to a certain tree in Hyde Park for the purpose of making bets on horse races. He there received deposits on such bets from many persons, and from the plaintiff among others. It was held by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, reversing the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas (34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 46; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 669), that the defendant was not a person from whom the plaintiff could recover his deposit under section 5. of the statute 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, since the spot in Hyde Park which the defendant frequented was not a "place" within the meaning of the act. Doggett v. Catterms (Ex. Ch.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 159; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 765.

GAS.

[The Metropolis Gas Act, 1860, (23 & 24 Vict. c. 125.) amended by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 79.]

Liability of Gas Company for Polluting Wells or Streams.

A private act of parliament, which incorporated a gas company, and empowered them to make the necessary works, contained an enactment, (s. 160) that if the company should at any time "cause or suffer to be conveyed or to flow" into any stream, &c., or place for water, within the limits of the act, any washing produced in making gas, or do any act to the water contained in any such stream, &c. or place for water, whereby the water therein should be fouled or corrupted, then the company should forfeit for every such offence 200*l.* Sect. 161. imposed an additional penalty of 20*l.* per day for the continuance of such pollution more than twenty-four hours after notice. Sect. 165. made the company liable to a penalty if any water was polluted by the escape of gas. The site for the gas-tank was selected by an experienced engineer, and the company built it in a proper manner, and with all ordinary care and prudence. They knew that mines had been worked in the neighbourhood, but did not know that any mines had been worked under their own lands. After some years the gas-tank cracked at the bottom, the washings, produced in the process of making gas, escaped, percolated underground through the earth, and polluted the water in the plaintiff's well. The company then found on inquiry, that mines had been worked by strangers to them, under part of their land, and close up to the tank. The crack in the tank was caused by the subsidence of the soil, owing, in all probability, to the mining operations:—Held, that the company were liable under s. 160. to the penalty of 200*l.* for polluting the plaintiff's water by their gas washings. Hipkins v. the Birmingham and Staffordshire Gas Co. (Ex. Ch.), 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 60; 6 Hurls. & N. 250.

By the Croydon Improvement Act, 10 Geo. 4. c. lxxiii. s. 27, it is enacted that, if the Commissioners, or any company or other person making or supplying gas within the limits of the act, shall suffer any impure matter to flow into any stream, &c., they shall be liable to a penalty of 200*l.*, to be sued for by any common informer, and to a further penalty of 20*l.* a day for the continuance of the nuisance after notice, to be paid to the informer or the party injured, as the Justices should think fit. By the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 15), s. 21, a like penalty is imposed upon the undertakers of any gasworks for the same offence, which penalty is by s. 22. "to be recovered by the person into whose water such substance shall be conveyed, or whose water shall be fouled by any such act"; and by s. 23, a daily penalty of 20*l.* is imposed on them for the continuance of the nuisance after the notice, to be recovered in like manner:—Held, that a gas company established under an act of parliament in which the provisions of the Gasworks Clauses Act are incorporated, are liable to the penalties imposed by the 10 Vict. c. 15, but not to those imposed by the 10 Geo. 4. c. lxxiii. Parry v. the Croydon Gas and Coke Co., 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 568.

GAVELKIND.

The custom of gavelkind being that the lands of an intestate dying without issue are partible amongst his brothers equally, the Court will apply all the incidents of descent to that custom, and the descendants of a deceased brother will stand in the same position jure representationis as their respective parents would have occupied; nor does the right of representation stop at the children of a brother, by analogy to the Statute of Distributions. Therefore, where a man died intestate and without issue, seised of gavelkind lands, leaving a nephew and two sons of a deceased nephew, it was held that the latter were entitled jure representationis to the share which their father, if living, would have taken. Hook v. Hook, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 14; 1 Hem. & M. 43.

(D) DETERMINATION OF THE CONTRACT.
(E) ADVANCES BEYOND THE AMOUNT GUARANTEED.

(A) AVOIDANCE OF THE CONTRACT; FRAUD.

P was employed by the plaintiffs, who were coal-merchants, to sell their coals on commission, on the terms that he was to be answerable for the price of the coals sent out to customers on his order, and to pay for them monthly. T guaranteed the due performance by P of his engagements to the amount of 300*l.* After some years, P, not paying for the coals supplied according to his agreement, and owing the plaintiffs, on the coal account, above 1,300*l.*, they required further security. P having stated to them that the defendant would become surety for him, they prepared an agreement, which, after reciting the original agreement between P and the plaintiffs, the guarantie by T, and that P had for some time been salesman to the plaintiffs on the terms stated, and that in order to induce them to continue the arrangement with P the defendant had agreed to guarantee, went on to provide that the defendant should give a floating and continuing guarantie to the plaintiffs for three years to secure the amount of any balance that might at any time during the three years be due from P to them. This agreement, however, did not recite that any debt was then due from P to the plaintiffs, nor did they inform the defendant of the fact. The defendant executed the agreement without making any inquiry. In an action against the defendant on his guarantie, he pleaded that the guarantie was obtained from him by the fraud of the plaintiffs, and by the fraudulent concealment of material facts:—Held, by the majority of the Court of Exchequer Chamber that there was some evidence, taking the circumstances of the case and the recitals in the agreement together, from which a jury would be justified in saying that the plaintiffs had been guilty of intentional fraudulent misrepresentation to induce the defendant to sign the agreement. Lee v. Jones (Ex. Ch.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 131; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 482.

A, being about to compound with his creditors, in order to induce B (one of them) to execute the deed without the knowledge of the other creditors, gave him two promissory notes for 25*l.* each beyond the amount of the composition. Upon the first of these becoming due it was dishonoured, and an action was brought upon it, judgment obtained and execution issued. C, who was a party to the notes, in consideration of A's forbearing to enforce the judgment, gave him a guarantie for the amount of the judgment and the outstanding note; and thereupon the two notes were given up:—Held, that the guarantie was tainted with the original fraud, and therefore could not be enforced, notwithstanding part of the consideration for it was the giving up a judgment in an action in which the illegality might have been, but was not, pleaded. Clay v. Ray, 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 188.

(B) CONSIDERATION.

The defendants gave the plaintiffs the following guarantie: "In consideration of your agreeing, at our request, from time to time, to supply on credit to P such goods as he may require and you may think fit to supply, we do hereby guarantee to you the due and regular payment of such sums as he now owes, and may at any time owe to you, on any account whatsoever, so that we shall not be answerable for more than 400*l.* in respect of his dealings with you":—Held, that there being no agreement by the plaintiffs to supply any goods, and no goods having been supplied, no action lay against the defendants for 400*l.* due from P at the time of the guarantie. Westhead v. Sproson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 265; 6 Hurls. & N. 728.

A guarantie in the following form, "Gentlemen,—As Mr. D informs me you require some person as guarantie for goods supplied to him by you in his business, I have no objection to act as such for payment of your account," is not on its face a guarantie in respect of a past supply, but is to be read as for goods to be supplied. Hoad v. Grace, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 98; 7 Hurls. & N. 494.

Semble—That if it were ambiguous, or primarily imported a past consideration, parol evidence would be admissible to shew that the parties intended it to refer to a future supply. Ibid.

Therefore to a declaration that in consideration the plaintiffs would sell and deliver from time to time goods to D on credit, the defendant guaranteed and promised the plaintiffs to be responsible for the payment of the price, and averring a delivery and non-payment by D or the defendant, a plea merely setting out the guarantie in the above terms, was held bad on demurrer. Ibid.

(C) CONSTRUCTION.

(a) Condition Precedent.

By an instrument in writing, in consideration of the plaintiffs' execution on a judgment against a third person being stayed until a certain day, the defendant undertook to pay the debt and costs if not then paid by the principal debtor, and the plaintiffs, in consideration of the undertaking, agreed to stay execution until the above-named day if the defendant gave to W satisfactory references as to his ability to pay the amount, but not otherwise, and if the references were not satisfactory, then the guarantie was to be given up within a week from that date:—Held, that, even if the giving of references was a condition for the benefit of the plaintiffs, which they could renounce, it lay upon them (the references being unsatisfactory) to shew that they had renounced the condition, and had elected to treat the instrument as in force. Morten v. Marshall, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 54; 2 Hurls. & C. 305.

Therefore a plea that the references were not given and were not satisfactory, and thereupon the defendant requested the plaintiffs to give up the undertaking, which they refused, and the defendant became and was discharged from performing it, was held an answer to a declaration on the undertaking. Ibid.

(b) Advance on Banking Account.

A, wishing to be allowed from time to time to overdraw his account with his bankers, the plaintiffs, the defendant gave them the following document: "On demand I promise to pay to Messrs. G & Co. (the plaintiffs) 300*l.* with interest on same, to secure an advance now or hereafter on a banking account with A." A became insolvent, and paid by agreement with his creditors a composition of 16*s.* in the pound, and the plaintiffs, who had advanced much more than 300*l.*, received the dividend on their whole advance, leaving a balance on the whole of more than 300*l.*:—Held, that the promise by the defendant was only to repay an advance of 300*l.*, and that he was therefore only liable for the balance of 300*l.* after deducting 16*s.* in the pound from that amount. Gee v. Pack, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 49.

(c) Continuing Guarantie.

In consideration of the plaintiff supplying C with goods, the defendant agreed to be answerable up to 200*l.* for the price of goods supplied to C at any time due to the plaintiff on an account current after two months' credit. Some time after, 332*l.* being then due from C to the plaintiff for goods supplied, C executed a mortgage-deed to the plaintiff as security for the then existing debt and for any future debt for goods to be supplied. The deed contained a proviso that if C paid the plaintiff the 332*l.* in six months from its date, and all sums due for future supplies in six months from their date, without prejudice to the plaintiff's right not to give credit in respect of future supplies, the mortgaged premises were to be reconveyed to C. There was also a covenant to pay the existing debt in six months, and future debts within six months from their accruing due, without prejudice to the plaintiff's refusing to give credit for future debts. The parties in fact dealt on a two months' credit only. In the course of dealing C paid off the 332*l.* A further debt exceeding 200*l.* having subsequently accrued, which C could not pay, the plaintiff sued the defendant on the guarantie. The defendant pleaded that he was discharged by time having been given by the plaintiff to C:—Held, reversing the judgment of the Court below, that by the mortgage-deed the plaintiff did not give time to C, except in respect of the 332*l.* debt, and that, as that debt had long been discharged, the giving that time did not prejudice the surety as to other and future debts due from C to the plaintiff; and that, as in fact only a two months' credit was given by the plaintiff to C, the guarantie remained in force, and that the defendant was liable, up to 200*l.*, on C's failure to pay the sum due in respect of goods supplied by the plaintiff to C subsequent to the mortgage-deed. Bingham v. Corbitt (Ex. Ch.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 37.

The Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), s. 4,—which enacts that no promise for the debt or default of another made to a firm consisting of two or more persons, or to a single person trading under the name of a firm, or for the debt or default of such a firm, shall be binding in respect of anything done after a change in any one or more of the persons constituting the firm, or the person trading under the name of the firm, unless the intention of the parties that such promise shall continue notwithstanding such change, shall appear either by express stipulation, or by necessary implication from the nature of the firm or otherwise,—is only an affirmance of the law of England previous to the statute. Backhouse v. Hall, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 141; 6 Best & S. 507.

Three persons carried on the business of shipbuilders under the name of "G W & W J Hall." No person of that name had been in the partnership for some time, and the plaintiff and defendant being both aware of the constitution of the partnership, the defendant gave the plaintiff the following guarantie: "In consideration that you have at my instance and request consented to open an account with the firm of G W & W J Hall, ship-builders, I hereby guarantee the payment to you of the moneys that at any time may become due not exceeding 5,000*l.*":—Held, that the guarantie ceased on the death of one of the partners, as a contrary intention did not appear by express stipulation, or by necessary implication from the nature of the firm or otherwise. Ibid.

(D) Determination of the Contract.

A guarantie, for the space of twelve months, for the due payment of all such bills as the plaintiffs might discount for D & Co. to the extent of 600*l.*, may be revoked by a notice given during the twelve months; although some discount may have been made and repaid before notice. Offord v. Davies, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 319; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 748.

The death of the surety does not operate as a revocation of a continuing guarantie. Bradbury v. Morgan, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 462; 1 Hurls. & C. 249.

J L gave a guarantie in the following terms: "Messrs. B & Co.—I request you will give credit in the usual way of your business to H L; and in consideration of your doing so I do hereby engage to guarantee the regular payment of the running balance of his account with you, until I give you notice to the contrary, to the extent of 100*l.*":—Held, that the liability was not determined by the death of J L, but that his executors were liable to B & Co. for goods sold and credit given to H L subsequent to the death. Ibid.

(E) Advances beyond the Amount guaranteed.

A surety gave to a creditor a guarantie to the extent of 5,000*l.*, against losses that might arise from advances to be made to his principal. Advances were made to the principal to an amount considerably exceeding 5,000*l.*, and after his death the creditor proved in an administration suit for the whole debt, and received dividends thereon. He afterwards recovered the 5,000*l.* in an action against the surety. Upon a bill filed by the surety,—Held, that he was entitled to be paid such a proportion of the past and future dividends as was received in respect of the 5,000*l.*, and that he had not lost his equity by not pleading a set-off to the action. Thornton v. M'Kewan, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 525.

GUNPOWDER.

[The Law concerning the making, keeping, and carriage of gunpowder and compositions of an explosive nature, and concerning the manufacture, sale, and use of fireworks, amended by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 130.—The act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 139, concerning the making, keeping, and carriage of gunpowder and compositions of an explosive nature, and concerning the manufacture, sale, and use of fireworks, &c., amended by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 98.]

"Fireworks"; Fog Signals.

By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 139. s. 6. "the following regulations shall be observed with regard to the manufacture of loaded percussion-caps, and the manufacture and keeping of ammunition, fireworks, fulminating mercury, or any other preparation or composition of an explosive nature; that is to say,—No such manufacture shall be carried on without such licence for that purpose as hereinafter mentioned, or within the respective distances hereinafter mentioned, and set opposite to the descriptions of the respective articles, (that is to say)" &c. "from any dwelling-house or any building in which persons not connected with the same manufacture are employed," &c. By s. 11. power is given to Justices of the Peace to license places for the making and keeping of such things. By s. 7. every person making or causing to be made percussion-caps, or making, or keeping, or causing to be made or kept, ammunition, fireworks, fulminating mercury, or other explosive preparation or composition contrary to the act, is to forfeit for every such offence any sum not exceeding 10*l.*:—Held, (Cockburn, C.J., hæsitante,) that a person who manufactured and kept fog-signals, being tin cases filled with gunpowder and fitted with nipples and percussion-caps, upon premises within the specified distances, and for which premises he had not obtained a licence, was liable to the penalty imposed by s. 7. Held, by Wightman, J., that fog-signals came within the term "fireworks." Bliss v. Lilley, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 105; 3 Best & S. 128.

Having or Keeping.

By the 11th section of 12 Geo. 3. c. 61. it is provided, that no person shall have or keep at any one time, being a dealer in gunpowder, more than 200 lb. of gunpowder; and not being such, more than 50 lb. in any house, warehouse, &c., occupied by the same person, &c.:—Held, that the word "have" is explained by the word "keep," and that the mere having in one's possession, for a temporary purpose, more than the specified quantity of gunpowder, does not necessarily bring the case within this section. Biggs v. Mitchell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 163; 2 Best & S. 523.

A carrier and licensed carman had at one time, in a sort of warehouse upon his premises, 300 lb. of gunpowder, which had been sent there from different persons a few hours before it was found, and which was to be forwarded by carriers to different places, the warehouse being a temporary halting-place in the course of the transit:—Held, that he was not liable to be convicted, under the 11th section of 12 Geo. 3. c. 61, for "having or keeping" more than 200 lb. of powder at one time. Ibid.

HABEAS CORPUS.

[See EXTRADITION—JURISDICTION—PARENT AND CHILD—PRISON AND PRISONER.]

Jurisdiction; Foreign Dominions or Colonies.

The superior Courts of Westminster have jurisdiction at common law to issue a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum to any part of the dominions of the Crown of England; and the establishment of an independent judicature in any part of such dominions does not oust this jurisdiction, if the statute by which the judicature was established is silent on the point. A writ was accordingly granted by this Court, to certain gaolers and other public functionaries in Upper Canada, to bring up the body of a British subject, alleged to be illegally in their custody. Ex parte Anderson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 129; 3 E. & E. 487.

The Isle of Man is not a foreign dominion of the Crown within the meaning of the 25 Vict. c. 20; and the writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum may issue out of the English Courts to that island. In re Brown, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 193; 5 Best & S. 280.

Quære—Whether in order to bring a colony or foreign dominion of the Crown within that enactment, it must have a court capable of issuing the writ of habeas corpus itself, or whether any analogous process would be sufficient. Ibid.

A legislative body, such as the House of Keys in the Isle of Man, has not, merely from its being endowed with legislative functions, the power to commit for contempt. Ibid.

On whose Application granted.

The Court granted a rule nisi for a habeas corpus to bring up a prisoner (access to whom was denied by the gaoler), on the application of the prisoner's father. In re Thompson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 19; 6 Hurls. & N. 193.

HACKNEY CARRIAGE.

Licence; Commissioners of Police.

The Commissioners of Police have a discretionary power under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86. ss. 8. and 14; they may question the applicant, and may temporarily suspend the renewal of a licence to a driver or conductor of a hackney carriage or omnibus; and they are not bound to renew the licence on the bare production of a certificate of good conduct and fitness. Ex parte Mitcham, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 325; 5 Best & S. 585.

Licence; Towns Police Clauses Act.

The possession of a revenue licence to let horses and carriages for hire, under the 2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 120, does not supersede the necessity of the proprietor having a licence for his carriage to ply for hire under the Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), ss. 37. and 45. Buckle v. Wrightson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 43; 5 Best & S. 854.

Notice of Action under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86.

To entitle a defendant to notice of action under a statute, he must honestly intend to put the law in motion, and really believe in the existence of a state of facts which, if they existed, would have justified him in doing as he did. The 24th section of the Hackney Carriage Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, empowers the proprietor of a cab, if he has any complaint against his driver, to summon him before a magistrate, who may indorse on his licence the nature of the offence; and section 47. provides that a notice of action shall be given where a party is sued for anything done under the authority of the act:—Held, that a cab proprietor, who, without summoning the driver before a magistrate, defaced his licence by writing on it that he had been dismissed for damaging his cab and bringing home no money, was not entitled to a notice of action, inasmuch as he could not have honestly intended to put the law in motion, or really believe that he was acting under the authority of the statute. Heath v. Brewer, 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 803.

HARBOURS, DOCKS AND PIERS.

[The formation, management, and maintenance of piers and harbours in Great Britain and Ireland facilitated by "The General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861" (24 & 25 Vict. c. 45).—The construction and improvement of harbours by authorizing loans to harbour authorities, by abolishing passing tolls, &c., facilitated by "The Harbours and Passing Tolls, &c., Act, 1861" (24 & 25 Vict. c. 47).—"The General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861," amended by 25 Vict. c. 19.—The act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 80. (for authorizing advances of money out of the Consolidated Fund for carrying on public works and fisheries, for employment of the poor, and for facilitating the construction and improvement of harbours, and for other purposes), amended by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 30.—Certain powers and duties relative to harbours and navigation under local and other acts transferred from the Admiralty to the Board of Trade by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 69.—Harbour regulations for the protection of Her Majesty's ships, dockyards and naval stations, authorized by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 30.—An act to amend, so far as regards "The Harbours and Passing Tolls, &c. Act, 1861," certain acts authorizing the advance of money out of the Consolidated Fund for carrying on public works and fisheries and employment of the poor, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 81.]

Qualification of Commissioners.

By a local act (1 Will. 4. c. cxxxv.) "twelve inhabitant householders resident in the town or parish, rated to the relief or maintenance of the poor of the said parish by one or more rate or rates to the amount of 10*l.* per annum " were (inter alia) appointed Harbour Commissioners:—Held, that property assessed to the amount of 10*l.*, and not a payment of rates to the amount of 10*l.*, conferred a qualification. Easton v. Alce, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 115; 7 Hurls. & N. 452.

Dues and Charges.

The Commercial Dock Company having received certain timber, entered or transferred into the names of C M & Co., timber-brokers, who were merely agents, and not the true owners, refused to deliver the timber to the owners until the dock charges for wharfage, rent, &c. due on other goods entered or transferred into the name of C M & Co. had been paid:—Held, that the right of the dock company to a lien for charges did not depend on the common law, but was governed, in respect of the present question, by the statute 10 Vict. c. 27; and that the company had no right to obtain goods belonging to one person for charges due in respect of goods belonging to another owner, though all the parcels of goods were entered in the dock books in the name of the same person, such person being in reality merely an agent for the respective owners. Dresser v. Bosanquet (Ex. Ch.), 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 374; 4 Best & S. 486.

Timber was consigned by the plaintiff's ship Johan to the defendant, and landed and delivered to him in a harbour, by the statute for the regulation of which certain dues were payable thereon by him. The defendant failing to pay these dues, the Johan was detained for nine days by the harbour authorities, at the expiration of which time the master obtained her release by paying the demand himself:—Held, that, assuming that the defendant was by the statute not liable to pay the dues, and that the detention of the vessel was unjustifiable, the plaintiff was only entitled to recover the amount he had paid for the dues, but not damages for the time the vessel was detained, inasmuch as he might at once have procured her release by payment of the money. Möller v. Jecks, 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 332.

HAWKER.

Penalty; Trading Person.

A person who goes from the town in which he resides and takes a room at another town and there sells goods which are brought direct from the town of his residence, is liable to a penalty, under the 50 Geo. 3. c. 41. s. 17, as a " trading person " going from town to town trading without a hawker's licence. Manson v. Hope, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 199; 2 Best & S. 498.

HEALTH.

[See PUBLIC HEALTH.]

HEIRLOOMS.

A testator devised freehold estates to trustees upon trust during the life of his son J M to make certain payments out of the rents, and after J M's decease in trust for his first and other sons successively in tail male, then in trust for his daughter A L for life, with remainder to her first and other sons successively in tail male, with ulterior trusts. The testator gave the use and enjoyment of his plate to his daughter during her life, and after her decease he gave the same in the nature of an heirloom to the person who for the time being should be in the actual enjoyment and possession of his freehold estates under the limitations of his will. The testator died, and in 1844 (J M being then alive) A L and her eldest son H W M L executed a disentailing assurance. A L and H W M L died in 1856, and the latter left E M L his eldest son. J M died in 1861 without issue:—Held, that the words " actual enjoyment and possession " did not import as a condition that the legatee of the plate should be in the physical reception of the rents and profits of the devised estates, and therefore that notwithstanding his estate had been barred by the disentailing assurance, E M L, as being the person who under the limitations contained in the will, would have come into possession of the freehold estates in the natural order of events, was entitled to the plate. Hogg v. Jones, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 361; 31 Beav. 45.

HIGHWAY.

[The better management of highways in England provided for by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61.—The above-named act amended by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101.—Waywardens prevented from contracting for works within their own district by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 61.]

(A) REPAIR.

(a) Liability to repair.

A landowner in a district under the Public Health Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), gave notice to the Local Board of Health of his intention to dedicate a certain road as a highway; to which the Local Board of Health replied that they would not adopt the road as it had not been sewered, levelled, paved, flagged, and channelled to their satisfaction, referring to the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. ss. 69, 70. The landowner, however, obtained and enrolled the certificate of two Justices, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 23, and the public then used the road, which was kept in repair by the landowner for twelve months; after which, it being out of repair, an indictment was preferred against the inhabitants of the parish:—Held, that the inhabitants were not liable, inasmuch as the road had not become a highway; for that, assuming the 23rd section of the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50.) to apply to the case, the road had not been made to the satisfaction of the local board, who were the surveyors. R. v. the Inhabitants of Dukinfield, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 230; 4 Best & S. 158.

Where a railway is carried over a highway by means of a bridge, no liability to keep in repair the immediate approaches on each side of the bridge is cast upon the company by reason of any of the provisions in the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, even though the company have lowered the level of the old highway in making those approaches. The London and North-Western Rail. Co. v. the Surveyor of Highways of Skerton, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 158; 5 Best & S. 559.

(b) Jurisdiction of Justices to order Indictment for Non-repair.

An alleged highway being out of repair, the surveyor of the parish in which it was alleged to be situate was summoned before the Justices in petty sessions, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 94, when he denied the liability, on the ground that an indictment had been already preferred against the parish, and recently tried, and a verdict of not guilty returned; on this the Justices refused to make an order directing an indictment against the parish under section 95. On application to this Court to rule the Justices to make the order, the Court refused to interfere. Ex parte Bartlett, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 65; 3 E. & E. 253.

On the hearing of a complaint, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 73, for leaving rubbish on a highway after notice to remove it, the defendant, who was the owner of the land on both sides of the alleged highway, denied it to be a highway; and, as he claimed the soil subject to a private right of way only, he contended that the Justices ought not to adjudicate in the matter, on the ground that title to land came in question:—Held, that the objection was untenable, for that the Justices had jurisdiction under the statute to determine whether the road was a highway or not. Williams v. Adams, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 101; 2 Best & S. 312.

Where, on the hearing of a summons, under s. 40. of the South Wales Highway Act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 68), against the district surveyor of highways for the non-repair of a highway in a parish, the liability to repair is disputed on behalf of the parish, the Justices have power to direct an indictment to be preferred under s. 95. of the General Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50). R. v. James, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 211; 3 Best & S. 901.

Where, on the hearing of a summons against the surveyors of a parish for the non-repair of a highway, the surveyors deny the duty of the parish to repair, on the ground that the alleged highway is not a highway, the Justices cannot proceed to make an order under the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 95, that an indictment be preferred, without making any inquiry as to whether the road be a highway. R. v. Johnson, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 85.

(B) DEDICATION.

Occupation roads laid out through an estate for the use and convenience of the inhabitants are not thereby dedicated to the public. Selby v. the Crystal Palace District Gas Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 595; 30 Beav. 606.

An estate was purchased for the purpose of building houses; a part was laid out as private roads, and upon a partition, the owners taking the roads covenanted that the other freeholders and the occupiers of the houses should have the full use and enjoyment of the roads in as absolute a manner as if they were public roads:—Held, by Romilly, M.R., that a request to be supplied with gas by a minority of the occupiers of houses was sufficient, without the consent of the freeholders, to justify the breaking up the roads by the gas company to lay down their pipes to comply with such request. On appeal to the Lords Justices, the decision was affirmed, as every occupier had the same right, for the purpose of his use and enjoyment, to call in all such aid as he might have done if the roads had been public roads. Ibid.

(C) FORMATION OF HIGHWAY DISTRICTS.

The 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 18. enacts, that "if it shall be determined by a majority of two-thirds of the votes of the vestrymen present at the meeting," to form a highway board for the parish, it shall be lawful for the vestry to nominate and elect a certain number of persons to form the board. The majority of two-thirds of the vestrymen present at a vestry meeting of a parish having voted for the appointment of such a board, a poll was demanded by the minority, which the chairman refused, and a board were then nominated and appointed:—Held, that a poll was demandable of common right; that the right was not excluded by the words of the statute; and the board were therefore not duly elected. R. v. How, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 53.

A provisional order for forming a highway district under the Highway Act of 1862 constituted the township of E and other parishes and places named therein a highway district, and directed that one waywarden should be elected for each of the said parishes, townships and places. E was divided into three hamlets, each of which maintained its own highways. The separate hamlets were not named in the order:—Held, that the provisional order, and the final order based on it, were bad, as the provisional order did not state whether any or what waywardens were to be elected for the three hamlets. R. v. the Justices of the West Riding, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 227.

(D) DIVERTING AND STOPPING UP HIGHWAYS.

By s. 113. of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, the General Highway Act, nothing in that act shall apply to any roads or footways which are or may be paved, repaired or cleaned, broken up or diverted, under or by virtue of the provisions of any local or personal act of parliament. By s. 84. any person who is desirous to stop up or divert a highway may require the surveyor to give notice to the churchwardens to assemble the inhabitants in vestry, and to submit to them the wish of such person; and if the inhabitants shall agree to the proposal, the surveyor shall apply to two Justices to view the highway, and to proceed as empowered by s. 85. of the same act. By s. 5. the word "parish" shall be construed to include "parish, township," &c., "or any other place or district maintaining its own highways; and whereever anything is prescribed to be done by the inhabitants of any parish in vestry assembled, the same shall be construed to extend to any meeting of inhabitants contributing to the highway-rates in places where there shall be no vestry meeting," &c. Wright v. the Overseers of Frant, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 204; 4 Best & S. 118.

A certain portion of the parish of F was, by the Tunbridge Wells Improvement Act, 1846, so far as concerned the highways, &c., vested in Commissioners, with powers to maintain and repair the same. These Commissioners were to be liable to indictment in case they did not keep the highways in sufficient repair, and they had power to expend a portion of the town improvement rates in so keeping them in repair. No power was given to divert or stop up any of the highways. Proceedings were taken under the statute 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. for the purpose of diverting a highway within that portion of the parish of F which was included in the district vested in the Commissioners, and two Justices having made a certificate under s. 85. that the proposed new highway was nearer or more commodious to the public,—Held, by Cockburn, C.J. and Mellor, J., that by reason of s. 113, the provisions of the General Highway Act did not apply to the particular highway at all, and that the certificate of the Justices was bad on that ground, as also upon the ground that the assembly of inhabitants ought not to have been the vestry of F, but the persons who, under the Improvement Act, were those who had to contribute to the rates in the district. By Blackburn, J. (on the first ground hæsitante), that the certificate was made without jurisdiction upon the second ground. Ibid.

Semble—That the certificate was not bad by reason of its not stating that the proposed new highway was nearer and more commodious to the public. Ibid.

Quære — Whether The Queen v. Shiles is not wrongly decided? Ibid. (Note. See 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 217.)

Under ss. 84. and 85. of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, Justices can only certify the diversion of a highway with reference to the existing state of circumstances, and they cannot certify on the ground that the new road will be shorter than the existing road when the latter shall have been altered pursuant to the powers given by a local act. R. v. the Local Board of Midgley, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 188; 5 Best & S. 621.

On an appeal against a certificate ordering the diversion of a highway and the stopping up of several others, the Quarter Sessions may quash it as to the diversion and confirm it as to the stopping up; although the 87th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, giving this power of partial confirmation, is confined in terms to an appeal against a certificate for diverting more highways than one. Ibid.

(E) NUISANCES AND OBSTRUCTIONS.

The mere fact that a piece of ground, part of a public highway, has for twenty years been used by an innkeeper for the standing of the vehicles belonging to his guests, is no answer to a complaint for the obstruction under the 72nd section of the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. Gerring v. Barfield, 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 597.

Where an ordinary highway runs between fences, one on each side, the right of passage which the public have along it extends prima facie, and unless there be evidence to the contrary, over the whole space between the fences. The public are entitled to the use of the entire space. R. v. the United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Co. (Lim.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 166; 2 Best & S. 647, note (a).

A permanent obstruction erected upon a highway without lawful authority, and which renders the way less commodious than before to the public, is an unlawful act, and a public nuisance at common law. Ibid.

Where therefore the defendants, for the purposes of profit to themselves, placed telegraph posts upon a highway, with the object and intention of keeping them there permanently, and did permanently keep them there, such posts being of such sizes and dimensions and solidity as to obstruct and prevent the passage of carriages and horses or foot-passengers,—it was held that the defendants were liable to be found guilty upon an indictment for a nuisance; and also, that even if the posts were not placed upon the hard or metalled part of the highway, or upon a footpath artificially formed upon it, or although sufficient space was left for the public traffic, the defendants were still liable to conviction. Ibid.

Where an obstruction or erection exists upon land, and afterwards the land or that which is immediately adjoining to it is dedicated to the public as a way, the dedication is subject to the inconvenience or risk arising from the obstruction or erection. Fisher v. Prowse; Cooper v. Walker, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 212; 2 Best & S. 770.

The defendant occupied a house adjoining a public street, with a cellar belonging to the house. The mouth of the cellar opened into the footway of the street by a trap-door. During the day the trap-door was open, but at night it was closed by a flap, which slightly projected above the footway, and such had been the condition of the flap as long as living memory went back, and before the defendant had anything to do with the house. The plaintiff coming along the street fell over the flap and sustained injury, in respect of which he brought an action:—Held, that the proper conclusion to draw from this state of things was, that the street had been dedicated to the public with the cellar-flap upon it, and subject to its being continued there, and therefore that the defendant was not liable, as the maintenance of the cellar-flap in the same position was not unlawful.—Coupland v. Hardingham commented on. Ibid.

A public street was subject to the right of the occupiers of a house adjoining, to have steps standing in the street and leading up to the house, all persons passing along having the right to go over them. While the steps were so standing, the vestry of the parish lowered the level of the street, and it became necessary for the convenient occupation of the house to erect new steps. This was done by the defendant, causing no greater obstruction than before:—Held, in an action brought in respect of an injury caused by falling over these steps, that the defendant was entitled to keep them there, and therefore that the plaintiff could not recover. Ibid.

Upon the trial of an indictment for making a tramway upon and along a public highway in the parish of L, the jury found that accidents had happened in consequence of the tramway being laid down; that the tramway was a nuisance, an obstruction in a substantial degree of the ordinary use of the highway for carriages and horses, and that it rendered the highway unsafe and inconvenient in a substantial degree. The defendants proposed to offer evidence to shew that a great number of persons were carried along the tramway; that a saving of money was effected thereby; that the tramway was not a nuisance or an obstruction, and that it was a great advantage to the public in general who used the highway:—Held, that the finding of the jury amounted to a verdict of guilty, and that the evidence tendered by the defendants was inadmissible. R. v. Train, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 169; 2 Best & S. 640.

The tramway was laid down under a contract entered into by one of the defendants with the vestry of L, in pursuance of resolutions which were passed by the vestry:—Held, that the laying down the tramway could not be said to be a paving or repairing of the street within the meaning of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. s. 98. (the Metropolis Local Management Act), so as to be justifiable under the powers given to the vestry under that section. Ibid.

By 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 70. it shall not be lawful for any person to erect a steam-engine within the distance of twenty-five yards from any part of a carriage-way, unless such steam-engine be within some house or building, or behind some wall or fence sufficient to conceal or screen the same, so that the same may not be dangerous to passengers, horses, or cattle:—Held, that this provision applies to the case of a portable steam-engine upon wheels and drawn by horses, and used to drive a thrashing-machine within a barn, although such steam-engine was not in any way fixed in the soil. Smith v. Stokes, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 199; 4 Best & S. 84.

The defendant was the lessee of a building divided into two distinct dwellings, the outer door of the lower opening upon a street made on the original level of the ground, and the outer door of the upper opening upon the level of a causeway which had been raised high above the original level in order to give access to the roadway of a bridge. A space left between the building and the retaining wall of the causeway belonged to the defendant as such lessee; the bottom of it was used as an area, and that part above which was on the same level with the causeway was bridged over by a flagging, in the centre of which was a grating which let in light and air to the lower part of the building. The road on the causeway was a common highway to be repaired by the parish, and the flagging and grating had been placed where they were at the time of making the causeway and before the defendant became lessee, and they had been dedicated to and used by the public as part of the highway before the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, and they continued to be so used although there was a flagged foot-pavement between them and the carriage-way. The defendant underlet the building, and having distrained for rent on the goods of some lodgers who occupied the upper dwelling, a crowd was collected on the flagging and grating. A, who was passing at the time, having been beckoned to by one of the lodgers, endeavoured to get to the door, but in doing so he stepped on the grating, when it and a portion of the flagging gave way and he fell through into the area below, and was so killed. The giving way of the flagging and grating was caused by its insufficiency and by the extraordinary crowd pressing upon it at the time:—Held, that the defendant was not liable to an action for damages by the administratrix of A, whether the passage over the area was a private or a public way; since if it was a private way, the occupier and not the landlord of the building would be liable; and if it was a public way, the public and not the defendant were bound to maintain and repair it. Robbins v. Jones, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 1; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 221.

(F) ALLOWANCE OF SURVEYORS' ACCOUNTS.

A complaint made by an inhabitant of a parish against the accounts of the surveyor of highways at the special sessions for highways under the 44th section of the General Highway Act, is the subject of an appeal to one of the superior Courts under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, even though the Sessions make no order on such complaint, otherwise than by allowing the surveyor's accounts. Townsend v. Reed, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 223; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 308, 317.

By the General Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 111, the surveyor may charge in his account the law expenses incurred in defending any appeal which the inhabitants of any parish shall agree at a vestry to defend, after the same shall have been agreed to by such inhabitants at a vestry, "and allowed by two Justices of the Peace within the division where such highway shall be; which expenses when so agreed to or allowed shall be paid by such parish:—Held, that "and" in that section is by mistake put for "or," and that, therefore, the surveyor may charge such expenses after they have either been agreed to at a vestry, or allowed by two Justices. Townsend v. Read, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 245; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 317.

Quære—Whether an allowance of the surveyor's accounts by the Justices in special sessions, under s. 44. of that act, be a sufficient allowance by two Justices within the meaning of s. 111. Ibid.

(G) COSTS.

(a) Of Prosecution of Indictment for Non-repair.

(1) When Defendants plead Guilty.

Section 95. of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. enacts, that, where an indictment has been preferred for the non-repair of a highway by direction of Justices pursuant to that section, "the costs of such prosecution shall be directed, by the Judge before whom such indictment is tried," to be paid out of the highway rates of the parish:—Held, that when the defendants plead guilty, the presiding Judge has power to make such order as to costs. R. v. the Inhabitants of Haslemere, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 29; 3 Best & S. 313.

Where on an indictment for the non-repair of a highway the defendants have pleaded guilty, there is no power in the Court before whom it is preferred to award costs, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 98, which makes it lawful to award costs, if it shall appear to the Court that the defence was frivolous and vexatious. R. v. the Inhabitants of Denton, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 13; 5 Best & S. 821.

(2) When Road found not to be a Highway.

Where, on the trial of an indictment, ordered by Justices under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61. s. 19, for the non-repair of an alleged highway, the road is found not to be a highway, the Court has no power to order costs. R. v. Buckland, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 178; 6 Best & S. 397.

(b) Of Appeal on Abandonment of Certificate for diverting a Highway.

Notice of appeal to the Quarter Sessions against a certificate of Justices, made under the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 85, for the diversion of a highway, having been given under s. 88, the person at whose instance the certificate had been obtained gave notice of his intention to abandon all further proceedings; the appeal was entered at the sessions and was called on in its order, when no one appearing, it was struck out; the appellant afterwards, on the same day, applied for costs under s. 90, but the Sessions refused to make any order. On a motion for a mandamus to the Justices,—Held, that, as the Sessions were "required" to award costs whether the appeal was tried or not, they must enter continuances and make the order. R. v. the Justices of the West Riding, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 271; 2 Best & S. 811.

HOUSE BREAKING.

To support a conviction under the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 95. s. 58, which renders it a misdemeanor for a person to be found at night armed with intent to break or enter into any house or building, and to commit any felony therein, it is necessary that the person should be proved to have the intent of breaking into or entering some particular building, and proof of a general intent to break into houses will be insufficient. R. v. Jarrald, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 258; 1 L. & C. 301.

The indictment must, as in burglary, allege the ownership and situation of the premises intended to be broken into. Ibid.

v. Baston & Feme

INCLOSURE ACTS.

(A) Assessing Value of Interests.

Where proceedings were taken, under the General Inclosure Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, for the inclosure of certain land at the instigation of persons who claimed rights of common over the same, and the owner of such land was interested therein in respect of brick earth which he could get from it without interfering with the rights of common,—Held, that the interest of such owner in respect of the brick earth ought to be taken into consideration by the Assistant Commissioner in calculating the interests of the assenting and dissenting parties, under s. 27, notwithstanding all "mines, minerals, stone and other substrata," had been expressly reserved to such owner by the provisional order; and the Court granted a prohibition against the Commissioners proceeding with the inclosure without the consent of such owner, or taking the value of his interest in the brick earth into account in reckoning the assents and dissents. Church v. the Inclosure Commissioners, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 201; 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 664.

(B) Setting out Private Roads.

Where a provisional order has been made, under the Inclosure Acts, ordering certain land therein described to be allotted to an individual in lieu of his rights in the lands to be inclosed, and the order does not expressly exempt such allotment from having a right of way reserved over it, the Inclosure Commissioners have power in proceeding with the inclosures to order the valuer to set out a private road over such land for the use of another allottee. Grubb v. the Inclosure Commissioners (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 221—affirming the decision below, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 155; 9 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 612.

(C) Stopping up Roads; Notice of Appeal.

The General Inclosure Act, s. 63, enacts that any person within four months after the first Sunday on which a notice of an intention to stop up a way has been given on the church-door, may make his complaint by appeal to the Justices at the Quarter Sessions on giving the valuer fourteen days' notice in writing of such appeal, together with a statement in writing of the grounds thereof:—Held, that notice of intention to appeal, given to the valuer within the four months, against the stopping up of a highway under the powers of the General Inclosure Act, is good, although the sessions be not held nor the appeal heard until after the four months have expired. R. v. the Justices of Essex, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 41.

(D) Rights of Mine-Owner.

An act (13 Geo. 3. c. 67.) for inclosing the moors and commons within the manor of Lanchester, containing a saving of all the original rights of the Bishop of Durham as lord of the manor, and also provided "that the bishop, his successors, lessees and assigns, should at all times thereafter work and enjoy all mines under the said moors and commons, and full and free liberty of winning and working mines belonging to the see and bishopric of Durham wheresoever the same should be, and of leading and carrying away the coals, minerals, &c., gotten thereout, or out of any other lands or grounds whatsoever":—Held in the Exchequer Chamber (affirming the judgment of the Court of Exchequer), that the bishop had no right to carry over the inclosed lands coal gotten from mines within the manor, but not belonging to the see. Hedley v. Fenwick, 3 Hurls. & C. 349.

(E) Executors of Tenant for Life.

Trustees of settled estates with a power of sale and exchange under which the sale moneys were made applicable in satisfaction of charges on the settled estates, and as to the surplus in the purchase of other lands, sold a portion of the settled estates and paid the proceeds to a tenant for life, who expended the greater part thereof upon allotments made under the Inclosure Acts in fencing, draining, roadmaking, &c., and died without creating any charge under the acts:—Held, that the money was not expended in accordance with the provisions of the settlement either in satisfaction of an existing charge or in the purchase of lands; but that, though the forms of the Inclosure Acts had not been complied with (see Drinkwater v. Coombe, 2 Sim. & S. 340; 3 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 178), any sums properly expended for the purposes mentioned in the acts, not exceeding 5*l.* per acre, ought to be allowed to the executors of the tenant for life. Vernon v. Earl Manvers, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 244; 31 Beav. 617.

(F) General Expenses.

By an act for inclosing lands in the town of Nottingham (8 & 9 Vict. c. vii.), the Commissioners were to set out allotments for recreation of the inhabitants, for a cemetery, to the lords of the manor for right of soil, to the vicar, and Earl Manvers and certain charitable trustees, and other the persons entitled to corn-tithes, vicarial tithes, &c., and to the said vicar in respect of the glebe lands and rights of common belonging to such vicar, and to certain persons entitled to common rights; and by s. 66, after having made the before-mentioned allotments, they were to divide and allot the remainder of the lands to be inclosed unto and amongst the several owners and proprietors thereof and persons who should be entitled to any estate, right or interest therein, in proportion to the value of their respective rights and interests. S. 69. enacted that the several allotments to be made in pursuance of the act (except the allomtents to the mayor, &c., for places of recreation, &c., and the allotments to the said vicar and other persons in lieu of tithe) should be inclosed by the allottees; and by s. 70. it was provided that allotments in lieu of tithes were to be fenced at the general expense. By s. 86. the Commissioners were, before setting out any allotments to the persons entitled to rights of common, to the lord of the manor, persons entitled to tithes, and to the owners and proprietors of lands to be inclosed, to allot what they should judge sufficient to defray the expenses of and incident to the inclosure, and sell the same to defray such expenses. And by s. 89, in case the lands so set apart should be found insufficient to defray such expenses, the deficiency was to be made up and raised from time to time by a rate to be made and levied upon the several persons interested in the lands to be inclosed, except the said vicar and persons entitled to tithes, and the mayor, &c. in respect of allotments for recreation, &c.:—Held, that the vicar was not liable to be rated in respect of the lands allotted to him on account and in lieu of the lands claimed by him as glebe lands, towards the general expenses of the Inclosure Act. Eddison v. Brookes, 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 606.

(G) Costs; Opposing Drainage Works.

The security which may be taken by the Inclosure Commissioners from a landowner, under section 6. of 10 & 11 Vict. c. 38, for the costs of proceeding on an application for leave to execute drainage works under the act, is confined to the Commissioners' costs; the costs of a person opposing the application successfully cannot be recovered under it. In re the Inclosure Commissioners, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 171.

INDECENT EXPOSURE.

[See Nuisance.]

INDEMNITY.

[See Guarantie.]

[Persons in the United Kingdom having omitted to qualify themselves for offices and employments indemnified, and the time limited for those purposes respectively extended, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 77, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 60, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 107, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 49. and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 97.—Certain persons indemnified from penal consequences incurred by sitting and voting as Members of the House of Commons while holding the office of Under-Secretary of State by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 21.]

An authority by a landlord to a broker to distrain goods for rent contained the following clause: "And for your so doing this shall be your sufficient warrant and authority and indemnification against all costs and charges in respect to any law expenses, action or actions that may arise, and as well as any other and all charges or expenses which you may be at or brought against you on this account":—Held, (Bramwell, B. dubitante) that the indemnity extended to the costs of defending an action of trover, wrongfully brought against the broker and by the tenant, who admitted the tenancy and the rent being due, was nonsuited. Ibbett v. De la Salle, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 44; 6 Hurls. & N. 233.

INDIA.

[The law concerning the Indian Civil Service amended by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 54.—Provision for the constitution of the Council of the Governor General of India, and for the local government of the several Presidencies and Provinces of India, and for the temporary government of India in the event of a vacancy in the office of Governor General, made by the "Indian Councils Act, 1861" (24 & 25 Vict. c. 67).—High Courts of Judicature in India established by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 104.—Further facilities given to the holders of India Stock by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 73.—The term for granting fresh letters patent for the High Courts in India extended, and further provision made respecting the territorial jurisdiction of the said Courts, by 28 Vict. c. 15.]

INDICTMENT.

(A) Form and Requisites.

It is sufficient in an indictment for stealing the property of a joint-stock banking company to allege the stolen property to belong to one of the partners named and others, under the 7 Geo. 4. c. 64. s. 14. R. v. Pritchard, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 169; 1 L. & C. 34.

No indictment for a felony, either created by a statute or at common law is good, unless it allege that the accused did the act charged as the offence "feloniously." R. v. Gray, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 78; 1 L. & C. 365.

A defendant was tried and found guilty at Quarter Sessions on an indictment charging a conspiracy "by divers false pretences, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, R B of his moneys to defraud, against the form of the statute," &c.:—Held, that the indictment sufficiently charged a conspiracy to obtain money by false pretences, and that, after verdict, it must be taken that the jury had found the defendant guilty on facts proving that offence, which was cognizable by the Sessions. Latham v. Regina, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 197; 5 Best & S. 635.

(B) Misjoinder of Counts.

It is no objection in point of law that an indictment charges several distinct felonies in different counts; the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 5. does not alter the law in this respect. But the ordinary course of charging two or three distinct acts of stealing against the same person to have been committed within six months, ought not to be departed from. R. v. Heywood, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 133; 1 L. & C. 451.

The prisoner was tried upon an indictment which contained two counts, one for embezzlement, and the other for larceny as a bailee. At the close of the case for the prosecution, it was objected that the indictment was bad for misjoinder of counts, and the Court thereupon directed the counsel for the Crown to elect upon which count he would proceed, the counsel for the prisoner contending that such a course was inadmissible. The counsel for the Crown elected to proceed upon the second count, and on that count the prisoner was convicted:—Held, that the conviction was right. R. v. Holman, 1 L. & C. 177.

(C) Quashing.

When it is made clear, either on the face of an indictment or by affidavit, that it has been found without jurisdiction, the Court will quash it on motion by the defendant after plea pleaded; but in a doubtful case they will leave him to his writ of error. R. v. Heane, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 115; 4 Best & S. 947.

(D) Finding of the Jury.

On writ of error on a record in which there were two counts for misdemeanor, to which the defendant had pleaded not guilty, and the finding of the jury was guilty on the second count (without noticing the first), whereupon judgment of imprisonment was passed,—Held, that the judgment was not affected by reason of no finding being entered on the first count. Latham v. Regina, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 197; 5 Best & S. 635.

(E) Removal by Certiorari; Costs.

A prosecutor removing an indictment into the Court of Queen's Bench by certiorari is only liable to pay costs to the defendant if acquitted, by virtue of the recognizance to pay costs in such event as required by s. 5. of the 16 Vict. c. 30; and if the prosecutor has entered into a recognizance only to prosecute with effect, and to do and perform such order as the Court shall direct, he is not liable to costs, and the Court has no power, under s. 6, to order costs to be taxed against the prosecutor. R. v. East Stoke, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 190; 6 Best & S. 536.

(F) Judge's Consent to.

The 1st section of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17. gives power to a prosecutor, or other person, to present to a grand jury an indictment for perjury and certain other misdemeanors, if such indictment be preferred by the direction or with the consent in writing of a Judge of one of the superior Courts:—Held, that it is a matter for the discretion of the Judge to whom the application is made to decide what materials ought to be before him, and that it is not necessary to summon the party accused, or to bring him before the Judge in any way. Therefore, where some time after the trial of an action, during which perjury was alleged to have been committed, the accusing party appeared before the Judge who tried the action, and, producing a newspaper report of the trial, applied for a consent to a prosecution being commenced, and the Judge wrote upon the newspaper report, "I consent to a prosecution in this case,"—it was held that he had rightly exercised the jurisdiction given by the above section. R. v. Bray, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 70; 3 Best & S. 255.

Quære—Whether an indictment under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 115. (an Act for the government of the Navy), s. 57, for giving false evidence before a court-martial, is an indictment for perjury within the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17. (the Vexatious Indictments Act), s. 1. R. v. Heane, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 115; 4 Best & S. 947.

Quære—Whether the latter enactment applies to offences committed out of England and Ireland. Ibid.

(G) Indictable Offences.

The prisoners committed fornication in open day on a common in the sight of one witness only, but so that any one passing over the common or along a public footway adjacent could have seen them. There was no proof that any persons were passing over the common or along the footway at the time. Quære—Whether this was an indictable offence. R. v. Elliot, 1 L. & C. 103.

If upon the hearing of a case there is a difference of opinion, and the dissenting Judges desire it, a rehearing before the full Court will be directed. Ibid.

(H) NOLLE PROSEQUI BY THE CROWN.

The Attorney General has power to enter a nolle prosequi to an indictment without calling the prosecutor and the defendant before him; and where (the indictment having been removed into this court) a nolle prosequi was thus entered, the Court refused to interfere. R. v. William Allen, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 129; 1 Best & S. 850.

INDUSTRIAL SOCIETIES.

[See FRIENDLY AND OTHER SOCIETIES.]

INFANT.

[See PLEADING, Equitable Pleading.]

(A) MAINTENANCE.

The testator gave his residue, on trust to apply the income for the maintenance, education, and support of his children, until the youngest attained twenty-one. The children having been maintained, &c., the Court declined directing an account of the application of the income during the minority of the youngest child, without a special case being made out. Hora v. Hora, 33 Beav. 88.

Bequest by a man to his wife, to be applied for the maintenance, &c., of herself, and their children:—Held, that the right of an unmarried daughter to maintenance, &c., did not cease on her attaining twenty-one. Carr v. Living (No. 2), 33 Beav. 474.

Where this Court had appointed a guardian and settled a scheme for the education of an infant peer, who was entitled to large estates in England and Scotland, it restrained the tutor dative from continuing certain proceedings in the Court of Session relative to the education and residence of the infant, and as to his English estates which had been instituted in Scotland, so as to supersede the scheme approved by this Court. The Marquess of Bute v. Stuart, 2 Giff. 582.

Under a scheme settled in chambers an infant ward of Court was articled to an attorney, and a premium of 300 guineas paid with him. Afterwards the infant was desirous of having the articles cancelled, and upon a summons to vary the scheme, which was attended by the attorney, an order was made at chambers directing the articles to be delivered up to be cancelled, and 100*l.*, part of the premium, to be repaid. Upon appeal by the attorney from so much of the order as directed a return of a portion of the premium, it was held, there being no evidence of misconduct on his part, that the Court had no jurisdiction to make such an order. Craven v. Stubbins, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 126.

Gift to a widow, she maintaining and educating the testator's son and two daughters thereout, until the son attained twenty-one:—Held, that the son who had married and ceased to reside with his mother, but was still a minor, was not entitled to maintenance. Staniland v. Staniland, 34 Beav. 536.

(B) RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

Where a Roman Catholic father (who lived till his eldest child was seven years old) allowed the mother, who was a Protestant, to have the exclusive charge of the education of the children during his life, and they were with his full knowledge brought up in the Protestant faith, he was held to have abdicated his right to direct the religious education of his children; and the Court, in ordering a scheme to be settled for their education, disregarded a direction in his will that they should be brought up in the Roman Catholic faith. Hill v. Hill, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 505.

The Court will not take a child of tender years from the custody of its mother on the ground that the mother's religion differs from that of the deceased father, and that such change of custody is requisite to the training of the child in the father's religion. In re Austin; Austin v. Austin, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 499; 34 Beav. 257.

A Roman Catholic died intestate, leaving a Protestant widow and an infant daughter less than three years old, who had been baptized a Roman Catholic, but with one Protestant sponsor. A year before his death he prepared the draft of a will which he never executed, containing a direction that his children should be brought up as Roman Catholics, but he did not otherwise express any wish on the subject. His widow married a Protestant. Romilly, M.R., made an order appointing the mother and a maternal uncle-in-law, a Protestant, guardians, and declined to give any immediate directions as to the religious training of the child, but directed the guardians to inform the Court after a few years of the course of education they proposed to adopt. Lord Westbury, L.C., upon appeal, varied the order by declaring that, having regard to the circumstances, the child ought to be brought up and educated, when capable of receiving religious education, as a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and by appointing the mother, her husband and the maternal uncle to act as guardians until the child should attain the age of seven years, and directing that when she should attain that age application should be made to the Court respecting the guardianship and the religious instruction of the child, with liberty to apply in the mean time. Ibid.

(C) MANAGEMENT OF PROPERTY.

Bill to rectify a lease of an infant's property, sanctioned by the Court in pursuance of an agreement, by excluding certain trade fixtures, alleged to have been improperly comprised in the lease, and also by expunging the covenant as to delivery up of possession of growing crops and other particulars, dismissed with costs, there being no evidence that the ease was inconsistent with the agreement, one of the essees being the infant's guardian. Seaton v. Staniand, 4 Giff. 61.

(D) Dealings by.

An executor, an infant, who never proved the will, received during his infancy assets of the testator and paid them to the tenant for life, by whom they were lost:—Held, that by reason of his infancy at the time of the receipt, he was under no liability to account for them. Stott v. Meanock, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 746.

(E) Settlement of Property.

The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43. renders valid a post-nuptial settlement of an infant's estate made with the approbation of the Court. Powell v. Oakley, 34 Beav. 575.

(F) Contracts.

An infant, who has no property of her own to settle, may contract with a solicitor for the preparation of a marriage settlement by her intended husband, under which proper provision is made for her benefit, as such may be considered a necessary suitable to her estate and condition. Helps v. Clayton, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 1; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 553.

(G) Liability for Wrongs independent of Contract.

The defendant, an infant, hired a horse for a ride on the road, the owner expressly refusing to allow the horse to be used for jumping. The defendant, however, lent the horse to a friend, who rode it with the defendant's permission across the fields, and at fences, in endeavouring to jump which the horse was injured:—Held, that this was an actionable wrong independent of any contract, and that therefore the defendant, notwithstanding his infancy, was liable for the injury which had been done to the horse. Burnard v. Haggis, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 189; 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 45.

(H) Ward of Court of Chancery.

An order in Chancery, on petition, constituting a guardian of an infant, makes that infant a ward of Court. Stuart v. Bute; Stuart v. Moore, 9 H.L. Cas. 440.

In cases relating to the care of infants, the benefit of the infant is the foundation of the jurisdiction, and the test of its proper exercise. On this subject there ought to be a perfect reciprocity of action between the Courts of England and Scotland, although, as to judicial jurisdiction, the two countries are to each other independent foreign countries. Ibid.

The Lord Chancellor, though "Chancellor of Great Britain," has only certain statutory powers in Scotland, which are not of a judicial nature. Ibid.

The 48 Geo. 3. c. 151. s. 15. applies to judgments and orders in regular suits, and not to orders made with respect to the custody of infants. The latter kind of orders may be made either on a bill or petition. Ibid.

Semble—That every order respecting the custody of an infant, whether granting or refusing the petition as to its custody, is to be treated as a final judgment, and therefore subject to appeal. Ibid.

A was the son of a person who was at once a peer of the United Kingdom and a peer of Scotland. A was born in September 1847. A's father had estates in both countries, and resided at intervals in both. He died in England, in March 1848. A's mother was, in May 1848, appointed by the Court of Chancery his guardian, and A's uncle (the heir presumptive to the title) was appointed tutor-at-law in Scotland. This appointment gave him no right to the custody of the infant's person, but only conferred on him the management of the property till the infant should become fourteen years of age. A's mother died in Scotland, in December 1859. By the will of the mother S and M were appointed guardians, and that appointment was confirmed by the Vice Chancellor, by whom a scheme for the infant's education was prepared and approved of. A was then in Scotland, under the personal care of M. She proposed to bring him to England to be educated, as S proposed, in accordance with the scheme of the Court of Chancery. She brought him to London, but in consequence of disagreements between herself and S, suddenly carried him back to Scotland. Proceedings in the Court of Session were instituted, to compel her to give up the custody of the infant to S; but though the Court of Chancery had, on the application of S, directed that he should be brought back to England to be educated, the Court of Session pronounced an interlocutor, postponing the case for nearly four months, and afterwards two other interlocutors interdicting anybody whatever from taking the infant, "a domiciled Scotch subject," out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Session:—Held, that these interlocutors were erroneous; that the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over the infant had been established at a prior time; that his mother, having afterwards changed his domicil of fact, did not affect the matter; that under such circumstances no question of conflicting jurisdiction between the two Courts could arise, but that both, representing the Sovereign as the parens patriæ, were bound to assist each other in doing what was necessary to ensure the benefit of the infant, which in cases of this kind was the primary consideration dominating all others. (A) OFFICERS OF THE COUNTY COURT.

(a) Powers and Authority.

A registrar of a county court became lessee of offices for a term of years, paying rates, rent, taxes, &c. In these offices he carried on his own private practice as an attorney and solicitor as well as his business as registrar, and was allowed by the Treasury a certain sum for the accommodation provided for the purposes of the county court, and for which he gave receipts describing the sum as rent. The treasurer of the court gave notice to the registrar of his intention to audit the accounts of the court on a particular day, and he attended for that purpose after the office was duly closed under the 6th Rule of Practice of the County Courts:—Held, that the treasurer was justified in breaking open the office to get at the books kept by the registrar. Burridge v. Nicholetts, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 145; 6 Hurls. & N. 383.

The effect of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. s. 48. is to vest the books of a county court kept by the registrar in the treasurer, and his right of access to the books is not limited to the period when the office is open to the public. Ibid.

Quære—Whether the possession of the county court office was vested in the treasurer. Ibid.

To an action of trespass the defendant pleaded not guilty by statute, referring in the margin to several statutes or sections. At the trial, his counsel justified the act complained of (inter alia) under a section not referred to, but no objection was taken, and no amendment nor application to amend made; the whole question of justification being reserved for the opinion of the Court:—Held, that the plea might be treated as if the omitted section had been specified in the margin. Ibid.

The Judge at Nisi Prius reserved leave to the defendant to move the Court above to set aside the verdict found for the plaintiff and enter a nonsuit, on the understanding (as appeared by his notes) that the judgment of the Court above should be final; a rule was made absolute to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and to enter a nonsuit, no objection having been taken during the argument that the plaintiff was not bound by any agreement not to appeal; the plaintiff gave notice of appeal against the decision of the Court making the above rule absolute. The Court made absolute a rule to stay proceedings in such appeal (although the plaintiff made an affidavit that neither he nor his counsel had consented to be bound not to appeal, and that had he been asked he should not have consented), and held, that it was contrary to justice and custom that the agreement not to appeal should be unilateral, and that under the circumstances both parties were bound not to appeal. Ibid.

(b) Liability.

The high-bailiff of a county court is liable, to the same extent as the sheriff, for the wrongful act of a person employed by one of his sub-bailiffs, to whom a warrant is delivered for execution. Where, therefore, a warrant to the high-bailiff, to levy on the goods of B, was delivered for execution to one of the sub-bailiffs, and he seized goods of B on the 3rd of December, and left C in possession, and C the next day wrongfully sold the goods, contrary to the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. s. 106, the high-bailiff was held liable. Burton v. Le Gros, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 91.

(c) Mistakes by.

The defendant, having recovered judgment in the county court against the plaintiff's brother, and a fi. fa. having issued against the goods of the latter, requested a clerk in the registrar's office to write to the high-bailiff, that he (the defendant) would contest any claim that might be made by any third person claiming the goods at the address given on the back of the execution, and that he (the defendant) desired the high-bailiff should be so informed, in order that the officer who levied would not in any way be deterred from putting the warrant in force by reason of any party setting up a claim. The officer having seized some of the plaintiff's goods, besides those belonging to the plaintiff's brother, at the address given on the back of the execution, the plaintiff, without giving notice, under s. 138. of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, brought his action against the defendant for damages for trespass and conversion:—Held, that the letter written by the defendant's request to the high-bailiff of the county court was merely a direction to the officer to do his duty, and did not render the defendant liable to the plaintiff for a mistake of the officer who levied. Cronshaw v. Chapman, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 277; 7 Hurls. & N. 911.

Quære—Whether an execution creditor interfering in the execution of process of the county court is entitled to notice of action under s. 138. of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. Ibid.

(B) JURISDICTION OF THE COUNTY COURT.

(a) When concurrent with the Superior Court.

If a railway company injure a chattel of the plaintiff in county court district A, the company cannot be sued for it in county court district B, merely because they have a local station in district B, at which passengers are booked and goods received for carriage; for a railway company does not carry on its business within the meaning of the statute 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. s. 60. at every place where it has a station, but only at the principal office, where the directors meet and the general business of the company is transacted. Shiels v. the Great Northern Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 331.

In order to give jurisdiction to a county court on the ground that the cause of action arose within the district, it is a condition precedent that leave to issue the summons be granted pursuant to s. 60. of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, or s. 15. of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108; and an action having been tried and judgment given without such leave, the Court refused to rule the Judge of the county court to issue execution, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction. Brown v. the London and North-Western Rail. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 318; 4 Best & S. 326.

A railway company "carries on its business" within the meaning of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. s. 60. only at the principal station where the general superintendence of the whole concern is centred; and not at any station, however large, where the local management of any portions of the line is conducted subject to the supervision of the general manager at the principal station.—Affirming Shiels v. the Great Northern Rail. Co. Ibid.

(b) Title in question.

Where an action of replevin is commenced in a county court, and the defendant does not take steps to remove it under s. 67. of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, the Court has power to try the action notwithstanding title to an incorporeal hereditament comes in question, s. 58. of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. not applying to an action of replevin. Fordham v. Akers, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 67; 4 Best & S. 578.

(c) Whole Cause of Action within the District.

Where the question is, whether "the cause of action" has arisen within the jurisdiction of a county court, that means, in the case of a contract, the contract sued upon; and as a contract is an entire thing, the cause of action arises thereupon (so far as regards the contract itself) at the time and place when such contract is finally entered into. Aris v. Orchard, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 21; 6 Hurls. & N. 160.

Where a contract for sale of goods within the Statute of Frauds is made by parol at one place and time, and ratified at another place and time by part payment, or delivery,—semble, that "the cause of action," within the meaning of the County Courts Act, arises at the latter time and place; and it is clearly so if the terms are then finally settled. Ibid.

The defendant resided at B, and the plaintiff bargained with him there by parol for the purchase of a horse from him for a price above 10*l.*, but the bargain was not completed; and the next day the defendant, within the jurisdiction of the County Court of T, completed the bargain, and agreed to warrant the horse, and then delivered the horse to the plaintiff:—Held, that he was rightly sued in that court for a breach of the warranty, and that the "whole" cause of action arose there, within the meaning of the County Courts Act, (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95.) s. 60. Ibid.

(d) Action for Slander.

The Salford Court Act, (9 & 10 Vict. c. cxxvi.)—reciting that the Court has cognizance of all pleas or personal actions where the debt or damage is under 40s.,—enacts, that the Court "shall have authority to try all actions at present cognizable by the said Court where the debt or damage is under 40s., and all actions of assumpsit, covenant, detinue and debt, whether the debt be by specialty or on simple contract; and all actions of trespass and trover, provided the sum or damages sought to be recovered shall not exceed 50*l.*" A subsequent section enacts, that if the parties in any action arising within the jurisdiction (except actions for libel, slander, &c.), wherein the sum sought to be recovered exceeds 50*l.*, agree in writing, the Judge shall have power to hear such actions:—Held, that the Court has jurisdiction in actions of slander, where the damages claimed do not exceed 50*l.* Farrow v. Hague, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 258; 3 Hurls. & C. 101.

By the same act, where the debt or damage recovered is under 40s., the Judge has power to certify that the plaintiff is entitled to full costs as settled under the provisions of that act. A plaintiff in an action for slander for words actionable as spoken of him in the way of his business recovered 1s. damages in the Salford Court, and the Judge certified for full costs, notwithstanding the statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. s. 6:—Held, that even if the Judge had no power to certify, prohibition would not lie. Ibid.

Quære—Whether the Judge had power to certify. Ibid.

If the particulars of the plaintiff's claim, served with the county court summons, do not disclose a matter of complaint within the jurisdiction, the Judge cannot amend the particulars so as to turn the complaint into one over which he has cognizance. Hopper v. Warburton, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 104.

(f) Pendency of Action in the Superior Court.

The fact of the pendency of an action of ejectment is not a bar to the plaintiff proceeding in the county court, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, for the recovery of possession of the same tenements. Williamson v. Bissill, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 131; nom. Bissill v. Williamson, 7 Hurls. & N. 391.

(C) COSTS; REFUSAL OF JUDGE TO REVIEW TAXATION.

Upon an application for a rule to compel a county court Judge to review the taxation of costs in a plaint tried before him,—Held, that the reviewal of taxation of costs was in the discretion of the Judge, and that the refusing by him to review was not "the refusing to do an act relating to the duties of his office" within the meaning of s. 43. of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108. Clifton v. Furley, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 170; 7 Hurls. & N. 783.

(D) BOND TO STAY PROCEEDINGS.

Where in a plaint in a county court the plaintiff claims more than 5*l.* damages for a tort, and the defendant seeks to have the case tried in a superior Court, under the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108. s. 39, and tenders to the registrar, pursuant to that section and s. 70, and County Court Form, No. 31, a bond executed by himself and two sureties, the registrar's duty is only to inquire into the sufficiency of the sureties; and he cannot refuse to receive the bond, on the ground that the defendant is by law incapable of executing a valid bond. Young v. the Brompton, Chatham and Gillingham Waterworks, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 14; 1 Best & S. 675.

Semble—That where the defendants are an incorporated joint-stock company, it is within the scope of their general authority to execute such a bond. Ibid.

(E) APPEAL TO THE SUPERIOR COURT.

(a) When it lies.

No appeal lies to this Court from the county court, in respect of an order made in exercise of its powers in a winding-up proceeding under the 17th section of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87. Henderson v. Bamber, 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 540.

Quære—Whether the county court, under the authority conferred upon it by that statute, has power to make an order restraining proceedings in the Liverpool Passage Court against a member of an industrial society registered under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, which is being wound up in the county court by virtue of the jurisdiction conferred upon it by the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87. s. 17. Ibid.

(b) Time for appealing.

Upon the trial of an action in the county court, with a jury, the Judge, upon a special finding of the jury, directed the verdict to be entered for the defendant; but upon the application of the plaintiff's attorney he "reserved leave for the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict for the plaintiff or for a new trial," and notice of the application was afterwards given, pursuant to the Rules of Practice:—Held, that the plaintiff's right of appeal was to be reckoned from the day the motion was refused, and not from the day of trial. In re Foster v. Green, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 263; 6 Hurls. & N. 793.

(1) Security for.

The Court cannot entertain an appeal from a county court, where the condition of giving security for the costs of appeal (or for the amount of the judgment in the case of a defendant) imposed by the 14th section of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61. has not been strictly complied with. Norris v. Carrington, 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 10.

(2) On Appeal.

Upon an appeal from the decision of a county court Judge or the Judge of the Sheriffs' Court of the city of London on the ground of misdirection, the appellant, if successful, is entitled to costs. Schroder v. Ward, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 150; 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 410.

Where, on an appeal from a county court, the Court above orders a new trial on the ground of misdirection, the Court will not give the appellant the costs of the appeal. Gee v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 11; 6 Hurls. & N. 211.

INHERITANCE.

By a marriage settlement real estate, of which the lady was seised as heir to her maternal grandfather, was conveyed to trustees, upon trust for the lady and her heirs until the marriage, and after the marriage, upon trust for the lady for life; with remainder, in default of issue of the marriage, in trust for the lady and her heirs, if she survived her husband; but if she predeceased him, then in trust for the person or persons who would at her death have become entitled to the property if she had died intestate, and without having been married. The lady died without issue in her husband's lifetime:—Held, that the ultimate trust being for the benefit neither of the settlor nor of the heirs of the settlor, was unaffected by the 3rd section of the Inheritance Act, and that the persons intended to take thereunder were those who would have been entitled if the settlement had never been executed; and, consequently, that the heir ex parte materna took the property, by purchase, under the settlement. Heywood v. Heywood, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 317; 34 Beav. 317.

(E) Writ of Injunction.

(A) Special Injunction.

(a) When granted or decreed.

(1) In general.

Injunction to prevent the user of a volunteer rifle range for ball practice, until it had been rendered free from danger. Banister v. Bigge, 34 Beav. 287.

A tenant from year to year may file a bill to protect an ancient light, but the injunction will be limited to the period of the continuancy of the plaintiff's interest. Simper v. Foley, 2 Jo. & H. 555.

A tenant from year to year filed a bill against adjoining tenants holding under the same landlord to restrain the erection of new buildings interfering with the free access of light and air to the premises occupied by him. The landlord thereupon gave the tenant notice to quit, and, at the time of the hearing, only eight months of the tenancy were unexpired:—Held, by Romilly, M.R., that the slender extent of the plaintiff's interest constituted no sufficient reason for denying him the protection of the Court; and, it appearing that the plaintiff had remonstrated with the defendants previously to the erection of the new buildings, a mandatory injunction was awarded compelling the defendants to pull them down. Jacomb v. Knight, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 601.

Upon appeal, Knight Bruce, L.J. and Turner, L.J., held, that though the extent of the plaintiff's interest did not necessarily disentitle him to relief, yet it was a material ingredient for consideration; and as it was not clear that the plaintiff had sustained material injury, and as the inconvenience to the defendants of compelling them to pull down their buildings would be far greater than any which the plaintiff could endure if the buildings were allowed to stand and he were left to bring an action for damages, the bill ought to be dismissed without costs, without prejudice to any action the plaintiff might be advised to bring. Ibid.

The Court will deal with a reference to arbitration as with an action at law, and grant an injunction, restraining persons from proceeding with it. Maunsell v. the Midland Great Western (of Ireland) Rail. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 513; 1 Hem. & M. 130.

A Court of equity will not, in the absence of fraud, interfere to prevent the obstruction of light and air, or other easements, if the obstruction has been completed before the filing of the bill; and in such a case the Court has no jurisdiction to award damages. But where a small portion of a building which obstructed the plaintiffs' light and air was completed after the filing of the bill, the Court ordered such portion to be pulled down, and directed an inquiry as to damages in respect of the injury caused by the other part of the building. Lawrence v. Austin; Durell v. Pritchard, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 598: see Durell v. Pritchard, 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 598, where this decree was affirmed, but on different grounds.

Injunction granted on a bill by a churchwarden, on behalf of himself and the parishioners, to restrain the incumbent and his agents from dismantling the church and selling the pews, &c. with a view to improve the building, the incumbent having obtained no faculty. Cardinall v. Molyneux, 2 Giff. 535.

(2) Ancient Lights.

Upon motion for an injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's ancient lights, it was held, that there was no necessity for the party complaining to be in the occupation of the house to entitle him to the interference of the Court. But as it appeared the plaintiff had altered the position of his windows, and had also made new lights, the Court declined to decide the legal question, and directed the adjournment of the motion until an action should have been brought to try the plaintiff's right. Wilson v. Townend, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 25; 1 Dr. & S. 324.

The jurisdiction of the Court to interfere by way of mandatory injunction should be exercised with great caution; and, semble, not at all where damages afford an adequate compensation for the injury done. Isenberg v. the East India House Estate Co. (Lim.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 392.

It is the duty of the Court in a case in which it considers damage has been done, though not of such a character as to warrant the exercise of its jurisdiction by mandatory injunction, to direct an inquiry before itself, in order to ascertain the measure of damage that has been actually sustained. Ibid.

A plaintiff coming to the Court for an injunction to restrain the erection of new buildings by his neighbour, on the ground of interference with his light and air, must shew that his own residence will be rendered substantially less comfortable for purposes of occupation. Johnson v. Wyatt, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 394; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 18.

Though an injunction be refused in such a case, the Court if it appear that damages have been sustained, may, if it think fit, exercise the jurisdiction conferred by Sir Hugh Cairns's Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27), and direct an inquiry as to damages. Ibid.

It is not in every case in which an action can be maintained for the obstruction of ancient lights that an injunction will be granted by a Court of equity, but the standard of the amount of damage that calls for the exercise of the jurisdiction has not been defined with any certainty. Jackson v. the Duke of Newcastle, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 698.

In order to justify the interference of the Court by injunction, the obstruction of the ancient lights of a manufactory or of business premises must be such as to render the building to a material extent less suitable for the business carried on in them. Ibid.

Such obstruction must be one which diminishes the value of the premises for the purposes for which they are used at the time; and the fact that the obstruction may render the premises less fit for some other purposes to which they may by possibility be applied at a future time cannot be taken into consideration. Ibid.

Therefore, where the owners of premises used as the counting-house of a grocer's shop applied for an injunction to restrain the erection of a building which would obscure an ancient light, and the Court was of opinion upon the evidence that the intended erection would not materially interfere with the enjoyment of the premises as a counting-house so as to require its interference by injunction,—Held, that the possible future injury, by rendering the premises less fit for a business requiring more light, was not a ground for such interference. Ibid.

(3) Nuisances.

A plaintiff who in an insignificant degree obscured the light and air to his own dwelling was held not to be thereby disentitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant from erecting a building so as seriously to diminish the supply of light and air. Arcedeckne v. Kelk, 2 Giff. 683.

Nothing short of an act by the plaintiff which will produce somewhat the same amount of injury as that of which he complains will deprive him of his right to relief in this Court. Ibid.

The lessee of a dwelling-house, in which he carried on business as a diamond merchant, was held entitled to an injunction restraining the owners of premises adjacent (who afterwards purchased the reversion of the plaintiff's house) from constructing the party-wall so as to occasion such an obstruction of the plaintiff's ancient lights, however slight, as would injure him in his business. Herz v. the Union Bank of London, 2 Giff. 686.

This Court will interfere to restrain apprehended injury where it is clear that the act intended to be committed would injure or destroy a clear legal right. Ibid.

The owners of premises, situated in a densely populated neighbourhood, having purchased large quantities of damp jute, being salvage from a fire, proceeded to bring it on their property for the purpose of drying it. It being established by evidence that jute when dry is highly inflammable and perhaps (though as to this the evidence was conflicting) liable when wet to ignite spontaneously,—the Court, on an interlocutory application by the owner of adjoining premises, granted an interim injunction, until the hearing of the cause or further order, to restrain the owners of the jute from bringing more jute on to their premises, and from allowing the damp jute then there to remain in such quantities as to occasion danger to adjoining property; the plaintiffs undertaking at once to indict the defendants as for a nuisance. Hepburn v. Lordan, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 293; 2 Hem. & M. 345.

(4) Contracts.

Parties who have mutually bound themselves will be restrained from doing any act inconsistent with a charter-party which they have entered into bona fide. Sevin v. Deslandes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 457.

Where a contract contains an express negative covenant, and complete justice can be done between the parties, the Court will grant an injunction to restrain breach of the negative covenant; but the Court rarely interferes where there is no distinct negative stipulation, but the negative obligation is inferred only from the positive contract. Peto v. the Brighton, Uckfield and Tunbridge Wells Rail. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 677.

A solicitor's clerk executed a bond to his employer, the condition whereof, after reciting an agreement that the clerk should give a bond not to carry on the business of a solicitor within fifty miles of a given place, was, that if he carried on business within the specified distance, then, provided he paid to the solicitor 1,000*l*. as liquidated damages, the bond should be void. The clerk commenced business as a solicitor within the distance. On a bill being filed by the solicitor,—Held, that he was entitled to an injunction restraining the clerk from practising within the specified distance. Howard v. Woodward, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 47.

A, the owner of land through which a company proposed to make a railway upon a viaduct, withdrew his opposition to the company's bill in parliament, in consideration of an agreement by the company, among other things, not to erect, on the land to be taken by them from him, within 80 feet from other premises in his possession, any building, "except their proposed railway," above the height of 18 feet. The bill passed; and a viaduct, 33 feet high, part of which was within 80 feet from the plaintiff's premises, was erected on the land taken from A. This viaduct was wide enough for and carried two lines only. Subsequently to its erection, a conveyance of A's land to the company was prepared and executed; which contained a covenant on the part of the company to the same effect (omitting only the exception as to the railway, then completed) as the provision in the agreement restraining buildings. On the company afterwards beginning to build brick piers above the height of 18 feet within 80 feet of A's other premises, with a view to widening their viaduct so as to carry four lines instead of two, an injunction to restrain the company from erecting any such buildings in breach of their covenant was granted by Kindersley, V.C.; and an appeal motion on the part of the company to the Lords Justices was (dissentiente Knight Bruce, L.J.) refused. Lloyd v. the London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 401; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 568.

Per Turner, L.J.—The circumstance that a work undertaken in breach of a valid covenant is one of great public importance, is not sufficient to induce a Court of equity to refuse to restrain the breach of covenant. Ibid.

Per Turner, L.J.—Courts of equity will not leave parties to their remedy at law by refusing to enforce a covenant specifically, on the ground that the injury is not substantial, unless on the clearest evidence of its triviality. Ibid.

A surgeon at W, upon taking an assistant, required him to give his bond in a penalty, not to practice at W. Afterwards, he discharged the assistant, who thereupon commenced practice at W. The surgeon then filed a bill to restrain him, to which the defendant demurred. The Court overruled the demurrer, holding that, notwithstanding the pecuniary penalty, the plaintiff was entitled to a remedy in equity. Fox v. Scard, 33 Beav. 327.

Property was conveyed to certain trustees of a building society. A scheme was laid down for the buildings, with certain regulations applicable to every lot of ground. Each allottee or purchaser from the society entered into restrictive covenants with the trustees, who were the conveying parties to him; and it was covenanted that the trustees should be deemed trustees of the covenants for the benefit of all claiming under conveyances already made by them. The plaintiffs and the defendant in the suit became allottees or purchasers. Soon after his purchase the defendant built a large hotel, on some of the lots he had purchased, and he afterwards on certain other of his lots, and in front of lots which the plaintiffs had purchased, began erecting stables, with a large "midden," or receptacle for manure, of which the former were completed without formal protest from the plaintiffs, who, however, ultimately filed a bill against the defendant, praying that they might have the benefit of the covenants entered into by the defendant, for an injunction against building in violation thereof, and that the buildings already so erected might be pulled down, and damages be accorded to the plaintiffs. The Vice Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster made a decree, declaring that the only proper buildings were such as had been approved by the covenantees, directing the demolition of certain portions of the buildings raised, and awarding an injunction to restrain the defendant from using the stables otherwise than as general outbuildings: — Held upon appeal that, under the circumstances, the injunction must be dissolved, and the order directing demolition discharged, on the ground of acquiescence; and that if the plaintiffs desired to proceed for the purpose of recovering damages, they must amend their bill by making it one on behalf of themselves and all the allottees and making the trustees defendants. Eastwood v. Lever, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 355.

Held, also (per Turner, L.J.), that the plaintiffs had an equity against the defendant by virtue of the covenants entered into by the latter with the trustees, and that no sanction by the trustees to deviate from the covenants could affect that equity. Ibid.

A plaintiff, though barred by acquiescence or otherwise from his remedy by injunction, may obtain damages under Sir Hugh Cairns's Act, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, and that even though no action would be maintainable at law by the plaintiff. Ibid.

(5) Trade Marks.

Where S, a tradesman, who had been in the employ of a large firm, put his own name over his shop, but on the plates under the shop-windows and on the sun-awning "from T & G," his former employers, the word "from" being much smaller than the words "T & G," and it was proved that some persons had been misled into thinking that the shop was the shop of "T & G," the Court held that what S was doing was calculated to mislead the incautious, unwary and heedless portion of the public; and on bill by T & G granted an injunction restraining him from using the name of their firm about his shop in such a way as to mislead the public into the belief that his shop was the shop of T & G, or that their business was carried on there. Glenny v. Smith, 2 Dr. & S. 476.

(b) When refused or dissolved.

Where the occupier of a house and grounds in London erected a translucent screen of glass thirty-five feet high and thirty feet distant from the plaintiff's dwelling, having louvres to admit air, the Court refused to grant an injunction. Radcliffe v. the Duke of Portland, 3 Giff. 703.

The plaintiff obtained a judgment against a tenant for life in remainder, whose estate was liable to forfeiture by his non-user of the name and arms of the testator. Upon a bill to realize the charge, the Court, at the hearing, refused to grant an injunction to restrain the tenant for life from forfeiting his life estate. Semple v. Holland, 33 Beav. 94.

Where a railway company, acting bona fide, has made a mistake as to the lands they have valued and taken possession of, and the question between the company and the landowner is merely one of value, this Court will not, by injunction, stay the works on the property taken. The Court in such cases has regard to the injury which may be done to the public. Wood v. the Charing Cross Rail. Co., 33 Beav. 290.

If an owner of lands complains of an easement usurped over his property, and delays his application for relief, a Court of equity will not interfere until he has established his right at law to an abatement. Cooper v. Hubbuck, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 123; 30 Beav. 160.

The defendants, being in the use and occupation of a railway bridge over a certain highway, and being owners of the soil on either side of the road, commenced the construction of buttresses in the road, on a line with the existing abutments, for the purpose of widening their bridge. The plaintiffs, in whom the soil of the road was vested under the Metropolitan Local Management Act, as surveyors of the highways, filed a bill to restrain the defendants from further narrowing the road, on the ground of public inconvenience:—Held, that the alleged inconvenience was not of sufficient magnitude for the interference of the Court. The Wandsworth Board of Works v. the London and South-Western Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 854.

The plaintiff, the manager of a London theatre, engaged the defendant, a provincial actor, desirous of appearing on the London stage, for two years. Though there was nothing expressed on the subject, the Court inferred an engagement on the part of the plaintiff to employ the defendant for a reasonable time, and on the part of the defendant, not to perform elsewhere. The plaintiff, having (under these circumstances) delayed the defendant's appearing for five months, the defendant broke his engagement, and went to another theatre:—Held, that he had a right to do so, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to an interlocutory injunction to prevent his performing there. Fechter v. Montgomery, 33 Beav. 22.

The owner of a trade-mark obtained an injunction against a dock company restraining them from parting with certain imported goods to which the trade-mark had been fraudulently affixed. Subsequently it appeared that the dock warrants had been indorsed for value to a person innocent of the fraud. Upon motion by the holder of the warrants,—Held, that upon his removing the trade-mark he was entitled to have the injunction dissolved, without providing for the plaintiff's costs of suit. In re Uzielli; Ponsardin v. Peto, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 371; 33 Beav. 642.

A company cannot, by user, acquire an exclusive right to use, in its title of incorporation, a general term descriptive merely of the locality with which the business carried on by the company is connected; and the Court will not restrain the use of such general term by a new company, even though it be in evidence that the former company may have been prejudiced by similarity of name. The Colonial Life Assur. Co. v. the Home and Colonial Assur. Co. (Lim.), 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 741; 33 Beav. 548.

A B sold a piece of land to C D, and covenanted for quiet enjoyment. Afterwards, A B raised the level, by three inches, of a brook running past C D's grounds, through his, A B's, property:—Held, that this was not a proper subject of complaint for the interference of the Court. Ingram v. Morecraft, 33 Beav. 49.

(B) TO RESTRAIN ACTION AT LAW.

The underlessee of certain premises entered into an agreement with the freeholders for a new lease, dating from a period anterior to the expiration of the underlease. Disputes however having arisen between them, the defendant purchased a reversionary interest of ten days, and, on the expiration of the underlease, brought his action of ejectment against the underlessee, who still remained in possession with the avowed object of getting into possession and obtaining a lease to himself. The cause was tried after the determination of the reversionary interest, and a verdict was returned for the plaintiff at law. Upon a bill filed by the underlessee to restrain him from issuing a writ of possession, it was held, that the proceedings at law were vexatious and contrary to bona fides; and an injunction was granted. Buckland v. Gibbins, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 389.

(C) DAMAGES IN LIEU OF.

Where buildings complained of were finished before bill filed, and the plaintiffs were not occupiers but owners in reversion of servient tenement, the Court ordered inquiry as to damages occasioned by new building. The Curriers' Co. v. Corbett, 2 Dr. & S. 355.

In a case for an injunction, which, from circumstances arising after the bill was filed, could not be granted, the Court, under Sir Hugh Cairns's Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27.) s. 2, awarded damages, though not specifically prayed for by the bill. Catton v. Wyld, 32 Beav. 266.

(D) PRACTICE.

(a) Interim Order.

On the 16th of March F and S obtsined an interim order restraining T from obstructing their ancient lights by continuing the erection of certain buildings. On the hearing of the motion for an injunction, it appeared that the parties had been at issue as to their rights since the 27th of January:—

Held, that this ought to have been stated to the Court on the application for the interim order, and that after the delay which had occurred such an ex parte application was improper. Fuller v. Taylor, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 376.

Where a plaintiff on obtaining an interim injunction gives a personal undertaking as to damages, the Court has jurisdiction to order assessment of such damages, notwithstanding a dismissal of the bill. By the giving of such an undertaking a party puts himself in the power of the Court, actually and wholly independent of the suit. Newby v. Harrison, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 863; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 287.

(b) Establishing Title at Law.

It is the habit and rule of a Court of equity not to grant a perpetual injunction to restrain the infringement of a patent, unless the legal validity of the patent has been conclusively established. Hills v. Evans, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 457.

If a nuisance is alleged, this Court will not grant an injunction to restrain it until it has been established at law. The Attorney General v. the United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Co. (Lim.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 329; 30 Beav. 287.

A claim of unobstructed frontage to a high road must be established at law before the Court will grant an injunction to restrain any interference with the soil between the high road and the boundary fence of the landowner. Ibid.

(c) Form of Order.

It is highly inconvenient for the Court to grant an injunction to restrain the performance of works, "in any other manner than authorized by the words of an act of parliament," unaccompanied by a statement of what, in the opinion of the Court, is the right mode of constructing those works. The Warden, &c. of Dover Harbour, v. the London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 474; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 559.

(E) Writ of Injunction.

The plaintiff, a surgeon, hired the defendant as his assistant, and by an agreement in writing between them, the defendant, in consideration of the premises therein contained, promised and agreed with the plaintiff that he, the defendant, would not practise as a surgeon-apothecary within the distance of five miles from C, without the consent in writing of the plaintiff first had and obtained, under the penalty or penal sum of 100*l.* to be recoverable by the plaintiff as and for liquidated damages. The defendant having left the plaintiff's service set up in practice within the prescribed limits, and the plaintiff issued a writ of summons indorsed to recover the penalty of 100*l.* and with a claim for a writ of injunction to restrain the defendant from practising within the prescribed limits, and before delivering declaration in the action applied by motion for an injunction for the same purpose:—Held, that the plaintiff having commenced an action for the recovery of liquidated damages, was not entitled to an injunction. Carnes v. Nesbitt, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 348; 7 Hurls. & N. 158.

Semble—That the injunction would have been granted had the plaintiff brought his action for unliquidated damages. Ibid.

Where a declaration, claiming a writ of injunction, did not disclose facts shewing clearly that there could not be an injunction, the Court refused to allow the defendants to demur to so much of the declaration as claimed the writ. Bilke v. the London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 206; 3 Hurls. & C. 95.

A railway company having conveyed to A a piece of land abutting on their viaduct, with a covenant not to build within six feet of the wall of the viaduct, —The Court, in an action against A's widow (who took by assignment) for building against the wall in breach of the covenant, in which action she had suffered judgment by default, refused to grant an injunction against her commanding her to remove the building, it appearing that it had been erected by her under-tenant, and that consequently she could not obey the writ if granted. The London and South-Western Rail. Co. v. Webb, 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 450.

Where a railway company has so acted as to render it necessary and proper for any person to come to the Court for redress under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, the Court will, as a general rule, make the rule absolute with costs. Baxendale v. the London and South-Western Rail. Co., 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 758.

INNKEEPER.

[See Lien.]

[Certain duties of customs and inland revenue granted by 25 Vict. c. 22.—The law respecting the liability of innkeepers amended by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 43.]

Liability in respect of Guests' Property.

An innkeeper is liable for the value of property of his guest lost while in his house, unless the loss has been caused by the negligence of the guest. The omission of the guest to leave valuable articles with the innkeeper, or to fasten his door on retiring to rest, is not necessarily such negligence as disentitles him to recover. Nor does a notice by the innkeeper that if such precautions are neglected he will not hold himself responsible in case of loss per se relieve from or limit his liability. And the action is maintainable against the executors of the innkeeper, at all events if brought within the time limited by the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 42. s. 2. Morgan v. Ravey, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 131; 6 Hurls. & N. 265.

By an arrangement between an innkeeper and her ostler, the latter had the profit from the stables arising from the supply of corn and hay, not only for the guests in the inn, but for residents in the town whose horses he was allowed to take care of. A guest (who had no notice of the above arrangement) arrived with his horse and gig at the inn, and subsequently left the inn without his horse, stating that he should not return till the following Monday, and requesting his horse might be properly attended to. He did not return for a fortnight, and in the mean time the ostler drove the horse out with a friend on a Sunday evening, when the horse took fright at a steam-engine, and was injured and the gig broken. The ostler stated, as the reason for taking him out, that the horse wanted exercise. In an action brought in the county court against the innkeeper, judgment was giving for the plaintiff:—Held, on appeal, that the facts were not inconsistent with the defendant's liability as innkeeper; and by Martin, B., that the defendant was liable whether as livery-stable keeper or innkeeper. Bather v. Day, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 171; nom. Day v. Bather, 2 Hurls. & C. 14.

INSOLVENT.

(A) Vesting Order.
(B) Discharge.
(C) Protection from Process.

(A) Vesting Order.

Where the wearing apparel and working tools of an insolvent (under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.) do not exceed the value of 20*l.*, the property in them remains in the insolvent after the vesting order by reason of the exception in the 37th section of the act; and it is not necessary, in order to prevent them vesting in the assignee, that they should have been inserted by the insolvent in his schedule as excepted, as required by the 69th section. Willsmer v. Jacklin, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 1; 1 Best & S. 641.

Quære—When the value of such articles exceeds 20*l.* Ibid.

A vesting order made upon the petition of a trading firm under the Indian Insolvency Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 21, vests in the official assignee the separate property of each partner as well as the joint estate of the firm. Brown v. Carbery, 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 2.

(B) Discharge.

The defendant drew a bill of exchange, dated the 30th of October, 1858, on S, for 45*l.*, and indorsed the same to W. He afterwards became insolvent, and in his schedule, delivered pursuant to 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, he set out the consideration for the bill, and described the bill as one drawn by S and accepted by himself, and given by him to W on or about November, 1858. After the schedule was filed W wrote to the defendant informing him that he had received notice from a large firm in the City of the dishonour of the bill. The schedule was afterwards amended in some other respects, but no alteration was made in the description of this bill. The jury disbelieved the evidence of W, and found that the misdescription of the bill was unintentional on the part of the defendant, and that he had no intention to mislead:—Held, that the defendaot was entitled to the benefit of the act, and that therefore the plaintiff could not recover. Romillio v. Halahan, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 231; 1 Best & S. 279.

The discharge of an insolvent debtor under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. s. 75. is no release of a debt created by the payment of a surety, after the discharge of a bill the consideration for which was inserted in the schedule as a debt for money lent due to the payee. Litten v. Dalton, 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 178.

(C) Protection from Process.

The final order, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. s. 22, constitutes an absolute bar to the actions in respect of which it is a protection,—though not in terms an order for distribution as well as for protection. And it is not the less a final order because it contains also an adoption of the proposal for payments of the debts made in the petition. The statutes 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116. and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. do not authorize the assignees to take the profits of a benefice, there being no provision therein equivalent to the 55th section of the old Insolvent Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. Markin v. Aldrich, 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 599.

5. MUTUAL INSURANCE.

1.—INSURANCE COMPANIES.

(A) Rights of Policy-holders in general.

The deed of association of the Waterloo Assurance Company, which bound the policy-holders, contained a power to dissolve, on exercising which the directors were to get from another company an undertaking to pay all future liabilities, and to transfer to such company so much of the funds as should be agreed on between the contracting parties, as would be sufficient to enable the latter company to comply with their undertaking:—Held, that the amount to be paid over was a matter of agreement between the two companies, with which the policy-holders had no concern, and that a policy-holder who refused to be transferred had no claim upon the Waterloo Company. In re the Waterloo Life, &c. Assur. Co. (Carr's case), 33 Beav. 542.

(B) CHARGE ON ASSETS ONLY; PRIORITY.

The deed providing that the actuary should estimate the amount of profits, that this estimate might be rejected or reduced by a meeting of shareholders, and that six-tenths of the divisible profits so ascertained should be apportioned by the actuary as he thought fair among the participating policy-holders,—Held, that such policy-holders were not partners. In re the English and Irish Church and University Assur. Soc., 1 Hem. & M. 85.

Held, also, that, the company being in course of winding-up pari passu, claimants under both classes of policies were entitled to be paid out of the assets, with general creditors, as to whom the liability of the shareholders was unlimited. Ibid.

The assets in hand being insufficient to provide for all claims,—Held, that the general creditors were entitled in the first instance to be paid pari passu with the policy-holders, notwithstanding the possibility of their recovering further sums from individual shareholders, and that the question of marshalling did not at that stage arise. Ibid.

An assurance society granted policies both in the participating and non-participating form. The former class stipulated that the funds and property of the society should, subject to the deed of settlement, be liable to pay the sum assured with such further sum as should, pursuant to the rules of the society, be appropriated by way of bonus or addition, with a proviso declaring that the funds of the society should alone be liable, and negativing personal liability. The latter class stipulated that the funds and property of the society should, subject to the deed, be liable to pay the sum assured, with a proviso that the funds of the society by the deed applicable to the payment of policies should alone, subject to prior claims thereon pursuant to the deed, be liable, and negativing personal liability. Ibid.

An insurance company issued policies providing, in some instances, "that the capital stock and funds of the company should be subject and liable to pay" the amount insured; in others, "that the capital stock, or so much thereof as should for the time being have been subscribed, and other the stocks, funds, securities and property of the company unapplied at the time of any demand made, should alone be liable to answer," &c.; in others, "that the stock and funds of the company should alone be answerable under this guarantie"; and all the policies contained a proviso that no officer or shareholder of the company should be liable for any demand beyond the amount of his particular share or interest:—Held (by Wood, V.C., and also on appeal by Knight Bruce, L.J. and Turner, L.J.), that these expressions and clauses did not create such a charge upon the stock and funds of the company as to give the policy-holders any claim upon its assets in preference to the general creditors of the company; Knight Bruce, L.J., however, expressing a doubt. In re the State Fire Insur. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 123; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 634.

The State Fire Insurance Company issued policies, providing that the capital stock and funds of the company should be liable to make good the damage by fire sustained by the insured, and should alone be liable for all demands under the policies, and that the shareholders should not in any event be liable in respect of any claim upon the company beyond the amount of their interest in the capital stock of the company at the time when such claim might arise. The company was wound up, and it having been held that the policies did not create such a charge upon the stock and funds of the company as to give the policy-holders any claim upon its assets in preference to the general creditors, calls to the amount of the whole nominal capital were made, and the proceeds were distributed amongst the policy-holders and general creditors pari passu. A further call was made under the winding-up, and the official manager proposed to divide the proceeds amongst the general creditors, to the exclusion of the policy-holders. The policy-holders contended that the proceeds of this call must be marshalled, and so much must be recouped to the previous fund as would enable the policy-holders to receive on the whole an equal dividend with the general creditors:—Held, that the doctrine of marshalling did not apply, and that the proceeds of the further call must be distributed amongst the general creditors only. In re the State Fire Insur. Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 436.

An additional call was, however, directed to be made for the purpose of providing for the general costs of the winding-up, leaving the capital stock and funds to bear only the cost of their realization. Ibid.

2.—INSURANCE ON LIVES.

(A) CONSTRUCTION OF THE CONTRACT OF INSURANCE.

(a) Quarterly or Annual Premiums.

A life policy was headed "The annual premium 33*l.* Whole term, payable by quarterly instalments of 8*l.* 5*s.* each." The policy was dated the 2nd of August, 1856, and recited a payment up to the 2nd of November of that year, and declared that if the life insured should die "before the expiration of twelve calendar months from the date hereof," and the assured should "on or before that period, or on or before the expiration of every succeeding twelve calendar months, pay the annual amount of premium," the insurance office should be liable. If the life should die "before the whole of the quarterly payments" were payable, the directors might deduct from the sum insured what would be "sufficient to satisfy the whole of the said premiums for that year." If the life died before "having been assured fifteen months and made two annual payments," the policy was to be void. The life died within twelve months after the third quarterly payment became due, but before it was paid:—Held, that the policy must be construed to have become void on non-payment of any quarterly premium, the payment of all the quarterly instalments being a condition precedent to the continuance of the policy for the current year. The Phœnix Life Assur. Co. v. Sheridan (House of Lords), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 91; 8 H.L. Cas. 745.

(b) Suicide of Assured.

There is no principle of public policy upon which a life assurance is void by the suicide of the assured while in a state of insanity. Horn v. the Anglo-Australian and Universal Family Life Assur. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 511.

Certain policies of assurance were effected by L on his own life, which contained a proviso making them void in case of the death of the assured by his own act, whether felonious or not, except to the extent of any interest acquired therein by actual assignment for valuable consideration. L mortgaged the policies together with other property, for a sum far exceeding the amount of the policy moneys, and subsequently in a fit of insanity, committed suicide. The assurers paid to the mortgagee the money due on the policies, and afterwards filed a bill against L's executor, praying that the sums paid by them might be charged on the other property included in the mortgage, or, at all events, that the mortgage moneys might be apportioned amongst all the property comprised in the mortgage; and that if the mortgaged premises other than the policies should prove insufficient to raise the amount the plaintiffs might be declared entitled to, then that the plaintiffs might stand as creditors in respect of the deficiency against the general assets of the assured:—Held, by Wood, V.C., and also, on appeal, by Knight Bruce, L.J. and Turner, L.J., that the exception from the proviso operated, not merely for the protection of an assignee for value, but, in the absence of fraud, for the benefit also of the assured: And also, that the plaintiffs were principal debtors in respect of what was due upon the policies; and therefore, that the bill must be dismissed. The Solicitors' and General Life Assur. Soc. v. Lamb, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 426; 1 Hem. & M. 716; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 251.

(B) Insurable Interest.

The plaintiff was employed as clerk by P, a banker. In 1854 his salary was increased from 300*l.* to 600*l.*, P engaging that it should continue at that amount for seven years at the least. In 1856, being indebted to the bank, he insured the life of P for 5,000*l.* in the G Insurance Company, P having promised that payment of the debt should not be enforced in P's lifetime. In 1857 the plaintiff insured the life of P for 2,500*l.* in the company of which the defendant was a director; and on the death of P, in 1861, he received the 5,000*l.* from the G company. At the time of making the policies, the sum of 5,000*l.* was sufficient to include the whole of the insurable interest, if any, which the plaintiff had in the life of P, and that insurable interest was the same at the time of making either policy:—Held, that the plaintiff had no insurable interest in the life of P by reason of the promise by P that payment should not be enforced in his lifetime. But held, that the plaintiff had an insurable interest in the life of P by reason of the promise that the salary should last for seven years. And further, that the plaintiff could not recover the 2,500*l.* from the defendant, as he had already received the 5,000*l.* from the G Insurance Company by virtue of 14 Geo. 3. c. 48. s. 3. Hebden v. West, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 85; 3 Best & S. 579.

(C) Misrepresentation.

A declaration upon a policy of insurance upon the life of F set out the policy, by which it appeared that F had agreed that a declaration delivered to the defendants should be the basis of a contract between him and them. The policy contained a proviso that "if any statement in the said declaration (which declaration shall be considered as much a part of the policy as if the same had been actually set forth therein) was untrue, or if the assurance by the policy should have been effected by or through any wilful misrepresentation, concealment or false averment whatsoever," &c.; "that the said policy should be void, and all moneys paid in respect thereof should be forfeited." The declaration contained answers to a number of questions, and then continued, "I do hereby declare that the above-written particulars are correct and true throughout; and I do hereby agree that this proposal and declaration shall be the basis of the contract," &c.; "and if it shall hereafter appear that any fraudulent concealment or designedly untrue statement be contained therein, then all the money which shall have been paid on account of the assurance made in consequence hereof shall be forfeited, and the policy granted in respect of such assurance shall be absolutely null and void." Breach, that F had died, and that the defendants did not pay. The defendants pleaded that divers statements in the declaration were untrue, and that divers of the particulars in the declaration alleged to be correct and true were incorrect and untrue, by reason whereof the said policy was void:—Held, a bad plea, inasmuch as it appeared from the policy and declaration, when taken together, that the policy was not avoided by a misrepresentation, unless such misrepresentation was wilful and designed. Fowkes v. the Manchester and London Life Assur. Assoc., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 153; 3 Best & S. 917.

3.—INSURANCE AGAINST FIRE.

(A) Construction of the Contract of Insurance.

A ship was insured for three months against fire, and was described in the policy "as lying in the Victoria Docks, with liberty to go into a dry dock, and light the boiler fires once or twice during the currency of the policy":—Held, that the ship was covered while she was in the river passing from the Victoria Docks to a dry dock, and vice versa, but not while she was in the river for any other purpose. Pearson v. the Commercial Union Assur. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 85; 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 304.

A damage sustained from the atmospheric concussion caused by an explosion of gunpowder at a distance, is not a damage insured against by a policy for the payment of such loss or damage as should be occasioned by fire to the property insured. Everett

v. the London Assur. Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 299; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 126.

(B) Premiums.

Where the lessee of a factory, under a covenant with his lessor to keep the premises insured in the Alliance or such other office as the lessors should appoint, executed an underlease to the plaintiffs, whereby the plaintiffs covenanted to pay any sum or sums of money expended in fire insurance, and, in erroneous belief that the premises, which were empty, were used for a hazardous trade, paid 26*l.* 5*s.* per cent. for insurance in another office, and sought to recover the amount at law against the underlessee, the Court restrained the action upon the plaintiffs undertaking to pay the amount of premium which was found to be properly payable, and made the defendants pay the costs of the suit. The Leather Cloth Co. v. Bressy, 3 Giff. 474.

(C) Payment for Losses.

The fire policies issued by an insurance company provided that the company would not be responsible for any losses by explosion, except explosion by gas. A vessel laden with gunpowder took fire and exploded, and the concussion of the air caused considerable damage to the property, more especially to the windows and glass, of persons who had effected insurances with the company. The directors having decided to pay the losses thus occasioned, a bill was filed by one of the shareholders seeking an injunction to restrain the directors from so applying the funds of the company:—Held, that assuming the company not to be legally liable, yet, as the evidence proved that payment of such losses, as of favour, was in accordance with the course pursued by other companies in the particular case, and with the usual custom of fire insurance companies, the directors must be regarded as acting fairly within the limits of their authority for the benefit of the company, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Taunton v. the Royal Insur. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 406; 2 Hem. & M. 130.

The distinction, between an application of the funds of a company to a purpose not falling properly within the objects of the company, and a gratuitous payment out of the funds thereof in the ordinary course of business, pointed out and explained. Ibid.

(D) Reinstating Premises.

Under an agreement with their landlord S, W M and J M insured certain houses of which they were joint tenants, from year to year for 500*l.* The houses were burnt down, and S thereupon informed the Insurance Company that he was the person entitled to the benefit of the policy, and claimed to have it laid out in rebuilding the houses. The Insurance Company entered into an arrangement with W M and J M, and cancelled the policy. S thereupon rebuilt the houses at his own expense, and filed a bill to compel the insurance company to pay him so much of the sum due on the policy as had been properly expended by him in rebuilding:—Held, upon a demurrer by the company, that no sufficient request had been made to the company to satisfy section 83. of 14 Geo. 3. c. 78. That S was not entitled under the above section to rebuild the houses himself and then call upon the company to refund the money so expended. Simpson v. the Scottish Union Fire and Life Insur. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 329; 1 Hem. & M. 618.

The 83rd section of the 14 Geo. 3. c. 78, by which the governors and directors of insurance offices are authorized, upon the request of any persons entitled to any house or other buildings which may be burnt down or damaged by fire, or upon any grounds of suspicion that the owners or occupiers or other parties effecting the insurance have been guilty of fraud or incendiarism, to cause the insurance money to be laid out in rebuilding, &c., is a general enactment, and is not limited in its operation to the metropolitan district. Ex parte Gorely, in re Barker, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 1.

Trade fixtures, put up by a tenant, being removable by him, are not comprised in the expression "house or other buildings" in the statute. Therefore where such fixtures are separately insured and destroyed by fire during the tenancy, the landlord is not entitled to have the insurance money laid out under the act; and a covenant by the tenant to deliver up the fixtures at the determination of the tenancy, was held, as conferring a mere personal right resting in contract, to make no difference in this respect. Ibid.

(E) Right to Policy.

R, the owner of a cargo of wheat shipped at Odessa for England valued at 7,000*l.*, effected two policies, one for 4,000*l.* and the other for 3,000*l.* The cargo fell in value, and was agreed, on the 8th of March, to be sold to an agent of B for 5,358*l.* by a contract for sale of cargo, including all shipping documents, freight and insurance, and the documents were accordingly delivered; and B, on the 13th, gave an order for the amount, which was paid on the following day. R indorsed on the policy for 3,000*l.*, "We transfer this policy to Messrs. —— to the extent of 1,700*l.*," and the same was delivered to the agent of B. The ship and cargo were totally lost on the 16th of the same month. The insurance company paid 1,300*l.*, the remainder of the 3,000*l.*, into court; and Wood, V.C. decided that the same belonged to R, for that B, under his contract, was not entitled to an assignment of all existing policies effected on the cargo, but merely to have the cargo sufficiently insured; and that a provision in his contract, that the price was to be paid in exchange for bills of lading and policies of insurance, did not alter the case. From this decision B appealed:—Held, reversing that decision, that R was not so entitled, but that the whole 3,000*l.* secured by the policy belonged to B, the wheat having been sold as insured at the price set upon it by the vendors in the policies, and not at the price to which it had afterwards fallen. Ralli v. the Universal Marine Insur. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 313; 2 Jo. & H. 159.

4.—INSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS.

(A) Construction of the Contract of Insurance.

(a) Death by Sunstroke.

By a policy of assurance effected by S with the Maritime Passengers' Assurance Company, "for granting assurances against loss of life and personal injury arising from accidents at sea," it was agreed that in case S should sustain any personal injury from or by reason or in consequence of any accident which should happen to him upon any ocean, sea, river or lake, during the continuance of the said policy, the company should pay to him a reasonable compensation; and that if he should die from the effects of the said injury within, &c., the company should pay to his executors, &c., 100*l.* At the time of effecting the policy, S was about to sail on a voyage to Aden. He proceeded on his voyage, and arrived in the Cochin River, on the south-west coast of India, where he was struck down by a sunstroke while attending to his duty in the ship, and died the same day from the effects of the said sunstroke:—Held, in an action brought by his personal representative upon the policy, that the death could not be said to have arisen from accident within the meaning of the policy, and therefore that the plaintiff could not recover. Sinclair v. the Maritime Passengers' Assur. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 77; 3 E. & E. 478.

(b) Death by Drowning.

By a policy of assurance the defendants agreed to pay the representatives of H a sum of money if H died from "injury caused by accident or violence." The policy provided that no claim should be made in respect of any injury unless the same should be caused by some outward and visible means of which satisfactory proof could be furnished to the directors. A claim was made by the representatives of a person assured, upon evidence that he went to bathe in the sea, and was not seen alive afterwards, his clothes being found on the beach, and a naked body, believed to be his by some of his friends, having been subsequently washed ashore:—Held (reversing the judgment of the Court of Exchequer), that there was evidence that the assured was accidentally drowned, and that such a death was a death by an injury insured against. Trew v. the Railway Passengers' Assur. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 317; 6 Hurls. & N. 839.

(c) Death from excepted Disease caused by external Violence.

A policy for insuring the payment of a sum of money in case the insured should be injured by accidental violence and die from the direct effect of such accident, was subject to the following condition: "this policy insures against all forms of cuts, stabs," &c., "when accidentally occurring from material and external cause, where such accidental injury is the direct and sole cause of death to the insured," "but it does not insure against death or disability arising from rheumatism, gout, hernia, erysipelas, or any other disease or cause arising within the system of the insured before or at the time or following such accidental injury":—Held, that the insurers were liable under such policy where the insured died from hernia caused solely by external violence. Fitton v. the Accidental Death Insur. Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 28; 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 122.

5.—MUTUAL INSURANCE.

A club or association of shipowners was formed for the mutual assurance of ships belonging to the members, and the regulations by which the association was governed provided for the management of affairs by a finance committee, consisting of treasurer, secretary, &c., for the creation of a general fund or stock, by payment of premiums, &c.; and if the funds were at any time found insufficient the treasurer was to collect from each member such a per-centage as might be deemed necessary. No provision was made for granting policies, and the regulations were apparently framed on the assumption that policies would not be needed:—Held, notwithstanding the enactment of the 35 Geo. 3. c. 63. s. 11, that the association was not illegal.—Whether, in order to found a valid claim for a loss, in any particular case, a policy must have been granted, quære. Bromley v. Williams, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 716; 32 Beav. 177.

Upon a bill filed by a member of the above-described association, to recover the amount of a loss incurred by him, alleging that no finance committee had been appointed,—Held, that seven of the members were properly made defendants as representing the whole body, and that the treasurer and secretary (though not alleged to be members) were properly made defendants as being the active managers of the concern, and having the control of the funds. Ibid.

INTEREST.

(A) When Recoverable.
  (a) Children's Portions.
  (b) By Statute 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 42.
(B) Rate of.

(A) When Recoverable.

(a) Children's Portions.

Where portions for younger children are created, if their interests are vested, and the contingencies have happened on which the portions are to be paid, interest on them is payable, and the portions must be raised, although the only means of raising them may be the sale or mortgage of a reversionary term. The intention of the parties creating the portions is to govern. But if the principal is not raiseable till the death of the survivor of father or mother, though the title to the portion may be vested, interest on it will not be payable till that time, except on express words. Massy v. Lloyd, 10 H.L. Cas. 248.

Lord Cottenham's observations on this point (Lord Milltown v. Trench, 4 Cl. & F. 307-8) adopted. Ibid.

There is a distinction between the word "payable," when used in speaking of a sum payable to a beneficiary, and when used in speaking of a sum payable by a trustee. Ibid.

In a marriage settlement the estate was given to trustees on trust to pay the rents to the wife for life; to raise by sale or mortgage a sum of 10,000*l.* for a child of the wife by a former marriage, and also a sum of 500*l.* for a relative of the first husband, then, after the death of the wife, to pay 1,000*l.* a year to the husband for life; to raise 15,000*l.* for younger child or children, to be paid at such time, in such shares, and with such yearly interest as the wife should appoint, and, in default of appointment, at twenty-one or marriage, and until such portion should become payable, to raise money for the maintenance and education of the children as the wife should deem meet, not exceeding, &c.: Provided, that if there should be no younger child, or it should die before twenty-one or marriage, 5,000*l.* additional should be paid to the wife's daughter by the former marriage. The wife died in 1806, leaving a son and a daughter, both very young. The daughter attained twenty-one, and married in 1824. The father died in April, 1859. The Court of Chancery, in Ireland, had held that the principal sum of 15,000*l.*, though the right to it vested on the daughter marrying, could not be raised during the life of the father, but declared interest on that sum to have become payable from the date of her marriage. The decree of the Court of Chancery was reversed, and the cause remitted with directions that interest did not become payable till the death of the father. Ibid.

(b) By Statute, 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 42.

A letter of application for a loan until a day named therein, which does not shew an obligation to pay on the face of it, is not "an instrument by virtue of which the debt is payable at a certain time," within the meaning of the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 42. s. 28. Taylor v. Holt, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 1; 3 Hurls. & C. 452.

(B) RATE OF.

There is no general rule as to the rate of interest the Court will allow on repayment of consideration money, expressed in an absolute assignment, which is treated only as a security for such consideration money; and in a case where the assignee of a reversionary interest in a trust fund was the solicitor of the assignor, and also solicitor to the trust estate, and there was evidence of the assignment having been for an undervalue, the Court allowed interest at 5*l.* per cent. In re Unsworth's Trusts, 2 Dr. & S. 337.

(A) WHEN GRANTED.

The defendant had contracted with the plaintiff for the completion of some building works by the latter. The plaintiff did the work, and received part payment. Before the residue due under the contract was paid, C claimed the money from the defendant, alleging that the plaintiff was merely his agent in making the contract:—Held, that the defendant, who was willing to pay the money to the right party, was entitled to relief, probably under the old Interpleader Act, 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 58, but at all events, under section 12. of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860, which enables the Court or a Judge to direct an interpleader issue, "though the titles of the claimants to the money, &c. have not a common origin, but are adverse to and independent of one another." Meynell v. Angell, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 14.

The defendant was intrusted by the plaintiff with furniture, &c. to sell for him by auction, and the defendant having sold, and between 300*l.* and 400*l.* of the proceeds being still in his hands, the defendant received a notice from G that she claimed the goods. An action having been brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, to recover the balance in his hands, the defendant sought to deduct his charges for commission, &c., and asked for an interpleader order between the plaintiff and G as to the residue. G being willing to allow the defendant his charges, and to take the issue,—Held, that an order as prayed might be made (if not under the 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 58.) under section 12. of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860. Meynell v. Angell approved. Best v. Hayes, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 129; 1 Hurls. & C. 718.

An equitable claim is not the subject of an interpleader summons. Hurst v. Sheldon, 13 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 750.

W, by will, gave real and personal chattels (a colliery and implements) to his daughter, L B, a married woman (the plaintiff), for life, for her sole and separate use, appointing her executrix. The whole of the colliery business came into her possession (part under the will and part under a conveyance from a third person), and she carried it on as she alleged, for her own benefit, assisted by her husband. Some of these chattels, which were used in the colliery, having been seized by C, the now defendant, an execution creditor of her husband, under a judgment revived against him, the present issue was directed to try whether the chattels so seized were the property of the now plaintiff as against the now defendant. At the trial, the Judge left to the jury to say whether the plaintiff really carried on the business on her own account, or whether it was her husband's. The jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff, the Court discharged a rule obtained to set it aside. Bird v. Crabb, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 318.

(B) EFFECT OF VERDICT.

The plaintiff S had been married to B for eighteen years, and while living apart from him had bought, at different times, with money partly obtained from him and partly earned by herself, articles of household furniture, some before and some after the 6th of December 1860, on which day a decree nisi for a divorce for adultery proved to have been committed by her, in 1857, with G, had been pronounced, and which decree was made absolute on the 20th of March 1861. This furniture was placed by her in G's house. H, the defendant, had been retained by G, the co-respondent in the divorce suit, to appear for him as attorney, and had received from G a bill of exchange for his costs. This bill having been dishonoured, H issued a writ, got judgment and levied execution on the household furniture above mentioned, then being in G's house. On an interpleader summons, in the cause of H v. G, the issue was drawn up as follows:—"Whereas S S (the present plaintiff's maiden name) affirms and H F H (the present defendant) denies that the goods and chattels seized by the sheriff, under a certain writ of fi. fa. against the goods of T G, were at the time of the delivery, &c. the goods and chattels of the said S S. And the Court," &c. On the trial of this issue, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff as to all the goods:—The Court refused a rule for a new trial, holding that the defendant having consented to the issue being tried in that form, and the verdict having been found in the plaintiff's favour, the defendant ought not now to be allowed to set up the husband's title, whatever it might be, as against his wife, to deprive the plaintiff of the verdict, and refused to enter into the consideration of the plaintiff's title, as a married woman against her husband, or as affected by the decrees nisi and absolute for the divorce. Shingler v. Holt, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 322; 7 Hurls. & N. 65.

Quære—Whether, on an interpleader issue, equitable titles can be admitted? Ibid.

2.—INTERPLEADER, IN EQUITY.

(A) Bill for, when sustainable.

Where a plaintiff in an interpleader suit had, previously, set up a claim of lien, and had pleaded it in defence to an action at law,—Held, that there was no bar to an interpleader order being made on the terms of the plaintiff withdrawing his plea and paying the costs at law and in equity up to the time of such withdrawal. Jacobson v. Blackhurst, 2 Jo. & H. 486.

A mere stakeholder is justified, if there be the slightest doubt or risk arising from conflicting claims, in calling upon the person really interested on either side to indemnify him against such risk, and if he refuse or neglect to do so, in filing a bill of interpleader. Nelson v. Barter, 2 Hem. & M. 334.

An owner of an estate subject to a charge concerning which conflicting claims arose, was held entitled to file a bill in the nature of interpleader against the claimants to the money charged. Vyvyan v. Vyvyan, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 158; 30 Beav. 65.

(B) Practice in Suits.

The rule requiring an affidavit of no collusion to be annexed to a bill of interpleader is sufficiently complied with if the bill and an affidavit of no collusion, stating also other facts, are handed to the proper officer together; and a demurrer filed with notice that such an affidavit had been filed was, upon appeal (affirming the decision of Romilly, M.R.), overruled, with costs. Jones v. Shepherd, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) 404 (sub nom. Shepherd v. Jones); 3 De Gex, F. & J. 56.

JOINT TENANTS.

Several legatees entitled to a sum of money as joint-tenants in remainder expectant on the decease of a tenant for life, joined in mortgaging the share of one of them to the trustee of the fund, in consideration of an advance; and they jointly and severally covenanted with the trustee that if the money advanced should be more than the mortgaged share, the covenanting parties respectively, and their respective heirs, executors and administrators, would not demand from the trustee more than he should have in hand without reckoning the sum advanced, and would indemnify him against all costs, damages, &c. in consequence of the advance so made:—Held, that this amounted to a severance of the joint tenancy as regarded all the shares. Williams v. Hensman, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 878; 1 Jo. & H. 546.

How far an application by a joint tenant to the trustee of the fund for payment of his share will operate as a severance—quære. Ibid.

G, out of her own money, purchased fifty shares in a banking company, and caused them to be transferred into the names of herself and L. The dividends were, upon an authority signed by G and L, paid to the separate account of G at the bank; G also sold some of the shares, and G and L joined in the transfer to the purchaser. G died, leaving L surviving. Romilly, M.R., in a suit between the representatives of G and of L, decided that the transfer passed a complete legal title; that it created a joint tenancy; and that L, by survivorship, was absolutely entitled to the shares and to payment of the dividends which had accrued since the death of G:—Held, on appeal, (affirming the decree)—that the legal right to the shares vested in L by survivorship, and (dubitante Knight Bruce, L.J.) that there was no resulting trust in L in favour of G. Garrick v. Tayler, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 211; 29 Beav. 79: on appeal, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 68.

The several receipts by joint tenants of a portion of a trust fund do not destroy the joint tenancy as to the remainder of the fund. Leak v. Macdowall, 32 Beav. 28.

A testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to his nephews and nieces living at his death. But if any should be then dead their offspring were to be considered to stand in the place of their parents and to take "the same benefit":—Held, that though the nephews and nieces took as tenants in common, their offspring took as joint tenants. Ibid.

JUDGMENT.

[The law relating to future judgments, statutes, and recognizances, amended by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112.]

(A) Satisfaction.
(B) Plea in Bar, of Judgment recovered.
(C) Of Non Pros. by one of several Defendants.
(D) Non obstante Veredicto.
(E) Setting aside.
(F) Charge upon Lands.
  (a) When charged and upon what Property.
  (b) Priorities of.
  (c) Under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112.

(G) PRIORITY OF JUDGMENT CREDITOR IN ADMINISTRATION OF ASSETS.

(A) SATISFACTION.

A plaintiff upon signing judgment registered it in the Common Pleas pursuant to statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. He afterwards took the defendant in execution upon a ca. sa., and the defendant obtained his discharge under the Insolvent Act. Before the expiration of five years the plaintiff re-registered the judgment. The mortgagee of leasehold property of the defendant, acquired after his insolvency, contracted to sell it under a power of sale, but the purchaser refused to complete by reason of the re-registered judgment. The mortgagee applied to this Court, for an order on the plaintiff to attend the Master of the Common Pleas and consent to an entry on the register that the defendant was taken in execution by the plaintiff on the judgment:—Held, that this Court had no power to make the order. Hallett v. Dyne, ex parte Rolls, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 86; 2 Hurls. & C. 696.

(B) PLEA IN BAR, OF JUDGMENT RECOVERED.

Where the recovery of judgment by one of several joint-contractors in an action against him is pleaded by the others, as a defence to a subsequent action against them in respect of the same matter, the plea, to be good, must shew that the judgment was obtained on grounds of defence open to all the joint-contractors. Phillips v. Ward, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 7; 2 Hurls. & C. 717.

(C) OF NON PROS. BY ONE OF SEVERAL DEFENDANTS.

A plaintiff, after having issued a joint writ of summons against three defendants, all of whom jointly appeared, declared against two only; whereupon the third defendant gave the plaintiff notice to declare, and then signed judgment of non pros. as against himself:—Held, that the judgment was regular. Bancroft v. Greenwood, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 154; 1 Hurls. & C. 778.

(D) NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

Where the declaration is bad to which the defendant pleads bad pleas, the plaintiff cannot have judgment non obstante veredicto. Leigh v. Lillie, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 25; 6 Hurls. & N. 165.

(E) SETTING ASIDE.

The Court set aside a judgment signed against a married woman (sued as a feme sole), but without costs, there being some doubt upon the affidavits whether she had not, when she contracted the debt with the plaintiff, held herself out as being unmarried. Wilson v. Hollings, 11 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 783.

(F) CHARGE UPON LANDS.

(a) When charged and upon what Property.

Where a person is sued as executor, and allows judgment to go against him by default, such judgment is an admission of assets of his testator, and, as such, binds his own assets, real and personal; and, if registered, is entitled to priority over a judgment subsequently registered against the executor, and obtained in respect of one of his own proper debts. In re Higgins's Trusts, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 405; 2 Giff. 562.

Real estate, which was placed under the jurisdiction of the Court, by the remainderman, who charged the tenant for life with not keeping the property in repair, was sold, subject to the prior estate by the plaintiff in that suit, to one who had notice of the suit. Two days prior to the sale, however, a decree had been made, whereby the vendor was ordered to pay the costs of such suit, but the decree was not registered under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. s. 19, until after the sale. It appeared that the real estate which had been sold was the only property possessed by the vendor, and that the sale had been effected in order to enable his solicitor to obtain payment of his costs of the suit, and that by that transaction, the person whose costs of the suit had been ordered to be paid was deprived of them. Upon a bill by such last-mentioned person against the vendor, the purchaser, and the vendor's solicitor, seeking to have the property sold made liable to the costs which had been ordered to be paid,—it was held by one of the Vice Chancellors, that the real estate which had been sold remained subject in the hands of the purchaser to the above costs which had been ordered to be paid; and the vendor, the purchaser, and the vendor's solicitor, were ordered to pay such costs; and in default, it was ordered that the costs should be raised and paid out of the real estate sold to the purchaser; but, upon appeal, this decree was reversed, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Nortcliffe v. Warburton, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 777.

An order of the Court of Probate directing the payment of a sum of money does not by being registered with the senior Master of the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster constitute a valid charge on land. Pratt v. Bull, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 144; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 141; 4 Giff. 117.

Under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. s. 13, a judgment debt against a legatee is a charge upon property mortgaged to the testator to the extent of the legatee's interest therein. Avison v. Holmes, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 564; 1 Jo. & H. 530.

A judgment creditor within a year after entering up judgment, without previously issuing an elegit filed a bill against a prior mortgagee from the judgment debtor, and the judgment debtor seeking to redeem the former and foreclose the latter,—Held, that the suit was not maintainable. Godfrey v. Tucker, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 559; 33 Beav. 280.

The judgment creditor afterwards got in the mortgage, and maintained his bill, asking for an account and payment of the principal and interest due both on the judgment debt and mortgage, or, otherwise, for enclosure:—Held, that he could not sustain the bill by this new title to sue, and that it must be dismissed, with costs. Ibid.

(b) Priorities of.

The 13th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, giving to a judgment creditor the same remedies in equity as if the debtor had power to charge the hereditaments, and had, by writing, agreed to charge the same with the judgment debt and interest, does not make the judgment creditor a purchaser, and a subsequent judgment creditor will not be affected by notice thereof, unless it is duly registered. Benham v. Keane, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 129; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 318.

The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. does not repeal the Middlesex Registry Act, 7 Anne, c. 20, but the two are to be read together; and a judgment registered in the Common Pleas is no charge against land in Middlesex until entered on the Middlesex register under the latter act. Therefore, where a judgment creditor, having notice of a prior judgment registered in the Common Pleas, but not in Middlesex, registered his judgment in Middlesex before the earlier judgment was so registered, he was held, by Wood, V.C., entitled to priority, and this was affirmed on appeal to the Lords Justices. Ibid.

Secus as to a mortgagee having such notice. Ibid.

When a creditor has once registered his judgment in the Common Pleas, his rights, as against a prior judgment creditor, are not affected by his neglect to re-register; and this circumstance will not prevent his claiming priority over the earlier judgment by reason of his being first on the Middlesex register. Ibid.

The 2 Vict. c. 11, which makes judgments not registered every five years null and void against lands, &c., as to purchasers, mortgagees and creditors, applies to all purchasers, mortgagees and creditors deriving title through the debtor, whether directly from him or not. Ibid.

Therefore, where a purchaser with notice of a judgment debt then being on the register, afterwards mortgaged the estate, and at the date of the mortgage five years had elapsed without re-registration of the judgment, it was held, by Wood, V.C., and affirmed on appeal to the Lords Justices, that the mortgagee was not affected thereby. Ibid.

A judgment registered under the Yorkshire Registry Act, and not under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, will retain its priority over a judgment subsequently obtained, and registered both in the county and under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. Neve v. Flood, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 89; 33 Beav. 666.

A testator directed his real estates to be sold and the income of the proceeds to be divided between his sons for their lives. Before sale of the property and subsequently to the passing of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, a creditor obtained judgment against one of the sons and registered the same in the Common Pleas, but did not issue execution:—Held, that the judgment creditor must be postponed to subsequent judgment creditors and incumbrancers who had obtained charging orders on the proceeds of sale. Thomas v. Cross, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 580; 2 Dr. & S. 423.

Semble—That the interest of the son was not an "interest in land" within the meaning of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. s. 13. Ibid.

(c) Under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112.

The provision of the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112. s. 4, enabling a judgment creditor to whom land has been delivered in execution to obtain a summary order from the Court of Chancery for the sale of his debtor's interest in the land, applies only where the judgment has been entered up after the passing of the act. In re the Isle of Wight Ferry Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 194.

A judgment creditor, who had issued execution upon his judgment, which was entered up after the passing of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, filed his bill against prior mortgagees with power of sale, and the mortgagor, who was the judgment debtor, for redemption or foreclosure, and for an injunction to restrain the mortgagees from paying to the mortgagor the surplus of the proceeds of the mortgaged estate which might remain after paying the mortgage-money. The Court, upon an interlocutory application, granted an injunction to the above effect; and upon the hearing of the cause made a decree for redemption against the mortgagees, and for redemption or foreclosure against the mortgagor. Thornton v. Finch, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 466; 4 Giff. 515.

Semble—That the 1st section of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112. does not apply to an equity of redemption, inasmuch as such an interest in land cannot be delivered in execution. Ibid.

(G) Priority of Judgment Creditor in Administration of Assets.

The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38. s. 4. does not operate retrospectively. Therefore, where a judgment was registered in May 1840 against a debtor who died in 1846, and was not re-registered within five years before his death,—Held, in a suit for administering the estate of the debtor, that the judgment creditor was not deprived of his right to priority over the creditors of lower degree. Evans v. Williams, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 661; 2 Dr. & S. 324.

The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38. s. 3, providing that unregistered judgments shall have no preference in the administration of assets, does not apply to judgments obtained against a personal representative; and consequently such judgments, if obtained before decree, must, though not registered until after decree, be paid in preference to simple contract debts, and in order of priority according to the dates of their being entered up. In re Rigby; Jennings v. Rigby, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 149; 33 Beav. 198.

JURISDICTION.

[See Justice of the Peace—Rate—Sessions.]

(A) Of the Court of Assize.

The Court of Assize is a superior Court, having authority to issue a general warrant of commitment for contempt. Ex parte Fernandez, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 321; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 3.

A witness was fined and committed to prison for six months by a Court of Assize for contempt in not answering a question, and the warrant of commitment (which was headed "The Queen v. C. Yorkshire, to wit. At the assizes, held at &c. before two of Her Majesty's Justices assigned to take the said assizes according to the statute, &c.") stated the contempt, but did not set out the question, or state that a jury had been sworn:—Held, first, that the commitment for a time certain was no excess of jurisdiction; secondly, that it was no ground of objection that the warrant did not state specifically that a jury had been sworn, it appearing from the facts stated therein that the proceedings took place upon a trial before a jury; and thirdly, that it was no ground of objection that the question was not set out. Per Willes, J.—It was not for the witness, but the Judge to determine whether the question was one which the witness was bound to answer. Quære, per Byles, J.—Whether there was any necessity for a warrant. Ibid.

(B) OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY.

(a) In general.

The jurisdiction of this Court to administer the subsequently acquired property of an insolvent is not ousted by the operation of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. Galsworthy v. Durrant, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 402; 29 Beav. 276.

This Court has jurisdiction to entertain a bill at the suit of the Commissioners of Sewers appointed under 23 Hen. 8. c. 5, notwithstanding that such Commissioners are a court of record. Crossman v. the Bristol and South Wales Union Rail. Co., 1 Hem. & M. 531.

The plaintiff filed a bill for an injunction against the Secretary-at-War, as an officer of the Crown. The defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff's remedy was by petition of right and not by bill, put in no appearance, but raised the question of jurisdiction. The plaintiff, after the usual time had expired, moved for leave to enter an appearance for the defendant:—Held, that the Court could not recognize the right of any subject of the Crown to refuse to appear. The question of jurisdiction should be argued after appearance, upon demurrer or otherwise. Motion granted. Felkin v. Lord Herbert, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 604; 1 Dr. & S. 608.

Although, in the lifetime of a tenant for life, the Court has no jurisdiction upon a special case, to declare whether an interest, limited in remainder, is vested, or void for remoteness, yet it is competent for the Court to declare whether a person claiming in remainder takes such an interest in the property as to entitle him to file a bill to have it secured for his benefit. Bell v. Cade, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 383; 2 Jo. & H. 122.

The Court of Chancery, in the exercise of its ordinary equitable jurisdiction, can entertain a suit against a committee of a lunatic's estate, asking for an account of his dealings therewith during the period of his committee-ship. Scammell v. Light, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 53; 4 Giff. 127.

Where, therefore, persons claiming under the will of a deceased lunatic, made prior to his lunacy, instituted a suit against the committee of his estate, whom he had appointed as his executor, alleging fraudulent dealings on the part of the committee with the estate of the lunatic during his committee-ship, and praying for the usual administration decree, and for an account of his dealings with the lunatic's estate during such committee-ship, a demurrer by the committee to so much of the bill as asked for the account as last mentioned, upon the ground that the Court of Chancery had not jurisdiction to take such account, and that it should be taken in lunacy, was overruled. Ibid.

The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery under the Trustee Relief Act does not extend beyond the fund actually paid into court; and the Court cannot, upon petition under that act, order a trustee to refund moneys retained by him for costs. In re Barber's Will, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 709.

The ordinary jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to set aside an award is not ousted by the powers conferred by the Common Law Procedure Act, and the Bankruptcy Act, 1849, of making every agreement to refer a rule of Court; a Court of equity is not bound, in a case where no agreement exists to make the submission a rule of Court, to adopt by analogy the rules introduced by the common law Courts as to the time for setting aside awards. Smith v. Whitmore, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 713; 1 Hem. & M. 576; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 297.

Where a bill is not framed to establish a will and the heir does not dispute it,—Semble, that the Court has no jurisdiction to declare against the heir as a defendant the construction of a strictly legal devise, as regards the quantum of the subject-matter. But, if the heir elects to be dismissed, the Court will make such a declaration for the guidance of the trustee. Stanley v. Stanley, 2 Jo. & H. 491.

The Court has jurisdiction to order the delivery up to an artist of a picture painted by himself, as having a special value, the legal remedy being inadequate. But, where by the terms of an agreement and the frame of the pleadings the plaintiff, an artist seeking restitution of a picture, had in effect put a fixed price upon it,—Held, that damages would be an adequate remedy, and that there was no jurisdiction in a Court of equity to interfere. Dowling v. Betjeman, 2 Jo. & H. 544.

The Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to entertain the suit of an insolvent debtor to set aside a sale alleged to have been collusively made under the insolvency, notwithstanding he may not have obtained a revesting order or an order to annul the proceedings. Troup v. Ricardo, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 91.

A bill was filed by T (against whom a vesting order in insolvency had been obtained, but all whose debts had been fully discharged) against a mortgagee from him, the assignees under his insolvency, and certain purchasers of the mortgaged property, alleging that by collusion between the mortgagee and the assignees the former was enabled to establish a larger claim than he was entitled to, and also that by collusion between the mortgagee, the assignees, and purchasers, the mortgaged property had been sold to the latter at a considerable undervalue, and praying that an account might be taken of what was due on the mortgage, and that the sale might be set aside. No revesting order or order to annul the proceedings in the insolvency had been obtained; but the bill alleged that an application, by the plaintiff, for such an order to the Commissioner in Insolvency had been refused, except upon the terms of his confirming the acts complained of. Upon demurrer, by the purchasers, for want of equity and multifariousness,—Held, by the Lord Chancellor (reversing the decision of the Master of the Rolls), that the demurrer must be overruled. Ibid.

The jurisdiction of the Court to enforce a trust attaches equally upon ecclesiastical property affected thereby as it would upon lay property similarly circumstanced — per Turner, L.J. The Attorney General v. the Master and Co-brethren of the Hospital of St. John, Bedford, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 441.

The Court of Chancery cannot entertain an objection that an order was made by the Lords Justices in Lunacy in the absence of proper parties. Harvey v. Trenchard, 34 Beav. 240.

In December 1859, M J G eloped from her husband, J H G, there being at that time two children of the marriage. Proceedings for obtaining a divorce were immediately commenced by J H G; a decree nisi was pronounced on the 13th of February 1861, and made absolute on the 22nd of May 1861. On the 4th of May 1861, M J G was delivered of a full-grown male child. In order to determine the status of this child, J H G, in January 1862, vested 2,000*l.* reduced annuities, in trustees, upon trust for "all and every the children then living of the marriage of J H G and M J G," and a suit was instituted seeking that the rights of the parties interested under this settlement might be declared, and the trusts of the settlement might be carried out under the direction of the Court:—Held, that although the real object of the settlor might be, and probably was, to obtain a decision from the Court that the child in question was illegitimate, and although the decision of the Court might affect property of far greater value, those circumstances were not sufficient to warrant the Court in withholding the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction. Gurney v. Gurney, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 456; 1 Hem. & M. 413.

A suit such as that above mentioned is not properly a fictitious suit, but is rather analogous to the class of cases in which a fund is settled on an infant with the view of founding an application to the Court respecting the custody of the infant's person. Ibid.

Semble—That if the settlement had been made by a mere stranger with a malicious or improper motive, the Court could have declined to exercise jurisdiction. Ibid.

The Court will not entertain a suit for the administration of a trust which has been created for the purpose of obtaining a trial, in an indirect manner, of the question of legitimacy or illegitimacy of an infant—(per Westbury, L.C.). Cooke v. Cooke, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 459; anon. 2 Hem. & M. 124.

Gurney v. Gurney (1 Hem. & M. 413; 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 456) dissented from. Ibid.

In 1863 a sum of 1,000*l.* stock was settled in trust for the children or child of the marriage of W R C C with H E T, and in default of any such child, in trust for the benefit of C E S C and his children. At the date of the settlement the marriage had been dissolved, and there was one child, whose legitimacy it was the avowed object of the settlement to try, by means of a suit for carrying out the trusts thereby created. C E S C then filed a bill against the child and the trustee of the settlement praying that the trusts of the settlement might be carried into execution, and that it might be declared that there was no child of the marriage. The child disclaimed all interest in the trust fund; and it appearing that the settlor had no interest in the question of legitimacy or illegitimacy, and that neither W R C C nor H E T desired to raise the question, Wood, V.C., distinguishing the case from that of Gurney v. Gurney, dismissed the bill with costs; and upon appeal Westbury, L.C., affirmed the decree, expressing at the same time his dissent from the principles and reasoning on which the decision in Gurney v. Gurney was founded. Ibid.

The Master of the Rolls declined to direct a writ of prohibition to issue to the Court of Chancery of the County Palatine of Lancaster in respect of an order for taxation, his Honour being of opinion that the proper course was to appeal to the appellate Court constituted by the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 82. Ex parte Williams, 34 Beav. 371.

(b) Remedy at Law or in Equity.

Where an action at law has been actually commenced for the purpose of determining a legal right, the Court of Chancery will not, upon a bill, filed after the commencement of such action, seeking relief, the title to which is dependent upon the legal right, assume as of course exclusive jurisdiction under the Chancery Regulation Act, 1862, to restrain the proceedings in the action. Curlewis v. Carter, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 369.

The Court of Chancery has not jurisdiction to entertain a bill filed by an heir-at-law against a devisee to set aside a will on the ground of imbecility on the part of the testator, and of the exercise upon him of undue influence, no obstacles existing to prevent the heir-at-law from bringing an ejectment. Jones v. Gregory, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 679; 2 De Gex, J. & S. 83.

On questions of account, Courts of equity and Courts of law possess concurrent jurisdiction, and the decision as to the proper tribunal must be governed by considerations of convenience. Shepard v. Brown, 4 Giff. 208.

In building contracts this Court interferes in two cases: first, where there is collusion between the employed and the architect to injure the contractor; and secondly, where the accounts are too complicated to be taken at law. If neither of these exist, the remedy of the contractors is at law. Bliss v. Smith, 34 Beav. 508.

(c) In respect of Property out of the Jurisdiction.

A suit, by a plaintiff in England, against defendants, also residing in England, to enforce a lien on real estate in Prussia, can only be sustained by special circumstances arising out of the dealings between the parties; but where no privity existed between the plaintiff and the defendants, and where the principal parties were Prussians, and not amenable to the jurisdiction of the Court, the bill was dismissed. Norris v. Chambres, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 285; 29 Beav. 246; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 583.

If a plaintiff in this court makes out a case which entitles him to a declaration of lien upon the real estate of a defendant out of the jurisdiction, this Court will make it, and in some cases will grant a receiver; but it will leave the plaintiff to make it available or not, as he can, by means of the foreign tribunals. Ibid.

The Courts of this country will assist foreign tribunals to unravel complications; and they will, so far as the law allows, and so far as their jurisdiction extends, carry into effect the judgments of foreign Courts when legally brought under their cognizance. Ibid.

The plaintiff, being in England, filed a bill for an account against the executors of a deceased partner, some of whom were in England, but acting in concert with the others, who were in Jamaica; the partnership property being also in Jamaica:—Held, upon a plea to the jurisdiction by the executors resident in Jamaica, that the suit was properly instituted in this country. Hendrick v. Wood, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 583.

The fiction that the Queen is at all times present in all parts of her dominions does not give jurisdiction to the Courts in this country, acting in personam, to entertain a petition of right in respect of lands situate in a colony, and vested in Her Majesty for the purposes of the province by an act of the provincial legislature. Holmes v. Regina (the Petition of Right of James Manger Holmes and others), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 58; sub nom. In re Holmes, 2 Jo. & H. 527.

A, resident in England, and the sole member of a Liverpool firm, entered into a partnership with B and C, residents in Hayti, in a business carried on at Hayti. The Liverpool firm acted as the agents of the Haytian firm. B was admitted as a partner in the Liverpool firm, C died, and the winding up of the Haytian firm was committed by agreement to A and B. Then A died, leaving B sole survivor in each firm. B and the Haytian legal representative of C engaged in cross-suits in Hayti in which certain settled accounts were established. The representative of A, whose assets were all in England, was not a party to the Haytian suit:—Held, on a bill filed by the administrator of C in England, that there was no jurisdiction in the Court of Chancery to wind up the partnership in Hayti and to take the accounts of that firm, and of the agency of the Liverpool firm; and decree accordingly. Maunder v. Lloyd, 2 Jo. & H. 719.

Held also, that the law of Hayti was to regulate the transactions of the Haytian firm. Ibid.

A fund belonging to foreigners out of the jurisdiction was by arrangement among them sent by A, one of their number, to English agents for distribution among the persons entitled. A having endeavoured to get back the fund and misapply it, one of the foreigners interested filed a bill to restrain the misapplication and for the administration of the fund. A plea to the jurisdiction by the English agents was disallowed, although the fund was not so invested as to enable the Court to order service on the defendants abroad. The Central Railroad and Banking Co. of Georgia v. Mitchell, 2 Hem. & M. 452.

(d) Over Persons out of the Jurisdiction.

Leave was given to serve an administration summons (relating to stock and shares in England) on a defendant abroad. Cohen v. Alcan, 1 De Gex, J. & S. 398.

The power of the Court to direct process to be served on a defendant out of the jurisdiction, and to proceed upon such service as if it had been made within the jurisdiction, is confined entirely to such suits as answer the description contained in the 2 Will. 4. c. 33. and the 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 82; and the language of the 7th rule of the 10th Consolidated Order is ultra vires so far as it relates to suits which do not answer that description. Cookney v. Anderson, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 427; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 365; 31 Beav. 452; see also Samuel v. Rogers, 1 De Gex, J. & S. 396. Foley v. Maillardet, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 335; 1 De Gex, J. & S. 389.—(Cookney v. Anderson and Foley v. Maillardet have since been overruled by Drummond v. Drummond, 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 780.)

(C) OF THE COURT OF SESSION.

The Court of Session has no power to alter, vary or discharge any order of this Court made under the jurisdiction of the Great Seal, which is as much the Great Seal of Scotland as of England. The Marquess of Bute v. Stuart, 2 Giff. 582.

(D) IN RESPECT OF FOREIGN SOVEREIGNS AND THEIR AMBASSADORS.

Courts of law cannot take cognizance of acts of power exercised by governments in matters of state arising out of war. But they will preserve the private rights of sovereign princes, if by so doing the sovereign acts of the State are not interfered with. Veer Rajundur Wadeer v. the East India Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 226; sub nom. Rajah of Coorg v. the East India Co., 29 Beav. 300.

If a foreign power takes prisoner an enemy, and gets possession of documents establishing his right to a debt due from another to him in his private capacity, the prisoner is entitled to relief; and the circumstance of the foreign power being also the debtor will not alter the right. Ibid.

A tributary prince, in his public character held a part of the funded debt of his paramount sovereignty. He did acts which brought on a war, in which he was deposed by the paramount sovereignty, and taken prisoner, and his property confiscated; and the notes which represented such part of the funded debt subsequently came into the hands of the paramount power, and were treated as forfeited. Upon a bill by the deposed prince,—Held, that this Court could not interfere with the sovereign and political acts exercised by the paramount sovereignty. Ibid.

The Court will, at the instance of a foreign sovereign at amity with this country, protect the property to which he is entitled as sovereign, or of his subjects, being represented by him, where a damage to such property is done or threatened by persons resident within the jurisdiction of the Court, and such injury is alleged in the bill. The Emperor of Austria v. Day, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 690; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 217; 2 Giff. 628.

Where, therefore, certain persons resident in this country had manufactured documents which purported to be the notes of a foreign state, the Court, upon a bill filed by the sovereign of that state, alleging (among other things) that the introduction of such notes into it would cause great detriment to his subjects, directed the manufacturers to deliver up to be destroyed the notes and the plates from which the notes had been manufactured, and granted an injunction to restrain such persons from manufacturing documents purporting to be notes of that state. Ibid.

Semble—Per Turner, L.J., differing from Stuart, V.C., the Court will not interfere to protect the invasion of a mere sovereign right of a foreign sovereign. Ibid.

By Lord Campbell, L.C., and Knight Bruce, L.J., and Turner, L.J., overruling Stuart, V.C., the Court will not interfere to prevent the use in this country of the royal arms of a foreign state. Ibid.

Although the Courts in this country cannot make an order against a foreign ambassador who does not submit himself to the jurisdiction, yet the Court of Chancery will restrain a third party from handing over to him a fund the right to which is in dispute, notwithstanding his title to the fund may be absolute at law. Gladstone v. Musurus Bey, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 155; 1 Hem. & M. 495.

By a concession from the Turkish Government certain persons were authorized to furm a bank, to be called the Bank of Turkey, with the sole privilege of issuing paper-money and bank-notes in Turkey. Shortly afterwards, and before the Bank of Turkey had commenced business, the Turkish Government granted a similar concession to the directors of the Ottoman Bank. A bill was filed by the Bank of Turkey against the Ottoman Bank and the Sultan, seeking a declaration of the rights of the Bank of Turkey, and an injunction to restrain the Ottoman Bank from issuing paper-money or bank-notes in Turkey:—Held, on demurrer, that the Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the acts of a foreign sovereign, who, having entered into a contract with British subjects, makes a grant in derogation of that contract, nor to restrain British subjects from doing in a foreign country whatever they are authorized to do by the sovereign power there. Gladstone v. the Ottoman Bank, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 229; 1 Hem. & M. 505.

JURY.

[Greater facilities for summoning persons to serve on juries, and for other purposes relating thereto, provided by the Juries Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 107.]

Discharge of Jury.

On the trial of an information by the Attorney General for bribery, a material witness for the prosecution refused to answer a question put to him; and the Judge, holding that he was bound to answer it, adjudged him guilty of contempt; and thereupon, and for no other reason, at the request of the counsel for the prosecution, the defendant objecting, the Judge discharged the jury. The above facts having been entered on the record, the defendant moved for judgment quod eat sine die, and that all further proceedings on the information be stayed. The Court discharged the rule (per Wightman, J., Crompton, J. and Blackburn, J.) on the ground that, assuming the discharge of the jury under the circumstances stated on the record to have been improper, the defendant was not entitled to judgment or to a stay of jury process: Cockburn, C.J., inclining to the same opinion, but holding that in a case of doubt the Court ought not to interfere. The Queen v. John Barff Charlesworth, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 25; 1 Best & S. 460.

Semble—That the discharge of the jury is a matter of practice in the discretion of the Judge; but that the power ought not to be exercised without very strong reasons. Ibid.

Semble, by Wightman, J. and Crompton, J. that the discharge of the jury in the present case was improper: By Blackburn, J., that it was right: Cockburn, C.J., inclining to the latter opinion. Ibid.

The Court refused to allow the defendant to add a plea puis darrein continuance, stating the above facts; on the ground that this would be to allow double pleading, and also because, the facts being set out on the record, the defendant could take advantage of them. Ibid.

Direction to Reconsider Verdict.

A Judge is not bound to receive the first verdict which the jury give. He may direct them to reconsider it. The verdict which the jury ultimately return is the true verdict to be recorded. R. v. Meany, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 24; 1 L. & C. 213.

(A) JURISDICTION AND DUTY.

(a) In general.

That part of the sea-shore which lies between high and low water-mark is within and part of the adjoining county, so that the Justices of the county have jurisdiction to take cognizance of offences committed thereon, whether the land be covered with water or not at the time the offences shall be committed. Embleton v. Brown, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 1; 3 E. & E. 234.

The 13th section of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. cviii. empowers certain persons to make a rate upon the owners of Stratford Abbey Lands; and section 15. empowers a Justice, on proof of demand and refusal to pay, to enforce payment by distress-warrant; section 16. requires the warrant to be directed to the collector; section 36. gives power of appeal against the rate to any person claiming exemption on the ground that the lands rated are not abbey lands; and by section 42. the decision of the Quarter Sessions on appeal is final. The plaintiff having been rated and refused to pay, D, a Justice, issued a distress-warrant directed to S, the collector, who executed it. The plaintiff sued D and S in trespass, and the jury found that the land, in respect of which the rate was made, was not abbey land:—Held, first, that the plaintiff was not bound to appeal to the Sessions, but might try the validity of the rate by an action of trespass; secondly, that D had acted without jurisdiction, and was liable in such action, and not protected by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44; thirdly, that S being the person to whom the warrant was directed (7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. cviii. s. 16), and who was required to execute it, was an officer of the law, and protected by the 24 Geo. 2. c. 24. s. 6. Pedley v. Davis, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 374; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 492.

If an assistant overseer apprehend a man for leaving his wife and children chargeable to the parish, and, by direction of the parish officers, bring him before a magistrate and charge him with such desertion, the magistrate is not justified in refusing to entertain the charge because the proceedings have been taken without the direction of the board of guardians. R. v. Mirehouse, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 90.

Where, by an act of parliament, power is conferred upon Justices to issue a distress warrant, "if they shall think fit," they must not refuse to issue it merely because they think the act of parliament does an injustice in giving such power in the particular case. Therefore, where the overseer of a parish, which had been an extra-parochial place but had been duly annexed to a union, was ordered by the board of guardians of the union to pay certain money towards the common fund, and he refused to pay such money,—Held, that Justices could not refuse to issue their warrant, under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 84. s. 1, to distrain the goods of the overseer, merely because they thought it unjust that such extra-parochial place should be compelled to contribute to the common fund of the union. R. v. Boteler, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 101.

The appellants were apprehended and charged before Justices with setting fire to the letters in a pillar letter-box. Witnesses were examined in support of the charge, and the appellants were remanded on bail to appear again before the Justices. They did so appear and were represented respectively by attorneys, and were informed that they would be charged under section 52. of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97; and the attorneys were asked whether the appellants would plead guilty to such charge, or whether further evidence should be offered in support of the same. In answer to this they told the attorney for the prosecution that he must go on and prove his case, whereupon other witnesses were called and examined and cross-examined. After the case was closed, the attorneys for the appellants objected that the Justices had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as there was no information on oath, and the appellants were not found committing the offence, and therefore were not legally in custody. The Justices, however, committed the appellants:—Held, that they had jurisdiction to do so. Turner v. the Postmaster General, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 10; 5 Best & S. 756.

(b) Convictions.

Where a complaint of a criminal nature is made before Justices, which, upon the evidence, amounts to an offence not within their jurisdiction to determine, it is their duty either to dismiss the complaint, or commit the person charged for trial by a jury. And where an information charged a man with unlawfully assaulting and abusing a woman, and the only evidence was that of the woman, who swore to a rape, it was held the Justices ought either to have committed the prisoner for trial, or, if they disbelieved the woman, to have dismissed the case; and that they were not justified in convicting the man, under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, of an aggravated assault. In re Thompson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 19; 6 Hurls. & N. 193.

The prisoner had been convicted by Justices, under the 9 Geo. 4. c. 31. and the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, of an aggravated assault, upon the information and complaint of a woman, charging that he did unlawfully assault and abuse her. It appeared, on affidavits, that upon the evidence the charge was one of rape. Upon a rule nisi for a habeas corpus ad subjiciendum,—Held, per Pollock, C.B. and Wilde, B., that the offence charged was not an assault of an aggravated nature, within the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30; but an assault involving a statutory offence of a distinct character, over which the Justices had no jurisdiction, and that the writ ought to issue. Per Bramwell, B. and Channell, B., that there was nothing in the information and complaint to prevent the Justices entertaining a charge of assault, and that the charge being within their jurisdiction, they were at liberty to exercise it, and convict of an aggravated assault, if they thought upon the evidence that an offence, and not a felony, had been committed; and that the writ ought not to go. Ibid.

It is the duty of Justices summarily convicting to cause the conviction to be lodged with the clerk of the peace, pursuant to section 14. of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, and on proof of neglect to do so in any particular instance, proceedings may be had against them; but the clerk to the Justices, being only their servant, a mandamus cannot be granted to compel him to lodge all the convictions which have been made by the Justices during a certain period. Ex parte Hayward, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 89; 3 Best & S. 546.

Upon the hearing of an information for an assault, the Justices have jurisdiction to convict the defendant of that offence, although evidence be given which, if true, would prove that not only had the complainant been assaulted, but that a rape had been committed upon her. Wilkinson v. Dutton, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 152; 3 Best & S. 821.

(c) Ouster of Jurisdiction.

Upon a summary proceeding before Justices their jurisdiction is not ousted by the bona fid claim of a right which cannot exist at law. Therefore, on the hearing of an information, under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 24, for "unlawfully and wilfully" fishing in a non-navigable river, being the private fishery of another, a claim on the part of the defendant as one of the public to fish in the river does not oust the Justices of jurisdiction, as such a right cannot possibly be acquired. Hudson v. M'Rae, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 65.

On such an information, the bona fide belief of the defendant that he had a right to fish does not prevent his being convicted, a guilty mind not being a necessary ingredient to constitute the offence. Ibid.

(B) RULE TO COMPEL ISSUE OF DISTRESS WARRANT.

Where magistrates have convicted of penalties on matters within their jurisdiction, and the convictions are regular in form, and there is no legal reason shewn why the parties convicted have not paid the penalties, the Court will feel bound to grant a rule under the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44. s. 5, to the magistrates to issue warrants to levy the amounts, and have no discretion to refuse to do so on the ground of some supposed hardship in the number of the convictions or the amount of the costs. In re Hartley, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 232.

(C) APPEAL FROM, UNDER 20 & 21 VICT. C. 43.

(a) When it lies.

Under two local acts of parliament, by which the rates of a parish were regulated, an appeal was given against any rate to the next Quarter Sessions, and it was to be enforced by summons before two Justices, who were to order the payment, and (if necessary) grant a warrant of distress, if the person summoned "did not prove to them that he was not chargeable with or liable to pay such rate":—Held, that this only gave the Justices a power similar to that in enforcing a poor-rate, and that they had no jurisdiction to inquire into the validity of a rate good on the face of it, and that they had no jurisdiction to "determine" anything "in a summary way," within the meaning of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, so as to give them power to state a case under that act. Ex parte May, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 161; 2 Best & S. 426.

(b) Notice of Appeal.

If notice of appeal under the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. s. 2. be not given to the respondent before the case is lodged in court, the case will be struck out. It is not sufficient to post the notice of appeal to the respondent within the three days allowed for lodging the case, if it does not reach the respondent until the day after the case is transmitted to the office. Ashdown v. Curtis, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 216.

(c) Transmission of Case to the Court.

A case stated and signed by the Justices under the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, and delivered to the appellant, becomes wholly inoperative, and no appeal can be had upon it, unless the appellant transmit it to the Court within three days after he has received it from the Justices. If after the expiration of the three days the case remain in the appellant's hands, and he take it back to the Justices, the Justices have no power of amending it; and although they do so in fact, the appellant does not gain a further period of three days from the date of the amendment for transmitting the case to the Court. The Local Board of Gloucester v. Chandler, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 66.

The provision in the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. s. 2, as to transmitting a case stated by Justices to the Court, within three days after receiving the case, applies when the attorney for the appellant sends the case to his London agent, for the purpose of being lodged in court, but the agent retains it in his office by mistake, and thus prevents it from being actually lodged in court within the three days. Banks v. Goodwin, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 87; 3 Best & S. 548.

Quære, if it be sent by post in due course and does not reach court in time. Ibid.

G, an attorney in a county town, instructed by the London attorneys of the party interested, attended to resist a summons before Justices in the county town. The Justices decided against the party, who, being dissatisfied, sent the Justices a written notice demanding a case to be stated under the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. The Justices stated the case and sent it to G on Thursday, who the next day forwarded it to the London attorneys. The latter deposited the case in the office of the Court on the Monday following:—Held, that G had presumably authority to receive the case for the appellant, and that as the case had not been transmitted to the Court within three days after it had been received, the provisions of the 2nd section of the abovementioned statute had not been complied with, and consequently that the appeal must be struck out. Pennell v. the Churchwardens of Uxbridge, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 92.

(d) Costs.

The successful party in an appeal from Justices in Petty Sessions under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, if allowed costs by the Court, is entitled to the costs of preparing and amending the case, beyond the fees allowed to the Justices' clerk by section 3. and Schedule (A). Glover v. Booth, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 270; 2 Best & S. 807.

A local board of health applied to Justices to enforce payment from S of the expenses of certain works which they had lawfully required S to do, and which on his default they themselves had done. The Justices, on an objection taken by S, declined to order payment. The local board thereupon appealed to the Court of Queen's Bench against the decision of the Justices. S did not take any part in the stating of the case, nor did he appear to argue in the Court of Queen's Bench. That Court, after hearing the appellants, decided in their favour:—Held, that the respondent, though he did not appear, was liable to the costs of the appeal. The Wednesbury Local Board v. Stephenson, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 111.

On a case stated by way of appeal from Justices, the party in support of the complaint below is entitled to begin—Jones v. Taylor confirmed. Ellis v. Kelly, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 35; 6 Hurls & N. 222.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

[See Lease—Nuisance—Use and Occupation.]

---

(A) The Tenancy.

(a) Tenancy at Will.

The plaintiff took, and was let into possession of land, for the purpose of building according to a plan agreed upon, and at a rent fixed, without any agreement in writing, and without any parol agreement for a lease for a term of years, after which the plaintiff expended a considerable sum in buildings according to the plan, and continued in possession for several years and duly paid the rent verbally fixed. The defendant, as landowner, having brought an action of ejectment, insisted that the plaintiff was merely tenant at will:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction and to relief in equity. Thornton v. Ramsden, 4 Giff. 519.

The bill prayed, in the alternative, for a lease or for compensation. A private act of parliament having authorized leases for a certain duration and on certain specific terms to be granted, in cases nearly similar, where there was no written agreement, and it having been the usage on the estate to double the rent when a lease was executed, the Court decreed a lease to the plaintiff, according to the act of parliament and at the double rent. Ibid.

(b) Tenancy from Year to Year.

A tenant from year to year of houses destroyed by fire insuring is not limited in his claim on the insurance company to the extent of his interest in the property insured. Simpson v. the Scottish, &c. Insur. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 329; 1 Hem. & M. 618.

Per Wood, V.C., where a tenancy from year to year is determinable upon six months' notice to quit, a notice given six lunar months prior to the expiration of the year is sufficient to determine the tenancy. Rogers v. the Dock Co. at Kingston-upon-Hull, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 165.

(c) Demise by one Joint Tenant to another.

One or two joint-tenants may demise his or their portion to another, so as to create the relationship of landlord and tenant between them, with a right to distrain in respect of rent in arrear. Thus, three co-executors may agree that one shall hold land, devised to them in trust, at a fixed rent, and if the rent falls into arrear, he may be distrained upon in respect of it. Cowper v. Fletcher, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 187; 6 Best & S. 464.

Semble, also, that when he has taken possession and has paid rent, he would be estopped from denying their right to distrain. Ibid.

(d) Surrender.

A mortgagor before mortgage let a farm to P as tenant from year to year. After the mortgage, P let the defendant into possession in his stead, and informed the mortgagor of the fact, and the mortgagor subsequently received the rent from the hands of the defendant:—Held, that the tenant's term was still in P, there being no effectual surrender, and consequently that the mortgagee could not maintain ejectment against the defendant without a notice to quit. Cadle v. Moody, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 385.

A tenant from year to year, at a rent payable quarterly under the terms of a written agreement, having ceased to occupy the premises held by him in the middle of a quarter, tendered the key to his landlord; this the landlord refused to accept; but the tenant having left it behind him, the landlord in the course of the ensuing quarter made use of it to obtain access to the premises, and he also placed up a board on the premises stating that they were to let. In the following quarter he painted out the defendant's name, which was over the door of the premises, and cleaned and repaired them:—Held, in an action brought by the landlord to recover the rent for the last two quarters, that he was not entitled to maintain such an action, for that there had been a surrender of the premises by operation of law, by agreement between the parties, followed by a taking possession on the part of the landlord. Phené v. Popplewell, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 235; 12 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 334.

(e) Notice to Quit.

The defendant became tenant to the plaintiff of a public-house on a verbal agreement, at the rent paid by the outgoing tenant N, and having purchased the goodwill, fixtures, &c. of N, entered into possession on the 7th of September 1858. On the 19th of October the plaintiff called for his Michaelmas rent, which the defendant paid, having received part of it from N, and the plaintiff gave the defendant a receipt as for rent due from N. The defendant paid the Christmas quarter, and the plaintiff gave him a receipt as for rent due from him (the defendant). On the 24th of March the plaintiff gave the defendant notice to quit "on the 29th day of September next, provided your tenancy originally commenced at that time of the year; or otherwise that you quit and deliver up possession at the end of the year of your tenancy, which shall expire next after the end of one half-year from the time of your being served with this notice." The plaintiff received his rent at Christmas 1859, and on the 9th of December served the defendant with notice to quit on the 24th of June then next (Midsummer). Evidence was given on behalf of the plaintiff, that when the defendant was served with this second notice, he did not then object that his tenancy was a Michaelmas, and not a Midsummer tenancy; but said that the plaintiff might have the house if he paid him a compensation for the fixtures and goodwill. There was other evidence tendered, and contradictory evidence given as to the terms of the verbal agreement for the tenancy, and no evidence as to the time of the commencement or expiration of the tenancy of N, or of any of the preceding tenants of the same premises. At the trial of an ejectment to recover possession of the premises, the Judge having withdrawn from the jury all the evidence, excepting the statement made by the defendant when served with the second notice to quit, and the jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff, the Court (dissentiente Martin, B.) made absolute a rule for a new trial. Per Bramwell, B., there was evidence of a tenancy ending at Michaelmas. Per Wilde, B., it was a question for the jury when the tenancy began, and all the evidence which bore upon that question ought to have been left to them. Per Martin, B., there was no evidence that the tenancy commenced at Michaelmas; and the only question for the jury was, whether, from the defendant's admission when served with the second notice to quit, they could infer that the original tenancy had commenced at Midsummer. Walker v. Godé, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 172; 6 Hurls. & N. 594.

Tenants of parish lands at 12*s.* an acre disputed their liability to pay more than 4*s.* an acre for the lands, on the ground that there had been an agreement with the overseers to reduce the rent to 4*s.* At a vestry meeting on the subject, at which most of the tenants were present, one of them said that the land was theirs at 4*s.* an acre:—Held, to be no disclaimer so as to dispense with giving the tenants a proper notice to quit. Hunt v. Allgood, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 313; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 253.

Semble—That a yearly tenancy might be implied from the circumstances under which the parties had held. Ibid.

The defendant, who had been a weekly tenant of a cottage to one M up to M's death, paid rent for a short time afterwards to a person who claimed under a supposed devise by M, but he ceased to do so on receiving notice of the plaintiffs' claim to the cottage, as the heirs-at-law of M; and when he was applied to for rent by the plaintiffs' agent, the defendant said he would pay no more rent till he knew who was the proper owner:—Held, that the defendant's tenancy, being a weekly tenancy, could not be determined without some notice, and that what was said by the defendant to the plaintiffs' agent did not amount to a disclaimer so as to dispense with giving notice. Jones v. Mills, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 66; 10 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 788.

Quære—What notice is required in the case of a weekly tenancy. Ibid.

Semble, per Williams, J.—a week's notice. Ibid.

(f) Eviction.

The rent of four houses demised for a term of years being in arrear, and the lessee having assigned his lease, and two of the houses being unoccupied, the lessor took possession of those two, first, by putting a police constable in charge of them, and, subsequently, by putting a person in possession under a parol agreement to grant a lease of the four houses as soon as possession of the two others was obtained. The lessor, some months afterwards, distrained on the goods of the persons in possession of the two other houses, and, no sufficient distress being found in them, brought ejectment under a clause in the lease for re-entry. At the time of the distress no search was made in the houses taken possession of by the lessor, but they were devoid of goods at the time the police constable entered:—Held, that the taking possession of the unoccupied houses did not amount to an eviction, and that there was evidence of no sufficient distress. Wheeler v. Steverson or Stevenson, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 46; 6 Hurls. & N. 155.

(B) CONTRACTS.

(a) For quiet Enjoyment.

There is a contract for quiet enjoyment implied in a demise of a tenement. So held, on the authority of Bandy v. Cartwright. A declaration for a breach of such contract must allege an eviction by a person claiming title paramount. Hall v. the City of London Brewery Co. (Lim.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 257; 2 Best & S. 737.

In an agreement,—by which A agrees to let and P to take premises for a year certain, and thence from year to year, and A agrees, when required by P, to grant a lease for the remainder which shall then be unexpired of the term and interest of him A, wanting ten days,—the implied promise for quiet enjoyment is limited to the duration of A's interest; and P can maintain no action against A for damages consequent on A's reversioner intervening after the commencement of the tenancy from year to year. Penfold v. Abbott, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 67.

(b) For Repairs.

In November 1858, the defendant, being in occupation by himself and his under-tenants of premises in the city of London belonging to the plaintiff, agreed to take them, as yearly tenant to the plaintiff, for the term of four years, rent to be paid quarterly, on the usual quarter-days; and the agreement contained a condition binding the defendant, "if the plaintiff made good the floor of the warehouse, &c. within twenty-eight days of the date of the agreement, but if not done, the agreement to be void." The plaintiff, within the twenty-eight days, did some insufficient repairs; and in April, 1859, the floor gave way, whereupon the defendant informed the plaintiff of it; but the latter took no notice, and the defendant's under-tenants applied to the Commissioners of Sewers, which resulted in an order being made on the 12th of May, under the 73rd section of the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 122), for the repair of the floor. The plaintiff, at the end of April, had informed the defendant that he was about to pull the premises down, and offered to assist him to remove his things; but nothing was done until the end of May, when, in compliance with the above order, the plaintiff repaired the floor. The execution of the repairs compelled the defendant's under-tenants to quit, and they, in consequence, refused to pay him rent; and he himself was interrupted in his business, and sought other premises, to which he removed on the 15th of June; and on the morning of the 23rd he finally vacated the premises, and delivered up the key to the plaintiff, who then accepted it, and in a few days afterwards entered, and pulled the premises down.

The defendant paid rent up to Lady-day, 1859; and the plaintiff, in an action on the agreement, and for use and occupation, sought to recover the quarter's rent due on the following 24th of June:—Held, per Erle, C.J., Willes, J. and Byles, J. (hæsitante Williams, J.), that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. That the effect of the condition of the agreement was to give the tenant, if the repairs were not done within the twenty-eight days, a reasonable time within which to elect to avoid the contract, and that the facts shewed that he had elected to avoid the contract within a reasonable time. Also, that there was evidence of a mutual agreement to put an end to the tenancy before the 24th of June, and to any claim by the landlord for the rent due on that day. Furnivall v. Grove, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 3; 8 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 496.

Quære—Whether the facts amounted to a surrender by operation of law, or an eviction. Ibid.

The defendant was lessee of a house, and the plaintiff one of the reversioners and lessors. Before the end of the lease the lessors agreed verbally with M that he should have a lease, to commence at the end of that of the defendant, the house to be pulled down by M and new premises built by him. The defendant left the house out of repair at the end of the lease. M afterwards entered, and some time after that the verbal agreement was put into writing, and the house pulled down. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant on a covenant in his lease for not keeping and yielding up the house in good repair:—Held, that the jury were not compelled to give only nominal damages. Rawlings v. Morgan, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 185; 18 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 776.

(c) As to Receipt of Rent by Agent.

By lease under seal B demised premises to V for fourteen years, at a yearly rent, which V covenanted to pay to B. The lease contained the following clause: "The landlord further agrees and orders that R K, or his appointed agent, is to receive all rents from the tenant at all times when it becomes due during the said term hereby granted, and his receipt to be a full and sufficient discharge from all liabilities thereof." R K was not a party to the deed, and there was nothing to shew that R K had any interest, or that it was to the tenant's advantage that the rent should be paid to R K:—Held, that the clause only amounted to a bare authority or appointment of R K as agent to receive the rent, and was therefore revocable by the landlord. Venning v. Bray, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 181; 2 Best & S. 502.

(d) Underletting.

The following words in an agreement for letting do not create a condition: "The said A (the tenant) hereby agrees that he will not underlet the said premises without the consent in writing of the landlord." Shaw v. Coffin, 14 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 372.

(C) DISTRESS FOR RENT.

The plaintiff entered into an agreement with M that a valid lease in law should be forthwith prepared, to be duly executed by the plaintiff and M of a house and premises, to the plaintiff, to hold for the term of three years, at the yearly rent of 84*l*. The agreement specified how the rent should be paid, and what covenants should be contained in the lease, and then contained this clause, "And it is hereby mutually agreed that these presents shall operate as an agreement only, and that until a lease shall be executed, the rents, covenants and agreements agreed to be therein reserved and contained, shall be paid and observed, and the several rights and remedies shall be enforced, in the same manner as if the same had been actually executed." The plaintiff entered upon the premises, and remained till rent became due, when he fraudulently conveyed away his goods and effects:—Held, that a tenancy was created, which gave M a right to distrain the goods, and, consequently, to follow after and take possession of them at the place they were taken to. Anderson v. the Midland Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 94; 3 E. & E. 614.

T, being tenant at will at a yearly rent, died leaving rent in arrear, the next day the lessor distrained on the premises, which were then occupied by T's servant; his widow came into occupation the day after, and subsequently took out administration to her husband:—Held, that the distress was not justified under the 8 Ann. c. 14. ss. 6, 7, as it was not made "during the possession of the tenant from whom the rent became due." Turner v. Barnes, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 170; 2 Best & S. 435.

Semble—That Walker v. Giles is still law as to the construction to be put upon similar deeds. Ibid.

Where a landlord to whom rent is due for a house enters the house in a way which is unlawful, and seizes and takes possession of the goods in the house as a distress for the rent, he is liable in trespass, and the value of the goods is the measure of damages which the tenant is entitled to recover. Attack v. Bramwell, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 146; 3 Best & S. 520.

(D) HOLDING OVER.

(a) Effect of, in general.

In an ejectment by the assignee of a lessee of a term against the assignee of a sub-lessee of the same term, less ten days, holding over after the expiration of his term, the writ was issued before the expiration of the claimant's term, but at the time of the trial both claimant's and defendant's term had expired; there was no affirmative evidence that the claimant had no other title besides the term which had expired, or that he did not continue as tenant by sufferance to his superior landlord:—Held, that the defendant ought to have given up possession at the expiration of his term, and was estopped from disputing the claimant's title, which, except as against his superior landlord, must be taken to be good, and that the claimant was entitled to a writ of possession under the provisions of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76. s. 180. Gibbins v. Buckland, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 156; 1 Hurls. & C. 736.

Where a tenant is allowed to hold over after the expiration of his lease, it is a question of fact for the jury on what terms he continues to hold. Oakley v. Monck, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 137; 3 Hurls. & C. 706. (Afterwards affirmed in the Ex. Ch., 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 87.)

Where a tenant for life granted a lease, containing (among others) a covenant that the lessor should, at the expiration of the term, pay and allow for all fruit-trees upon the premises planted by the lessee at a fair valuation, and at the expiration of the term the lessee held over as tenant from year to year, and on the death of the tenant for life the tenant from year to year continued the occupation of the land, paying the same rent to the remainderman, the latter being ignorant of the existence of the covenant,—Held, that the receipt of rent by the remainderman, under the circumstances, was no evidence of a holding over under the terms of the lease. Ibid.

(b) Double Value.

To enable a landlord to recover double value, under the statute 4 Geo. 2. c. 21, the holding over by the tenant must be contumacious. A holding over under a mistaken belief that a third person, who claimed the reversion, is entitled, is not sufficient to support the action, even although the tenant was let into possession by the landlord, and the third person does not claim through him, but adversely. Swinfen v. Bacon, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 33; 6 Hurls. & N. 184.

The defendant, who was tenant of a farm to S, attorned on the death of the latter and paid rent to the plaintiff, who claimed under S's will, and retook the farm from her from year to year, at a fresh rental, and paid half-a-year's rent, due at Michaelmas, 1855. The testator's heir-at-law filed a bill, impeaching the will, and upon the trial of the issue of devisavit vel non, in which the now plaintiff was plaintiff, and the heir-at-law was defendant, a compromise was arranged, contrary to the plaintiff's instructions, by the terms of which the plaintiff was to convey the estate to the heir-at-law. The plaintiff refused to comply, and a rule for an attachment was obtained, but subsequently discharged. The heir-at-law demanded the rent from the now defendant, who, although desired by the plaintiff not to do so, paid the rent due at Lady-day, 1856, to the heir-at-law. At Michaelmas the plaintiff gave the defendant notice to quit at Lady-day, 1857, and in December, 1856, distrained for a year's rent. The defendant replevied, and the action remained undisposed of. The defendant did not quit at Lady-day, 1857, and the plaintiff thereupon gave notice that she should claim double rent, being double the value. The defendant took no notice of it, but continued in possession. The Court of Chancery having directed the same issue to be retried, the plaintiff, in November, 1857, distrained for half-a-year's rent, due at Lady-day, but it was withdrawn under an injunction; and one and a half year's rent, due at Lady-day, was paid into the Court of Chancery. At the second trial, in March, 1858, the plaintiff obtained a verdict, and the will was established. In February, 1859, the defendant tendered to the plaintiff the rent which had accrued due since the payment into court. The amount so paid in was subsequently, by order of the Court, paid to the plaintiff. The defendant quitted at Lady-day, 1859, and the plaintiff brought an action for two years' double value, from Lady-day, 1857. Upon a special case, stating the above facts,—Held, that there was not such a wilful holding over as entitled the plaintiff to recover. Ibid.

B, a tenant to S, after the death of S, accepted a fresh term from his devisee. He afterwards found that the heir-at-law of S disputed the will, and from the circumstances of the case he reasonably and bona fide believed that the devisee had no title, and that the land belonged to the heir-at-law. B thereupon refused to pay rent to the devisee, who gave him notice to quit. As B did not quit at the expiration of his term, the devisee, who had made out her title to be good, brought an action against B under the statute 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. s. 1, for double value for wilfully holding over:—Held, that the action was not maintainable, for in order to come within the statute the holding over must be with the consciousness on the part of the tenant that he has no right to retain possession. Swinfen v. Bacon, 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 368; 6 Hurls. & N. 846.

(E) Fixtures.

Greenhouses built in a garden and constructed of wooden frames fixed with mortar to foundation walls of brickwork,—Held, to be fixtures and not removable by the occupier who built them. Jenkins v Gething, 2 Jo. & H. 520.

A boiler built into the masonry of the greenhouse also held to be irremovable; but the pipes of a heating apparatus which were connected with the boiler by screws held to be removable. Ibid.

(A) Compulsory Powers of purchasing and taking Land.

(a) When the Powers arise.

The 16th and 17th sections of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, requiring the whole capital to be subscribed, and a certificate obtained from Justices to that effect before proceeding to take lands compulsorily, do not apply to the case of a branch railway authorized to be made by an already existing company. Weld v. the South-Western Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 142; 32 Beav. 340.

It is not necessary, in order to entitle a railway company to take land for the purpose of their works, that the particular works should appear on the deposited plan. It is sufficient that the land should be within the limits of deviation delineated on the plan. Ibid.

(b) When Contract of Purchase complete.

If the legislature prescribes formalities to be observed by parties contracting inter se, and one of them endeavours to avail himself of the want of such forms to postpone or avoid the completion of a contract entered into, the Court will itself ascertain whether the intentions of the legislature have, in substance, been complied with; and if they have, it will carry the contract into effect. Sir Edward Baker v. the Metropolitan Rail. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 7; 31 Beav. 504.

Public companies having power to purchase land cannot contract for its purchase, and insist upon a custom to defer its completion to the extreme period of time allowed them for the taking of land and the completion of their works. No such custom exists, but they are bound to complete their contract within a reasonable time. Ibid.

A railway company entered into a contract with a tenant for life, who appointed a surveyor under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18. s. 9. The company would neither appoint their valuer, nor complete the contract. The Court directed an inquiry, in a suit for specific performance, whether the price agreed upon was reasonable and proper. Ibid.

(c) Intersected Lands.

The expression "such land" in the 94th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, referring to intersected lands, is not restricted to intersected lands situate in a town, but applies to all intersected lands, whether so situate or not. The Eastern Counties and the London and Blackwall Rail. Cos. v. Marriage (House of Lords), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 73; 9 H.L. Cas. 32.

(d) Part of House or Manufactory.

The word "house" in the 92nd section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, comprises all that would pass by the grant of a messuage, which includes not only the curtilage, but also the garden, and all that is necessary to the enjoyment of the house, if within one ambit, whether attached to the main building or not, and though purchased subsequently to the erection of the main building. Therefore, where the governors of an ancient hospital purchased additional land, on part of which a new wing was built and the rest was laid out in a garden for the use of the entire hospital, it was held that a railway company was not entitled to take any part of the newly-acquired premises without purchasing the whole hospital. The Governors of the Hospital of St. Thomas v. the Charing Cross Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 395; 1 Jo. & H. 400.

Whether trustees of a charity are capable of making a valid alienation of the charity land—quære. Ibid.

Semble—The promoters of an undertaking, purchasing under their compulsory powers a part of a house from persons under a disability to sell, cannot avail themselves of such disability to avoid purchasing the whole house if required so to do. Ibid.

The lands required for the purposes of the act referred to in the 6th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act comprise not only the lands required to be used for the purpose of the undertaking, but also the lands which, under the 92nd section, the promoters may be required to take. Ibid.

A railway company gave notice to the plaintiff that they should require to take a part of his workshop for the purposes of their railway. The plaintiff gave a counter notice, under the 92nd section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, that the company must take the whole of the premises. The company, however, took possession of only a part, and paid into court the ascertained value of that portion only:—Held, that the company were bound to pay into court the value of the whole premises, and could not be allowed to take possession of part, paying only for that part. Giles v. the London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 603; 1 Dr. & S. 407.

A landowner having received notice from a railway company to treat for the sale of part of his premises, does not, by offering to sell that part at a price named by him, preclude himself, if the company decline the offer, from requiring them to take the whole under the 92nd section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. Gardner v. the Charing Cross Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 181; 2 Jo. & H. 248.

The proper construction of the 92nd section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, which enacts, that "no party shall at any time be required to sell or convey to the promoters of the undertaking a part only of any house or other building or manufactory if such party be willing and able to sell and convey the whole," is, that a landowner shall not be compelled to sell a part of his house, &c., if before the company have begun to put their compulsory powers into motion, he gives them notice to take the whole. Ibid.

Unfinished houses standing upon a piece of land, which, when they were completed, was to be apportioned between them as gardens, are within the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18. s. 92, and a railway company cannot compulsorily take a part of the land without bringing themselves under a liability to purchase and take the whole of the land and the unfinished houses. Alexander v. the West-End of London and Crystal Palace Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 500; 30 Beav. 556.

A contractor for the removal of dust had extensive premises, to which the dust was taken and sorted, and portions of it were stamped for plastering purposes, and other portions prepared for manure. The tot-shop, where the sorting of the materials was carried on, was required by a board of works in the construction of a new street; and the contractor required, under the 92nd section of the Lands Clauses Act, that the whole of his premises should be taken, alleging that the tot-shop formed part of a manufactory:—Held (reversing the judgment of one of the Vice Chancellors), that the tot-shop did not form part of a manufactory within the meaning of the section. Reddin v. the Metropolitan Board of Works, 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 660.

A railway company gave notice to take part of a manufactory, and were required by the owner, under the 92nd section of the Lands Clauses Act, to take the whole. A valuer, on behalf of the company, went to the manufactory, and, without entering it, valued it at a specified sum, and that amount was paid into court under the 85th section of the Lands Clauses Act, in the usual way. The company were then proceeding to take possession, and to issue their warrant to summon a jury, when the owner of the manufactory insisted that the valuation had not included certain fixtures upon the premises, such as a steam-engine, shaping and turning lathes, &c., and that the company were bound to take such fixtures. The company contended that, the fixtures being trade fixtures and removable by the owner, he could not compel the company to take them. The owner then filed a bill and moved for an injunction to restrain the company from taking possession, or summoning a jury, without making compensation for the fixtures:—Held, that although the fixtures in question were trade fixtures, which the lessee might remove during the term, the company were bound to take them; and that whatever a railway company are bound to take under the 92nd section, they must, in proceeding under the 85th section, cause to be valued, and pay the value of into court. Gibson v. the Hammersmith Rail. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 337.

F was lessee of a house and garden, and of a strip or piece of meadow land separated therefrom by a road originally made for the convenience of himself and the lessees of the adjoining houses, but which road was afterwards thrown open to the public. Each of the other lessees had also a strip of land on the other side of the road. The leases contained covenants restraining the lessees from building on the strips, and the strips were by arrangement all thrown into one piece, and were used by F and the other lessees in common as cricket and pleasure ground; the whole being however also let to a butcher for grazing purposes. A railway company required this piece of land for the construction of their line; F insisted that the company if they took the land must also take his house and garden, and on their proceeding to obtain possession under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, filed his bill praying for an injunction. Romilly, M.R., refused an interlocutory injunction, considering it doubtful whether the strip of meadow land was a "part of a house," within the meaning of the 92nd section of the Lands Clauses Act. On appeal, the decision was affirmed, Turner, L.J. agreeing with the Master of the Rolls, on the ground that the strip of land being held for pleasure only, and not of necessity for the enjoyment and occupation of the residence of the plaintiff, it would not have passed by a conveyance of the "house" simply. Dissentiente Knight Bruce, L.J. Fergusson v. the London, Brighton, and South Coast Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 29; 33 Beav. 103.

A landowner, part of whose house, within the meaning of the 92nd section of the Lands Clauses Act, is taken by a railway company, cannot, under that section, compel the company to take any portion beyond what it requires, less than the whole (per Turner, L.J., semble, agreeing with the Master of the Rolls). Pulling v. the London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 505; 33 Beav. 644.

A field, separated from the garden of a house by a ha-ha, traversed by a gravel walk leading to a coachman's house at the further end thereof, and used occasionally for purposes of pleasure (as archery and dancing), though chiefly as pasture for cows, was held, by Turner, L.J., (dubitante Knight Bruce, L.J.), not to be part of the house within section 92. of the Lands Clauses Act. Ibid.

The 92nd section of the Lands Clauses Act is applicable although the landowner may have only a leasehold interest. Ibid.

(e) Land taken for Purposes ultra Vires.

The W Railway Company being authorized to make their line up to a point of junction, marked on the parliamentary plans, with the line of the L Company, with all proper stations, works and conveniences connected therewith, gave the plaintiff the usual landowner's notice to treat for a piece of his land which lay beyond the point of junction, but within the limits of the deviation of the W line, the notice stating that that line would pass through the land and that the land was required for the purpose of the W line; and they took all the necessary steps under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act to acquire a right of entry thereon. Intending to erect a station upon the land, but before they had commenced to do so, and before their line had been completely set out by their engineer, they entered into an arrangement with the L Company that the latter should have the joint use of the station with them, upon certain terms, which were afterwards embodied in an act of parliament; and eventually the W Company built the station upon the land, and prolonged their line with a double set of rails from the point of junction with the L line into the station, one line of rails being for the use of both companies, the other for the use of the W Company only. The plaintiff having brought ejectment to recover possession of the land,—Held, that the W Company, by prolonging their line from the point of junction into their station, had not exceeded their powers so as to forfeit the land; nor had failed to comply with the substance of their notice. Held also, that the arrangement with the L Company did not vitiate their title. Wood v. the Epsom and Leatherhead Rail. Co., 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 82; 8 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 831.

Semble, per Erle, C.J., that, even if the W Company, at the time they acquired title to the land, intended to use it for a purpose ultra vires, as well as for a legitimate purpose, and did afterwards use it for both purposes, their title was not therefore forfeited; although the use ultra vires might in equity be ground for an injunction. Ibid.

Semble, per Williams, J., that, if the W Company took the land, not for their own purposes, but for the purposes of the L Company, and parted with their rights to the latter, the plaintiff might recover. Ibid.

Semble, per Byles, J., that, if the W Company took the land for the joint use of both companies, inasmuch as the land was necessary for the junction of the two lines, and only one company could take it, the W Company had not exceeded their powers. Ibid.

The plaintiff, who had a leasehold interest in premises held by a tenant from year to year, received notice from a projected railway company that the premises were required for the purposes of their undertaking; and the company subsequently arranged with the tenant and received from him the key. The plaintiff thereupon gave the company notice, under the 68th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, of the amount of her claim and the nature of her interest in the premises, requiring them to issue their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury; and, upon their neglecting so to do, she brought an action for the sum claimed:—Held, that these facts warranted the jury in finding that the company had actually taken the premises, and consequently that they were liable for the amount demanded. Baker v. the Metropolitan Rail. Co., 17 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 785.

A railway company having, under their acts, taken some land for the purposes of their railway, by agreement from the ostensible owner, and having entered into possession, were afterwards informed by the plaintiff that he was a mortgagee in fee of the land. The company, without disputing the title of the plaintiff, asked for delay during the absence of their legal advisers. The plaintiff, however, within two months after giving them notice of his title, brought ejectment to recover possession of the lands:—Held, that the title not being in dispute, the action could not be maintained, since 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18. s. 124. gave the defendants a right to lawful possession of the lands for six months after notice of the plaintiff's claim. Jolly v. the Wimbledon and Dorking Rail. Co. (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 95; 1 Best & S. 807.

(g) Purchase-Money and Compensation under Sections 18. and 63. for Land taken.

The plaintiffs, who were brewers, were the owners in fee of a public-house, which was let for an unexpired term of seven years, and there was in the lease a covenant by the tenant not to sell on the premises any beer other than that purchased of the plaintiffs; the defendants were empowered, by their special act (with which was incorporated the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act), to take the premises:—Held, that in ascertaining, under sections 18. and 63, the amount of purchase-money and compensation to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiffs, the additional value of the premises to the plaintiffs by reason of the covenant to sell the plaintiffs' beer only was to be taken into consideration. Bourne v. the Mayor of Liverpool, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 15.

(B) COMPENSATION.

(a) For what Damage and in respect of what Interest.

(1) In general.

Copyhold lands taken under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, are enfranchised under the 96th section of that act, and no fine is payable to the lord under the 6th section of the Copyhold Act, 1858, as a condition of compulsory enfranchisement. Therefore, where the lord of the manor was tenant for life, it was held that he was not entitled to any part of the money paid into court by a railway company as compensation for the enfranchisement of copyhold land taken by them. In re Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson's Estates, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 191; 2 Jo. & H. 619.

The defendants, a railway company, purchased under parliamentary powers, the surface above the plaintiffs' colliery, and carried their railway over it by means of a cutting. The original surface was impervious to water; but by the cutting, the clay, of about 23 feet depth, was removed, and a porous stratum of rock was reached, which was also subject to cracks and fissures on being undermined. At the time the railway was constructed none of the mines underneath had been worked; but afterwards the plaintiffs, on their works approaching the railway, gave the defendants the statutory notice, but they did not purchase the subjacent mines. The plaintiffs worked the mines underneath the railway in a proper manner; but the consequence of the working was that the railway sank from time to time; the defendants reinstated the line to its former level with porous materials. In consequence of the cutting and of a bridge, by which the railway crossed a brook, the water from the brook in flood-time flowed along the railway above the plaintiffs' mines, and the side drains being insufficient to carry it off, the water flowed over the porous surface and so penetrated into and flooded the plaintiffs' mines. The rain-water also in like manner, from the insufficiency of the drains, constantly penetrated into the mines. The defendants' works were in accordance with the deposited plans and sections, but they were bound by their act to make and maintain effectual drains:—Held (affirming the judgment of the Court of Exchequer), that the plaintiffs could maintain an action in respect of both heads of the damage caused by the flooding of the mines, and that such damage was not the subject of compensation under the compensation clauses of the Railways and Lands Clauses Acts, 1845. Bagnall v. the London and North-Western Rail. Co. (Ex. Ch.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 480; 1 Hurls. & C. 544.

A railway company, having power under an act of parliament to construct a tunnel under buildings and premises of which the plaintiff was owner in fee, the parties, in 1848, by voluntary agreement, referred to arbitration "the amount to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiff for the right to construct and for ever maintain the tunnel under the premises, and for the purchase of the site of the tunnel, and in full compensation for all damage or injury to be sustained by him by reason of the construction of the tunnel underneath the premises"; and the arbitrator awarded a certain sum to the plaintiff "as compensation for the right to construct," &c. in the terms of the submission, and "for all damage and injury sustained by him by reason of the construction of the tunnel." A deed was afterwards executed by the plaintiff, by which, after reciting the submission and award, in consideration of the sum awarded, which he acknowledged to be "in full for the purchase of the site of, and the right to construct, maintain, and use the tunnel underneath the premises," he granted to the defendants "the site of, and full and free liberty, power, and authority to bore, dig, excavate, make, and construct the tunnel underneath the premises, together with the full and exclusive and uninterrupted right at all times hereafter to use, maintain, and repair the tunnel: to hold the same for the purposes of their act of parliament, freed and discharged from all claims whatsoever of the plaintiff." The stratum through which the tunnel passed consisted of clay and loose earth; it was opened for traffic in 1849; and, after 1853, serious injuries arose to the buildings over the tunnel, which were caused by the subsequent subsidence of the surface consequent upon the construction of the tunnel in such a soil and by the vibration resulting from the passing of trains, or by one of such causes. On a special case, raising the questions, whether the plaintiff could maintain an action for the damage, or recover compensation under the 68th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845,—Held, by Cockburn, C.J., that the damage, which was likely to accrue from subsidence and vibration, and might have been foreseen, was matter which might and ought to have been taken into consideration by the arbitrator, and assessed prospectively; and that the plaintiff could not afterwards recover compensation for the damage by action or otherwise. By Crompton, J. and Mellor, J., that, whether the question turned on the construction of the submission, award and deed of conveyance, or of the statute, the plaintiff was equally precluded from claiming any further compensation. Croft v. the London and North-Western Rail. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 113; 3 Best & S. 436.

Section 135. of the Metropolis Local Management Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120.) authorizes the Metropolitan Board of Works to repair and maintain certain sewers, with full power to carry such sewers through or under any lands, "making compensation for any damage done thereby," and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act is incorporated with such act. In exercise of the powers conferred on them by their act, and for the purpose of enabling them to reconstruct a sewer running under a street, the board erected a hoarding in such street, which rendered the access to the plaintiff's premises less convenient than it had been before; but no part of such premises was taken, nor did it appear that the hoarding was kept up beyond a reasonable time:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to compensation under the statute for the damage he had sustained by the erection of such hoarding. Herring v. the Metropolitan Board of Works, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 224; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 510.

One who sustains a private and particular injury from the diversion or obstruction of a public road by the works of a railway company, which diversion or obstruction, if done without the sanction of an act of parliament, would give a right of action, is entitled to compensation under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. Wood v. the Stourbridge Rail. Co., 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 222.

No compensation can be claimed under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, for inconvenience sustained by the authorized crossing on a level of a public road by a railway. Ibid.

(2) Lands injuriously affected.

The plaintiff was the lessee of houses situate on a high road, and the defendants, a railway company, being authorized by their act, made an obstruction and deviation in the road, by which that part of it running by the houses was no longer used as a high road, and the number of persons passing by the houses was greatly diminished, so that the houses were rendered less suitable to be occupied as shops, and their value was greatly diminished:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to compensation under the 8 Vict. c. 18. s. 68. and the 8 Vict. c. 20. s. 6; inasmuch as the houses were "injuriously affected": the test being whether on the facts an action would have lain, at common law, at the suit of the plaintiff against the defendants, if they had not been authorized by their act to make the obstruction in the highway. Chamberlain v. the West-End and Crystal Palace Rail. Co., 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 201; 2 Best & S. 605: in Ex. Ch. 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 173; 2 Best & S. 617.

The plaintiff, the lessee for three years and occupier of a house and shop, gave notice to the defendants, a railway company, that his premises had been injuriously affected by their works, and claimed compensation, to be settled by a jury under section 68. of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. The defendants, refusing to admit that the plaintiff had sustained any damage as alleged, and subject to and under protest, issued their warrant, pursuant to the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to the sheriff to summon a jury to settle by their verdict the amount of compensation (if any) to be paid to the plaintiff in respect of the said premises having been or being injuriously affected by the execution of the company's works. The jury found, that no structural damage had been sustained by the premises, and assessed the compensation at 60*l.* for the loss of trade by reason of obstruction only:—Held, on a case stated, without pleadings, after action brought, for the opinion of the Court as to whether loss of trade caused by obstruction was damage in respect of which the plaintiff was entitled to compensation,—that on this finding of the jury, and on the authority of Chamberlain v. the West-End of London and Crystal Palace Rail. Co., the plaintiff was so entitled, and that he was also entitled to the costs of the inquiry before the sheriff's jury. Senior v. the Metropolitan Rail. Co., 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 225; 2 Hurls. & C. 258.

Per Bramwell, B. and Wilde, B., in assessing compensation to the parties whose premises may be injuriously affected by works done under the authority of parliament by a railway company, the company are not entitled to set off any benefit accruing to such parties, or to the neighbourhood, by the construction of the railway. Ibid.

The plaintiff, who was the lessee and occupier of a house in which he carried on the business of a baker, suffered loss of trade in such business in consequence of the traffic past his house having been diminished by a railway company stopping up a public passage in the execution of the works authorized by their act of parliament, and substituting for it a less convenient communication by a tunnel, situate 100 yards south of the street in which was the plaintiff's house, instead of being in a direct line with such street as the former passage was:—Held, on the authority of Senior v. the Metropolitan Rail. Co. and Chamberlain v. the West-End and Crystal Palace Rail. Co., that the plaintiff was entitled under section 68. of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to compensation in respect of such loss of trade. Held, also, that a notice in which the plaintiff described himself as "the occupier" of the said house where the business was carried on for the injury to which he so claimed compensation, sufficiently stated the nature of the plaintiff's interest in such house within the meaning of the said 68th section. Cameron v. the Charing Cross Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 313; 16 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 430—reversed in Ex. Ch. 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 764.

A railway company took some land of L under their act, and proposed to make their railway on it so close to a cotton-mill belonging to L, that by reason of the proximity of the railway and the danger of fire from the trains using the line the building was less suitable for a cotton-mill, could only be insured at an increased premium, and was rendered of less saleable value:—Held, that L was entitled to compensation in respect of the mill being so injuriously affected, and that the rule that compensation could only be given for that which unless sanctioned by the private statute would otherwise have been an actionable wrong, had no application to cases where the act complained of was done on claimant's own land, taken from him by the company by force of their statute. In re the Stockport, Timperley and Altringham Rail. Co., 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 251.

If a railway company during the execution of their works under their special act place a bridge on a highway, up and down and over which bridge passengers must pass, instead of along the level highway, and so render the access to a public-house more difficult, and passengers are thereby deterred from going that way, and there is in consequence a loss of trade to the public-house, the tenant of the public-house cannot sustain a demand for compensation, under section 68. of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, on the ground that his land has been injuriously affected by the works; for no action would have lain against the company had they not been authorized by their special act; and even if an action might have been supported, still no compensation is claimable, since the damage, if any, is of a personal character, and not an injury to the land. So held in the Exchequer Chamber (reversing the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench) by Erle, C.J., Pollock, C.B., Channell, B. and Pigott, B.; dissentientibus Byles, J. and Keating, J. Ricket v. the Metropolitan Rail. Co. (Ex. Ch.), 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 257. (The judgment of the Ex. Ch. affirmed in the House of Lords by Lords Chelmsford and Cranworth (dissentiente Lord Westbury), 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 320.)

The Temple Pier, erected under a licence from the Conservators of the Thames, determinable by seven days' notice, was purchased and managed by the T P Company. The Metropolitan Board of Works, under the provisions of the Thames Embankment Act, 1862 (which incorporates the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, with the additional provision that the word "lands" shall include easements and interests in land, and which gives express power to alter and divert piers), altered and diverted the pier temporarily, to enable them to prosecute the embankment works, yet not so as to interrupt the use thereof; and proposed eventually to build, as nearly as might be at the same spot, a new pier in the place of the old one. The conservators refused to grant any licence to the T P Company with respect to the proposed new pier:—Held, that the Metropolitan Board were not taking or permanently using any land or easement belonging to the T P Company, and consequently were not bound to comply with the terms of the 84th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act before dealing with the pier in the manner mentioned. The Temple Pier Co. (Lim.) v. the Metropolitan Board of Works, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 262.

Semble—The 68th section of the Lands Clauses Act does not apply to cases where a company have under a mistake wrongfully taken possession of the land. Perks v. the Wycombe Rail. Co., 3 Giff. 663.

The Thames Embankment Act, 1862, incorporates the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, with the additional provision that the word "lands" shall include easements and interests in land. M, the owner of a wharf on the Thames, had a right of free access from the river, and also the right of loading and unloading barges at his wharf. There was no campshed or hard, but at low water the barges rested on the mud of the foreshore. The Metropolitan Board of Works were proceeding, under the Thames Embankment Act, to fill up the river in front of M's wharf. Thereupon M filed a bill to restrain them from doing so without first making a deposit and entering into a bond under the Lands Clauses Act, section 85:—Held, that the Metropolitan Board of Works were not taking and using for the purposes of the undertaking any easement or interest in lands belonging to the plaintiff, but were only injuriously affecting his rights, and, therefore, could not be restrained from proceeding with their works, till they had complied with the provisions of section 84. of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. Macey v. the Metropolitan Board of Works, 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 377.

Whether the machinery for ascertaining compensation prescribed by the Lands Clauses Act, or that prescribed by the Metropolitan Local Management Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. s. 225, is primarily applicable under the Thames Embankment Act, 1862—quære. Ibid.

(3) Injury to Right of Shooting Game.

A party who has a right of shooting over land by an agreement not under seal with the owner, has not such an interest as to entitle him to compensation from a railway company under section 68. of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, in respect of the shooting being diminished in value by the company constructing a railway over part of such land. Bird v. the Great Eastern Rail. Co., 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 366; 19 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 268.

(b) To Tenant from Year to Year.

Where no part of the lands of a tenant from year to year are taken by a railway company, but his interest in the lands is injuriously affected by the railway works, he is entitled to claim compensation, and to have it determined under section 68. of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, before a jury or arbitrators; and his case does not come within section 121. of the act, which provides for the assessment of the compensation being made before Justices only when some part of the lands is required by the company. R. v. the Sheriff of Middlesex (in re Somers v. the Metropolitan Rail. Co.), 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 261.

If a railway company require possession to be delivered to them of a house (which they are entitled to take) in the occupation of a tenant from year to year, before the expiration of his tenancy, and call on Justices to determine the amount of compensation to be paid to him under section 121. of the statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, the Justices need not put their decision into writing, but may give it verbally. R. v. Combe, 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 67.

To a declaration framed on the 68th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845,—alleging that the plaintiff, being possessed of a house, the defendants, a railway company, having taken the same and injuriously affected it by the execution of their works, and not having made any satisfaction under the aforesaid act, their special or any other act, and the plaintiff's claim exceeding 50*l.* he had given notice to the defendants to have the same determined by a jury, and of the nature of his interest in the said house; that the defendants, not having entered into any written agreement with the plaintiff, and not having summoned a jury within the twenty-one days required by the act, had become liable to the plaintiff for the whole amount of his claim—the defendants pleaded, that at the time the notice was given and the house taken, the plaintiff had no greater interest therein than as a tenant from year to year; to which the plaintiff replied, that the plaintiff had not, before the giving the said notice, been required to give up possession of the said house, and that the defendants, without the plaintiff's consent, had entered upon and taken the house without notice to him:—Held, on demurrer to the replication, that the plea was good, and that the plaintiff should have proceeded under the 121st, and not under the 68th section, as decided in R. v. the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Rail. Co. Knapp v. the London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co.. 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 236; 2 Hurls. & C. 212.

To a count for trespass to the same house, the defendants pleaded—that the said house was delineated in the plans and described in the books of reference deposited as required by their act, and that it was necessary to take and use the said house for the purposes of their act, and that they entered and took possession of the said house with the consent of the owners and occupiers thereof, and after such entry and possession taken the plaintiff took possession of the said house and occupied the same, and the defendants, because it was necessary to the construction of their works authorized by that act, entered the said house, the plaintiff then being therein, and pulled down the same, &c.:—Held, on demurrer, that the plea was good; and that the consent could not be revoked, as decided in Doe d. Hudson v. the Leeds and Bradford Rail. Co. Ibid.

To a count alleging that the plaintiff was entitled to support for the same house from an adjoining house, and complaining that the defendants wrongfully deprived the plaintiff of such support, to wit, by negligently and improperly pulling down the same without taking due care to secure the plaintiff's house against the consequences of such pulling down—the defendants pleaded (except as to so much of the count as charged them with having negligently and improperly pulled down the adjoining house), that the same was delineated in the plans and described in the books of reference deposited as required by their act, and that it was necessary for the purposes of that act to enter upon and pull down the same:—Held, on demurrer, that the plea was good; that the portion of the count to which it was pleaded stated a good cause of action. Ibid.

By an agreement for a tenancy from year to year determinable upon six months' notice, it was agreed that in case the tenants should erect any buildings on the demised premises, they were to have the privilege of removing the same at any time during their occupation; or otherwise, if they were required to give up possession before the expiration of twenty years, they were to be allowed one-twentieth part of the amount expended on such buildings for each remaining year of the unexpired term of twenty years. The premises were required by a public company under a local act of parliament, in which was incorporated the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and notice to quit was served upon the tenants. The buildings were not removed by the tenants, and after the expiration of the notice the company took forcible possession of the premises without having given the tenants notice to treat for their interest therein, or deposited the value of such interest as required by the 84th and 85th sections of the act. Upon a bill filed by the tenants to restrain the company from taking or keeping possession of the premises until they should have properly entitled themselves thereto,—Held, affirming the decision of one of the Vice Chancellors, that the tenants had a sufficient interest in the premises after the expiration of the notice to entitle them to relief. Rogers v. the Dock Company at Kingston-upon-Hull, 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 165.
